Where a railroad right of way bond bound the railway company, its surety and their successors or assigns to pay to the United States all damage to public land and timber or public property on a forest reservation by reason of the railroad company's occupation of a right of way over the reservation, the word "successors" was sufficient to bind the surety for damages resulting from the alleged negligent operation of the railroad by a receiver subsequently appointed. United States v. Bailey, 178 Fed. 302, 303.

SUCCESSOR IN INTEREST

The right to file a mechanic's lien is a personal right, limited to the person performing the labor or furnishing the material, and is not assignable; a "successor in interest," within Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 2, being one who succeeds to a lienor's rights under a valid notice of lien already filed. Tisdale Lumber Co. v. Read Realty Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 829, 830, 154 App. Div. 270.

A purchaser of land sold on execution is entitled to redeem from a prior sale under mortgage foreclosure, as "the 'successor in interest' of the judgment debtor," under Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subd. 1, providing that the judgment debtor, or his successor in interest, shall be entitled to redeem. Pollara v. Harlow, 71 Pac. 454, 455, 138 Cal. 390.

SUCCESSOR IN OFFICE

A deed in consideration of an amount specified, paid by persons named, "a commit of the Society called Particular Baptist, or their successors in that office for the time being," granting to the persons named land described, "to have and to hold" to the persons named, and "to their successors in office," and covenanting with the persons named and their successors in office that grantor was lawfully seised in fee and had good right to convey, and would forever warrant and defend, conveys the land to grantees, not in their individual right, but as trustees; the word "committ" meaning "committee," and being equivalent to trustees, and the words "successors in office" providing for a continuance of the trust. Hamlin v. Particular Baptist Meeting House, 69 Atl. 315, 318, 103 Me. 343.

Such other, see Other.

Testator gave "eight thousand dollars to wife all of which is to be held in trust by [trustees] without bond—they to pay heirs such rate of interest as shall be agreed upon, until children become of age—and she remains unmarried—in such case money shall fall to my legal heirs." Held, that the words "in such case" were equivalent to "in case she remarries." Benton v. Benton, 104 Pac. 856, 858, 78 Kan. 373.

The word "such," as used in Civil Code Ga. 1895, § 1948, providing that it shall be unlawful for any such bank to lend in the aggregate more than 25 per cent. of the amount of its capital stock to the officers and directors thereof, etc., refers to a bank of issue. Thornton v. State, 63 S. E. 301, 303, 5 Ga. App. 397.

The words "such accident," in an instruction in an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger, to the effect that if the jury found that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and was thrown from the car as claimed, and that such accident would not have happened under ordinary circumstances, had defendant exercised the utmost care, a presumption of negligence against defendant was raised, have reference to somewhat more than the mere fact that plaintiff was injured, and they at least referred back to his being thrown from the car through some neglect of defendant, and, when so construed, the instruction was not erroneous on the ground that it justified the jury in presuming negligence from the mere fact that plaintiff was injured while a passenger. Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co., 100 N. W. 618, 620, 124 Iowa, 665.

The words "such cases," as used in a statute, providing that a judgment on a verdict of acquittal of an offense, the punishment of which is imprisonment, shall not be reversed, but in "such cases" an appeal may be taken by the commonwealth when important to the correct administration of the criminal law, should be referred to the words "an offense the punishment of which is imprisonment," and an appeal by the commonwealth would lie in a misdemeanor case, even before a final judgment. Commonwealth v. Huber, 104 S. W. 282, 284, 126 Ky. 456.

The words "such cities" as used in section 3 of the act of March 13, 1911 (Laws 1911, c. 82), mean cities of the class to which the one adopting the new form of government belongs, if existing under the general laws, or would legally belong if it were organized and operating under the general laws of the state. Swain v. Fritchman, 125 Pac. 319, 323, 21 Idaho, 783.

Under P. L. 1904, p. 259, § 3, requiring warrants to be signed by the mayor in cases where the common council or other body having charge of the finances of any such municipality shall not designate the officers to sign, the word "such" refers to sections 1, 2, which designate the act as applying to any cities in this state. Fox v. Clark, 59 Atl. 224, 72 N. J. Law, 100.

Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 841, c. 908, § 131, provides that after one year from the time of sale of taxes the Comptroller shall execute a conveyance of unredeemed lands, which shall vest an absolute estate in fee and which shall be presumptive evidence that the sale and all proceedings prior thereto from and including the assessment, and all notices required previous to the expiration of the time for redemption were regular, and that after two years from the date of such conveyance, such presumption shall be conclusive. Section 132, headed "Effect of Former Deeds," provides that every such conveyance theretofore executed by the Comptroller which has been recorded for two years shall be similarly conclusive, but that such conveyances may be canceled because of the payment of such taxes, the levying of such taxes by a town or ward without legal right to assess the land, or of any defect in the proceedings affecting the jurisdiction upon constitutional grounds, on direct application to the Comptroller, or in an action brought therefor, provided that such application be made, or action brought, in the case of sales held prior to 1895, within one year from the passage of the act, and in the case of the sale of 1895 and all sales thereafter within five years from the expiration of the period allowed for redemption. Held, that the words "such conveyance," wherever used in section 132, relate to the conveyances executed by the Comptroller, and that the enumerated defects excepted from the provisions of the section and the appended proviso enacting a statute of limitations in respect thereto, do not apply only to "former deeds," but apply to all conveyances by the Comptroller before or after the passage of the act. People ex rel. McGuinness v. Lewis, 111 N. Y. Supp. 398, 401, 127 App. Div. 107.

The words "such court" in Act Feb. 28, 1891 (Acts 1891, p. 44, c. 37) § 25, as amended by Acts 1893, p. 31, c. 32, providing where appeal has been taken to the Appellate Court, and it should have been to the Supreme Court, the Appellate Court must transfer the cause to the Supreme Court, but, where appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court when it should have been to the Appellate Court, the Supreme Court must transfer it to the Appellate Court, "and the action of such court in making such transfer shall be final," apply to the Supreme Court, and an order of that court retransferring an appeal to the Appellate Court is final. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Peck, 88 N. E. 939, 942, 172 Ind. 562.

The term "such date," as used in Code 1899, c. 131, § 16, providing that judgment shall be entered for the aggregate of principal and interest due at the date of the verdict or judgment, with interest thereon from "such date" in all cases as to which it is not otherwise provided, means the date of the verdict, when there is one, and the date of the judgment or decree, when there is no verdict. Campbell v. City of Elkins, 52 S. E. 220, 223, 58 W. Va. 308, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159.

By the words "such deceased child," in the first section of the statute of 1783 (chapter 36), is intended the deceased child of any deceased father and not the deceased child of an intestate father. Mayo v. Boyd, 3 Mass. 13, 16.

B. & C. Comp. § 2010, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 342, makes it unlawful to hunt, kill, or pursue deer within the state during the closed season, and declares that "any person having in possession any deer or carcass or part of a deer during the season when it is unlawful to take or kill such deer, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Held, that the words "such deer" referred to deer killed during the closed season, and that the section did not prohibit the keeping during the closed season, for food, the flesh of deer lawfully killed during the open season. State v. Fisher, 98 Pac. 713, 714, 53 Or. 38.

Comp. St. 1910, § 1054, authorizes the commissioners appointed to organize a new county to appoint a clerk and to hold a special election on the question of division from the old county, but provides that such election may be held coincident with the general election. Section 1056 provides that, in the event of a favorable vote, the voters of the county shall at the next general election, or at the same election if the special election is held coincident with the general election, vote for state, district, and county officers. Section 1057 authorizes the organization commissioners and clerk to perform all duties connected with "such election" imposed by law on county commissioners and county clerks in organized counties and to canvass the returns and declare the result. Held, that since commissioners are appointed to organize the county, and it is not fully organized until officers are elected, and since section 1056 when originally enacted as section 6, Laws 1895, c. 59, provided for an election of officers in the new county at the general election following the appointment of the commissioners, and contained no provision concerning a special election, and has been changed only by the addition by Laws 1909, c. 75, § 3, of the provision that, when the special election is held coincident with the general election, the election of officers shall be held at the same time, the provision of section 1057 for the conduct of "such election" by the organization commissioners and clerk does not refer only to the special election, but to the election at which state, district, and other officers are to be elected. Dillman v. State (Wyo.) 125 Pac. 367, 371.

In Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 282, § 3, declaring that, if a majority of the votes cast at "such election" shall be for city organization under general law, such city shall from thenceforth be deemed organized under such act, the words "such election" refer to the municipal election of the city referred to in section 1. People ex rel. v. Weber, 78 N. E. 56, 57, 222 Ill. 180.

The words "such election," as used in the section of the Constitution which provides how constitutional amendments shall be passed through the General Assembly for submission to the people, and for publication for at least six months "immediately preceding the next general election for senators and representatives, at which time the same shall be submitted to the electors of the state for approval or rejection, and if a majority of the electors voting in such election adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the Constitution," evidently refer to the general election for senators and representatives, and the "majority" necessary to adopt an amendment must be the majority of electors voting at the general election for senators and representatives, and not a mere majority voting on the subject of the amendment. Rice v. Palmer, 96 S. W. 396, 400, 78 Ark. 432 (citing Knight v. Shelton, 134 Fed. 423; State ex rel. Attorney General v. Powell, 27 South. 927, 77 Miss. 543).

Although the term "such general law," as used in Const. art. 11, § 4, requiring the Legislature to establish a uniform system of county government and by general laws provide for township organization under which any township may organize, and providing that, whenever any county shall adopt township organization, the local affairs of the several townships shall be managed in the manner prescribed by "such general law," refers only to laws relating to township organization, it does not mean that general laws applicable to the whole state, without specifically excepting such townships, are not as controlling therein as the same are in counties and cities of other classes. Gunter v. Huneke, 108 Pac. 1078, 1080, 58 Wash. 491.

Where an accident policy provided for the payment of a monthly sum if insured were disabled solely by external, violent, and accidental means, and also provided for a payment "if death should result from such injuries," the words "such injuries" have no regard to the extent of disablement that immediately followed the injury. Driskell v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 93 S. W. 880, 882, 117 Mo. App. 362.

Under an accident policy binding insurer to indemnify insured or his beneficiary as therein scheduled, if insured should receive personal bodily injury effected directly and independently of all other causes through external, violent, and purely accidental means, and which should cause at once total and continuous inability to engage in any labor or occupation, and providing that, if within 90 days from the accident any one of the losses scheduled should result necessarily and solely from such injury, insurer would pay as therein designated, an accidental injury causing the death of insured within 90 days thereafter entitles the beneficiary to recover on the policy, whether total disability followed the injury "at once" or not; the words "such injury" referring back to the injury mentioned in the first clause for the purpose of identification, and not having the effect of uniting both sentences, so as to make the provision when considered as a whole mean that, before a beneficiary could recover for the death of insured, there must have been an accidental injury resulting both in immediate and total inability and loss of life. Continental Casualty Co. v. Colvin, 95 Pac. 565, 568, 77 Kan. 561.

"Such judgment," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 2552, relating to the liability of sureties and providing that, if such judgment be obstructed by appeal, supersedeas, or injunction, the time of such obstruction shall also be disallowed, referred to a judgment against the surety or sureties and not against the principal. McGovern v. Rectanus (Ky.) 105 S. W. 965, 967, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380.

Pending an appeal from a judgment ousting a corporation from its franchise to maintain a toll road, the company issued receipts to travelers paying the toll which recited that, in the event "of such judgment being affirmed in the Supreme Court," the receipts would be redeemable on presentation after such affirmation. Held, that the words "such judgment being affirmed" referred to the judgment of ouster which should finally terminate the litigation. Ver Duyn v. Detroit & S. Plank Road Co., 104 N. W. 612, 613, 141 Mich. 450.

The expression "such land," in Texas Laws 1907, p. 492, c. 20, providing that such of the land in the counties included within this section as is now sold, but which may hereafter become subject to sale, shall not be subject to sale until the former sale shall have been canceled, means lands under the provision of the act that are subject to sale without the condition of actual settlement.

Section 6 of chapter 67 of the Laws of 1905, entitled "An act to abolish the state board of taxation and to create in lieu thereof a board for equalization, revision, review, and enforcement of tax assessments" (P. L. 1905, p. 126), authorizes the state board of equalization, "after due investigation," to increase the assessment made upon "any property" that has been assessed at less than its true value, and for this purpose, if necessary, to direct a reassessment of "such property" to be made by an assessor or other taxing officer, or by some other person appointed by the board. The terms "any property" and "such property" import that its purpose is to secure an increase in valuation of some specific parcel of property, and, when the state board determines after due investigation that the property has been assessed at too low a rate, the board is to increase the assessment made upon such property. Jersey City v. Board of Equalization of Taxes of New Jersey, 67 Atl. 38, 40, 74 N. J. Law, 753.

In the provision in a life policy, required by Laws 1907, c. 220 (Rev. Laws Supp. 1909, §§ 1695—2 to 1695—12), that all statements made by the insured shall, in the absence of fraud, be deemed representations, and not warranties, and no such statement shall avoid the policy unless contained in a written application, and unless a copy of such application be indorsed on or attached to the policy, the words "such statement" do not mean statements made in the absence of fraud, but do mean statements made relating to the applicant's history, habits or health, of the character usually made and signed by an applicant for insurance, whether they are made in the absence of fraud or not. Whelock v. Home Life Ins. Co., 131 N. W. 1081, 1083, 115 Minn. 177.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 722, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 143, providing that, if plaintiff fails to reply or demur to the counterclaim, defendant shall be entitled to the same relief as a plaintiff on the failure of defendant to demur or answer the complaint, and if the answer contains new matter, and plaintiff fails to reply or demur thereto within the time allowed by law, defendant may move for such judgment as he may be entitled to upon "such statement," the words "such statement," mean the statement of the new matter relied on as constituting a defense, without any reference to the matter set up in the complaint. State v. Quantie, 94 Pac. 491, 500, 37 Mont. 32.

The words "such work," as used in St. Louis city charter, art. 6, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4869), providing, "Every ordinance requiring such work to be done shall contain a specific appropriation from the public revenue and fund," based on an estimate of cost, etc., mean, when considered in connection with the preceding section of the article and the entire article, work to be paid for out of the city treasury, and do not include work to be paid for by another. City of St. Louis v. Terminal R. Ass'n, 109 S. W. 641, 644, 211 Mo. 364.

Rev. Laws, c. 149, § 35, provides that no action shall be maintained on a guardian's bond after four years from his discharge, unless the person entitled to bring such action is at the discharge out of the commonwealth, when it may be commenced within four years after his return. Chapter 202, § 7, a part of the general statute of limitations, gives minors and insane persons the time limited in previous sections of the chapter after their disability is removed for bringing "such actions." Section 18 provides that the chapter shall not apply to actions where special provision is otherwise made. Held, that section 35, and not section 7, governs the limitation as to suits upon guardians' bonds. Hill v. Arnold, 85 N. E. 97, 199 Mass. 109.

Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, p. 366, c. 410) § 1458, provides that a person who shall use any threatening, etc., behavior with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, etc., shall be guilty of disorderly conduct. Section 1459 provides that, when it appears on oath of a credible witness before any police justice that any person has been guilty "of any such disorderly conduct as in the opinion of such magistrate tends to a breach of the peace," the magistrate may cause the person complained of to be brought before him to answer the charge. Held that, under section 1459, "disorderly conduct" is such conduct as in the opinion of the magistrate tends to a breach of the peace, and the section does not relate only to the acts specified in section 1458. The evident intent and meaning of section 1459 is "any disorderly conduct such as in the opinion" of the magistrate tends to a breach of the peace. The word "such" is correlative with "as," and, if it had been intended by its use to refer to the acts set forth in section 1458 only, the word "as" would not have been used. The use of the word "as," without any punctuation after the word "conduct," shows that the word "such" is used only to anticipate the limiting clause commencing with "as," and not to refer to the preceding section. People v. Mansi, 113 N. Y. Supp. 866, 868, 129 App. Div. 386.

As any

The word "such" must be construed as equivalent to "any" in Act June 9, 1897, § 6, providing that no child under 16 years of age shall be employed to work by any person or corporation at such hazardous employment whereby its life or limb is in danger. Struthers v. People, 116 Ill. App. 481, 488.

Code 1906, § 1106, requires persons dealing in firearms, etc., to keep a record of sales thereof; section 1107 makes it unlawful to sell, give, or lend to any minor or intoxicated person, with knowledge, any weapon the carrying of which concealed is prohibited, etc.; section 1108 declares that any father, who shall knowingly permit his son under 16 to have or carry concealed any weapon the carrying of which is prohibited, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and section 1109 provides that any student who shall carry on the school grounds, or within two miles thereof, any weapon the carrying of which concealed is prohibited, or who shall permit such weapon to be carried or had by pupils, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 1110 then provides that if any "such" person, having or carrying any other weapon, the carrying of which concealed is prohibited, shall in the presence of three or more persons, in a threatening manner, etc., he shall, on conviction, be fined. Held, that section 1110 is not limited to the person described in the four preceding sections; but the word "such" should be regarded as having been inserted by a clerical mistake, and that section 1110 should be construed as applicable generally to any person. State v. Ware, 59 South. 854, 102 Miss. 634.

Laws 1890, p. 1106, c. 565, § 78, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1398, c. 876, provides that any railroad corporation may contract with any other for the use of their respective roads, and, if such contract shall be a lease, certain formalities are to be observed in its execution. Section 104 (page 1114) provides that "every 'such' corporation entering into such contract shall carry or permit any other party thereto to carry between any two parts on railroads or portions thereof embraced in such contract any passenger desiring to make one continuous trip between such points for one single fare not higher than the fare lawfully chargeable by either of 'such' corporations for an adult person. Every 'such' corporation shall upon demand and without extra charge give to each passenger paying one single fare a transfer entitling such passenger to one continuous trip to any point of any railroad embraced in such contract, to the end that the public convenience may be promoted by the operation of the railroads embraced in such contract substantially as a single railroad with a single rate of fare." Held, that the word "such," in that connection, refers to "any railroad corporation or any corporation owing or operating any railroad or railroad route within this state," and that section 104 applies to surface lines leased by one or more corporations to another, and operated by the lessee, so as to render the lessee liable where transfers are tendered and refused for the penalties provided for their refusal. Griffin v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 72 N. E. 513, 516, 179 N. Y. 438.

Laws 1909, c. 20, § 1, declares it unlawful "to report, record or register" any bet on a horse race, whether held in or out of the state, unless held in an inclosed race track or fair grounds and the bet is made and all acts in regard to it are done in the inclosure on the day of the race. Section 2 provides that when for 14 days, in any year, there have been bets reported, recorded, or registered on a horse race on any inclosed race track or fair grounds, it shall thereafter be unlawful during such year to report, record, or register any bet on a horse race held "in such inclosure." Laws 1909, c. 92, amends the prior act by expressly extending it to "making" such bets, and by substituting "thirty days" for 14 days, as regard counties of the first class, leaving the 14 days provision in effect in other counties. Held, that betting on horse races in counties of the first class was allowed for only 30 days in a year, and not 30 days on each track therein; "in such inclosure" meaning the same as "in any inclosure" or "in such an inclosure." State v. Gemmell, 122 Pac. 268, 269, 45 Mont. 210.

In the last sentence of Bankr. Act 1898, c. 541, § 67c, 30 Stat. 564, providing that, "if the dissolution of such lien" would militate against the interests of the estate of the bankrupt, it shall not be dissolved by the adjudication, the words "such lien" refer to any lien "created or obtained in or pursuant to any suit or proceeding at law or in equity" within four months mentioned at the beginning of the subdivision, and the provision applies to liens obtained for the benefit of all creditors as well as those obtained for the benefit of one creditor, to which clauses 1, 2, and 3 alone relate. As so construed, such subdivision is not in conflict with subdivision 1 of the same section. First Nat. Bank v. Guarantee Title & Trust Co., 178 Fed. 187, 191, 101 C. C. A. 507.

The words "manufacturer," "such manufacturer," and "said manufacturer," as used in Acts 1908, p. 281, c. 189, § 15, providing that a licensed manufacturer may sell the products of his brewing at any place within the state, except where such manufactory is situated in no-license territory, but such manufacturer may sell the product of his brewing to be delivered to a common carrier to be transferred to any place where the same may be legally sold, and the said manufacturer may sell the products of his brewing in quantities not less than one gallon at the place of manufacture, except in no-license territory, mean any manufacturer, whether located in license or no-license territory; the only difference between the two classes of manufacturers intended by the statute being that the manufacturer located in license territory can sell and deliver not less than one gallon at the place of manufacture, while the manufacturer located in no-license territory can make no sale and delivery at such place. Robert Portner Brewing Co. v. Southern Exp. Co., 63 S. E. 6, 8, 109 Va. 22.

That testimony was given against one charged with bribery does not conclusively bar the use of such testimony against a witness in subsequent judicial proceedings against him, but, to have such effect, the testimony must have been given under some compulsion. The term "such testimony," in Const. art. 3, § 32, providing that one may be compelled to testify in any lawful investigation or judicial proceeding against one charged with having permitted bribery or corrupt solicitation and will not be permitted to withhold his testimony upon the ground that it may incriminate himself or subject him to public infamy, but that such testimony cannot afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding except for perjury in giving such testimony, does not mean any testimony, but merely such as a witness may have been "compelled to testify," and, where it does not appear from the record of the prior case that accused in a subsequent case testified in obedience to a subpoena or other compulsion, nor that he objected to answering any question put to him, his testimony in the prior case may be used against him in the subsequent case. Commonwealth v. Richardson, 79 Atl. 222, 229 Pa. 609.

As referring to last antecedent

In construing a deed which provided that not more than two dwellings should be erected upon the property within ten years after the date of the deed, and that "such dwellings so erected" should be set back at least 15 feet from the building line and should aggregate in cost not less than $3,000, the court said the word "such" always refers to an antecedent in the context of the instrument, which explains its meaning, and as "dwellings" are not mentioned in deed, except in the restriction as to building line, "such dwellings" are those permitted to be erected by the building line restriction and these are limited to two in number during the prescribed period of 10 years; and it was held that the restriction as to building line and cost referred only to the buildings to be constructed within the 10-year period, so that both restrictions ceased to be effective at the end of 10 years. Mitchell v. Packham, 63 Atl. 219, 221, 103 Md. 693.

The inheritance tax law, imposing a tax on property passing by will or by the intestate laws, for which heirs, legatees, and devisees, etc., shall be liable, and declaring that when the beneficial interests to any property shall pass to any father, etc., the rate of taxes shall be a specified sum on every $100 of the market value of the property received by each person, provided that $10,000 of any "such estate" shall not be subject to taxes, lays a tax on the receipt of property by each person, and the exemption applies to the separate distributive shares and legacies, and not to the aggregate value of the property of decedent; the words "such estate" referring to the words "property received by each person." People v. Koenig, 85 Pac. 1129, 1130, 37 Colo. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 140.

As used in St. 1905, p. 255, c. 330, section 1 of which imposes on certain hospitals the duty to keep records of the cases under their care and the history of the same in books kept for that purpose, and section 2 of which provides that such records shall be admissible in evidence, the words "such records" embraces only those kept pursuant to section 1. Delaney v. Framingham Gas Fuel & Power Co., 88 N. E. 773, 776, 202 Mass. 359.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 8, provides that tort actions for personal injuries shall survive to the extent stated in the five following sections. By section 9, if such an action is pending at the death of a party, it shall abate, unless decedent's administrator, if decedent was plaintiff, shall appear and prosecute the action before the end of the second term after decedent's death. By section 10, if an action is not then pending and has not become barred, one may be brought any time within two years after decedent's death. By section 11, the damages recoverable in any such action shall not exceed $7,000. Section 12 provides that if the administrator of the deceased party is plaintiff, and the death of such party was caused by the injury complained of in the action, the mental and physical pain suffered, reasonable expenses caused by the injury, probable duration of his life, etc., may be considered as elements of damage. Section 13 provides how the damages recoverable shall be distributed, and section 14 provides that all other actions existing in behalf of or against a deceased person, except those for the recovery of penalties and forfeitures of money under penal statutes, shall survive and may be prosecuted or defended by his administrator. Held, construing section 11 in view of Pub. St. 1901, c. 2, § 14, making the words "said" and "such," when used to refer to any person or thing, apply to the person or thing last mentioned, that the words, "in such action," therein, referred to the action authorized by section 10, and not to the pending action authorized to be prosecuted by the administrator by section 9, so that damages recoverable in such action are not limited. Piper v. Boston & M. R., 75 Atl. 1041, 1046, 75 N. H. 435.

Code 1899, c. 31, § 25 (Code 1906, § 884), relating to errors in tax proceedings, provides that no irregularity, error, or mistake in the delinquent list or the return thereof, or in the affidavit thereto, or in the list of sales filed with the clerk of the county court, or in the recordation of "such list" or affidavit, etc., shall, after deed made, invalidate the sale. Held, that the irregularity, error, or mistake in the recordation of such list or affidavit intended by the statute to be provided against did not refer to the delinquent list, but to the list of sales filed with the clerk; but the words "such list" being used to refer to the list next preceding the words, which was the "sales list." Ritchie Lumber Co. v. Nutter, 66 S. E. 646, 649, 66 W. Va. 444.

The words "such period," in Laws 1894, p. 910, c. 447, § 27, providing that Sunday must be excluded from reckoning if it is the last day of any such period, refer to the preceding sentence in the statute, which relates to a number of days specified as a period from a certain day within which, or after or before which, an act was authorized or required to be done. Benoit v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 94 App. Div. 24.

St. 1902, c. 435, § 1, as amended by St. 1909, c. 514, § 48, provides that no child or woman shall be employed in laboring in specified occupations, except as permitted, etc., and then declares that every employer shall post in a conspicuous place, in every room in which such persons are employed, a printed notice stating the number of hours of work required of them in each day of the week, the hours of commencing and stopping work, and the hours when the time allowed for meals begins and ends. Chapter 514, § 67, declares that the meal hours shall be the same where the women and children employed number five or more, except that an exception is made in section 69 of certain employments where continuous process is required, and declares that the employment of such persons in any time other than stated in the printed notice shall be a violation thereof. Held, that the words "such persons," as used in section 48, referred to those who regularly employed women and children more than 10 hours in any one day, and that only such manufacturing and mechanical establishments as employed women and children in practically permanent labor were required to post notices fixing definitely the hours of work. Commonwealth v. Riley, 97 N. E. 367, 369, 210 Mass. 387, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 388.

"Such place," as used in a statute, which provides that when one, after the time fixed for the completion of a tax assessment, sends into the taxing district a stock of goods to be disposed of in a place of business temporarily occupied, without intending to engage in permanent trade in such place, it shall be taxed at the general rate for the current year, refers to the place of business. Lang v. Berrien, 71 Atl. 117, 118, 77 N. J. Law, 214.

Civ. Code 1895, § 1900, provides that any domestic corporation may be sued on contracts in the county in which the contract was made or is to be performed, if it has an office and transacts business there. Suits for damages, because of torts, may be brought in the county where the cause of action originated. Service of "such suits" may be effected by leaving a copy of the writ with the agent of defendant, or, if there be no agent in the county, then at the agency or place of business. Held, that the words "such suits" refer to suits for damages because of torts, and, if defendant has an agent in the county where the tort, wrong, or injury was done, service may be effected by leaving a copy of the writ with him. But, under this statute, a corporation, with its principal office in a given county, cannot be sued in another county for a trespass committed therein, when it has no agent, agency, or place of business in the latter county. Tuggle v. Enterprise Lumber Co., 51 S. E. 433, 434, 123 Ga. 480.

As used in Rev. St. 1898, § 3315, providing that a subcontractor of a principal contractor, furnishing any material to such principal contractor, "in any of the cases mentioned in the preceding section shall be entitled to the lien and remedy given by this chapter; if within sixty days after furnishing such materials, he shall give notice in writing setting forth that he has been employed by such principal contractor to furnish and has furnished such material," etc.—the words "such material" manifestly refer to material furnished under the circumstances and conditions of the preceding section, giving a lien to the principal contractors for material furnished to be used "for or in or about" the erection or construction of buildings. But a notice by a subcontractor, stating that he was employed to furnish and did furnish material as specified for the construction of the building, with the amount due from the principal contractor, is sufficient, without setting out the conditions of the sale of the material to the principal contractor. Laev Lumber Co. v. Auer, 101 N. W. 425, 427, 123 Wis. 178.

As of like kind

The word "such" is defined by the lexicographers as: "Of that kind of the same or like kind, identical with or similar to something specified or implied; * * * being the same as what has been mentioned or indicated; being the same in quality; having the quality specified, etc." In order to bring a public amusement, not specifically enumerated, within the statute, providing that it shall be unlawful to keep open on Sunday any theater, playhouse, show, concert, saloon, or any "such" place of public amusement, the likeness or similarity must exist in some other than the mere fact that it is a public amusement and must in a general way correspond to the amusements specified. In re Hull, 110 Pac. 256, 257, 18 Idaho, 475, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465.

The word "such," as used in a constitutional provision directing the Legislature to enact a law whereby any county, justice precinct, town, city, or such subdivisions of the county as may be designated by the commissioners' court of the county, may determine from time to time whether the sale of intoxicants shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits, means subdivisions of like character—political subdivisions of the county—and empowers the Legislature to authorize the commissioners' court to designate some other existing subdivision of the county than one of those enumerated, but does not sanction a law which authorizes the commissioners' court to combine two or more political subdivisions of a county into a local option district, thus, in effect, creating a new subdivision. Ex parte Heyman, 78 S. W. 349, 353, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 532.

The term "such other subdivision," as used in Const. Tex. art. 16, § 20, providing that the Legislature shall enact a law whereby the voters of any county, justice's precinct, etc., or such other subdivision of a county, may by a majority vote determine whether the sale of liquor shall be prohibited therein, means subdivisions of a like character. A county or school district is not such a "subdivision." Ex parte Haney, 103 S. W. 1155, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 634; Ex parte Banks (Tex.) 103 S. W. 1156.

The first or primary definition of the word "such," in the Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia, is "of that kind;" "of like kind or degree;" "like;" "similar." A secondary meaning of the word is given as "the same as previously mentioned or specified;" "not other or different." Under a fire policy covering enumerated articles and "such" other merchandise as is usually kept for sale in a retail hardware store, the primary meaning of the word is the correct one to be applied, especially as the word "such" is followed by "as," and this meaning is strengthened by the use of "other," and the words, read together, mean "articles in addition to those already mentioned," and it was not meant only to include goods of a kind already mentioned. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Dobbins & Ewing, 86 S. W. 383, 385, 114 Tenn. 227.

In an action for injuries to an employé while working at a machine, where the jury have found that the machine was not reasonably safe, and that the injury was the fatal and probable result of its unsafe condition, the finding in the affirmative, in answer to the question, evidently framed to cover the question of proximate cause, whether "such injury" ought to have been foreseen by a person of ordinary care and prudence, will be construed as meaning that "such an injury" or an injury of like nature ought to have been apprehended or considered probable. Coolidge v. Hallauer, 105 N. W. 568, 570, 126 Wis. 244.

In Act Aug. 13, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 92) § 6, providing that upon approaching a pedestrian in a highway, or horses or other draft animals being ridden or driven thereon, the person operating an automobile shall give reasonable warning of its approach by bell, horn, gong, or other signal, and use every reasonable precaution to insure the safety of such person or animal, the words "such person" apply to the rider or driver of an animal on a highway, as well as to a pedestrian. Holland v. State, 76 S. E. 104, 105, 11 Ga. App. 769.

As referring to omitted antecedent

The word "such," in a resolution of the county board, where it appears to perform no function in the sense in which employed, may sometimes be construed to refer to some omitted antecedent or consequent, and such antecedent or consequent supplied by construction. Cochran v. Vermillion County, 113 Ill. App. 140, 144.

As same as previously mentioned

Kirby's Dig. § 957, provides that any corporation may surrender its charter by a resolution, on filing a certified copy of the resolution with the Secretary of State and the clerk of the county in which "such corporation" is organized. When that section was adopted as a part of the act of April 12, 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 265), railroad corporations could be organized by filing the articles of association with the Secretary of State, while manufacturing and other business corporations were required by Kirby's Dig. § 845, to file their articles of association and certificate with the clerk of the county in which they were to have their principal place of business and also with the Secretary of State. Held, that section 957 does not apply to railroad corporations "such" meaning, previously mentioned or specified, and the phrase "in which such corporation is organized" limiting "any corporation" to those required to file their articles and certificate with the clerk of the county in which they are to have their principal place of business. Freeo Val. R. Co. v. Hodges, 151 S. W. 281, 282, 105 Ark. 314.

The word "such," as used in an instruction which, after describing the offense charged, stated that, if the jury find that "such" offense was committed at any time within five years prior to the filing of the information, they should find a verdict of guilty, signifies the same as previously mentioned or specified, not other or different, and refers to the offense described in the first part of the instruction. State v. Connors, 94 Pac. 199, 201, 37 Mont. 15.

As suggestive or mandatory word

The word "such," in Code 1896, § 3440, requiring locomotive engineers, on perceiving an obstruction on the track, to use all means known to skillful engineers, "such" as applying brakes and reversing engine, to stop their trains, is used only as suggestive, and is not mandatory, and the statute requires the doing of all things known to skillful engineers, and the direction to apply brakes and reverse the engine is only suggestive. Harris v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 44 South. 962, 963, 153 Ala. 139, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 261.

SUCKER

A "sucker" is a person readily deceived. People v. Simmons, 109 N. Y. Supp. 190, 194, 125 App. Div. 234.

SUDDEN

On evidence in an action against a street railroad for injuries from negligently and suddenly starting a car, as plaintiff was entering, construing the word "sudden" to mean happening without notice, coming unexpectedly, held, that the question whether the car was negligently started was for the jury. Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 151 S. W. 91, 93, 245 Mo. 598.

SUDDEN AFFRAY

In the statute defining the offense of shooting or cutting another in sudden affray or in sudden heat of passion, the words "in sudden affray" are not synonymous with the words "in sudden heat and passion." Brown v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 79 S. W. 1193, 1194; Tall v. Commissioners (Ky.) 110 S. W. 425, 427 (citing Violet v. Commonwealth, 72 S. W. 1, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1720).

SUDDEN HEAT AND PASSION

Sudden affray distinguished, see Sudden Affray.

An instruction that if defendant "in sudden heat and passion," created by such provocation as is ordinarily calculated to excite the passions beyond control, and which did then and there excite defendant's passions beyond control, and without previous malice, willfully shot, etc., he was guilty of voluntary manslaughter, was not erroneous; the term "without previous malice" was necessarily included in the term "in sudden heat and passion." Metcalf v. Commonwealth, 86 S. W. 534, 535, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 704.

SUDDEN PASSION

See Under the Immediate Influence of Sudden Passion.

Though the "sudden passion" which will reduce the killing to manslaughter is usually anger, yet it is not limited thereto, but sudden terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection, is sufficient. Commonwealth v. Colandro, 80 Atl. 571, 574, 231 Pa. 343 (quoting 6 Words & Phrases, p. 5227).

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4168, providing that homicide is justifiable when committed in a "sudden heat of passion" caused by an attempt of the deceased to commit a rape upon or defile the wife, daughter, or other female relative or dependent of the accused, or when defilement has actually been committed, the "sudden heat of passion" must have, at the time of the homicide, controlled his actions, stifled his power of reasoning, and for the time being rendered him incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong. Such uncontrollable passion must therefore necessarily have been aroused at such close proximity in point of time to the fatal act as to have left no sufficient time intervening for cooling and for reason to again assert itself; and, if sufficient time had elapsed between obtaining knowledge of the defilement or attempted defilement and the commission of the homicide for cool reflection and deliberation by him, the killing is not justified, though there had been defilement or an attempt to defile. An accused cannot rely for justification on mere rumors or appearances observed by him at any distance of time before he kills deceased. The statute was evidently designed to apply only where accused had come suddenly upon the defiler, or had unexpectedly received reasonably reliable information of the same, and the fatal blow was struck in uncontrollable passion, suddenly aroused because of the suddenness of the occasion, and in the absence of sufficient time for deliberation and for reason to gain sway over passion. The law was not intended to shield an accused who, because of mere rumors or appearances, which he deemed but to be evidence of undue familiarity, determines to kill, and with that purpose in view pursues the purpose and willfully shoots the parties down while not in a guilty act or compromising position. State v. Botha, 75 Pac. 731, 736, 27 Utah, 289.

SUDDEN PROVOCATION

The repetition by an employé at the breakfast table that he would not, though ordered, go out with his team before breakfast so long as his knife stayed with him, is not a sudden and sufficient provocation with-in Gen. St. 1906, § 3204, defining excusable homicide. Pelt v. State, 50 South. 832, 58 Fla. 90.

SUE

The National Home for Disabled Volunteers, being a charitable institution engaged as an agency of the federal government in discharge of a governmental function, is not subject to be sued in tort for damages for alleged unlawful and wrongful or negligent acts of its officers in diverting and polluting waters of a spring on lands of plaintiff, the power "to sue and be sued at law and in equity" conferred on the corporation by Rev. St. § 4825, being limited to matters within scope of other corporate powers with which it is vested. Lyle v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 170 Fed. 842, 843.

SUE TO INSOLVENCY

"Sue to insolvency" means that the party shall exhaust the ordinary legal remedies provided for the collection of debts. Pollard v. Murrell, 6 Ala. 661, 662.

SUERTE

"Suerte" is a term used in the Mexican law to designate a small lot, two hundred varas square, suitable for a garden, vineyard, or orchard. Redding v. White, 27 Cal. 282, 285.

SUFFER

See Conscious Suffering.

A charge to allow plaintiff a just, pecuniary compensation for bodily injuries and disabilities and "suffering" and distress of mind caused by the acts complained of is not subject to the objection of allowing one recovery for bodily injuries and another for disabilities, and one for "suffering" of mind and another for "distress" of mind. The term "suffering," as used in the charge, is evidently intended to refer to physical pain, but, if construed to refer to mental distress, the charge only permits of one recovery for that element of damage. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Highnote (Tex.) 84 S. W. 365, 368.

It may be assumed that the word "suffer" implies not merely nonresistance to that which is done, but also an approval of or at least an acquiescence in it, with an ability to prevent it. But where a child was committed to the custody of the State Board of Charity, and supported by the commonwealth, and the mother made only a few cursory inquiries, the last of which was much more than two years before the petition for adoption, and she did not appear to have made opposition to the adjudication of commitment, though notified of the proceeding, a finding that she "suffered" her child to be supported as a pauper by the commonwealth for more than two years continuously prior to the petition was warranted. Purinton v. Jamrock, 80 N. E. 802, 803, 804, 195 Mass. 187, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926.

A debtor who does not pay a lawful debt when due, upon which the creditor obtains a judgment against him and levies on his property, "suffers and permits" the creditor to obtain a preference, through legal proceedings, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3, subd. 3, cl. a, 30 Stat. 546, 547. Bogen & Trummel v. Protter, 129 Fed. 533, 534, 64 C. C. A. 63.

A will devised certain real estate in trust to a religious society for the erection of a chapel, and provided that the society should "suffer and permit" the same "to be under the care, custody, and management" of the deacons of the society as designated. A subsequent clause bequeathed a legacy for the support of an industrial school, "to be held and managed by the same persons as are to hold and manage the trusts in respect to the chapel"; and a third clause bequeathed a legacy to defray the expenses of maintaining a minister and public worship, and, if necessary, to be applied toward rebuilding the house, if destroyed. Held, that the deacons of the society were entitled to control the disposition and management of the property so devised and bequeathed, independent of the society holding the title. Worcester City

Missionary Soc. v. Memorial Church, 72 N. E. 71, 74, 186 Mass. 531.

Knowledge and intention implied

The words "suffer" and "permit," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 1978, and in an indictment based thereon, mean that defendant must have suffered or permitted the game with knowledge that money or property was being bet, won, or lost thereby, or that some fact or circumstance must appear from which such knowledge might be inferred. Bunnell v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 99 S. W. 237, 239.

The words "suffer" and "permit," in the statute punishing one who suffers or permits gaming on premises in his possession or under his control, mean that accused must have suffered or permitted gaming, with knowledge that money was bet and won or lost thereby; or the evidence must show facts by which the jury may infer such knowledge. Lancaster Hotel Co. v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 942, 943, 149 Ky. 443.

At defendant's trial for suffering a game of poker to be played in a house in his occupation and control, under Ky. St. § 1978 (Russell's St. § 3572), the court instructed that it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant suffered games of cards to be played in a house in his occupation or under his control at or in which money or property was won or lost, and that the expression "suffering games of cards to be played" meant the allowing or permitting games of cards to be played with the knowledge that money or property was, or is to be, won or lost thereon, without any further instruction as to the evidence from which the jury might infer such knowledge. Held, that these instructions fully covered the case. Ruh v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 219, 220, 141 Ky. 585.

Power to prevent implied

"Suffered," as used in a covenant against incumbrances "done, suffered, or made," implies reasonable control, and it cannot be held to apply to an incumbrance not caused by the act of the party nor within his power to prevent. Polak v. Mattson, 128 Pac. 89, 92, 22 Idaho, 727.

Voluntary and involuntary act included

Dismissal for failure to furnish additional security for costs is a nonsuit, within Rev. St. 1899, § 4285, declaring that, where plaintiff "suffers" a nonsuit, he may commence a new action within one year. Wetmore v. Crouch, 87 S. W. 954, 955, 188 Mo. 647, 3 Ann. Cas. 94 (citing and adopting Chouteau v. Rowse, 2 S. W. 209, 90 Mo. 191; Hewitt v. Steele, 38 S. W. 82, 136 Mo. 334).

In a suit for death, after the evidence for plaintiff was all in, plaintiff was compelled to take a nonsuit, with leave to move to set it aside. Thereafter a motion to set aside was denied, and judgment was rendered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff then, without appealing from the judgment, started another suit. Rev. St. 1899, § 2868, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 138 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1652), and section 4285 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2357), provides that if any action shall have been commenced within the times prescribed in this chapter, and the plaintiff therein "suffer" a nonsuit, such plaintiff may commence a new action within one year after such nonsuit is suffered. Held, that the fact that the court rendered final judgment for defendant after denying the motion for nonsuit, did not make it any the less a judgment of nonsuit, permitting the second action within the statute, since on overruling of the motion to set aside the nonsuit, the case was out of court and no judgment on the merits could thereafter be entered. Mason v. Kansas City Belt R. Co., 125 S. W. 1123, 1130, 226 Mo. 212, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914.

SUFFERANCE

See Tenant at Sufferance.

SUFFICIENT

See Legally Sufficient; Safe and Sufficient.

The word "sufficient," within Rev. St. c. 98, § 10, requiring "sufficient" sureties on replevin bonds, means adequate to suffice or equal to the end proposed. Massachusetts Breweries Co. v. Herman, 76 Atl. 943, 944, 106 Me. 524.

An instruction, in the language of Kirby's Dig. § 6644, defining a railroad company's duty to maintain stock guards is not objectionable because it uses the words "good" and "sufficient," while the statute uses the words "suitable" and "safe"; the words being substantially the same. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Greer, 119 S. W. 1121, 1123, 90 Ark. 531.

An instruction that it was the duty of the carrier to stop the train a sufficient time to permit passengers to leave the car with safety was properly modified by changing the word "sufficient" to "reasonable." A "sufficient" time where the passenger acts with "reasonable" diligence is but tantamount to giving the passenger a reasonable opportunity to alight. Barringer v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 85 S. W. 94, 95, 73 Ark. 548.

The words "ample" and "sufficient" are so nearly synonymous that no material error was committed in the use of the word "ample," in an instruction as to the time a train should stop at a station to permit passengers to alight, though the word "sufficient" would have been more appropriate. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Haynes (Tex.) 86 S. W. 934, 935.

An instruction requiring the carrier to use "sufficient" accommodations, instead of "reasonable" accommodations, as required by statute, was not erroneous, where, from another instruction given, it was manifest that the court did not intend to convey to the jury, by use of the word "sufficient," any meaning beyond that intended by "reasonable," as used in the statute, and in that connection read to the jury the section of the statute requiring railroad companies to furnish "reasonable" accommodations. Anderson v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 61 S. E. 1096, 1097, 1098, 81 S. C. 1.

Though a statute requires motor vehicles to be provided with "a good and efficient" brake, an instruction that "a good and sufficient" brake must be supplied was not improper, as "efficient" means that which causes an effect, and "sufficient," as used in the instruction, meant, that the brake should be reasonably sufficient for the purposes for which it was intended, and it was therefore practically synonymous with "efficient." Fox v. Barekman, 99 N. E. 989, 991, 178 Ind. 572 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6763).

A cattle guard is "sufficient," within the meaning of the statute, if it ordinarily, usually, or generally prevents cattle from getting on the track. Sappington v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 69 S. W. 32, 34, 95 Mo. App. 387.

An instruction, in an action for trespass to land, that by United States statutes a right of way for highways is granted over public lands, and long-continued user by the public is "sufficient" to establish an acceptance of the grant, is not objectionable as declaring long-continued user essential to the establishment of the highway. Montgomery v. Somers, 90 Pac. 674, 677, 50 Or. 259.

SUFFICIENT ABILITY

No absolute rule can be laid down as to what constitutes "sufficient ability," within the statute authorizing the commonwealth to recover charges paid for the support of an insane person, where he is of "sufficient ability." The word "sufficient" implies a consideration of the circumstances of the person who is called upon to pay, and the question is one of present ability and of the existing condition of things and not of future contingencies. A person will still be regarded as of "sufficient ability," though his capital is being impaired by the support of himself and his family, and will be still further impaired if he is required to contribute to the support of a daughter by a former marriage. A woman about 70 years old, who has about $1,200, is in good condition physically, and has a good prospect of living 10 years with good care, her mental condition being such that she could with perfect safety be removed to a private family, if she could be well cared for, and might recover, is of "sufficient ability," within the meaning of the statute. Chapin v. McCurdy, 81 N. E. 652, 653, 196 Mass. 63 (citing Templeton v. Stratton, 128 Mass. 137). And one whose guardian has $890 on deposit in a savings bank is of "sufficient ability," within the meaning of the statute. Chapin v. Kelly, 81 N. E. 653, 196 Mass. 66.

SUFFICIENT BOND

As used in Code, § 2450, providing that, where a statement of consent to the sale of intoxicating liquors has been filed, any citizen, on filing a "sufficient bond" for costs, may file a general denial as to the statement, and on being given notice thereof the persons who filed the statement, shall file with the city clerk bond conditioned to pay the costs of the hearing in the district court, in a sum to be fixed by the clerk of court, the words "sufficient bond" mean an adequate one, and have no reference to the conditions to be embodied in the instrument. A fair construction of the statute is that a penalty in the first of the two bonds provided for therein should be fixed by the clerk of court, and the bond filed with and approved by him. Lemen v. Drexel, 132 N. W. 184, 187, 152 Iowa, 144.

SUFFICIENT CASE FOR JURY

The words "sufficient case for the jury," in the statute authorizing the granting of a nonsuit when the plaintiff fails to prove a "sufficient case for the jury," are not meant as words of limitation as to cases which are tried only before a jury, but they are meant to be a guide to the court as a statutory test of the sufficiency of the evidence; and hence the court's right to grant a nonsuit extends to equity cases, and is not limited to those only which are triable to a jury. McCafferty v. Flinn, 107 Pac. 225, 226, 32 Nev. 269 (quoting Burch v. Southern Pac. Co., 104 Pac. 225, 32 Nev. 75, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1166).

SUFFICIENT CAUSE

See, also, Probable Cause.

The words "sufficient cause," as used in a benefit certificate, providing that the secretary of the medical board of the order should have power to reconsider any medical examination within six months after passing the same, and, if there be sufficient cause which existed at the time of the examination to have rejected it, he might reject it, whereupon the assured should cease to be a beneficiary member of the order, means more than a sufficient reason. They mean such a state of things, as distinguished from such as might in reason, but would not in fact, lead to a rejection. Gilroy v. Supreme Court, I. O. F., 67 Atl. 1037, 1038, 75 N. J. Law, 584, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632.

Where creditors of a decedent's estate presented judgments as claims against the estate, and assumed that the burden of proof was on the next of kin to show that the judgments were not within the class excepted from the operation of the discharge in bankruptcy, the error in such assumption was not "sufficient cause" within Code Civ. Proc. § 2481, subd. 6, for opening a decree settling the administrator's account. In re Peterson's Estate, 124 N. Y. Supp. 907, 909, 68 Misc. Rep. 10.

As legal cause

A statute authorizing the removing of an officer for "sufficient cause," including incapacity and official misbehavior, contemplates a cause relating to the administration of his office, affecting the rights and interests of the public. Lancaster v. Hill, 71 S. E. 731, 732, 136 Ga. 405, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 272.

Probable cause synonymous

Under Pen. Code, § 872, providing that if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe defendant guilty, the magistrate must issue the commitment, evidence that accused on June 16, 1906, stated, in the affidavit to secure registration as a voter, that he was born in England, and on January 31, 1908, stated, in a similar affidavit, that he was born in San Francisco, was sufficient to justify an order of commitment; the term "sufficient cause," as used in the statute being equivalent to the term "probable cause," as used in the habeas corpus act. Pen. Code, § 1487. People v. Coombs, 98 Pac. 686, 687, 9 Cal. App. 262

SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION

A duebill, issued to the holder of an order for the payment of money for his services by the drawee of the order in part payment thereof, is supported by "sufficient consideration," under Civ. Code, §§ 2160, 2161, relating to "good consideration," since, the transaction amounting to an assignment of the order, the payee of the order lost his right to a statutory lien for his services, and the drawee (the maker of the duebill) gained the benefit of its waiver. Parnell v. Davenport, 93 Pac. 939, 940, 36 Mont. 571.

An agreement to extend the time for payment of a debt is ample consideration within Negotiable Instruments Law, §§ 25, 27, for an agreement in a collateral note that notes pledged may be held to secure any other debt. American Nat. Bank v. J. S. Minor & Son, 135 S. W. 278, 280, 142 Ky. 792.

SUFFICIENT DEED

See Good and Sufficient Deed; Good and Sufficient Quitclaim Deed.

SUFFICIENT DESCRIPTION

See Describe—Description.

The provision of Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2, providing that land must be listed for taxation by township, range, section, and, when such land is not a congressional division or subdivision by metes and bounds or other description "sufficient to identify" it, implies that evidence may be received, not for the purpose of helping out a defective description or to show the intention with which it was made or to resolve an ambiguity in its terms, none of which things can be done, but to show the sufficiency of the description and apply the description given to the surface of the earth. Baird v. Monroe, 89 Pac. 352, 357, 150 Cal. 560 (quoting Best v. Wohlford, 78 Pac. 293, 144 Cal. 733).

SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE

See Sustained by Sufficient Evidence.

"Sufficient evidence" is defined to be such evidence as in amount is adequate to justify the court or jury in adopting the conclusion in support of which it is adduced. United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 124 Fed. 393, 402 (citing Walker v. Collins, 59 Fed. 70, 8 C. C. A. 1, and quoting Cent. Dict.).

An instruction, in a civil action, that plaintiff was required to establish his case to the satisfaction of the jury was error, since the jury might find for plaintiff if they believed from the preponderance of the evidence that he was entitled to recover; "satisfactory evidence" or "sufficient evidence" meaning the amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt. Brewer v. Doose (Tex.) 146 S. W. 323, 324 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6335).

In proceedings to have the name of a certain person stricken from the enrollment book of an election district, affidavits supporting the application, which stated that such person was not a qualified elector of the district in which the enrollment was made, that he had removed from, and no longer resided at, the address at which he was enrolled as residing, that he did not reside there, nor in such election district, at the time of the making of the affidavits, and that his then address was unknown, were not "sufficient evidence" to authorize a court in striking out such elector's name under subdivision 11 of section 3 of the primary election law (chapter 179, p. 332, of the Laws of 1898, as amended by chapter 350, p. 900, of the Laws of 1904), authorizing and requiring such action on proof consisting of "sufficient evidence" of the elector's removal from the election district, where they did not show that either affiant was the lessee, janitor, or proprietor of the house from which the elector enrolled, or in a position to know the facts set forth. In re Dalessandro, 81 N. E. 1163, 188 N. Y. 585.

The word "sufficiency," in the rule that a finding on conflicting evidence will be adhered to if supported by sufficient evidence, means sufficient in the mind of the reviewing court. Faulkner v. Simms, 94 N. W. 113, 115, 68 Neb. 295.

SUFFICIENT FENCE

See Legal and Sufficient Fence.

SUFFICIENT GROUNDS

The words "sufficient grounds," as used in the statute regulating the practice in granting writs of ne exeat, mean grounds sufficient under the principles of the common law, and no grounds are sufficient, under those principles, unless it appears that the party is a debtor. Davidor v. Rosenberg, 109 N. W. 925, 926, 130 Wis. 22, 118 Am. St. Rep. 986.

SUFFICIENT INSTRUCTION

"Instructions" are "sufficient," if, when considered in their entirety and not by detachments or fragments, they adequately present the issues in the case. Oölitic Stone Co. of Indiana v. Ridge, 91 N. E. 944, 951, 174 Ind. 558.

SUFFICIENT SUPPORT

See Good and Sufficient Support.

SUFFICIENT TITLE

See Good and Sufficient Title.

SUFFICIENT VALUE

As used in St. 1906, c. 356, § 1, as amended by St. 1910, c. 460, providing that if the commissioners on fish and game determine that the fish or fisheries of any brook or stream are of sufficient value to warrant the prohibition or regulation of the discharge therein from sawmills, and that the discharge or sawdust from a particular mill injures the fish, they may regulate or prohibit such discharge, the words "of sufficient value" mean of a value sufficient to justify the preservation and multiplication of the fish in the stream, in view of all the circumstances, including the location of the stream, the opportunities afforded by it for enjoyment, etc., and do not mean that it must be of sufficient value to justify devoting the stream to fish culture, instead of industry. Lyman v. Commissioners on Fisheries and Game, 97 N. E. 66, 67, 211 Mass. 10.

SUFFICIENT WATER SUPPLY

In view of the amendment of 1905 (Laws 1905, c. 339), a "sufficient" supply of water to run the mills, etc., did not mean the natural flow of the river, but only "sufficient water" for that purpose when the rights of others having property which might be affected by the use of the water were considered; the word "head" being used in the original act in the sense of "reserve," nor was it required that sufficient water be vented at any time without regard to the dam company's duty to the public of driving logs through the dam. Milo Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sebec Dam Co., 84 Atl. 941, 943, 109 Me. 427.

SUFFRAGE

The right of "suffrage" includes the right to form political parties, and the right of each party to have all the machinery, not reasonably prohibited by law, for making its organization effective as to the policy of its members by electing officers in harmony therewith. State ex rel. McGrael v. Phelps, 128 N. W. 1041, 1054, 144 Wis. 1, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353.

The right of "suffrage" is a political privilege, and not a vested or natural right, and may be limited by statute, except as prohibited by the Constitution. Russell v. State ex rel. Crowder, 87 N. E. 13, 17, 171 Ind. 623.

"Suffrage" or the right to vote is not a necessary incident of citizenship, nor inherent in each and every individual, but is the exercise of political power, which may be conferred, modified, or withdrawn by the people, in the exercise of their sovereign will. Solon v. State, 114 S. W. 349, 353, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 261 (citing 15 Cyc. p. 280; Cooley, Const. Lim. 752; Anderson v. Baker, 23 Md. 531; State ex rel. Attorney General v. Dillon, 14 South. 383, 32 Fla. 545, 22 L. R. A. 124).

At primary

A party primary election law is not rendered unconstitutional because the right of "suffrage" at the primary is made dependent upon the assertion of a partisan belief by the elector and because such election regulations forbid an elector from voting who belongs to no political party. State v. Flaherty, 136 N. W. 76, 78, 23 N. D. 313, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132.

SUGAR CANDY

So-called dragees, small round bodies with a silver coating, which are composed of sugar and starch, and are used by bakers for decorating cakes, and to some extent by confectioners, are not "sugar candy" or "confectionery," within the meaning of the Tariff Act, but are dutiable as articles in part of silver. La Manna, Azema & Farnan v. United States, 154 Fed. 955, 956 (citing Seeberger v. Schlesinger, 14 Sup. Ct. 729, 152 U. S. 581, 587, 38 L. Ed. 560).

SUGGEST

See False Suggestion of Material Fact.

"Suggestion" of a compound or preparation is an entirely different thing from such an origination or discovery of a process for making the compound as would entitle the discoverer to letters patent for the process." Where defendant's assignor agreed with plaintiff to manufacture and sell proprietary medicines suggested by plaintiff, and he conveyed to defendant's assignor and a firm formed by him all his right and title to certain formulæ, in consideration of an agreed royalty on sales, and the contract was subsequently modified as between plaintiff and defendant, by which defendant agreed to pay a royalty on all sales of the preparations "suggested" by plaintiff and bearing his name, plaintiff was entitled to royalties on all the preparations which were then or thereafter sold by defendant as plaintiff's preparations, though he might not have invented or discovered the process for making them. Barclay v. Charles Roome Parmele Co., 61 Atl. 715, 718, 70 N. J. Eq. 218.

SUI JURIS

See Non Sui Juris.

The word "sui juris," as used in an instruction in a personal injury suit, submitting it to the jury to determine whether or not the person injured, who was under six years of age, was sui juris, means that the child was of sufficient age and discretion to care for his own safety, and render it prudent to permit him to be about alone. Kostenbaum v. New York City R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 65, 67, 120 App. Div. 160.

SUICIDE

See Commit Suicide; Contemplated Suicide.

See, also, Felo de Se; Self-Destruction; Voluntary Self-Destruction.

"Suicide" in law is the act of taking one's own life voluntarily and intentionally—self-murder. Sampson v. Ladies of Macabees of the World, 131 N. W. 1022, 1024, 89 Neb. 641; Coverston v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 6 Fed. 654, 655.

The meaning of the term "suicide" at the common law is that one who, being of years of discretion and sound mind, destroys himself. The act consists in designedly destroying one's life. Rudolph v. United States ex rel. Stuart, 36 App. D. C. 379, 385; Plunkett v. Supreme Conclave, Improved Order of Heptasophs, 55 S. E. 9, 10, 105 Va. 643.

"In the eye of the law, the taking of life by an insane person, whether it be his own or that of some other person, is not an act for which he is responsible. In the Century Dictionary a 'suicide' is defined to be one who commits suicide; at common law one who, being of the years of discretion and sound mind, destroys himself; and the act itself is defined to be designedly destroying one's own life. To constitute 'suicide' at common law, the person must be of years of discretion and of sound mind." The Penal Code defines "suicide" as the intentional taking of one's life. The benefit laws of a mutual benefit association provided that, if any member committed "suicide," such act avoided all rights under his certificate except that the executive committee of the association should pay the beneficiary a certain reduced amount according to other subdivisions of the section, one of which declared that, if the member committed "suicide" within one year from the date of his certificate, the beneficiary should receive one-twentieth of the amount thereof. The association was liable for the full amount of its certificate issued to a member who died from strangulation occasioned by hanging herself while being insane; she being incapable of an intent to take her life. Mauch v. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur, 91 N. Y. Supp. 367, 369, 100 App. Div. 49 (quoting and adopting definition in Weber v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Macabees of the World, 65 N. E. 253, 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753).

"Suicide" includes the moral element of self-destruction, while an insane person may kill himself without the presence of such moral element. Gavin v. Des Moines Life Ins. Co., 126 N. W. 906, 908, 149 Iowa, 152.

In an action on a life policy, the law never presumes "suicide" from the fact of self-destruction. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Durden, 72 S. E. 295, 297, 9 Ga. App. 797.

As crime

See Crime.

Die by one's own hand synonymous

"Die by his own hand," "die by suicide," and "commit suicide" are synonymous with "voluntary suicide." Campbell v. Order of Washington, 102 Pac. 410, 412, 53 Wash. 398 (quoting and adopting definition in Grand Legion of Select Knights v. Korneman, 63 Pac. 293, 10 Kan. App. 577).

The word "suicide" and the words "to die by his own hand," or "by his own act," or "to take his own life," mean the same thing, and convey the idea of voluntary, intentional self-destruction. A provision in a life insurance policy to the effect that, if the insured, "whether sane or insane, die by his own hand," the policy shall be null and void is valid; and its breach renders the policy void, unless the assured was in such a state of mind as to be unconscious of the physical nature of the act of self-destruction. In the absence of any proof as to his insanity, all the presumptions are in favor of his sanity and of his consciousness of the character of the act which he committed. Dickerson v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 65 N. E. 694, 696, 200 Ill. 270 (citing Grand Lodge, Independent Order of Mutual Aid, v. Wieting, 48 N. E. 59, 168 Ill. 408, 61 Am. St. Rep. 123; Supreme Lodge, Order of Mutual Protection, v. Gelbke, 64 N. E. 1058, 198 Ill. 365; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 82 U. S. [15 Wall.] 580, 21 L. Ed. 236; Bigelow v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co., 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. Ed. 918; Home Benefit Ass'n v. Sargent, 12 Sup. Ct. 332, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. Ed. 1160).

The word "suicide," as used in a mutual benefit certificate declaring that no benefit shall be paid on the death of a member who shall commit suicide within five years from and including the date of his initiation, means voluntary, intentional self-destruction, and does not bar a recovery if, when the deceased took his life, he was so affected with insanity as to be unconscious of the act or of the physical effect thereof, or was driven to the commission of the fatal act by an insane impulse which he had not the power to resist. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Pels, 70 N. E. 697, 698, 209 Ill. 33.

As deliberate or voluntary self-killing

When the reasoning faculties of insured are so impaired that he does not understand the consequences of the act he is about to commit when taking his own life, or if he is impelled thereto by an insane impulse which he has not the power to resist, such death is not "suicide," within the provisions of a benefit certificate making it void if death is so caused. Knapp v. Order of Pendo, 79 Pac. 209, 210, 36 Wash. 601.

If one in a fit of delirium or other condition of irresponsibility, without intention to take his own life, does some act from which his death ensues, such death is by "accident," not by "suicide." Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 113 N. W. 967, 970, 134 Wis. 322, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

As intentional injury

See Intentional Injury.

Self-killing by accident or mistake

The phrase "self-destruction or suicide," as used in a certificate of membership in a benefit association, declaring that the contract for benefits does not include assurance against self-destruction or suicide, whether the member be sane or insane, does not prevent a recovery on the certificate where the member's death was due to his voluntary taking of carbolic acid, not with intent to cause death, but to frighten his wife into giving him money. Courtemanche v. Supreme Court, I. O. O. F., 98 N. W. 749, 750, 136 Mich. 30, 64 L. R. A. 668, 112 Am. St. Rep. 345.

Self-killing while insane

"Suicide," being the intentional killing of one's self, could not be predicated of the act of an insane person, which must be regarded as involuntary, and not really his act. Jarnagin v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 133 Fed. 892, 895, 66 C. C. A. 622, 68 L. R. A. 499.

While Civ. Code 1910, § 2500, provides that death of insured, by "suicide" releases an insurer from the obligation of the contract, yet every act of self-destruction is not suicide within the rule, since in law self-destruction as a result of insanity is not suicide. Fraternal Relief Ass'n v. Edwards, 70 S. E. 265, 267, 9 Ga. App. 43.

In Civ. Code 1910, § 2500, providing that death by suicide releases the insurer from the obligation of his contract, "suicide" is intentional self-destruction by one who is sane; an accidental act or one by an insane person not being legally suicide. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Durden, 72 S. E. 295, 297, 9 Ga. App. 797.

A beneficiary, suing on a fraternal benefit certificate stipulating that the member committing suicide shall forfeit all benefits which his beneficiary would otherwise have, and providing that on it being established that the member was a lunatic, and recognized as such, and the secretary of the order notified thereof, his suicide shall not operate as a forfeiture of the benefits, and that the burden of proof shall be on the beneficiary, must, on showing that the member committed suicide, prove that he was at the time a lunatic, and prior thereto recognized as such; the word "suicide" including an act committed by any one, whether sane or insane, though ordinarily the word when used in a contract of insurance does not include a case of suicide by an insane person. Schack v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood, 99 Pac. 989, 990, 9 Cal. App. 584.

SUICIDE, SANE OR INSANE

When a contract of life insurance provides that the policy shall be void if insured shall commit "suicide" within a certain time, whether at the time of committing suicide the insured shall be either sane or insane, the meaning is that, regardless of his sanity or insanity, the voluntary self-destruction of the insured within the time set out, shall invalidate the policy. Jenkins v. National Union, 45 S. E. 449, 450, 118 Ga. 587.

The term "death by suicide, sane or insane," does not include death by the act of the assured, without any mental purpose of self-destruction. Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 113 N. W. 967, 970, 134 Wis. 322, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

SUIT

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc.; Class Suit; Costs of Suit; Creditors' Suit; In Suit; Multiplicity of Suits; Original Suit; Party to Suit or Proceeding; Prior Suit; Purposes of Suit; Stockholder's Suit; Time of Suit.

Action or suit—inter partes, see Action Inter Partes.

Any and all suits, see Any.

Any suit, see Any.

Recover by suit, see Recover—Recovery.

A "suit" is a prosecution of some demand in a court of justice. Myers v. State, 105 S. W. 48, 50, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 336.

"Suit" is a general term denoting any legal proceeding of a civil kind." In re Oliver's Guardianship, 83 N. E. 795, 796, 77 Ohio St. 474.

"A 'suit at law' is a contest between two parties in the court of justice; the one seeking and the other withholding the thing in contest." Monmouth Inv. Co. v. Means, 151 Fed. 159, 163, 80 C. C. A. 527 (quoting and adopting definition in Pearson v. Nesbit, 12 N. C. 315, 17 Am. Dec. 569).

A "suit" is the pursuit in a court of justice of the remedy to which the party by reason of the existence of the supposed facts believes himself to be entitled. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Larwill, 93 N. E. 619, 621, 83 Ohio St. 108, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195.

"A 'suit' is 'any proceeding for the purpose of obtaining such remedy as the law allows.'" State ex rel. West v. McCafferty, 105 Pac. 992, 997, 25 Okl. 2 (quoting Bookwalter v. Conrad, 39 Pac. 573, 851, 15 Mont. 464).

The word "suit" is of comprehensive signification and applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which a person pursues a remedy which the law affords him for the redress of an injury, or the recovery of a right, and it includes both actions and proceedings. In re Sherill, 81 N. E. 124, 135, 188 N. Y. 185, 117 Am. St. Rep. 841.

Though the Code abolished the common-law distinctions between suits and actions and did away with the name suits, a "suit" now is either an action or a proceeding in the nature of an action in court. In re Milwaukee Light, Heat & Traction Co., 125 N. W. 908, 905, 142 Wis. 424, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, 20 Ann. Cas. 707.

Ordinarily the term "suit" is applied to any proceeding in a court of justice by which one pursues that remedy which the law affords him, but it is not always essential that the proceedings should be originally instituted in a court. Cass County v. Sarpy County, 119 N. W. 685, 686, 83 Neb. 435 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6769).

Strictly speaking, under the code practice, "we have no such thing as 'suits,' although we commonly use that term. We have only actions and special proceedings. What were formerly denominated 'suits in equity' and 'actions at law' are now denominated 'civil actions.'" State ex rel. Risch v. Board of Trustees of Policemen's Pension Fund, 98 N. W. 954, 959, 121 Wis. 44.

A "suit" or "action" being "the lawful demand of one's right in a court of justice" (quoting Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 129), while a "complaint" is, under B. & C. Comp. § 67, a concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, the dismissal of the complaint on sustaining a demurrer thereto does not necessarily discharge the demand so as to terminate the action and permit an appeal from the order of dismissal. Giant Powder Co. v. Oregon Western Ry. Co., 103 Pac. 501, 502, 54 Or. 325.

St. 1907, c. 290, effective April 13, 1907, relating to the dissolution of certain corporations, provided (section 2) that nothing in the act should affect any suit pending by or against any corporation mentioned in the first section thereof. Held, that the word "suit," as used in such section, included every proceeding in a court of justice by which a person might pursue a remedy afforded by law, including an action at law, and that the word "pending" was descriptive of the action from the date of the writ, so that, the writ in a suit by a corporation having been dated April 9, 1907, the suit was pending, and was not abated by the dissolution of the corporation under such act, notwithstanding the reference in section 1, to St. 1903, c. 437, §§ 52, 53, continuing the corporate existence of dissolved corporations, for three years only, to prosecute and defend suits. Worcester Color Co. v. Henry Wood's Sons Co., 95 N. E. 392, 395, 209 Mass. 105.

The word "suit," in Gen. Laws, c. 187, § 34, providing that on notice to the proper officer of a railroad 14 days previous to commencing a suit on account of any lawful claim against the railroad, if the railroad neglects or refuses to pay the claim, and plaintiff recovers more than the amount tendered by it, he shall also recover reasonable compensation, means a suit which is prosecuted to final determination, and the fact that a suit has been commenced against the railroad before the service of the required notice does not preclude plaintiff from recovering counsel fees, where he does not enter such suit in court, but, after giving the notice, institutes another suit, which he prosecutes to a successful termination. Smallwood v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 59 Atl. 314, 315, 26 R. I. 451.

Action synonymous

The words "action" and "suit," as used in statutes of limitation, are generally synonymous. Whitfield v. Burrell, 118 S. W. 153, 156, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 567; Jellison v. Swan, 74 Atl. 920, 922, 105 Me. 358.

Rev. St. 1874, c. 63, § 11, providing that notice of proceedings by an abandoned spouse to sell the property of the delinquent spouse for family support shall be given "as in ordinary actions," and that anything done under "the order or decree of the court" shall be valid, as if done by the party owning the property, authorizes service by publication as in chancery, notwithstanding the use of the word "action"; that word in a comprehensive sense being synonymous with "suit," and being used interchangeably therewith to mean any legal proceeding in a court for the enforcement of a right, so that the words "ordinary actions" did not contemplate personal service as in a strictly legal action. Brand v. Brand, 96 N. E. 918, 920, 252 Ill. 134.

In a legal sense, "action," "suit," and "cause" are convertible terms. Tillamook County v. Wilson River Road Co., 89 Pac. 958, 959, 49 Or. 309 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; And. Law Dict.); Messenger v. Board of Com'rs of Converse County, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

Proceeding by appeal, error, or review

As used in the act of separation of Maine from Massachusetts, providing that all rights and liabilities of all persons shall, after said separation, continue the same as if said district was still a part of this commonwealth in all suits pending, etc., the term "suits" included a pending petition for review. Hobart v. Tilton, 1 Me. (1 Greenl.) 399.

Assessment on corporate stock

A proceeding by the trustee of a bankrupt corporation to have an assessment ordered on unpaid stock is not a "suit" within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 23b, 30 Stat. 552, but is an administrative proceeding within the jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy, since it does not require notice to nor the presence of the stockholders, whose personal rights are not involved but remain to be determined in subsequent suits to collect the assessments if made. In re Newfoundland Syndicate, 196 Fed. 443, 445.

A creditor, who objects to the discharge of a bankrupt, may prosecute his objections in forma pauperis by virtue of Act July 20, 1892, c. 209, 27 Stat. 252, which gives any citizen, entitled to commence "any 'suit' or 'action' in any court of the United States," such right on making the required showing. Objections to a bankrupt's discharge are the beginning of a distinct and separate dispute and fall within the accepted definition of a "suit" or an "action." In re Gullbert, 154 Fed. 676, 677 (citing Words and Phrases, ad verba).

An application by a trustee in bankruptcy to open the proceeding on the ground that it had been closed before the estate had been fully administered is not a "suit," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 11d, 30 Stat. 549, providing that suits shall not be brought by or against a trustee of a bankrupt estate subsequent to two years after the estate is closed. In re Paine, 127 Fed. 246, 248.

The word "suits," in R. S. 1857, c. 82, § 78, making parties and other persons interested in "suits" competent as witnesses, is not synonymous with the word "cases," in section 83, excepting cases prosecuted or defended by executors or administrators. Gunnison v. Lane, 45 Me. 165, 166.

Cause synonymous

As used in the federal removal statute, the words "suit" and "cause" mean the same thing. In common usage, and very often in statutes and decrees, the words "suit," "action," "case," and "cause" are used interchangeably to indicate the same thing. As defined by Bouvier, a "cause" is "a contested question before a court of justice; it is a suit or action." Young v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 55 S. E. 765, 767, 75 S. C. 326, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 9 Ann. Cas. 940.

Condemnation proceeding

Until an appeal has been taken from the award filed by commissioners in condemnation proceedings under the drainage statute of Kansas, the proceeding is in the nature of an inquest to determine damages, and is not a "suit," within the meaning of the removal statute, and is not removable into a federal court. Kaw Valley Drainage Dist. v. Metropolitan Water Co., 186 Fed. 315, 108 C. C. A. 393; Kaw Valley Drainage Dist. v. United States Trust Co. of Kansas City, Mo., 186 Fed. 324, 108 C. C. A. 402.

"The term 'suit' is certainly a very comprehensive one and is understood to apply to any proceeding in a court of justice by which an individual pursues that remedy which the law affords. Modes of proceeding may be various; but, if a right is litigated in a court of justice, the proceeding by which a decision of the court is sought is a suit." A proceeding by a railroad company to condemn right of way under the statutes of South Dakota is a civil suit, within the federal judiciary act, and is removable where the requisite diversity of citizenship exists and the jurisdictional amount is involved. South Dakota Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 141 Fed. 578, 580, 73 C. C. A. 176 (quoting and adopting definition in Weston v. Charleston, 27 U. S. [2 Pet.] 449, 7 L. Ed. 481).

Proceeding before state board

The phrase, "suits at common law and in equity," as used in Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1091), providing for the removal of causes, embraces not only ordinary actions and suits, but includes all the proceedings in the ordinary law and equity tribunals, as distinguished from proceedings in military, admiralty, and ecclesiastical courts, but does not include a proceeding before the board of control of the state of Oregon on a petition by the users of the water in a stream for an investigation to determine the rights of appropriators as authorized by Laws Or. 1909, p. 319, in any event, not during the preliminary proceedings before the board and prior to an appeal to the courts, such proceeding being one in the nature of a hearing before executive or administrative officers in the exercise of their functions to regulate and control the use of state waters. In re Silvies River, 199 Fed. 495, 501.

Criminal prosecution

The term "suit," as used in Acts 1905, p. 46, providing for the transfer of suits pending in a county or counties from which a new county has been laid off, cannot, without serious strain, be construed to include a criminal case. Pope v. State, 53 S. E. 384, 385, 124 Ga. 801, 110 Am. St. Rep. 197, 4 Ann. Cas. 551.

Proceeding to discover assets of estate

A proceeding for the discovery of assets belonging to a decedent's estate is a "suit pending," within the meaning of a statute providing for the taking of depositions in a suit pending, even though the person from whom discovery is sought is charged with embezzlement of the assets. Ex parte Gfeller, 77 S. W. 552, 556, 178 Mo. 248.

Rev. St. 1899, § 74 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 362), provides that, on the filing of an affidavit alleging cause to believe that an administrator has withheld assets, the court may cite and compel him to appear by attachment. Section 75 provides for the examination of the administrator and witnesses on oath, provided interrogatories shall be filed and answered in writing by the parties cited, and sections 77 and 78 (pp. 363, 364) provide for a trial of the issues raised on such interrogatories. Held, that such a proceeding was a "suit" between the affiant and the administrators, and, where the amount involved was from $12,000 to $15,000, jurisdiction of an appeal from the circuit court was in the Supreme Court, and not in the Court of Appeals. In re Clinton's Estate, 123 S. W. 1, 2, 223 Mo. 371.

Drainage proceeding

A proceeding under the Farm Drainage Act, to establish a special drainage district, is not a "suit or proceeding at law or in chancery," within the Appellate Court Act and the Practice Act; a "suit or proceeding at law" meaning one substantially conforming with the forms and modes prescribed by common law, and a "suit or proceeding in chancery" meaning one substantially conducted according to the forms and modes prescribed by the rules of chancery. Hence an appeal to or writ of error from the Supreme Court to review an order of the county court, establishing a drainage district, is unauthorized. Myers v. Commissioners of Newcomb Special Drainage Dist., 91 N. E. 1070, 1073, 245 Ill. 140.

Election contest

Const. art. 6, § 38, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4681, require all writs and process to run in the name of the state and all writs to be attested by the clerk of the court from which they are issued. Const. art. 8, § 9, declares that the trial of contested elections shall be by the courts of law, and authorizes the General Assembly to designate the court or judge by whom the contest shall be tried and to regulate the manner of trial and incidental matters. Rev. St. 1899, § 7029, in relation to election contests, gives jurisdiction to the circuit courts, and provides for a notice to be given by the contestant to the contestee, which shall specify the grounds upon which the contestant relies. Held, that a proceeding to contest an election is not a case or "suit" which requires the filing of a petition in court, and the suing out of a writ of summons running in the name of the state, and a notice in conformity with section 7029, is due process. State ex rel. Wells v. Hough, 91 S. W. 905, 911, 193 Mo. 615.

Executory process

A proceeding, termed "executory process" in Louisiana, to seize and sell a vessel under a mortgage, is a "suit" within Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, which provides for the removal of certain suits. W. G. Coyle & Co. v. Stern, 193 Fed. 582, 585, 113 C. C. A. 450.

Injunction

Where the injunction applied for is merely ancillary to the main purpose of the "suit," the suit is not a suit for injunction within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2996, providing that writs for injunction shall be returnable to and tried in the county in which defendant has his domicile. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson County (Tex.) 150 S. W. 239, 248.

Proceeding to recover penalty

"The word 'suit' is generally used to designate a civil case." An action by the state for penalties imposed by the anti-trust act of Texas, declaring that corporations violating the act shall be guilty, and when convicted, shall be subject to penalties recoverable by "suit" where the "offense" is committed, is not a criminal prosecution, within the statute prescribing the time for the institution of criminal prosecutions, but is a civil suit. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 918, 927, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162.

Law actions

The term "suit," though frequently used to include both actions at law and suits in equity, is more appropriately applied to the latter. Mathis v. Stevenson, 71 Atl. 267, 268, 75 N. J. Eq. 68.

The word "suits" is a very comprehensive term, and includes all actions at law, ex contractu and ex delicto, and all actions in equity. L. Buckl & Son Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Lumber Co., 128 Fed. 332, 340, 63 C. C. A. 62.

The word "suit" includes an action at law as well as a proceeding in equity (citing 7 Words and Phrases, 6769), and should be so construed as used in Judiciary Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 8, 18 Stat. 472, providing that no civil suit shall be brought by original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof defendant is an inhabitant or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing the suit. Elk Garden Co. v. T. W. Thayer Co., 179 Fed. 556, 558.

Mandamus is a "personal action," within Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 787, c. 105, § 2, declaring that all personal actions, with specified exceptions, shall survive, and is a "suit at law," within Const. art. 4, § 26, providing that no suit at law shall abate at the death of any party, where the cause of action survives. State v. Jessup & Moore Paper Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 350, 351.

Probate proceeding

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1889, subd. 4, requiring the clerk of court on an application for the probate of a will to cite all persons interested in the estate to appear and contest the application if they desire, a married woman who is interested as an heir in the estate of a decedent may contest the probate of the will, whether she is or is not joined by her husband, since a contest to probate a will by the heirs is not a "suit," within the statute, in which a wife must be joined by her husband. Pierce v. Farrar (Tex.) 126 S. W. 932, 933.

"The proceeding to establish or prove the claim against the executors is essentially an independent 'suit' inter partes and not a matter of 'pure probate jurisdiction.'" Farmers' Bank of Cuba City, Wis., v. Wright, 158 Fed. 841, 850 (citing and adopting Broderick's Will, 88 U. S. [21 Wall.] 503, 22 L. Ed. 599; Farrell v. O'Brien, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 199 U. S. 89-110, 50 L. Ed. 101).

Writ of prohibition

A writ of prohibition is a "suit." Weston v. Charleston, 27 U. S. (2 Pet.) 449, 464, 7 L. Ed. 481; Eckert v. Wood, 69 S. W. 45, 46, 95 Mo. App. 378.

Proceeding in rem

"Suit" is the following of a person and is not only not technically, but not even in common parlance, applied to seizure or proceedings in rem." The foreclosure of a lien is strictly a proceeding in rem and does not become in any sense a suit until an affidavit is made. Weston v. Beverly & McCollum, 73 S. E. 404, 405, 10 Ga. App. 261 (quoting and adopting the definition in The Little Ann, 15 Fed. 622).

Receivership

A "suit actually commenced and pending" to justify the appointment of a receiver, under Code, § 267, must be one in which the main relief sought is independent of the receivership, and the latter is a purely ancillary remedy. Vila v. Grand Island Electric Light, Ice & Cold Storage Co., 94 N. W. 136, 138, 68 Neb. 222, 63 L. R. A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400. 4 Ann. Cas. 59 (citing Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 5 N. W. 627, 43 Mich. 296; State ex rel. Merriam v. Ross, 25 S. W. 947, 122 Mo. 456, 23 L. R. A. 534; In re Brant, 96 Fed. 257; Barber v. International Co. of Mexico, 48 Atl. 758, 73 Conn. 593; State v. Union Nat. Bank, 44 N. E. 585, 145 Ind. 537, 57 Am. St. Rep. 209).

Scire facias

See Scire Facias.

"Scire facias" is regarded in law as an action or "suit." McFellian v. Lunt, 14 Me. 254, 258.

Same—Suit on judgment distinguished

While scire facias to revive a judgment is like a "suit" on a judgment in respect to parties, and in that it requires a defense, the judgment in the suit on the judgment is for the debt and damages, while that on the scire facias is that plaintiff have execution, and until the judgment debt is satisfied scire facias may be prosecuted at the same time as the action on the debt, and the pendency of the scire facias does not abate the suit on the judgment. Drennen v. Dunn, 52 South. 313, 314, 166 Ala. 213.

SUIT AFFECTING TITLE

See Affecting.

SUIT AGAINST THE STATE

A suit against an individual, although he be a state official, to prevent him from effecting the destruction of property, or the impairment of property rights, under color of an unconstitutional law, is not a "suit against the state," within Const. U. S. Amend. 11. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 155 Fed. 792, 808.

The North Carolina Corporation Commission and the Attorney General being specially charged by Revisal N. C. 1905, §§ 1060, 1113, 5380, and Laws 1907, p. 251, c. 217, § 2, with the enforcement of such chapter, a suit against the Attorney General and the members of the commission to restrain the enforcement of the chapter, and other similar laws, because of alleged unconstitutionality, was not a "suit against the state," within Const. U. S. Amend. 11, providing that the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit against one of the United States by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of a foreign state. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, 155 Fed. 756, 777.

A suit in a federal court against the North Carolina Corporation Commission, the Attorney General, and Assistant Attorney General to enjoin the enforcement of the act of March 2, 1907, the maximum passenger rate act (Acts 1907, p. 250, c. 216), prohibiting a railroad company to charge a passenger rate in excess of 2¼ cents a mile, and imposing a penalty on the railroad company for a violation thereof, and declaring any agent of the railroad company violating the same guilty of a misdemeanor, is a "suit against the state," within Const. U. S. Amend. 11, declaring that the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit against a state by a citizen of another state. State v. Southern Ry. Co., 59 S. E. 570, 582, 145 N. C. 495, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966.

A suit against the Attorney General of a state to restrain him as an officer of the state from enforcing by civil actions an unconstitutional enactment of the Legislature, as therein directed, to the injury of a private citizen or corporation in a matter in which the state has no pecuniary interest, is not a "suit against the state," of which a federal court is denied jurisdiction by the eleventh constitutional amendment. Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, 157 Fed. 849, 882.

A suit in a federal court to restrain the Missouri Secretary of State from enforcing Laws Mo. 1907, p. 174, requiring him to cancel the license of any foreign railroad corporation to do business in Missouri in case it removed an action brought against it to the federal court, and providing, in addition, a penalty of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 for each offense, with disability to again do business within the state for five years, on the ground that such act was unconstitutional, was not a "suit against the state," within Const. U. S. Amend. 11, providing that the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit against one of the United States by citizens of another state, etc.; such an action being construed to be against the state when it involves only penalties, fees, and costs, and property rights are not involved. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Swanger, 157 Fed. 783, 789.

Where a state statute provides that suits to recover penalties for its violation shall be brought in the name of the state by direction of the Governor, the Governor acts thereunder officially as executive officer of the state having a discretionary power, and a "suit" to enjoin him from exercising such power is one "against the state," of which a federal court is without jurisdiction under the eleventh constitutional amendment. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McLendon, 157 Fed. 961, 963.

An action by a university, whose lands are exempt from taxation, against officers charged with the duty of levying and collecting taxes, to restrain such officers from enforcing taxes on improvements erected by lessees on such exempt lands, is not a "suit against the state," so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the federal courts. University of the South v. Jetton, 155 Fed. 182, 187.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of a state statute fixing railroad rates on domestic shipments as confiscatory against state officers specially charged by such statute with the duty of its enforcement is not a "suit against the state," within the meaning of the eleventh constitutional amendment. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 157 Fed. 944, 956.

A federal court which has acquired jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin the enforcement of state statutes fixing railroad rates, and has under authority given by such statutes themselves suspended their operation pending final hearing as to their constitutionality, has power on an amended bill to enjoin county solicitors and sheriffs of the state from instituting civil or criminal proceedings under such suspended statutes against employes of complainant, which would result in irreparable injury, and such amended bill does not convert the "suit" into one "against the state," within the meaning of the eleventh constitutional amendment. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 157 Fed. 944, 956.

A suit to enjoin state officers or a state commission from enforcing a state statute or regulation fixing maximum railroad rates is not a "suit against the state," of which a federal court is prohibited from entertaining jurisdiction by the eleventh constitutional amendment; no property or revenues of the state being affected by such suit. Perkins v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 155 Fed. 445, 447.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of an order of the Mississippi railroad commission, compelling a railroad company to stop its trains at a specified station, is not a "suit against the state." Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 90, 93, 203 U. S. 335, 51 L. Ed. 209.

A federal court is not without jurisdiction of a suit to restrain the enforcement of a state statute fixing railroad rates, to which the officers of the state who are charged with such enforcement are made parties defendant, on the ground that such suit is in fact a "suit against the state." Poor v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 155 Fed. 226, 228.

A suit to compel the State Dispensary Commission appointed to wind up the affairs of the State Dispensary under Sess. Laws 1907, p. 835, No. 402, to pay a dispensary creditor from the trust funds held by the Commission for the liquidation of dispensary indebtedness, was not a "suit against the state" within Const. U. S. Amend. 11, providing that the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit at law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another state. Fleischman Co. v. Murray, 161 Fed. 152.

A suit in equity against individuals to enjoin them as officers of a state from enforcing an unconstitutional enactment to the irreparable injury of the property rights of the complainant is not one against the state within the meaning of the eleventh constitutional amendment; and it is immaterial whether such officers are specially charged with the enforcement of the statute, or whether such duty devolves on them under the general laws. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 161 Fed. 925.

A suit against a state officer which involves the pecuniary interest of the state to restrain or direct the action of the officer in a matter intrusted to his official discretion, is a "suit against the state" itself, of which the national courts have no jurisdiction, but a suit to enjoin or direct a state officer in the performance of an official act which requires the exercise of no discretion and involves no pecuniary interest of the state, and no violation of a positive statute thereof indicative of its public policy, is not a suit against the state. Where corporations were required by statute to deposit securities with the state treasurer to insure performance of their contracts, and the corporations have become insolvent, a suit by creditors entitled to the benefit of the securities to require the state treasurer to turn the same over to receivers, to be disposed of for the benefit of complainants and all others entitled to share therein, is not a "suit against the state." Morrill v. American Reserve Bond Co. of Kentucky, 151 Fed. 305, 308.

A suit against state officers to enjoin them from enforcing a tax alleged to be in violation of the federal Constitution is not a "suit against a state," within the prohibition of the eleventh amendment to the federal Constitution. Gunter v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 252, 256, 200 U. S. 273, 50 L. Ed. 477.

A suit against the members of a state railroad commission and the prosecuting attorney for a district of the state to enjoin the enforcement of an order made by the commission which is unconstitutional and without authority of law is not a "suit against the state" within the meaning of the eleventh constitutional amendment, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court of equity. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Allen, 181 Fed. 710, 717.

A suit against state officers to restrain the collection of a privilege tax on the operation of oil wells, imposed by Acts 29th Leg. p. 358, c. 148, is in fact a "suit against the state," and cannot be maintained without its consent. Producers' Oil Co. v. Stephens, 99 S. W. 157, 158, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 327.

A suit to enjoin a state officer from taking action to forfeit the franchise rights of a corporation under a statute alleged to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States is not one against the state within the meaning of the eleventh constitutional amendment, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ludwig, 156 Fed. 152, 157.

In equity the money in the state treasury is the money of the people of the state, and suits by a taxpayer to restrain the misappropriation by public officers of such money to an unauthorized purpose are not "suits against the state," within the prohibition of Const. 1870, art. 4, § 26, declaring that the state shall not be made a party to any action at law or suit in chancery. A bill in equity seeking to restrain the commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal and certain public officials from applying certain sums of money appropriated to the maintenance of the canal by Laws 1903, p. 45, on the ground that the act was illegal and that the appropriation was not warranted by the law, was not a suit against the state. Burke v. Snively, 70 N. E. 327, 328, 208 Ill. 328.

An action against the Attorney General and prosecuting officers of the state to enjoin them from instituting a criminal proceeding is an "action against the state," and cannot be maintained in a court of the United States under the eleventh amendment to the Constitution. Logan & Bryan v. Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., 157 Fed. 570, 574.

A suit to enjoin individual defendants from proceeding as officers of a state to enforce an act of the Legislature of such state which is unconstitutional and void is not a "suit against the state" within the meaning of the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Haskell, 172 Fed. 545.

The question whether a suit is one against the state within Const. art. 5, § 19, providing that the state shall never be made defendant in any of her courts, is not necessarily determined by reference to the parties to the record; but where the state is the real party in interest, though only its officers and agents are parties, it is a "suit against the state" within the prohibition. Pitcock v. State, 121 S. W. 742, 745, 91 Ark. 527, 134 Am. St. Rep. 88.

A suit against state officers charged with the enforcement of a statute to enjoin its enforcement because in violation of the federal Constitution is not a "suit against the state" within the meaning of the eleventh constitutional amendment, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Julian, 169 Fed. 166, 170.

A suit against the dairy and food commissioner of a state to restrain certain action taken under cover of his office, but alleged to be in violation of the state laws, which injuriously affects the reputation and sale of certain products manufactured by complainants, is not a "suit against the state," forbidden by Const. U. S. Amend. 11. Scully v. Bird, 28 Sup. Ct. 597, 600, 209 U. S. 481, 52 L. Ed. 899.

State officers, who without legislative authority or sanction trespass upon state property given by express enactment into the exclusive possession of a private corporation, do not represent the state, and may be sued as any other trespassers upon the rights of possession would be sued; a suit against them not being a "suit against the state."

An action against the board of commissioners for the management of the state penitentiary to reform, for mistake, a contract, made with its predecessors, for the purchase of land, so as to provide for the conveyance of less land, and recover the agreed price, is an "action against the state" within Const. art. 5, § 19, providing that the state shall never be made a defendant in any of her courts, so that the court had no jurisdiction thereof. Jobe v. Urquhart, 138 S. W. 663, 664, 98 Ark. 525.

An action against a commission or other officials acting as administrative agents for the state, to prevent the enforcement of a tariff which is unreasonable and confiscatory, is not one against the state, if the act itself is unconstitutional and void as against the complainant. A proceeding against officers of the state to test the constitutionality of a statute, in the enforcement of which the officers act only by formal judicial proceedings in the courts of the state as attorneys for the state, is in effect a "suit against the state." Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Andrews, 154 Fed. 95, 107.

An action brought under Comp. Laws, § 2091, authorizing a warden of a state prison to be sued by his name of office, and maintained against one as "warden of the Michigan Reformatory" for breach of a contract made and breached by him in his official capacity, was an "action against the state." McDowell v. Fuller, 135 N. W. 265, 267, 169 Mich. 332.

Though a municipal corporation is an agent of the state government for local purposes, a suit against it and its officers is not against "one of the United States," within the meaning of the eleventh amendment to the federal Constitution. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, 129 Fed. 421, 423.

A suit to reform a deed by correcting the description, and to quiet complainant's title to the land as correctly described as against a second grantee from the same grantor, is one "for lands" within the meaning of Shannon's Code Tenn. § 4458, prescribing limitation for such suits, and, under the Tennessee decisions, the statute cannot be pleaded by a defendant who has never been in possession. Williams v. American Ass'n, 197 Fed. 500, 507, 118 C. C. A. 1.

SUIT FOR PENALTY OR FORFEITURE

A proceeding under Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, § 8, to revoke a liquor license for violation of law, is not a suit by the state to recover a forfeiture, within the Constitution, as affecting the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals. Hernandez v. State, 135 S. W. 170, 172.

A proceeding, authorized by Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, §§ 9a, 9b, 9c, 9f, 9g, for the revocation by the Comptroller of Public Accounts of liquor licenses for violations of the law by liquor dealers is not a "suit" by the state for "forfeiture" or "penalty," within Const. art. 5, § 8, conferring on the district court exclusive jurisdiction of such suits; for, though an official act may be judicial as involving the exercise of discretion and judgment, yet, when discretion is conferred on an executive officer in the discharge of administrative or executive duties, the acts of the officer are not judicial. Baldacchi v. Goodlet (Tex.) 145 S. W. 325, 328.

SUIT FOR RECOVERY OF CONTENTS OF CHOSE IN ACTION

See Contents.

SUIT FOR THE RECOVERY OF REAL PROPERTY

See, also, Real Property.

A proceeding brought under sections 6343 and 6344, Revised Statutes, to set aside a transfer of real estate as in fraud of creditors and to obtain the relief provided therein is for the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, within the meaning of section 5019, Revised Statutes. Gem City Acetylene Generator Co. v. Coblenz, 99 N. E. 302, 303, 86 Ohio St. 199, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 660.

An action for specific performance of a contract to convey land is not a "suit for the recovery of land or damages thereto," within the exception to a defendant's right to be sued in the county of his residence, expressed in Hartley's Dig. art. 667, providing that, in case where the recovery of land or damages thereto is the object of the suit, the suit must be instituted where the land or a part thereof is situated, since the "recovery of land," as used in the exception, has reference to the possession, and "damages thereto" has reference to an injury to the possession or to the freehold or estate, and not to damages for breach of contract to make title. Lucas v. Patton, 107 S. W. 1143, 1145, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 62.

SUIT FOR TAXES

A "suit for taxes" is one for a debt due the state with a prayer for foreclosure of the statutory lien. Dunn v. Taylor, 94 S. W. 347, 351, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 241.

SUIT IN EQUITY

Though L. O. L. § 1, abolishes the difference between forms of action at law, the difference between "actions at law," which include those cases where the relief sought consists in the direct recovery of real or personal property, or some amount of money only, and "suits in equity," arising when the requisite relief cannot be adequately administered by an action at law, is maintained. Van de Wiele v. Garbade, 120 Pac. 752, 753, 60 Or. 585.

An action in the district court by the party actually in possession of the property in controversy, for the purpose of quieting title to his leasehold estate, under the provisions of Rev. St. 1887, § 4538, is a "suit in equity," and neither party is entitled to a jury as a matter of right. Shields v. Johnson, 79 Pac. 391, 393, 10 Idaho, 476, 3 Ann. Cas. 245.

An action by persons, who subscribed a bonus to induce defendant to construct and operate a factory, to recover their subscriptions because of breach of defendant's contract, is an "action at law," not a "suit in equity," though an accounting is prayed. Akins v. Hicks, 83 S. W. 75, 109 Mo. App. 95.

A proceeding to contest an election is not a "suit in equity," but is a purely statutory proceeding unknown to the common law, and therefore one in which a writ of error is not a writ of right, and the only method of bringing the record to the Supreme Court for review is an appeal, as provided in the election law. Devous v. Gallatin County, 91 N. E. 102, 103, 244 Ill. 40, 18 Ann. Cas. 422.

SUIT IN WHICH THE UNITED STATES ARE PLAINTIFFS

Under Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, § 1, 28 Stat. 278, requiring contractors for government work to give bonds conditioned (1) for the performance of the contract; (2) for the prompt payment of all persons supplying labor or materials in the prosecution of the work—and authorizing such persons, in case of nonpayment, to bring suit in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against such contractor and sureties, such a suit is one in which the United States are plaintiffs, within the meaning of section 1 of the Judiciary Act of August 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433. United States v. Churchyard, 132 Fed. 82, 83.

A suit by the United States for the use of the Creek Nation of Indians to cancel patents or deeds to town lots belonging to said nation in its tribal capacity and sold by the United States for its benefit under Act March 1, 1901, c. 676, § 10, 31 Stat. 864, on the ground that such deeds were obtained by fraud, is one in which "the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners," of which a Circuit Court is given jurisdiction by Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 1, 18 Stat. 470, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 434. The fact that the act expressly conferred jurisdiction of such suits on the United States courts in the Indian Territory did not make such jurisdiction exclusive so as to prevent the bringing of suits thereunder in the Circuit Court after statehood and after the territorial courts had ceased to exist. United States v. Rea-Read Mill & Elevator Co., 171 Fed. 501, 511.

SUIT INVOLVING TITLE

See Involve.

SUIT MONEY

In divorce proceedings, "suit money" is money for the purpose of enabling the wife, who has commenced proceedings in divorce to meet the expenses incident to the prosecution of the action, independent of attorney's fees. Hart v. Hart, 73 Pac. 35, 31 Colo. 333.

SUIT OF CIVIL NATURE

A proceeding for an original writ of mandamus pending in a state court is not a "suit of a civil nature" at law or in equity, within the removal acts; the circuit courts of the United States having no authority to issue such writs except as ancillary to, or in aid of, a pre-existing jurisdiction. North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Southern Ry. Co., 66 S. E. 427, 429, 151 N. C. 447.

An action for a writ of mandamus not in aid of a jurisdiction previously acquired is not a suit "of a civil nature at law or in equity," within Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 2, 25 Stat. 434 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509], authorizing the removal of any "suit of a civil nature at law or in equity" to the federal courts, on the ground of the diversity of citizenship of the parties. Western Union Tel. Co. v. State ex rel. Hammond Elevator Co., 76 N. E. 100, 102, 165 Ind. 492, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153, 6 Ann. Cas. 880 (citing Rosenbaum v. Bauer, 7 Sup. Ct. 633, 120 U. S. 456, 30 L. Ed. 743; Mystic Milling Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 132 Fed. 289; Kelly v. Grand Circle Women of Woodcraft, 129 Fed. 830; State of Indiana v. Lake Erie & W. Ry. Co., 85 Fed. 1).

A proceeding for mandamus, under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5765, authorizing such proceedings to be commenced by the filing of a motion supported by affidavits, and authorizing the assessment of damages and costs when a judgment is given in favor of the applicant, together with the issuance of a peremptory writ, is a special proceeding, and not a "suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity." Kelly v. Grand Circle Women of Woodcraft, 129 Fed. 830, 831.

"The writ of mandamus is not a 'suit of a civil nature' at law or in equity, within the meaning of the acts of Congress creating the circuit courts of the United States and defining their jurisdiction." Mystic Mill. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 132 Fed. 289, 291.

Proceedings to condemn land for public use, instituted in a state court, constitute a "suit of a civil nature," within the meaning of U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 508 (4 Fed. St. Ann. p. 265), making such suits removable, if the requisite jurisdictional facts appear. Fishblatt v. Atlantic City, 174 Fed. 196, 197.

A proceeding before the Corporation Commission on petition of a merchants' association to compel defendant railroad company to furnish better freight facilities in a city by the removal of its depot from one side of its main line to the other, etc., was not a "suit at law or in equity" within the removal acts, nor did it become so on an appeal being taken to the superior court of the state from an order directing the removal; the term "suit of a civil nature," as used in such acts, being construed to apply only to a proceeding in a court of justice by which a litigant pursues a remedy which the law affords him. North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Southern Ry. Co., 66 S. E. 427, 430, 151 N. C. 447.

The statutes of Idaho provide that one desiring to appropriate water from a stream must apply to the state engineer and obtain a permit; that, in case a stated part of the works has not been completed within a certain time, an after appropriator from the same stream may petition the state engineer for a revocation of the permit, and that officer, after investigation, shall either cancel the permit and notify the holder or refuse to do so and notify the petitioner; that, in either case, the party feeling himself aggrieved may appeal to the district court of the county in which the point of diversion is situated, making the other party defendant, and filing a petition and a copy of the petition to and decision of the state engineer. There is no further provision as to pleading or procedure. Held, that, after such an appeal has been taken, the proceeding in the district court is a "suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity," of which a Circuit Court of the United States is given concurrent jurisdiction with the state courts by section 1 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 470, c. 137, as amended by Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, and therefore removable under section 2, where the other requisite jurisdictional facts exist. Waha-Lewiston Land & Water Co. v. Lewiston-Sweetwater Irrigation Co., 158 Fed. 137, 140.

SUIT TO INVALIDATE PATENT

Where a patent for land granted to a railroad company excluded and excepted all mineral lands, should any such be found in the tracts described, exclusive of coal and iron lands, and plaintiff prior to patent had located a quartz mine within the grant, a suit to quiet title against one holding under the railroad grant involved only a construction of the patent to the railroad company, and was not a "suit to invalidate" the same, within Act Cong. March 2, 1896, c. 39, 29 Stat. 42 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1603), prohibiting actions to annul patents erroneously issued under railroad grants after five years from the passage of the act. Van Ness v. Rooney, 116 Pac. 392, 394, 160 Cal. 131.

SUITABLE

The word "suitable" within Const. art. 8, which requires the Legislature to require towns to make suitable provision for common schools at their own expense, is an elastic term, depending upon the necessities of changing times, and subject to the Legislature's discretion to determine what is suitable. Sawyer v. Gilmore, 83 Atl. 673, 680, 109 Me. 169.

An instruction, in the language of Kirby's Dig. § 6644, defining a railroad company's duty to maintain stock guards is not objectionable because it uses the words "good" and "sufficient," while the statute uses the words "suitable" and "safe"; the words being substantially the same. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Greer, 119 S. W. 1121, 1123, 90 Ark. 531.

SUITABLE FOR CULTIVATION

The words "suitable for cultivation" include "all lands ready for occupation and which by ordinary farming processes are fit for agricultural purposes." A section of land absolutely unfit for cultivation, unless, by the boring of artesian wells, water may in the future be developed in such quantities as to render it possible to artificially irrigate it, is land not "suitable for cultivation," within Const. art. 17, § 3, providing that lands belonging to the state, suitable for cultivation, shall be granted only to actual settlers in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to each, and Pol. Code, § 3495, providing that land suitable for cultivation may be sold in quantities not exceeding 640 acres to any one person. Robinson v. Eberhart, 83 Pac. 452, 454, 148 Cal. 495 (citing and adopting Manley v. Cunningham, 13 Pac. 622, 72 Cal. 236; Fulton v. Brannan, 26 Pac. 506, 88 Cal. 454, 456; Jacobs v. Walker, 27 Pac. 48, 90 Cal. 43).

Const. art. 17, § 3, providing that public lands "suitable for cultivation" shall be granted only to actual settlers, applies to land originally unfit for cultivation, but which, at the time of application for purchase has been made fit for cultivation, without regard to how it was reclaimed. Boggs v. Ganeard, 84 Pac. 195, 196, 148 Cal. 711.

The phrase "suitable for cultivation," as used in Const. art. 17, § 3, providing that lands belonging to the state, which are "suitable for cultivation," shall be granted only to actual settlers, applies to all tracts of land suitable for cultivation; that is to say, on which there is arable or tillable land sufficient, with the use of the other land of the tract for pasturage or otherwise, to furnish a support for the settler. Sanford v. Maxwell, 84 Pac. 1000, 1002, 3 Cal. App. 242.

SUITABLE FOR SAWMILL PURPOSES

Under a sale of all the pine timber "for sawmill purposes" on described lands, timber suitable at the time of sale for sawmill purposes passes, to that extent the phrase "for sawmill purposes" being identical with "suitable for sawmill purposes," but vendee does not, as when the broader phrase "suitable for sawmill purposes" is used, obtain the right to use such timber as may be within the description for any other than sawmill purposes. Mills & Williams v. Ivey, 60 S. E. 299, 301, 3 Ga. App. 557.

A lease of "timber suitable for sawmill purposes" includes cypress timber, when there is nothing to show that by the custom of the trade only pine timber is embraced in such description. Under a sale of "timber suitable for sawmill purposes," the purchaser can use timber of the kind described for any purpose which he sees proper. A lease conveyed "all and singular the timber suitable for turpentine and sawmill purposes growing on" the lands described. The lease further provided that the grantee was "to have and to use said described timber for turpentine purposes as aforesaid, with all the rights and privileges of cutting or boxing, dipping, and using all the trees on said land for turpentine purposes, and to cut and use said timber for sawmill purposes as aforesaid, with all the rights and privileges of cutting, felling, and hauling the trees on said land 'suitable for sawmill purposes.'" Held, that the lease gave to the grantee the use of such timber only as was suitable for both turpentine and sawmill purposes, and consequently did not include cypress timber. Gray Lumber Co. v. Gaskin, 50 S. E. 164, 167, 122 Ga. 342.

SUITABLE MEANS AND APPLIANCES

In an action by a servant for personal injuries, "safe and suitable" appliances mean reasonably safe and suitable, and, when used in the charge, do not require the master to furnish absolutely safe appliances, and in this sense the word "suitable" is used as meaning "safe or not defective." Davis v. Northwestern R. Co., 55 S. E. 526, 528, 75 S. C. 303.

The term "suitable" as used with reference to a master's duty to provide "suitable appliances" for the use of his servants, means compatible with safety. Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 122 S. W. 1025, 1037, 223 Mo. 649.

SUITABLE MONUMENT

A testator, who sets apart a specified sum for funeral expenses and proper interment of his remains and a "suitable monument" to his memory, etc., gives to the executors discretion in the selection of the monument, its form and style, with reference to the amount set apart for the purpose, and the full amount of the fund, or such part as the executors deem fit, may be expended in the erection of the monument. Fancher v. Fancher, 103 Pac. 206, 207, 156 Cal. 13, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944, 19 Ann. Cas. 1157.

SUITABLE PERSON

An administrator, whose private interests conflicted with those of the estate, and who has not used due diligence in collecting the assets and preserving them, is "unsuitable," within the purview of Rev. Laws 1905, § 3709, and should be removed. First Nat. Bank of Boston v. Towle, 137 N. W. 291, 295, 118 Minn. 514.

Under Rev. St. § 1702b, providing that, on the removal of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, the court shall appoint as his successor the person named in a petition presented by a majority of the creditors, representing a majority in value of the debts or some "suitable person," the court is required to appoint the nominee of the creditors unless he is unsuitable. A "suitable person," within the meaning of the statute, is not necessarily the most suitable person, and the court has no authority to reject the nominee of the creditors merely because in its judgment a better person could be obtained. A person is not necessarily unsuitable because he is a creditor of the assignor. The word "suitable" has regard to interest and business qualifications for the office of trustee and such relations to the estate and its creditors as will be consistent with the proper and safe administration of the trust. State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Johnson, 83 N. W. 320, 326, 105 Wis. 164. If, for any cause, the welfare of the infant demands that its care and custody be withheld from the parent and given to another, the parent is not a "suitable person" to have such care and custody, within the meaning of the statute. Sheers v. Stein, 43 N. W. 728-730, 75 Wis. 44, 5 L. R. A. 781.

Under Real Property Law (Consol. Laws, c. 50) § 112, empowering the Supreme Court to remove a trustee who, for any cause, shall be deemed to be an "unsuitable person to execute the trust," a trustee who asserts interests in hostility to his trust becomes an unsuitable person, and where a testator's surviving partner is named as testamentary trustee and a substantial controversy as to an accounting, and the inventory of partnership interests furnished by the surviving partner arises between him and the other testamentary trustees, in which the surviving partner's interests conflict with his duties as trustee, the court is justified in removing him as trustee. In re Keller, 127 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 142 App. Div. 454.

SUITABLE SCHOOL ACCOMMODATIONS

The failure of a board of education of a township to provide transportation for children living remote from the schoolhouse is not such a failure to provide "suitable school facilities and accommodations," under section 126 of the school law (P. L. 1904, p. 48), as to authorize the county superintendent of schools to transmit to the custodian of the school moneys an order to direct him to withhold from the district all moneys in his hands to the credit of such school district received from the state appropriation or from the state school tax. Board of Education of Frelinghuysen Tp. v. Atwood, 62 Atl. 1130, 1131, 73 N. J. Law, 315; Id., 65 Atl. 999, 1000, 74 N. J. Law, 638.

Where it was proved that lithofone, composed of 70 per cent. sulphate of barytes and 30 per cent. sulphide of zinc, was known as "lithofone," whether dry or ground in oil, and by commercial designation was known as "sulphide of zinc white," it was classifiable for duty as such under the Tariff Act, and not as a white paint or pigment containing zinc, but not containing lead. Gabriel & Schall v. United States, 123 Fed. 296, 297, 59 C. C. A. 352.

A street railway franchise which provides for the exchange of transfers with any other company operating street railways, which shall give and receive transfers on the basis of settlement that the transfer shall be redeemed at such a proportionate part of the fare paid as the run or local route of the car on which the transfer is received bears to the sum of the runs of the local route of the cars from which the transfer is issued, and on which it is received, gives a passenger the same right to travel as to distance over the railway system to which a transfer is tendered as if he pays fare on that system, and two street railway companies operating systems under the franchise and giving and receiving transfers are each entitled to one-half of the fares earned from passengers receiving and using transfers, the words "local route" meaning the entire distance a passenger may travel on the system as if he paid fare, whether he changes cars on that system or not, and the word "sum" referring to the result of two units added so that the entire distance a passenger may travel on each system constitutes a unit or the sum which goes to make up the entire service required to be furnished on the payment of one fare. State ex rel. Linhoff v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 431, 433, 62 Wash. 544.

As money

The word "sum" is restricted in its application to money, except where a different meaning plainly appears. Kelley v. Sullivan, 87 N. E. 72, 73, 201 Mass. 34.

As value

In Transfer Tax Law (Laws 1911, c. 732) § 221a, subd. 1, providing for a tax of 1 per centum on any amount in excess of $5,000 up to the sum of $50,000, "amount" and "sum," though popularly used to denote money, mean value; the tax being upon all kinds of property. In re Elletson's Estate, 136 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 75 Misc. Rep. 582.

SUM COLLECTED

The term "sums collected," in a statute allowing a commission in tax suits on sums collected, means sums collected for taxes. On sums collected for costs in the action no commission is chargeable. State ex rel. Kemper v. Smith, 13 Mo. App. 421, 423.

SUM DUE

SUM OF MONEY

Labor

Labor actually done is not "sums of money actually expended," within the meaning of the statute providing that official stenographers shall be allowed and paid all sums of money actually expended in necessary hotel and traveling expenses, etc. State ex rel. Woodside v. Woodside, 87 S. W. 8, 9, 112 Mo. App. 451.

Conveyance of land

Testator's children signed an instrument acknowledging having received from their father "divers sums of money and other property," which he desired acknowledged in order that no misunderstanding or confusion might result in the settlement of his estate. Subsequently two of the children signed an instrument acknowledging that since executing the above instrument they had received certain real estate as an advancement, and consenting that the value of the same, as fixed at a certain sum set opposite their names therein, "may be deducted from any share we may become entitled to" in his estate. The will directed "that the sums of money which I have advanced and which I may hereafter advance to my children shall be considered as advances and charged against each; * * * such advances and payment of money shall be taken out of their respective shares." Held, that the conveyances of land to the two sons were to be deemed "sums of money," or "advances and payment of money," within the intention of the will. Vreeland v. Vreeland, 56 Atl. 1089, 65 N. J. Eq. 668.

SUMMARY

SUMMARY APPLICATION

An order of the trial court quashing an execution is an order made "on a summary application in an action after judgment" under Comp. Laws 1909, § 6068, and appealable. Barnett v. Bohannon, 112 Pac. 987, 988, 27 Okl. 368.

SUMMARY PROCEEDING

A "summary proceeding" is not an action though analogous to its purpose and scope; it is a special proceeding. Properly speaking, therefore, there can be no judgment in summary proceedings, though the final order entered is frequently referred to as a judgment, and is in effect a judgment. Seymour v. Hughes, 105 N. Y. Supp. 249, 250, 55 Misc. Rep. 248.

A "summary proceeding" is a form of trial in which the ancient established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury. Code 1904, § 3768, provides that the courts and judges may issue attachments for contempts and punish them summarily in certain cases. Held, that a summary proceeding, within the meaning of the act, was one in which the party offending was not to be given a trial by jury. Yoder v. Commonwealth, 57 S. E. 581, 583, 107 Va. 823 (citing Brown v. Epps, 21 S. E. 119, 91 Va. 726, 27 L. R. A. 676).

A proceeding before a justice of the peace for a violation of Fish and Game Act, § 33, section 3 of which act authorizes the issuance of a warrant to any constable, etc., to bring the defendant before the justice for a hearing in a summary way, whereupon, if convicted, a penalty is imposed, on failure of which the justice is empowered to commit the defendant to the county jail, is a "summary proceeding" before a justice of the peace sitting as a magistrate, and hence it is not necessary to indorse the summons and complaint, as required in suits by common informers. Minard v. Dover, R. & P. O. Gas Co., 68 Atl. 910, 911, 76 N. J. Law, 132 (quoting Hoeberg v. Newton, 9 Atl. 751, 49 N. J. Law, 617; Feigen v. McGuire, 44 Atl. 972, 64 N. J. Law, 152; Orange v. McGonnell, 59 Atl. 97, 71 N. J. Law, 418).

SUMMER

SUMMER ROAD

On each side of a paved strip of a road was a smooth surface of sod or earth at the same level, but inclining gradually to the sides and apparently intended for the same use. Such smooth surface is what is known as a "summer road," used by many travelers in good weather in preference to the macadamized stone. Recovery may be had against a city for the death of one killed by coming in contact with a heavily charged and exposed electric wire used by the police department of the city, and lying so near the highway as to endanger a traveler deviating a few feet from the beaten path, and the city cannot avoid liability for the death of a person coming in contact with the wire by the fact that the accident occurred on the side of a road, of which 16 feet was macadamized in the middle, and that, if deceased had kept to the macadamized portion, he would not have lost his life. Emery v. City of Philadelphia, 57 Atl. 977, 978, 208 Pa. 492.

SUMMER STREET CAR

The term "summer street car" is commonly used to designate a car which is open from top to bottom on the sides. Cummings v. Wichita Railroad & Light Co., 74 Pac. 1104, 68 Kan. 218, 1 Ann. Cas. 708.

SUMMON

See Duly Summoned.

What a sheriff, who has served a summons, adds in his return to the statutory return "served" or "summoned" may, if incorrect, be rejected as surplusage. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Norton, 17 Atl. 1079, 51 N. J. Law, 442.

SUMMONS

Issuance, as commencement of action, see Commencement of Action.

Issue of, see Issuance—Issue.

In several of the states, a summons in an action may be issued by the plaintiff's attorney, and in a majority of such states it is held that a "summons" is not a process. Properly speaking, the summons is a process only when issued from the office of a court of justice requiring the person to whom it is addressed to attend the court for the purpose therein stated. Under the Code of Oregon, the summons is not technically a process, but is more in the nature of a mere notice informing the defendant that an action has been commenced against him, and that he is required to answer the complaint within a specified time. Leas & McVitty v. Merriman, 132 Fed. 510, 518 (quoting Whitney v. Blackburn, 21 Pac. 874, 17 Or. 564, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857).

"Summons" is a process, the main object of which is to notify defendant that plaintiff claims to have a cause of action against him, and that he is required to answer such claim. Bradey v. Mueller, 118 N. W. 1035, 1037, 22 S. D. 534.

The office of a summons is to bring defendant to whom it is directed into court to answer the petition. Mansur v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 118 S. W. 1193, 1194, 136 Mo. App. 726.

"A 'summons' is a jurisdictional writ and is the only method by which the court can obtain jurisdiction of a defendant; without it, the court cannot lawfully proceed." In re Farrell, 92 Pac. 785, 787, 36 Mont. 254 (citing and adopting the definition in Sharmon v. Huot, 52 Pac. 558, 20 Mont. 555, 63 Am. St. Rep. 645).

The words "process" and "summons," as used in the common law and in the statute, are often synonymous, and it has been settled at common law that process and summons were synonymous. Process is the means by which the court compels the appearance of the defendants, and summons is the first process in the institution of an action whereby the defendant is notified to appear and answer. Ackermann v. Berriman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 937, 940, 61 Misc. Rep. 165.

The "summons" referred to in Civ. Code 1902, § 3130, providing for fees of witnesses, in the courts of common pleas and probate, $1 for every day's attendance on summons, is not a mere verbal or written notice from the party, but is the "subpœna" referred to in section 2861, authorizing the issuance of subpœnas for witnesses, and requiring a subpœna to state at whose request the witness is summoned. "Summons" and "subpœna" mean the same thing. Atherton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 64 S. E. 411, 82 S. C. 474.

A notice of appeal is not a "summons," within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6738, defining process as a writ or summons issued in a judicial proceeding and need not be served in the manner in which process is required to be served. Gooler v. Kidness, 121 N. W. 83, 85, 18 N. D. 338.

As process

See Process.

Return

The return being a part of the summons, it is sufficiently described by the word "summons." Casety v. Jamison, 77 Pac. 800, 801, 35 Wash. 478.

SUMP

The "sump" of a mine is the pit beneath the cages of a shaft and is regarded by miners as an extremely dangerous place because the cages may drop into it. Dallas Coal Co. v. Rotenberry, 107 S. W. 997, 85 Ark. 237.

SUN KINK

A "sun kink" is a creeping together of the rails of a railroad track. Hudson v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co., 139 S. W. 617, 618.

SUNDAY

Observe Sunday, see Observe.

Playing baseball on Sunday as crime, see Crime.

Sunday law involving privilege and immunity of citizen, see Privileges and Immunities.

The Missouri Sunday laws have regard to that day as a day of rest, and not as to its religious character. State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 143 S. W. 785, 786, 239 Mo. 196.

By common usage the terms "Sabbath" and "Sunday" are used indiscriminately to denote the Christian Sabbath; that is, Sunday. "Sabbath day" is synonymous with "Sunday." Town of Winnfield v. Grigsby, 53 South. 53, 54, 126 La. 929 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6281).

As from midnight to midnight

"Sunday," as used in Pen. Code 1895, art. 199, prohibiting the conduct of business, etc., on Sunday, means the entire day, extending from midnight Saturday until midnight Sunday. Muckenfuss v. State, 116 S. W. 51, 52, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 229, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 131 Am. St. Rep. 813, 16 Ann. Cas. 768.

An indictment alleging that accused sold liquor between midnight of Saturday and sunrise of the succeeding Monday morning does not charge a sale on Sunday, in violation of Act March 12, 1908 (Laws 1908, c. 189), punishing the sale of liquor on Sunday, because a sale made after 12 o'clock Sunday night and before sunrise Monday morning is not a criminal offense, though included in the indictment; "Sunday" being from 12 o'clock Saturday night until 12 o'clock Sunday night. Jeffries v. Commonwealth, 75 S. E. 90, 113 Va. 773.

SUNDAY EXCEPTED

Const. § 79, provides that if a bill shall not be returned by the Governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law, unless the legislative assembly, by its adjournment, prevent its return, in which case, it shall be a law, unless the Governor shall file it, with his objections, in the office of the Secretary of State within 15 days after such adjournment. Held, that the phrase "Sundays excepted" qualifies the phrase "three days" only, and in computing the 15-day period in which the Governor may exercise the veto power after adjournment of the Legislature, Sundays are not excepted, and, where the Legislature adjourned on March 3d, a bill transmitted to the Governor on that day became a law on March 18th, and an attempted veto on March 21st, was of no effect. State v. Norton, 131 N. W. 257, 21 N. D. 473.

SUNK LAND

A government survey or plat of a township selected by the state under the swamp lands act (Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, c. 84, 9 Stat. 519) showed that a certain part of the survey was not laid out into sections and subdivisions, and that the surveyed part was separated from the unsurveyed part by a meandered line, the unsurveyed part being designated as "sunk lands" and in the surveyor's field notes described as low, wet lands. The township was patented to the state according to the official plats of the survey. Held, that a "meandered line," being an ordinary line bounding a body of land, there was nothing to show that the sunk lands was a body of water, though temporarily covered with water, and under the patent the entire township passed to the state as swamp lands. Chapman & Dewey Lumber Co. v. Board of Directors St. Francis Levee Dist., 139 S. W. 625, 628, 100 Ark. 94.

SUNSTROKE

As accident, see Accident—Accidental.
See, also, Heatstroke.

The word "sunstroke," when used in an insurance policy in describing one of the risks covered, should not be interpreted as applying only to an effect produced by the heat of the sun unless the context requires it, but the term, unexplained, denotes a condition produced by any heat, solar or artificial. Continental Casualty Co. v. Johnson, 85 Pac. 545, 74 Kan. 129, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, 118 Am. St. Rep. 308, 10 Ann. Cas. 851 (citing the definitions in Webst. Int. Dict.; Stand. Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Enc. Brit.). ### SUPERINTEND "'Superintend' means to have charge and direction of." Sanders v. Belue, 58 S. E. 762, 763, 78 S. C. 171.

The word "superintend," as used in Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 5903, providing that the county school superintendent shall have the general superintendence of the county schools, visit them, attend teachers' institutes, and superintend generally the elevation of the standard of teaching, means to have charge and direction; to regulate the conduct and progress of; and hence such section does not authorize a school superintendent to institute a suit in equity to restrain township school trustees from paying a teacher for services rendered out of the school revenue. McGreggor v. State ex rel. Ballard, 68 N. E. 315, 31 Ind. App. 483.

SUPERINTENDENCE

See General Superintendent.

Intrusted with superintendence, see Intrust.

See, also, Fellow Servant; Superintendent.

One who has general superintendence of all the servants operating a blast furnace exercises "superintendence" within the Employers' Liability Act making a master liable for the negligence of one exercising superintendence. And the same is true of one who has charge of a gang of men engaged in breaking iron ore into lumps of proper size for use in a blast furnace. Williamson Iron Co. v. McQueen, 40 South. 306, 309, 144 Ala. 265.

Where the only evidence of a hostler's negligence was in the manual labor of lowering a push bar, which was merely manual labor, and had nothing to do with the superintendence of the master's work or of other employes, he was not engaged in any "act of superintendence" within the meaning of subdivision 2 of the employer's liability act (Code 1907, § 3910). Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Andrews, 54 South. 553, 554, 171 Ala. 200.

The duty of a fire boss of a mine to examine the conditions of the mine, when gas is known to exist therein, before men are permitted to enter for work, is a duty of "superintendence," within employer's liability act (Code 1907, § 3910, subsec. 2) making an employer liable for injury caused by the negligence of one intrusted with superintendence, while in the exercise of such superintendence, and this is true irrespective of Code 1907, § 1031, providing that when gas is known to exist in a mine the operator must employ a competent fire boss to examine every place in the mine before men are permitted to enter for work. Pratt Consolidated Coal Co. v. Davidson, 55 South. 886, 887, 173 Ala. 667.

The master of a vessel who has sole charge of its navigation is one "whose sole or principal duty is that of superintendence" within the meaning of the New York employer's liability act (Laws 1902, c. 600), and, under such act, the shipowner is liable for the negligence of the master causing an injury to a member of the crew under him. Trautfler v. Detroit & Cleveland Nav. Co., 181 Fed. 256, 262.

One who is charged with superintendence within Code 1907, § 3910, making an employer liable for negligence of an employe who has superintendence intrusted to him while exercising such superintendence, does not cease to be superintendent merely because he performs duties in the capacity of a fellow servant, but he may act in a dual capacity, and his acts while acting as a fellow servant are not acts of superintendence for which the employer is liable, but, where he negligently does or fails to do something involving superintendence, the act is one of "superintendence," though he may at the same time have been engaged in the performance of duties of a fellow servant. Linderman v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. (Ala.) 58 South. 900, 902.

A complaint in an action for injuries to a brakeman while operating a logging train, which alleges that plaintiff was working under the engineer, who was intrusted with the "superintendence" of the operation of the train and of plaintiff, and that while plaintiff was engaged in operating the train he was injured, and that the injuries were caused by the negligence of the engineer while in the exercise of such superintendence, shows that the injuries were caused by the negligence of the engineer while acting in his capacity as superintendent, and not in his capacity as engineer, within Code 1896, § 1749, subd. 2, making an employer liable for an injury to a servant caused by the negligence of one having any superintendence intrusted to him. Creola Lumber Co. v. Mills, 42 South. 1019, 1021, 149 Ala. 474.

The fact that a foreman having charge of a gang of men works with his hands, the same as the rest of the men, for the greater part of the time, or even all of the time, does not necessarily exclude him from being one "whose . . . principal duty is that of superintendence," within the meaning of the Massachusetts employers' liability act (Rev. Laws, c. 106, §§ 71-79), for whose negligence, causing an injury to another employé, the master is liable. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Butler, 156 Fed. 321, 324, 84 C. C. A. 217. See, also, Robertson v. Hersey, 84 N. E. 843, 198 Mass. 528.

The question of what constitutes "exercising superintendence," as the term is used in Rev. Laws Mass. c. 106, § 71, providing that if personal injury is caused to an employé, who at the time of the injury is in the exercise of due care by reason of negligence of a person in the service of the employer, who was intrusted with and was "exercising superintendence," etc., is one not of the magnitude of the job but of the nature and power of the person in charge thereof. One who is on the ground dissevered from all other authority, and having full power at the time over the work to be done, even though only temporarily, may be "exercising superintendence." Munroe v. Fred T. Ley & Co., 156 Fed. 468, 472, 84 C. C. A. 278.

The act of one in charge of the work of unloading a schooner in selecting an improper piece of rope, for the purpose of lashing a ladder by which access was had to the hold, was an act of "superintendence," notwithstanding that he himself did the lashing. Hourigan v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 79 N. E. 738, 739, 193 Mass. 495 (citing Knight v. Overman Wheel Co., 54 N. E. 890, 174 Mass. 455; Murphy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R., 72 N. E. 330, 187 Mass. 18; and distinguishing Shepard v. Boston & M. R. R., 33 N. E. 508, 158 Mass. 174; Sullivan v. Fitchburg R., 36 N. E. 751, 161 Mass. 125; Dowd v. Boston & A. R. Co., 38 N. E. 440, 162 Mass. 185; O'Neil v. O'Leary, 41 N. E. 662, 164 Mass. 387).

A teamster engaged in moving timbers was directed by an employé to unhitch his horse from a wagon and hitch it to a chain which had been attached to one of the timbers to be hauled. The chain slipped and caught another timber. The teamster, while in the act of prying the timbers apart, was injured in consequence of the employé starting the horse. Held to authorize a finding that the employé, while starting the horse, was in the exercise of the controlling authority, which he had as superintendent, within the meaning of the employers' liability act. Coates v. Soley, 80 N. E. 464, 465, 194 Mass. 386.

A car dispatcher on a street railroad is an "employé intrusted with and exercising superintendence," within the direct provisions of Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 2, giving employes an action for personal injuries caused by the negligence of such person. Fitzgerald v. Worcester & S. St. Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 911, 912, 200 Mass. 105, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239.

Where plaintiff was working under the direction of M. as superintendent, and M. decided to cut a wire holding planks in place without giving any warning to workmen near, and did so, whereupon one of the planks fell and injured plaintiff, the act of negligence was not the cutting of the wire, which was manual labor and properly done, but in deciding to cut it without any warning, which was an act of "superintendence." Mooney v. Benjamin F. Smith Co., 91 N. E. 125, 126, 205 Mass. 270.

The person in charge of a particular piece of work as a subforeman or pusher is a person engaged in "superintendence," within the New York Employer's Liability Act (Laws 1902, c. 600), making the master liable for injuries to servants caused by the negligence of a superintendent or a person exercising "superintendence." And so is a foreman whose sole duty is to superintend the work of a shift of men under him, make out reports, and to have charge of the appliances in the rooms in which they worked. Castner Electrolytic Alkali Co. v. Davies, 154 Fed. 938, 942, 83 C. C. A. 510. The person in charge of a particular piece of work as a subforeman or pusher is a person engaged in superintendence within the New York employer's liability act (Laws 1902, c. 600), making the master liable for injuries to servants caused by the negligence of a superintendent or a person exercising superintendence. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Lakkonen, 181 Fed. 325, 327, 104 C. C. A. 513.

The action of the superintendent of a factory in starting up a loom which the operator had stopped for the purpose of cleaning it was an "act of superintendence" for which his principal was responsible to the operator, who was injured thereby under New York Employer's Liability Act (Consol. Laws N. Y. 1909, c. 31) § 200. American Mfg. Co. v. Bigelow, 188 Fed. 34, 36, 110 C. C. A. 77.

The conductor of the car on which plaintiff, a conductor off duty, was injured was not a person whose sole or principal duty was that of "superintendence," within the Employers' Liability Act, so as to entitle plaintiff to recover on the ground that such conductor was guilty of negligence in commanding plaintiff to occupy a dangerous position, on the front platform of the car. McLaughlin v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 883, 885, 101 App. Div. 134.

One who had charge of men engaged in unloading coal from cars, and who checked the cars and helped in the unloading, was not as to the others exercising "superintendence," within the Employers' Liability Act. Miller v. Solvay Process Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 1021, 1023, 109 App. Div. 135.

The superintendent of a roundhouse had general supervision of all work, and authority to hire and discharge men, but another was foreman or inspector of boiler repairs, with a gang of men under his direction. Held, that such person, while engaged in directing boiler repairs in the absence of the superintendent, was engaged in "superintendence," within the statute, as to the men under his direction. Faith v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 774, 776, 109 App. Div. 222.

The direction of a foreman, who had power to stop machinery, that it be stopped, or the failure to so direct, while a condition of the machinery was being remedied which necessitated the loosening of a belt running from the main shaft to a counter shaft, which had become wound around a pulley, on the counter shaft, was an act of "superintendence," within Employers' Liability Act. Guilmartin v. Solvay Process Co., 82 N. E. 725, 726, 189 N. Y. 490. See, also, Gallagher v. Newman, 83 N. E. 480, 481, 190 N. Y. 444, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 146.

Where an ordinary laborer, during the absence of the regular superintendent, is intrusted with his duties, he cannot be regarded as "exercising superintendence," within the Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, c. 600) § 1, subd. 2, while he is performing the ordinary duties of a laborer and participating in the work of his fellow laborers. Hope v. Scranton & Lehigh Coal Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 372, 374, 120 App. Div. 595.

A foreman of a gang varying from 10 to 50 men, having immediate superintendence of the work and of the men engaged therein, who were obliged to do as he directed, was, in directing one of them to remove planks forming a part of the floor of the room where the employes worked and not to replace the same, engaged in an "act of superintendence," within Employers' Liability Act. Heffron v. Lackawanna Steel Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 429, 432, 121 App. Div. 35.

The foreman of a gang employed in trimming trees preliminary to stretching electric wires, while holding a rope attached to a limb to prevent from falling, when it was sawed off, is not exercising "superintendence," within the Employers' Liability Act, making an employer liable for injuries to an employe arising from negligence of one intrusted with and exercising superintendence. Lowrey v. Huntington Light & Power Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 852, 853, 121 App. Div. 245.

A boss of a machine shop, directing plaintiff and his coemployes to lower an iron flask, watching them, and directing their movements, but not assisting them in any way, is exercising "superintendence," within the meaning of Employers' Liability Act. Ozogar v. Pierce, Butler & Pierce Mfg. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 1090, 55 Misc. Rep. 579.

Defendant's superintendent, directing the unloading of a vessel, ordered a box to be placed in the gangway, and leaned against the side thereof. The box fell, and, under the direction of one who, during the presence of the superintendent, was plaintiff's fellow servant, the box was again put in place, and afterwards again fell and injured plaintiff. Held that, in the absence of proof that the superintendent was absent from the works, and that the servant who directed the replacing of the box was an employe whose sole or principal duty was that of superintendence, the act of such servant was not an "act of superintendence." Williams v. Citizens' Steamboat Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 975, 978, 122 App. Div. 188.

Plaintiff, a machinist, employed to assist in cleaning the sheaves and cables of an elevator, worked in company with O., who was second assistant to the engineer. Plaintiff claimed that he was told by the chief engineer to assist O., and that he acted under O.'s orders, and was injured because of his negligence in telling plaintiff to go ahead with the work without giving warning to the men in charge of the elevator; plaintiff being subsequently injured by the starting of the elevator. Held, the mere fact that O. was directed to stand guard and give directions when to proceed with the work was insufficient to constitute his acts "acts of superintendence," within Employers' Liability Act. Falk v. Havemeyer, 108 N. Y. Supp. 140, 142, 123 App. Div. 657 (citing McConnell v. Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 80 N. E. 190, 187 N. Y. 341, 10 L. R. A. [N. S.] 419, 10 Ann. Cas. 205; McLaughlin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 883, 101 App. Div. 134; Quinlan v. Lackawanna Steel Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 942, 107 App. Div. 176).

It is not negligence, in a detail of "superintendence," for a telephone company's foreman, when directing an experienced lineman to climb a pole and cut wires, to omit to tell the lineman to investigate as to whether detaching the wires will weaken the support of the pole, and to suggest that the pole be tested to ascertain whether it is rotten where it enters the ground, where such poles are first attacked by rot, and to inform him of the manner of making the test; such matters being as much within the knowledge of the lineman as of the foreman. La Duke v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 189, 191, 124 App. Div. 106.

Where a railroad company's employé was a track supervisor, and had general supervision of the work of loading rails on cars, and it did not appear that there was any limitation on his authority, he was exercising an "act of superintendence" while overseeing the work of loading rails, within the employer's liability act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600), though designated as a foreman. Vincenzo v. Delaware & H. Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 589, 591, 126 App. Div. 481.

Iron workers employed on a building were divided into gangs, under the charge of a foreman, called a "pusher." There was a general superintendent of the whole work, and in his absence the pusher had direction of the men, and of a derrick with which they worked; and, if the men needed help, he assisted with his hands, if he saw fit. Held, that the pusher was a "person intrusted with and exercising superintendence," whose sole or principal duty is that of superintendence, for whose negligence the master is made responsible, regardless of the absence of the general superintendent; the statute (Laws 1902, p. 1750, c. 600, § 3) not requiring that the person shall be a general superintendent, or that he shall have power to employ or discharge men. Hurley v. Olcott, 119 N. Y. Supp. 430, 435, 134 App. Div. 631.

To facilitate the work of removing old ties from an elevated structure, the foreman of a track gang directed employés to go down into the street, and as the ties were thrown down to remove them, and directed other employés to station themselves near the place to warn the public, and he himself stationed himself where he could see when the ties were to be thrown. The foreman gave a signal that all was clear as each tie was thrown down, and an employé, while in the act of removing a tie, was struck by a tie which was thrown on the signal of the foreman that all was clear. Held, that the foreman was performing a mere detail in the work of removing the ties, and was not exercising an "act of superintendence," so as to render defendant liable under the employer's liability act (Consol. Laws, c. 31, §§ 200-204). Larson v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 545, 547, 134 App. Div. 679.

A servant, required to see that the instructions of the superintendent as to the manner of doing the structural iron work on a building were carried out and to assist in the performance of the work, was not engaged in an act of "superintendence" while assisting in moving a derrick after the superintendent had instructed him as to the manner of doing the work; and a fellow servant, injured by such servant's negligence in doing the work, could not recover, under the employer's liability act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600). Pratt v. McKee, 119 N. Y. Supp. 967, 968, 135 App. Div. 752.

A hoisting elevator was raised or lowered in a twelve-story building in obedience to signals. A signal man was at the bottom of the shaft to notify the engineer and another at the top to direct its movement for the two upper floors only, but for other floors a signal by any one would be obeyed, regardless of the position of the elevator. An employé was working on the fifth floor when the elevator suddenly started upward, in response to a signal from an unknown source, and he was injured. Held that in the suit therefor, tried on the theory that liability was created under the employer's liability act (Consol. Laws, c. 31), the court having eliminated the question of a safe place to work, the only remaining theory on which the cause of action came within the act was that if any of defendant's employés, charged with the duty, gave the signal to start, it was an act of superintendence, and that under the circumstances it was not such an act, even if given by an employé, of which there was no evidence, plaintiff's assignment of negligence being in fact based on the absence of such a person, and a judgment in his favor on that theory could not stand. McDonnell v. Andrew J. Robinson Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 47, 49, 136 App. Div. 598.

Plaintiff was employed to run an elevator in defendant's factory, and the foreman got in and ran it up to the third floor, where plaintiff had a bundle to deliver. The foreman then told him to deliver the bundle, and he would wait for him until he came back. On plaintiff's return, he found the chain down and the door partly open, and in the darkness attempted to step in the elevator, which in the meantime had presumably been run up to the fourth floor by the foreman, and he thus fell to the bottom of the shaft. Held, that the foreman's direction and assurance were acts done by virtue of his authority as foreman, and his disregard of such assurance was a violation of duty as superintendent; the foreman under the circumstances owing plaintiff the duty either not to move the elevator, or at least to close the opening so as to warn him on his return, and hence he was injured in consequence of a negligent act or omission of superintendence within the meaning of the employer's liability act (Consol. Laws, c. 31). Martin v. Cornell, 121 N. Y. Supp. 119, 120, 136 App. Div. 585.

The engineer of defendant in charge of a steam shovel gang, who hired and discharged the men and directed the manner of their work, directed plaintiff to perform work directly under the bucket, and, on plaintiff's request that he have the bucket turned to one side because there were two men working on the arm of the engine or crane, said "It's all right. Go ahead. Don't be afraid," although the arm could have been easily swung to one side. Held, that the engineer's determination was an "act of superintendence" within the employer's liability act. Impelizzieri v. Cranford, 133 N. Y. Supp. 336, 337, 148 App. Div. 758.

The word "superintendent" implies a person exercising large executive powers, and does not include a mere foreman having direction of mechanics and other workmen engaged with him in the construction of a building; he being a fellow servant for whose negligence the master is not liable. Fournier v. Pike, 128 Fed. 991, 994.

"A 'superintendent' is a man having the control, with the power of authority; that is to say, when he speaks the workmen are to obey, not because he advises them or requests them, or hopes they will, but because, by virtue of his position, they have agreed to obey him. That is the nature of his authority." Munroe v. Fred T. Ley & Co., 156 Fed. 468, 472, 84 C. C. A. 278 (quoting and adopting the definition in Malcolm v. Fuller, 25 N. E. 83, 152 Mass. 160, 163). See, also, Bowie v. Coffin Valve Co., 86 N. E. 914, 915, 200 Mass. 571.

A "superintendent" is one who has the oversight and charge of something, with the power of direction, which power is entire and absolute, and an employé intrusted with the management of a business during the absence of the manager thereof is not a superintendent, since he is subject to the control of the manager, who is his superior. Ruemmel-

Braun Co. v. Cahill, 79 Pac. 260, 262, 14 Okl. 422.

On an issue as to whether a certain person was defendant's superintendent in the work of unloading coal from a schooner, it appeared that he did manual work only when he felt like it; that it was his duty to report how many men he wanted, and to report them if they did not work properly; that it was his duty to tell the men where to shovel the coal, and to tell the engineer when to hoist and lower the coal scoop, and also to tell the men when to stop work; and that there was no other person in the immediate charge of the work. Held, that the facts warranted a finding that he was a "superintendent," within the employers' liability act. Hourigan v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 79 N. E. 738, 739, 193 Mass. 495 (citing Knight v. Overman Wheel Co., 54 N. E. 890, 174 Mass. 455; Murphy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 72 N. E. 330, 187 Mass. 18; and distinguishing Shepard v. Boston & M. R. R., 33 N. E. 508, 158 Mass. 174; Sullivan v. Fitchburg R. Co., 36 N. E. 751, 161 Mass. 125; Dowd v. Boston & A. R. Co., 38 N. E. 440, 162 Mass. 185; O'Neill v. O'Leary, 41 N. E. 662, 164 Mass. 387).

A teamster, who worked with a laborer, even though directing his work and exercising a sort of superintendence over him in obedience to the orders of the master's superintendent, is a fellow servant of the laborer, and not one acting as "superintendent" with the authority of the master, within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71. Anderson v. Smith, 95 N. E. 392, 209 Mass. 52.

A mine foreman, whose duties are confined to the underground portion of a colliery, is not the "superintendent" of the colliery, within Act June 2, 1891 (P. L. 176), and required by article 14 (page 195) to give notice to the mine inspector of the district in certain cases. Corgan v. George F. Lee Coal Co., 87 Atl. 655, 657, 218 Pa. 386, 120 Am. St. Rep. 891, 11 Ann. Cas. 838.

A plumber, employed to fit and repair pipes in a blacksmith shop, without power to hire or discharge his helper, who is hired by the employer and directed by him to serve as helper and obey the directions of the plumber, is a fellow servant of the helper, and not a "superintendent" within Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600), making an employer liable for injury to an employé caused by the negligence of an employé intrusted with superintendence, etc., and the employer, having supplied suitable appliances, is not liable for injuries to the helper in consequence of the plumber selecting defective appliances. McConnell v. Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 80 N. E. 190, 191, 187 N. Y. 341, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 419, 10 Ann. Cas. 205.

An employé whose duty it is to signal another employé in charge of a crane to operate the crane, and who gives directions for the carrying out of the orders of a superior, is not a "superintendent" within the meaning of Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, making the master liable for injuries caused by reason of the negligence of any person intrusted with and exercising superintendence, whose sole and principal duty is that of superintendence. Quinlan v. Lackawanna Steel Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 942, 943, 107 App. Div. 176.

A "pusher" in charge of a gang of five or six structural iron workers, whose work is the same except that he sees that they all work to advantage, is not a "superintendent," within the Employers' Liability Act, for whose negligence, in directing the starting of the hoisting engine, the master is liable. Abrahamson v. General Supply & Construction Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 596, 597, 112 App. Div. 318.

One employed by a railroad, and having charge of the work of cleaning ashes from locomotives in the absence of the regular superintendent or foreman, and who had control of the men and directed them in the work of handling the engines, was acting as a "superintendent," within Employers' Liability Act. Mikos v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 995, 996, 118 App. Div. 536.

An employé operating a machine with the assistance of other employés, with incidental power to supervise the work of his assistants, but without authority to exercise superintendence conferred on another, is not a superintendent within the Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600), making an employer liable for injury to an employé caused by the negligence of any person in the service of the employer intrusted with superintendence; a "superintendent" being one whose principal duty is that of superintendence, and mere incidental authority to exercise a minor supervision over others is not sufficient. Bovi v. Hess, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1001, 1006, 123 App. Div. 389.

An employé of the owners of a vessel engaged in superintending repair work thereon is not the "superintendent" of an employer supplying employés to do the work, within Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600), making an employer liable for injuries to employés caused by the negligence of "any person in the service of the employer" intrusted with and exercising superintendence. Droge v. John N. Robins Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 457, 461, 123 App. Div. 537.

The mere presence of a superior employé does not necessarily prevent a subordinate employé from acting as a "superintendent" within the Employers' Liability Act (Consol. Laws, c. 31). Smith v. Milliken Bros., 93 N. E. 184, 186, 200 N. Y. 21.

The operator of an elevator used by employés is not a "superintendent," within the Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600). Lee v. Western Electric Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 775, 776, 135 App. Div. 60.

One whose duty it is to employ men and direct them in their work, and whose principal duty consists of supervision and direction, though he may occasionally help with the actual work, bears the relation of "superintendent" to an ordinary workman acting under his directions. In determining whether the act of an employé, for which the master is charged with liability, was one of superintendence, the grade of the employé doing the act should qualify and determine the character of the act, if the act in itself is doubtful and indeterminate. Buckley v. Beinhauer, 121 N. Y. Supp. 180, 182, 136 App. Div. 540.

A foreman in charge of the operation of a derrick, there being no other present in charge, was a "superintendent," within Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, c. 600; Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) §§ 200-204, relating to compensation for personal injuries to servants. Cain v. Thompson-Starrett Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 472, 474, 153 App. Div. 414.

Where the foreman of a contractor who was erecting a building directed a carpenter to move a certain derrick with the assistance of a gang of men, the situation warranted a finding that the carpenter, as concerning the moving of the derrick, was a "superintendent" or foreman, in the absence of the regular foreman, with the authority and consent of defendant. Farrell v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., 80 N. E. 469, 470, 194 Mass. 431.

One who has charge of a gang of men working at a stone crusher, and whose principal work consists of giving orders, and whose only manual labor consists of opening and closing the hoppers, and who must decide under which hopper teamsters shall load, is a statutory "superintendent." Bourdeau v. J. J. Prindiville Co., 99 N. E. 949, 950, 213 Mass. 145.

An act of an employé may be one of "superintendence," where it relates to the furnishing a safe place to work or safe appliances or to the keeping of them in a safe condition. On the other hand, an act is not one of "superintendence" where, at the time and in doing the act complained of, he is engaged in mere manual labor, which is the duty of a common workman. But it is held that he is engaged in an act of superintendence, although he is, at the time of the injury, performing an act of manual labor, where it is done pursuant to directing the work and in furtherance thereof. Thus where a foreman, while in control of work and directing servants under him, performs an act of manual labor pursuant to and in furtherance of the direction which he had previously given in regard to this particular work, he does not cease thereby to be a "superintendent," for whose negligence the master is liable. Rippy v. Southern R. Co.,

SUPERIOR

A "superior," as the term is used in a statute dividing the employes of railroad companies into superiors and subordinates, is an employe having charge or control of the employes in any separate branch or department. Kane v. Erie R. Co., 142 Fed. 682, 685, 73 C. C. A. 672. Any employe who exercises authority over another is not the fellow servant but the "superior" of such other, and every employe who exercises authority over another in his own branch or department is the "superior," and not the fellow servant, of an employe in a separate branch or department, who exercises no authority there. Id., 133 Fed. 681, 684, 685, 67 C. C. A. 653, 68 L. R. A. 788. Under the second clause of section 3 of Act Ohio April, 2, 1890 (87 Ohio Laws, p. 150), which provides that every person in the employ of a railroad company, "having charge or control of employes in any separate branch or department, shall be held to be the superior and not fellow servant of employes in any other branch or department who have no power to direct or control in the branch or department in which they are employed," as such provision has been construed by the Supreme Court of the state, an engineer, although having control of but a single employe, may be the constructive "superior" of a fireman in a different branch of the service. Erie R. Co. v. Kane, 118 Fed. 223, 227, 55 C. C. A. 120.

In an action against a street railroad for personal injuries, error in instructing that the street railroad had no prior right to that part of the street occupied by its track, as against pedestrians and vehicles, is not cured by an instruction that it had a superior and preferential right, since there is no distinction between a "prior" right and a "superior" or "preferential" right, and hence the two instructions were clearly inconsistent and left the jury to accept either and disregard the other. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Gustafson, 121 Pac. 1015, 1019, 21 Colo. App. 478.

SUPERIOR COURT

The "superior court" is a constitutional court, and jurisdiction is vested therein by the Constitution for the hearing and determining of civil and criminal cases. It has original jurisdiction in regard to certain classes of civil cases and appellate jurisdiction in regard to other classes. It has exclusive jurisdiction of certain classes of civil cases, as well as of certain criminal cases, and it has concurrent jurisdiction with other courts of civil and criminal cases of given classes. The superior court, as created by the Constitution, is a court for the determination of civil and criminal cases. The manner in which these cases shall be heard and determined, so far as it is not prescribed in the Constitution, is left to the determination of the General Assembly. The Constitution confers upon the superior court and upon the judge authority to exercise, in certain instances, powers which would ordinarily be exercised by the executive or legislative departments of the state, as where the judge is authorized to appoint a notary public who is ex officio a justice of the peace, or where the superior court is authorized to grant charters to corporations of a given character. There is nothing in the Constitution which confers upon the superior court, as such, the right to hear and determine contests of elections. Ogburn v. Elmore, 51 S. E. 641, 643, 123 Ga. 677.

The "superior court" is a court of general jurisdiction, having cognizance of all classes of cases, including claims interposed to levies on realty or personality. Winn v. Butts, 53 S. E. 406, 407, 127 Ga. 385.

"The term 'superior court' must be interpreted in the sense it had at the time of the adoption of the Constitution establishing it, which was that it was the highest court in the state next to the Supreme Court and superior to all others, from which alone appeals lay direct to the Supreme Court, and possessed of general jurisdiction, criminal as well as civil, and both in law and equity." State v. Baskerville, 53 S. E. 742, 743, 141 N. C. 811 (citing Rhyne v. Lipscombe, 29 S. E. 57, 122 N. C. 650).

"The 'superior court' is a superior court of judicature over this state, with a supreme jurisdiction, original and appellate, over the trial of all causes not committed to the jurisdiction of inferior courts." In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 575, 579, 73 Kan. 609 (quoting and adopting the definition in Styles v. Tyler, 30 Atl. 165, 64 Conn. 432).

Clerk

Revisal 1905, § 352, provides that when power is conferred or duties imposed upon the superior court the words "superior court" or "court" mean the clerk of the superior court, unless otherwise stated, or reference is made to a regular term of the court. Section 2842 provides that a surety on paying money, upon producing to the superior court a receipt showing that he has satisfied an execution and expended money as surety, the court shall award execution against the estate of the principal. Held, that the clerk of the superior court has authority to enter a judgment for the recovery of money paid by the surety for the principal. Bank of North Wilkesboro v. Wilkesboro Hotel Co., 61 S. E. 570, 573, 147 N. C. 591.

SUPERIOR FORCE

While common carriers are not considered, under the Civil Code of Louisiana, as insurers, against loss or damage by fire, they are liable "unless they can prove that such loss has been occasioned by accidental and uncontrollable events." "Force majeure," or "superior force," is an accident which human prudence can neither foresee nor prevent. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

SUPERIOR SERVANT RULE

In some jurisdictions the "superior servant rule," so called, has been adopted. This rule may be briefly stated thus: Where the negligent act of one servant causing injury to another is the direct result of the exercise of the authority conferred upon him by the master over the servant injured, the master is liable. In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that, in the absence of any statute, the superior servant or foreman, whatever his rank, is not a vice principal, unless he represents the master in the order or act complained of in respect to those duties that the master is bound to perform, and this is the rule adopted in Kansas. Lunn v. Morris & Co., 105 Pac. 15, 16, 81 Kan. 94 (citing Consolidated Coal Co. v. Wombacher, 24 N. E. 627, 628, 134 Ill. 57, 63; 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 521; Brick Co. v. Shanks, 76 Pac. 856, 857, 69 Kan. 306, 310). See, also, Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 845, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772.

SUPERPHOSPHATE

A "superphosphate" is a fertilizer produced by chemical action upon matter which in turn produces the three essential ingredients that make all fertilizers valuable, viz., available phosphoric acid, potash, and nitrogen. The most valuable of these properties is the available phosphoric acid, which comes from bone, meat scraps, blood, and a certain rock. Webster defines it as "a fertilizer prepared by treating ground bones, bone black, or phosphoric with sulphuric acid, whereby a portion of the insoluble phosphoric acid is rendered soluble in water." Goodman v. B. F. Beard & Co. (Ky.) 93 S. W. 666.

SUPERSEDEAS

"A 'supersedeas' suspends the efficacy of the judgment, but does not, like a reversal, annul the judgment itself. Its object and effect are to stay future proceedings, and not to undo what is already done. It has no retroactive operation, such as to deprive the judgment of its force and authority from the beginning, but only suspends them after and while it is itself effectual." Hey v. Harding (Ky.) 78 S. W. 136; Gardner v. Continental Ins. Co. (Ky.) 101 S. W. 911, 912 (quoting Runyon v. Bennett, 34 Ky. [4 Dana] 598, 29 Am. Dec. 431). Thus, where a party against whom a judgment has been obtained, directing his land to be sold, obtains a supersedeas, the lower court has no authority to place the land in the hands of a receiver and deprive him of its use pending the appeal. Gardner v. Continental Ins. Co., 101 S. W. 911, 912 (quoting and adopting definition in Runyon v. Bennett, 34 Ky. [4 Dana] 598, 29 Am. Dec. 431).

"A 'supersedeas' is a statutory remedy. It is only obtained by a strict compliance with all the required conditions, none of which can be dispensed with. Time is an essential element in the proceeding, and one which neither the court nor the judges can disregard." Whitaker v. McBride, 98 N. W. 877, 878, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 411 (quoting Sage v. Central R. Co., 93 U. S. 412, 23 L. Ed. 933).

"Originally a 'supersedeas' was a writ directed to an officer commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ, which he was about to execute, or which might come into his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymous with a stay of proceedings, which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment." In Oregon a writ of supersedeas is unknown, though a certificate of probable cause issued by the trial judge or by a justice of the Supreme Court is tantamount thereto, the effect of which is to suspend the enforcement of the judgment until it can be reviewed on appeal. State v. Small, 90 Pac. 1110, 1111, 49 Or. 595 (quoting Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 33 Pac. 123, 98 Cal. 304, 306, and citing State v. Armstrong, 74 Pac. 1025, 45 Or. 25).

The office of a "supersedeas" is to stay execution. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Norrie, 118 Fed. 923, 924.

A "supersedeas," like an appeal, is a matter of right, and does not rest in the discretion of the court. McCourt v. Singers-Bigger, 150 Fed. 102, 104, 80 C. C. A. 56.

"The word 'supersedeas' does not strictly apply to a stay of proceedings, and that therefore a writ of error might operate as a stay without bond. But the term 'supersedeas' is often used in a broader sense than in its original sense. * * * Where a demurrer to a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage was overruled, and a bill of exceptions signed and filed, bringing the ruling to this court for review, this alone did not ipso facto operate to prevent the presiding judge from proceeding with the trial. Montgomery v. King, 54 S. E. 135, 136, 125 Ga. 388 (citing and explaining Franklin v. Kriegshaber, 41 S. E. 47, 114 Ga. 947; Jordan v. Jordan, 16 Ga. 446, 448, 452; Gustoso Cigar Mfg. Co. v. Ray, 43 S. E. 984, 117 Ga. 565; Marks v. Hertz, 65 Ga. 119; Southern Exp. Co. v. Lynch, 65 Ga. 240; and citing and distinguishing Jones v. Doherty, 11 Ga. 305; and citing and adopting Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 33 Pac. 123, 98 Cal. 304, 306; 20 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1209).

The "writ of supersedeas" is frequently granted by this court for the purpose of staying proceedings in the superior court, when a review of the action of that court is sought in this court, either upon direct proceeding or on appeal, and is directed to the court whose action is under review, or to an officer of that court who may be about to enforce its judgment. McAneny v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County, 87 Pac. 1020, 1022, 150 Cal. 6.

SUPERSTITIOUS USE

In England, masses for the dead are called "a superstitious use," and are forbidden by statute, but in California, and in other states generally, there is no statute designating such bequests superstitious uses, and generally like bequests are not prohibited as superstitious if they are for the observance of any ceremonial, the efficiency of which is recognized by the church of which the donor is a member. In re Lennon's Estate, 92 Pac. 870, 871, 152 Cal. 327, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024.

SUPERSTRUCTURE

In the technique of railroading and the parlance thereof, the word "superstructure" means the upper part of railroad bridges. State ex rel. Pearson v. Louisiana & M. R. R. Co., 94 S. W. 279, 281, 196 Mo. 523.

The "superstructure" of a railroad is defined as "the sleepers, rails, and fastenings, in distinction from the roadbed, called also 'permanent way.'" Bird v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 111 N. W. 860-878, 148 Mich. 71 (citing Webst. Dict.). See, also, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States Iron Co., 101 S. W. 414, 418, 118 Tenn. 194.

Under Revisal 1905, § 5290, authorizing the Corporation Commission to assess the "right of way and superstructures thereon," the word "superstructures" covers all buildings situated on the right of way. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. City of Newbern, 60 S. E. 925, 927, 147 N. C. 165.

SUPERVISE

The power conferred on the Board of Railroad Commissioners by Code, § 2112, giving it general supervision of all the railroads in the state, is not limited to any particular subject, and the section when construed in connection with section 2113, and Code Supp. 1907, §§ 2116, 2153, authorizing the board to make changes in the mode of operating railroads, requiring railroads to furnish cars and to transport freight without change of cars, empowers the board to require a carrier to accept the cars of a private owner or of a carrier, not a connecting carrier; to "super-vise" meaning to superintend, to direct, to take charge over, with the power of direction. State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 130 N. W. 802, 804, 152 Iowa, 317.

SUPERVISION

See General Supervision.

Schools in special or independent districts, which by the express terms of Rev. Codes 1899, § 639, are removed from the superintendence of county superintendents, are not under his "supervision," within section 652, which provides a graduated salary for county superintendents corresponding to the number of schools or departments of graded schools there were under their official supervision in the preceding year. Dickey County v. Denning, 103 N. W. 422, 423, 14 N. D. 77.

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 4, requiring county boards of supervisors when the cost of construction of any bridge, etc., exceeds $500 to advertise for bids, but providing that, on being advised by the county surveyor that the work can be done for less than the lowest bid, the board may reject all bids and order the work done or structure built by days' work under the "supervision and control" of such surveyor, the latter to be held personally responsible under his official bond to construct such structure at a cost not exceeding the lowest bid, the board did not exceed its power in directing the surveyor or on his being instructed to construct a bridge to purchase material therefor, "supervision" implying oversight, and the word "control" being used to authorize additional power, such as is contained in one of its definitions, "to exercise a restraining or governing influence over, to regulate." McCarthy v. Board of Supervisors of Merced County, 115 Pac. 458, 459, 15 Cal. App. 576.

The words "general supervision" imply something more than a mere power to advise and suggest, and confer authority to oversee and review the acts and to correct the errors of those over whom the right of supervision is granted. Under Laws 1905, p. 2215, c. 115, § 2, subd. 2, requiring the state board of tax commissioners to exercise "general supervision" over assessors and county boards of equalization and the assessment of taxable property in order to secure equality in taxation, the commissioners do not act merely in an advisory capacity, but have power to classify intercounty railroads and fix the value thereof for purposes of taxation. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Snohomish County, 98 Pac. 924, 927, 48 Wash. 478.

SUPERVISOR

See Board of Supervisors.

Determination of, see Determination.

According to the Century Dictionary, a "supervisor" is one who supervises; an overseer; an inspector; superintendent, as the supervisor of a coal mine; a supervisor of customs. And the word "supervise" means to oversee; have charge of, with authority to direct or regulate. The word "supervisor," when used to indicate an agent of an insurance company, denotes general agency. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rhodes, 60 S. E. 828, 831, 4 Ga. App. 25.

SUPERVISOR OF ASSESSMENT

As county officer, see County Officer.

SUPERVISORY CONTROL

The "writ of supervisory control" is one to be seldom issued, and then only when other writs may not issue and other remedies are inadequate, and when the acts of the court complained of, as threatened, will be arbitrary, unlawful, and so far unjust as to be tyrannical. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 81 Pac. 345, 32 Mont. 579.

SUPPLEMENT

A "supplement" to a newspaper is an addition to the usual issue of the newspaper. Star Co. v. Colver Pub. House, 141 Fed. 129.

SUPPLEMENTAL ACT

The term "supplement" signifies something additional, something added to supply what is wanting. It is that which supplies a deficiency, adds to or completes, or extends, that which is already in existence, without changing or modifying the original. Thus the act, declaring that wherever the word "railroad" occurs in the act of May 12, 1869, relating to aid to railroads, or in any section of any subsequent act amendatory or supplemental thereto, the same shall include "street railroads, suburban street railroads, or interurban street railroads," is a "supplemental" and not "amendatory act," and is therefore not void for failure to set forth in full any part of the act of 1869, as required in case of amendments by Const. art. 4, § 21. McCleary v. Babcock, 82 N. E. 453, 455, 169 Ind. 228.

A "supplemental act" adds something that was left out of the original act, and does not necessarily revise it or amend it in the technical sense, while an amendment is something that may be incorporated into the act amended on its passage. A supplemental act is an independent law. State ex rel. Gamble v. Hubbard, 41 South. 903, 906, 148 Ala. 391.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER

The office of a "supplemental answer" is, not to supply matter which should have formed a part of the original answer, but is restricted to replies to what may be embraced in the supplemental petition, and it cannot be made to serve the purpose of aiding a defective statement in the original answer, or to add any new matter only available against the cause of action stated in the original petition. Blewitt v. Greene, 122 S. W. 914, 915, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 588.

A pleading, which in its substance is a direct and full reply to the cause of action set up in the plaintiff's petition and contains, among other matter, a sworn denial of partnership of the defendants, should, under the rules of pleading, be designated either an "original" or "amended" answer, and is not a "supplemental answer." Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Halsell, 83 S. W. 15, 98 Tex. 244.

SUPPLEMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Where the court on appeal adjudged that property was liable to assessment for benefits for widening a street, and reversed the judgment of the trial court sustaining objections to the assessment on the ground that the property was not subject to assessment, and remanded the case, and the city never filed in the trial court the remanding order, a new assessment of the property was not a "supplemental assessment" within Cities and Villages Act 1872. p. 257, art. 9, § 47, relating to supplemental assessments, where the first assessment proves insufficient. City of Chicago v. Willoughby, 94 N. E. 513, 515, 249 Ill. 249.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL

A "supplemental bill" is where there has been some change in the rights or status of the parties which must be carried forward by a "supplemental bill," and usually, when a supplemental bill is thus allowed, matters can be brought in which could have been covered by an amendment to the original bill. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Hadley, 155 Fed. 220, 221.

A "supplemental bill" is but an addition to the original bill, and its usual purpose is to remedy some defect therein that cannot be remedied by amendment, and a bill, whose principal purpose is to obtain a correction of a decree and make it conform to the mandate of the Supreme Court, is not a supplemental bill. Blondin v. McArthur, 80 Atl. 663, 84 Vt. 516.

SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

A "supplemental complaint" is for the purpose of supplementing a good complaint, and cannot be availed of to change the original complaint to a new cause of action. Lafayette Trust Co. v. Peck, 117 N. Y. Supp. 336, 337, 133 App. Div. 370.

The rule of practice under statutes allowing the filing of supplemental complaints in actions at law is similar to that of the chancery courts in reference to supplemental bills, and the supplemental complaint differs from an amended complaint in that it does not take the place of the original pleading, but stands with it, and adds to it some fact which has occurred since the beginning of the action, which fact must be set forth therein. A "supplemental complaint" is one which assumes that the original complaint is to stand, and must consist of facts which had arisen since the filing of the original complaint, and must relate to matters which had occurred subsequent to the commencement of the action. Bush v. Pioneer Min. Co., 179 Fed. 78, 80, 102 C. C. A. 372.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDING

As special proceeding, see Special Proceeding.

"Supplementary proceedings" are special proceedings of statutory origin in which the court has only such jurisdiction, as is conferred by the statute creating the remedy. Mede v. Meyer, 105 N. Y. Supp. 957, 958, 55 Misc. Rep. 621.

Proceedings by a judgment creditor after the return of execution unsatisfied for the examination of the judgment debtors respecting their property and choses in action, and upon the evidence adduced on such examination for the appointment of a receiver, which proceedings are authorized by the statutes of several of the states and are adapted to aid the enforcement of executions on judgments at law and as a substitute for a creditor's bill in equity, are known as "supplementary proceedings." Regina Music Box Co. v. F. G. Otto & Son, 124 Fed. 747.

"Proceedings supplementary to execution," while collateral to an original action, are still quite independent of it. Indeed, they embrace all the elements of an independent civil action. It has its own record, and only parties thereto need be served with notice of appeal. Supplementary proceedings, so far as the garnishee is concerned, are original proceedings, not against the debtor, but against his creditor, and are a substitute for a creditors' bill. McKenzie v. Hill, 98 Pac. 55, 56, 9 Cal. App. 78.

SUPPLETORY OATH

Where a party to a suit, on the trial thereof, presents himself as a witness in support of the charges against the adverse party on his account book, and voluntarily takes the "general oath" to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, legally administered, instead of the "suppletory oath," a more restricted oath, to make just and true answers to such questions as shall be asked by the court or by the order thereof, and testifies untruly, wittingly, and willingly to matters material and legitimately derivable from him, he will come within the purview of Rev. Stat. c. 158, § 1, and may be convicted of perjury. State v. Keene, 26 Me. 33, 35.

SUPPLY

An agreement to supply materials to a contractor is not "supplying" them, and where one has agreed to supply materials, but they have never been delivered to or used by the contractor in his lifetime, or his sureties completing the work after his death, it cannot be said that the materials have been "supplied" to the contractor in the prosecution of the work, within the meaning of the federal statute, providing that any person entering into a formal contract with the United States for the construction of any public building "shall execute the usual penal bond with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligations that such contractor shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him labor and materials, in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract," and that one who has so supplied labor and materials may bring suit on the bond for his own benefit. United States v. Murdock, 59 Atl. 60, 62, 99 Me. 258.

Act March 30, 1892 (P. L. p. 369) § 1, gives a lien on money due a contractor for the construction of a city building to subcontractors, materialmen, etc., on their compliance with section 2, which requires the service of a verified statement showing the amount of the claim, that the materials were furnished to the contractor, and that they were actually used in the erection and completion of the contract with the city. Held, that where a notice of a lien recited that there was due claimant from D., subcontractor for the mason work on public school No. 9, $6,630.49 for materials supplied in accordance with the contract between claimant and D., all of which had been fully completed, and the affidavit recited that there was due and owing claimant from D. $6,630.49 for materials supplied on and about the construction of public school No. 9 in the city of Hoboken, the statement sufficiently averred that the materials were actually used in the erection and completion of the school under the contract with the city; the word "supplied" being used there in the sense of "furnish" and the word "about" being taken to mean "upon." National Fire Proofing Co. v. Daly, 74 Atl. 152, 155, 76 N. J. Eq. 35.

SUPPLY (Noun)

See Necessary Supplies.

Other supplies, see Other.

Supplies for city

The charter of Lowell (St. 1896, p. 364, c. 415) created a department of supplies, with a chief elected annually, and section 3 requires all materials and supplies for the city to be purchased by the head of such department, subject to the mayor's approval, and provides that, so far as practicable, such purchases shall be made after public advertisement and under contract approved by the mayor. Section 6 provides that heads of departments shall have general charge of matters relating thereto, and shall execute all contracts, except for purchase of material and supplies; and section 7 forbids the city council, or any committee or member, from making contracts, purchasing material, etc., or expending public money, except to defray incidental expenses of the council. Held, that the provision relating to purchase of supplies and material in section 3 could not be construed so as to limit the word "purchase" to a purchase for money, the word "supplies" to articles of food, or the word "material" to that which the city has on hand for manufacture of other things, so that purchase of gravel, to be removed by the city and used on the streets and paid for by other filling deposited on the lot from which it was taken, was a purchase of material, which, under section 6, the superintendent of streets had no authority to make. Bartlett v. City of Lowell, 87 N. E. 195, 196, 201 Mass. 151.

Supplies for mine

Electricity furnished to a mine for illumination or for power constitutes "supplies" within L. O. L. § 7444, giving any person furnishing materials or supplies for the working or development of any mine a lien upon such mine therefor; a "supply" in its restricted sense meaning any substance consumed with its use, but in its more general sense meaning anything furnished to meet a need, and the term "supplies," as used in the statute, including any substance the use of which might reasonably tend to the working or development of a mine. Grants Pass Trust Co. v. Enterprise Mine Co., 113 Pac. 859, 174, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 6802).

Supplies for railroad construction work

Groceries furnished a subcontractor to supply his boarding house where he boarded his laborers while constructing a railroad are not "supplies" furnished for the construction of a railroad, for the price of which the seller is entitled to a lien under Ky. St. 1903, § 2492. Carson & Co. v. Shelton, 107 S. W. 793, 128 Ky. 248; Id., 107 S. W. 793, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1083, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

SUPPORT

See Good and Sufficient Support; Lateral Support; Self-Supporting Iron Wall.

The word "support" implies sustaining from beneath, as is indicated by its definition, "to bear by being under," and its derivation, "subportare." General Electric Co. v. Garrett Coal Co., 141 Fed. 124, 125.

The word "support," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 3018, subd. 6, providing for the exemption of the necessary fund for the support of exempt stock, means only sufficient food to feed the stock for a year. It does not entitle the debtor to claim, in the absence of food for stock, a crop of wheat for the purpose of selling the wheat and purchasing food for such stock. Voss v. Goss, 84 Pac. 564, 565, 73 Kan. 120, 117 Am. St. Rep. 457. Under this statute, a person who owns only part of the live stock specified is limited to the amount of food necessary for the "support" of only so much as he owns. Byrnes v. John Deere Plow Co., 85 Pac. 819, 74 Kan. 97.

It has been held that "support," as used in reference to common schools, means continuing regular expenditures for the maintenance of the schools, so that a fund for the support of such schools cannot be used for building a new schoolhouse or purchasing the site. Hence the proceeds of lands granted for university purposes cannot be used for the erection or equipment of university buildings, but only for the support and maintenance of such university, in the payment of current expenses and charges. Roach v. Gooding, 81 Pac. 642, 644, 11 Idaho, 244.

SUPPORT (Of Person)

Support when estate is to be kept together, see When.

A law providing for the punishment of a man who "neglects to provide proper food, clothing, shelter, or care in case of sickness for his wife or minor child," does not by implication repeal a law providing for the punishment of a man who "willfully neglects, fails, or refuses to provide reasonable support and maintenance for his wife or minor children." "Support and maintenance" are of much broader import than "food, clothing, and shelter," and may include many things besides food and clothing and shelter. Campbell v. People, 94 Pac. 256, 42 Colo. 228.

Where a testator, having ample means, makes a liberal provision for the "support and maintenance" of his widow, those words will be given a broad and liberal meaning, when no language is used in connection therewith which tends to restrict or limit their meaning. Blair v. Blair, 108 Pac. 827, 828, 82 Kan. 464.

Attorney's services

Comp. Laws 1907, § 538, subd. 3, makes the necessary expenses incurred in the support of persons charged with or convicted of crime and committed to the county jail charges against the county. Section 4806 provides that the cost of trial shall be paid by the county wherein the offense was committed, and section 539 provides that costs accruing before removal shall be charged against the county in which the prosecution originated. Held, that the statutes did not raise an implied liability by a county to pay for services of an attorney appointed by the district court to defend an indigent accused, the term "support" used in section 538 not including such charges. Pardee v. Salt Lake County, 118 Pac. 122, 124, 39 Utah, 482, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 200 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1634-1638).

Medical attendance

The word "support," as used in the Oklahoma statute, making it the duty of a parent having custody of a minor child to support and educate such child, includes necessary medical attendance to preserve the health and life of such child. A reasonable construction of the statute requires the furnishing of medical treatment in such a manner and on such occasions as an ordinarily prudent person, solicitous for the welfare of his child and anxious to promote his recovery, would provide. Owens v. State, 116 Pac. 345, 6 Okl. Cr. 110, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1218.

As creating estate

The following clause in a deed, executed by a husband and wife to their son: "The parties of the first part do hereby reserve a life time dower and 'support' of one the above land set joint in this deed"—secures to the grantors their maintenance and support for and during their lives, but under it they have no estate in the land or any portion thereof. Beverlin v. Casto, 57 S. E. 411, 414, 82 W. Va. 158.

SUPPORT AS PAUPER

The phrase "supported as a pauper" involves, not only the idea that aid shall have been given by a town, but that the aid shall have been applied to or received by the supposed pauper. Sheboygan County v. Town of Sheboygan Falls, 109 N. W. 1030, 1031, 130 Wis. 93.

SUPPOSE

See Induce to Suppose.

"Suppose" and "guess" are frequently used to express one's opinion, though more apt to express conjecture. Councill v. Mayhew, 55 South. 314, 317, 172 Ala. 295.

In an action for an injury at a railroad crossing, the testimony did not disclose whether or not the engineer saw the team of plaintiff's intestate on the track, as intimated, and on appeal the court in its decision stated: "If the facts thus supposed were true, and the engineer, seeing the team standing on the track under the circumstances mentioned, immediately used all available appliances to stop the train, the question of such care would nevertheless be for the jury to determine." Held, that the word "supposed" was advisedly used, and was not objectionable as authorizing a judgment to rest on conjecture. Kunz v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 94 Pac. 504, 508, 51 Or. 191.

A plea that "said several 'supposed' causes of action in said counts mentioned, if any such there be or still are," did not accrue within six years is defective for not confessing the causes of action which it seeks to avoid; but as the defect is formal merely, by force of chapter 184, § 4, of the Rhode Island Revised Statutes, the court must support the plea, though, for this cause, specially demurred to. Marchant v. Valley Falls Baptist Church, 6 R. I. 24, 26.

Allege synonymous

The word "supposed," as used in a plea in trespass for killing a dog, alleging that on the date of "the said supposed killing of said dog" it was found by defendant hunting wild deer, is equivalent to "alleged," and is a sufficient admission of a cause of action. Mossman v. Bostridge, 57 Atl. 995, 76 Vt. 409.

SUPPOSITION

"Inference," in legal parlance, as respects evidence, is a very different thing from "supposition." The former is a deduction from proven facts, while the latter requires no such premise for its justification. Courts and juries, in dealing with the inquiry whether a party has discharged his burden of proof, cannot pronounce on mere supposition that the burden has been met, but can only establish the ultimate fact from others justifying such inference. Miller-Brent Lumber Co. v. Douglas, 52 South. 414, 415, 167 Ala. 286 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3579; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 6807).

SUPPRESS

A statute, authorizing a municipal corporation to "suppress" skating rinks, gives no power to prohibit them. Johnson v. Town of Philadelphia, 47 South. 526, 527, 94 Miss. 34, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 637, 19 Ann. Cas. 103.

A village which has power to pass ordinances "to suppress saloons for the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors" has the option to wholly prohibit the business within municipal boundaries, but does not have the power to fix a saloon district within the village and prohibit the carrying on of the business at any place outside of the district. Timm v. Common Council of Village of Caledonia Station, 112 N. W. 942, 149 Mich. 323.

SUPPRESSION

The terms "misrepresentation" and "suppression of fact by the employer," contained in a policy of guaranty insurance, which provided that any material misstatements or suppression of fact by employer in any statement or declaration to the company or in any claim made under this bond shall render the bond void from the beginning, mean the same thing. "Misrepresentations" is here used in a somewhat more restricted sense than ordinarily. It has reference to misstatements, known to be untrue, or which are positively stated as true, without actual knowledge by the insured and made under circumstances which call for such knowledge as might be based on unreasonable care previously exercised. It is akin to the expression "suppression of fact by the employer," which is a species of misrepresentations, as it leads the inquirer to believe what is apparently true by concealing the fact which shows it to be not true. One is the active and the other is the passive phase of the same thing. One is the false statement and the other is the suppression of the truth, each intended to mislead as to the matter pertaining to the risk. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of New York v. Western Bank (Ky.) 94 S. W. 3, 5.

SUPREME COURT

The Supreme Court, created by Const. art. 7, § 1, which vests judicial power in a Supreme Court and other courts, is supreme over the other two departments of the state government, including the administrative, and it cannot be deprived by the Legislature of its powers; the words "Supreme Court" designating the highest court of the state or nation, possessing the highest and controlling jurisdiction, and the word "supreme," as used in connection with the word "court," signifying "over, above, beyond." Ex parte France, 95 N. E. 515, 519, 176 Ind. 72.

The "Supreme Court" is created by the Constitution, and the outlines of its jurisdiction established by that instrument. In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 575, 578, 73 Kan. 609.

The "Supreme Court" of Georgia is a constitutional court of limited jurisdiction. It has no original jurisdiction, but is a court alone for the trial and correction of errors from the superior court and certain city courts. Georgia, F. & A. Ry. Co. v. Lasseter, 51 S. E. 15, 16, 122 Ga. 679.

When the public statutes were adopted, the term "Supreme Court" included both the court which at the trial term determined questions of fact and the court which at law term settled questions of law. The court has the same power over questions of law involved in the adjudications of the superior court and properly transferred to it that the whole court had prior to 1901 at the law terms over questions of law raised and reserved at the trial terms. Laws 1901, p. 563, c. 78, §§ 2, 5. Town of Bath v. Town of Haverhill, 63 Atl. 307, 308, 73 N. H. 511.

The words "Supreme Court," in an appeal bond conditioned to prosecute the appeal with diligence to a decision in the said Supreme Court and perform the judgment thereof, etc., are not synonymous with the words "Court of Appeals," and after the Legislature extended the jurisdiction of the Courts of Appeals, and the Supreme Court certified the case in which the bond was given to the Court of Appeals, no action would lie on the appeal bond, notwithstanding the judgment below was affirmed. Brookshier v. McIlwrath, 87 S. W. 607, 608, 112 Mo. App. 687.

SUPREME LAW

The "supreme law" is the Constitution, and in no proper legal sense can any act of either department of the government, which violates its provisions or exceeds the powers delegated, be the law. State v. Williams, 61 S. E. 61, 62, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 562. See, also, Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. United States Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 15, 84 C. C. A. 167.

The "supreme law of the territory" is the act of Congress creating the territory, prescribing its governmental functions, and defining and limiting its legislative authority, and sustains to the governmental powers the same relation that a Constitution sustains to those of a state, and an act of the territorial Legislature, which conflicts with the act of Congress, is void. Burke v. Malaby, 78 Pac. 105, 14 Okl. 650.

SURCHARGE

To "surcharge" or falsify is to allege an omission in an account or deny the correctness of some or all of the items rendered. One who objects to a stated account must surcharge or falsify it; and an account rendered by an administrator is a stated account. Tate v. Gairdner, 46 S. E. 73, 74, 119 Ga. 133.

A bill against testamentary trustees, making charges of mismanagement, seeking to hold them liable on various claims, complaining of the compensation allowed them and of an item paid on the settlement of a claim of one of the trustees against the estate, is a bill to "surcharge and falsify." Leach v. Cowan, 140 S. W. 1070, 1077, 125 Tenn. 182, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 188.

SURE FOAL GETTER

Where the seller of a stallion warranted that he was a "sure foal getter," such technical term, in the absence of evidence otherwise explaining it, meant a reasonably sure foal getter. National Bank of Anadarko v. Oldham, 109 Pac. 75, 76, 26 Okl. 139.

SURETIES

A statute providing that an appeal from a justice shall be allowed by him on the party offering "sufficient security in such sum as the justice shall deem sufficient," whereupon the justice shall make an entry as follows: "On the — day of —, 18—, the said A. B. appeals, and C. D. becomes surety in the sum of," etc., which entry shall be signed by the "sureties," and, when signed, shall bind the "sureties," is satisfied by a bond signed by one surety. The word "surety," as used in the entry on the justice's docket, means "security," and does not refer to the number of persons guaranteeing the prosecution of the appeal and the payment of the judgment. Richardson v. National Bank of Wilmington & Brandywine (Del.) 67 Atl. 157, 158, 6 Pennewill, 385.

SURETY

See Bound with Surety; Common Surety; Cosurety.

A "surety" is one who, at the request of another and for the purpose of securing him a benefit, becomes responsible for the performance by the latter of some act in favor of a third person or hypothecates property as security therefor. Civ. Code Cal. § 2831. Consequently a person who signs a note, and executes a mortgage to secure a loan contract by another for his exclusive use and benefit is a "surety." Townsend v. Sullivan, 84 Pac. 435, 436, 3 Cal. App. 115. See, also, Kellogg v. Lopez, 78 Pac. 1056, 1057, 145 Cal. 497.

A "surety" is "a person who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by some other person, who ought himself to have made payment or performed before the surety was compelled to do so." McGraw v. Union Trust Co., 99 N. W. 758, 136 Mich. 521 (quoting Smith v. Sheldon, 35 Mich. 48, 24 Am. Rep. 529).

"A 'surety' is one who contracts for the payment of a debt in case of the failure of another person who is himself principally responsible for it; or, as it has otherwise been expressed, a surety is a person who, being liable to pay a debt, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by some other person who ought himself to have paid it before the surety was himself compelled to do so." Wm. Deering & Co. v. Veal (Ky.) 78 S. W. 886, 887 (quoting Brandt, Sureties, § 1).

A "surety" is one who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to indemnity from another, who ought himself to have made payment or performed the obligation before the surety was required to do so. That several persons become both jointly and severally bound to pay a debt, which as between themselves is the debt of one of their number, does not make them principals, so as to deprive them of their rights as sureties, though the obligors, other than the principal debtor, are not identified in the writing as sureties, and where a joint and several bond, not designating any one as principal or as surety, bound the obligors to respond for the default of one of them, the other obligors were sureties. Reissaus v. Whites, 106 S.

W. 603-605, 128 Mo. App. 135 (citing Brandt Suretyship [3d Ed. § 1]).

"A 'surety' is an original maker, and becomes primarily and absolutely liable, as much so as the principal, to any party lawfully holding the paper." His undertaking is primary, as distinguished from that of a guarantor, which is collateral and secondary. A surety undertakes to pay if the debtor does not, while in a collateral undertaking, like a guaranty, the undertaking is to pay if the debtor cannot. In the one case there is a direct liability for the act to be performed, while in the other there is a liability for the ability only of another to perform the act. Rouse v. Wooten, 53 S. E. 430, 432, 140 N. C. 557, 111 Am. St. Rep. 875, 6 Ann. Cas. 280 (quoting and adopting Ballard v. Burton, 24 Atl. 769, 64 Vt. 337, 16 L. R. A. 664; McIntosh Huntington Co. v. Reed, 89 Fed. 464).

An indorser or guarantor liable by indorsement on an instrument of writing, against whom judgment is rendered in a court of record in this state in a suit on the instrument, is not surety or bail within the meaning of section 11713, General Code, so as to entitle such indorser or guarantor to be certified in the record of the judgment as surety or bail. Crawford v. Turnbaugh (Ohio) 98 N. E. 858, 859.

As creditor

See Creditor.

Director

Const. art. 12, § 3, providing that directors of corporations shall be liable for "all moneys embezzled or misappropriated" by the officers thereof, etc., makes the directors sureties of officers who are guilty of misappropriating corporate moneys, and the liability created is that of "suretyship" only. Hercules Oil Refining Co. v. Hocknell, 91 Pac. 341, 343, 5 Cal. App. 702.

Guarantor distinguished

See Guaranty.

On note

The word "surety," appended to the name of a maker of a note, cannot alter his liability as to the owner thereof, and only shows that, as between the promisors, one is a principal and the other a guarantor. Cellers v. Meachem, 89 Pac. 426, 427, 49 Or. 186, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 133, 13 Ann. Cas. 997.

Where a person unites with a drawer or drawers of a bill as surety, he is called a "surety drawer." Union Nat. Bank of Kansas City, Mo., v. Neill, 149 Fed. 711, 717, 79 C. C. A. 417, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426.

The payee of a note who has indorsed and transferred the same, and against whom a judgment on the note has been obtained, has the right to have the judgment assigned to him on payment thereof, both under the doctrine of subrogation, and under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 8, § 5, providing that the "surety" on any note who shall pay the money due thereon shall be entitled to an assignment thereof, and section 6, providing that when a person shall recover judgment against the principal debtor and surety, and the amount due on the judgment shall be satisfied by the surety, the creditor shall assign the same to the surety, although the maker of the note may have a defense to it as against the payee. Wallace v. Jones, 72 Atl. 769, 770, 110 Md. 143.

Wife

Where a husband is indebted in the form of an open account, and his wife executes a mortgage on her separate real estate to secure the payment of the debt, she is a "surety" only. Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Behnke, 81 N. E. 119, 121, 41 Ind. App. 288.

An employé, who had become indebted to his employer, and who desired further credit, and the employer contrived to secure both by having the employé's wife execute a mortgage on her property to a third person, who should lend the wife the sum desired on the security of her note and mortgage, with the understanding that the employer would reimburse the third person and take an assignment of the note and mortgage without recourse. The wife executed a note and mortgage and received from the third person his check, which she indorsed to the employer, and shortly thereafter the note and mortgage were assigned to the employer, who gave the third person a check. The third person had no interest in the transaction. Held, that the note and mortgage were collateral security for the husband's debt, and were void within Code 1907, § 4497, prohibiting a wife from becoming, directly or indirectly, the "surety" for the husband. Lamkin v. Lovell (Ala.) 58 South. 258, 259.

SURETY COMPANY

The term "surety companies" in St. 1903, p. 476, which is an act to provide for the payment by the state, counties, cities, or cities and counties of the premium on official bonds, when signed by surety companies, includes any corporation contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1056, 1057, and Pol. Code, § 955, subd. 4, which authorized corporations organized for that purpose to become the sole surety on any undertaking or bond required by any law of the state. San Luis Obispo County v. Murphy, 123 Pac. 808, 809, 162 Cal. 588, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 712.

SURETYSHIP

"Suretyship" is an accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another already bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation if the debtor does not, and falls within the purview of Hurd's St. Ill. 1911, c. 132, § 1, providing for the discharge of a surety if the creditor does not within a reasonable time commence suit after notice by the surety, who apprehends that his principal is liable to become insolvent or leave the state. Continental & Commercial Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Cobb, 200 Fed. 511, 516, 118 C. C. A. 615 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

An agreement between a wife and a mortgagee that in consideration of the mortgagee's becoming surety for her husband she would sign a second mortgage with her husband and would waive an indemnity bond given her by the mortgagee conditioned for the payment to her of money if the first mortgage, also held by him, were foreclosed, was not a contract of "suretyship," which a married woman is prohibited from executing under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7855, such a contract being one whereby one person engages to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. Druckmiller v. Coy, 85 N. E. 1028, 1030, 42 Ind. App. 500.

An instrument in the ordinary form of a negotiable note, except that it contained at the end thereof and before the signatures the added words: "Collateral for S. Bryan note. Note 58"—constituted a contract of "suretyship" as defined by Civ. Code, § 2831. National Bank of Commerce of San Diego v. Schirm, 86 Pac. 981, 983, 3 Cal. App. 696.

"Suretyship" is a direct contract to pay the debt of another. It insures the particular claim. "A surety is liable as much as his principal is liable, and absolutely liable as soon as default is made, without any demand upon the principal whatsoever or any notice of default." Rouse v. Wooten, 53 S. E. 430, 432, 140 N. C. 557, 111 Am. St. Rep. 875, 6 Ann. Cas. 280 (quoting and adopting Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 440; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. [5th Ed.] § 1753; Tiedeman, Commercial Paper, § 415).

"Suretyship" implies original undertaking, and the measure of liability is the extent of the principal's liability. A surety assumes to perform the contract of the principal debtor, if the latter should not, and the undertaking is immediate and direct that the act should be done which, if not done, makes the surety responsible at once. Pittsburg Const. Co. v. West Side Belt R. Co., 75 Atl. 1029, 1030, 227 Pa. 90 (citing Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 438; Riddle v. Thompson, 104 Pa. 330; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Knight, 16 Atl. 492, 124 Pa. 58).

SURFACE

In common speech the nonmineral portion of land, the portion which covers and envelops the minerals, is called the "surface," or "the land," and the proprietor of land, who divests himself of title to the minerals which it contains, is still spoken of as the owner of the "fee," or of the "surface," or of the "land." Kansas Nat. Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 751, 75 Kan. 335.

According to Snyder on Mines, § 1030, the word "surface" means, not simply the geometrical superficies, without thickness, but includes whatever earth, soil, or land lies above and superincumbent on the mine. Big Six Development Co. v. Mitchell, 138 Fed. 279, 290, 70 C. C. A. 569, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332.

A contract between the owner of a junior mining location and the owner of a senior location, which conflicted, required the owner of the junior to convey, on issuance of his patent, to the owner of the senior, the "surface ground" within the conflict, excepting the junior vein, wherever it crossed the conflicting surface. Under the law at the time the owner of the junior claim was, as to the territory in dispute, entitled only to the junior vein where it crossed the senior location. Held, that the parties intended a conveyance of all minerals in the disputed territory, except the junior vein. Bogart v. Amanda Consol. Gold Min. Co., 74 Pac. 882, 883, 32 Colo. 32.

Where testator devised to his son the surface of his farm, excepting coal underlying the same, the word "surface" is more limited than the word "land," and prima facie means only "vestimenta terra," but may be used in a secondary sense to denote the whole of the soil down to the center of the earth, except the coal, and, when land is purchased with the exception of mines and minerals, the purchase includes, not merely the surface, but the whole of the subsoil which does not consist of mines and minerals, and surface means not the mere plane surface, but all of the land except mines. Dolan v. Dolan, 73 S. E. 90, 91, 70 W. Va. 76, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 125.

St. 1908, c. 552, § 2, gives a town a right of action against a railroad charged with the duty to maintain or repair a bridge and which refuses to do so. The act abolishing grade crossings (St. 1906, c. 463), provides by part 1, § 38, that where a public way crosses a railroad by an overhead bridge, the framework of the bridge and its abutments shall be maintained by the railroad and the surface of the bridge by the town in which it is situated. The Railroad Commission directed that "the superstructure of said bridge shall be built of iron or steel with hard pine under-floor and spruce plank wearing surface." Across the main girders of the bridge were four beams, and supported by these, but three inches below the floor beams, were stringers, and on top of the stringers was laid an under floor of pine planks three inches thick, and over all was laid the wearing surface of two-inch spruce planks. Held, that the word "surface" was not employed in its geometrical sense, as signifying a plane, but included some degree of thickness; that it was used in contradistinction to "framework," and was tantamount to flooring, when the bridge was considered as a whole; that the word "framework," as applied to things built or constructed, means that which furnishes form or strength, or both, and is the antithesis of "surface"; and that, in the division of the whole structure of the bridge into these two parts, the word "framework" had some tendency to point out which constituted the carrying strength of the bridge, while "surface" related more nearly to that which in the limits of the carrying strength supported the immediate burden of travel, and that the word "surface" included both layers of the flooring, for the repair of which the town was liable. Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. R., 96 N. E. 347, 349, 210 Mass. 229.

SURFACE-COATED PAPER

Box tops made of surface-coated paper and having designs printed by the lithographic process are dutiable as "surface-coated papers * * * printed," rather than as lithographic prints. Devoy v. United States, 147 Fed. 765.

Decalcomania paper is dutiable as "surface-coated papers * * * printed." U. S. v. O. G. Hempstead & Son, 159 Fed. 290, 292.

So-called "marbleized paper," which is made by hand, held dutiable as "surface-coated paper" and not as handmade paper. It is excluded from paragraph 401 of the Tariff Act of 1897, because not ejusdem generis with the classes of paper there enumerated. Seyd v. U. S., 152 Fed. 657, 658.

SURFACE RAILROAD

See Street Surface Railroad.

By the Railroad Law, § 4, subd. 4 (now Consol. Laws, c. 49, § 8, subd. 4), a steam railroad corporation has power to construct and maintain its road across and upon any highway which it intersects, and section 90 (now section 170) of that law gives street railroad corporations the right to construct their roads along the streets; hence a railroad has a right to use the streets the same as a street railroad, and, being a "surface road," is taxable under that provision of the tax law (Consol. Laws, c. 60) defining certain real estate for taxation purposes to be "all surface, underground or elevated railroads including all franchises and rights to maintain and operate the road upon the streets." People ex rel. Erie R. Co. v. Woodbury, 127 N. Y. Supp. 201, 202, 70 Misc. Rep. 261.

Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908), as amended by Laws 1899, c. 712, § 1, included special franchises in the definition of land, adding "all surface, underground, or elevated railroads," "including the value of all franchises, rights or permission to construct, maintain, or operate the same in, under, above, on, or through streets, highways, or public places." This act having been construed by the Supreme Court to include the privilege of crossing public highways at grade, the Legislature, by Laws 1901, c. 490, § 1, provided that the term "special franchise" should not include the crossing of a street, highway, or public place where such crossing was not at the intersection of another street or highway, unless the crossing was other than at right angles for a distance of not less than 250 feet, in which case the whole of the crossing should be deemed a special franchise; and, by Laws 1907, c. 720, § 1, the act was so amended as to provide that the term "special franchise" should not include the crossing of a street, highway, or public place "outside" the limits of a city or incorporated village, where such crossing is less than 250 feet long. Held, that the word "surface" as used in the act of 1899, did not limit that act to street railroads operated by horses or electricity, under the rule of ejusdem generis, but was intended to include steam railroads as well, so that steam railroads were subject to franchise taxation for the right to cross streets in cities at grade. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 96 N. E. 431, 432, 203 N. Y. 167.

Underground railroad

Under Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908) § 185, imposing a franchise tax on companies "operating any elevated railroad or surface railroad," an underground street railroad is not to be classed as a "surface road" within the meaning of the statute merely because for a short distance it may run on the surface of the ground. People ex rel. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. Williams, 123 N. Y. Supp. 137, 138 App. Div. 612.

SURFACE STREAM

A "stream of water" has a defined channel. It has banks and is very distinct from the percolations of subsurface water, which oozes in veins or filters through the earth's strata. An "underground stream" of water differs from a "surface stream" only with respect to its location above or below the surface. Stoner v. Patten, 63 S. E. 897, 898, 132 Ga. 178.

SURFACE WATER

Waters escaping from the banks of a river at times of flood are "surface waters," and not waters of the stream. Harvey v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 116 Pac. 464, 466, 63 Wash. 669.

Overflow waters that continue in a general course, though without defined banks, back into the water course from which they started or into another water course, do not become "surface waters," but remain a part of the water course. Town of Jefferson v. Hicks, 102 Pac. 79, 82, 23 Okl. 684, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214.

Overflowing waters of a natural stream in times of ordinary floods or freshets, flowing over or standing upon the adjacent lowlands, are not "surface water" unless and until separated therefrom, so as to prevent their return to its channel, and failure of a railroad company to make culverts in an embankment constructed by it for its roadbed on lands subject to such overflow, of sufficient size to permit the water behind the embankment to rise and fall as fast as the stream does, is negligent and unskillful construction, making the company liable for resulting injury. Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co., 49 S. E. 378, 383, 56 W. Va. 494, 68 L. R. A. 138, 107 Am. St. Rep. 968, 3 Ann. Cas. 201.

The overflow waters of a stream, especially where they run in a well-defined course and again unite with the stream at a lower point, must be regarded as a part of the water course from which the overflow comes, and cannot be regarded or dealt with as "surface water." Brinegar v. Copass, 109 N. W. 173, 174, 77 Neb. 241. See, also, Cole v. Missouri, K. & O. R. Co., 94 Pac. 540, 541, 20 Okl. 227, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268 (quoting with approval from Crawford v. Rambo, 7 N. E. 429, 44 Ohio St. 279).

"Surface water is that which is diffused over the surface of the ground, derived from falling rains and melting snows, and which continues to be such until it reaches some well-defined channel in which it is accustomed to flow and does flow with other waters, whether derived from the surface or springs; and it then becomes the running water of a stream and ceases to be 'surface water.'" Price v. Oregon R. Co., 83 Pac. 843, 846, 47 Or. 350; Rait v. Furrow, 85 Pac. 934, 936, 74 Kan. 101, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157, 10 Ann. Cas. 1044 (quoting and adopting the definition in Crawford v. Rambo, 7 N. E. 431, 44 Ohio St. 279). Thus, where plaintiff's property was injured by water of a stream which was turned back by an insufficient culvert constructed as part of the fill erected over the stream, and the water causing the injury was the continuous overflow of the stream, it could not be regarded as surface water in determining the rights of the parties. Price v. Oregon R. Co., 83 Pac. 843, 846, 47 Or. 350.

"Surface water," which an owner has the right to discharge from his own premises without regard to the rights of adjacent landowners, is that which arises from the sources of nature, such as streams, springs, and the like, and which comes from the ordinary tillage or use of the soil, and impurities which are naturally added to such water in the processes of husbandry or in its reasonable domestic use while being discharged from the owner's premises would not operate to make a trespass or nuisance against an adjoining owner. Exley v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 151 Fed. 101, 104.

A concourse of water fed by rain and snowfall, covering about 2,500 acres of depressed land, and which varies in depth from 3 to 6 feet, which is filled with swamp vegetation, and the land under which has been surveyed and conveyed to individual proprietors, and which is useless for any form of navigation or public purpose, is mere "surface water," which a proprietor of part of the submerged land may drain off at will, so long as he does so in a reasonable and careful manner, although he thereby drains the land of another proprietor, and destroys the value of fisheries maintained by him in the pond. Appelgate v. Franklin, 84 S. W. 347, 349, 109 Mo. App. 293 (citing Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 9 Am. Rep. 473; Gould, Waters, p. 127; Wagner v. Long Island R. Co. [N. Y.] 2 Hun, 633; Luther v. Winnisimmet Co., 63 Mass. [9 Cush.] 171; Hubbard v. Bell, 54 Ill. 110, 5 Am. Rep. 98; Olson v. Merrill, 42 Wis. 203; Stuart v. Clark's Lessee, 32 Tenn. [2 Swan] 9, 58 Am. Dec. 49; Morgan v. King, 35 N. Y. 454, 91 Am. Dec. 58; Brown v. Chadbourn, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Potter v. Howe, 6 N. E. 233, 141 Mass. 357; Fernald v. Knox Woolen Co., 19 Atl. 93, 82 Me. 48, 7 L. R. A. 459; Prieue v. Wisconsin State Land & Improvement Co., 67 N. W. 918, 93 Wis. 534, 33 L. R. A. 645).

Water standing in a wellhole which is fed by a subterranean spring, is not "surface water" before it leaves the well, and the owner could not divert it to another's injury, and, even if the well was fed by seepage of surface water it lost its character as surface water when it reached the well, and cannot thereafter be diverted by artificial means to another's injury. Anderson v. Drake, 123 N. W. 673, 674, 24 S. D. 216, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250.

"Surface waters" are such as are not flowing or contained in a regular stream or water course. Whenever waters escape from the water course and are flowing over fields and lands where they are not accustomed to flow, such waters become "surface waters." Standley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 97 S. W. 244, 247, 121 Mo. App. 537.

"Surface water" lies upon or spreads over the surface or percolates the soil, as in swamps, and does not flow in a particular channel." Case v. Hoffman, 54 N. W. 793, 795, 84 Wis. 438, 20 L. R. A. 40, 36 Am. St. Rep. 937.

SURGEON

See Assistant Surgeon.

See, also, Dentist.

The terms "dentist" and "surgeon" are not interchangeable. The professions are largely separate and distinct from each other. The practice of each is regulated by different chapters of the Code, and the legal rights, duties, and responsibilities of each are dissimilar in very many respects. Hence, under Code, § 700, giving cities and towns power to license and tax itinerant doctors, itinerant physicians and surgeons, a city has no power to require a "dental surgeon" to obtain a license. City of Cherokee v. Perkins, 92 N. W. 68, 69, 118 Iowa, 405 (citing People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563, 62 N. W. 709, 28 L. R. A. 139; State ex rel. Flickinger v. Fisher, 119 Mo. 344, 24 S. W. 167, 22 L. R. A. 799).

"A physician is one who is versed in medical science, a branch of which is surgery; and a 'surgeon' is a physician who treats bodily injuries and ills by manual operations and use of surgical instruments and appliances. A physician, as defined by our statute and in common parlance, is a person skilled in both medicine and surgery." Goss v. Goss, 113 N. W. 690, 692, 102 Minn. 346 (citing Rev. Laws, 1905, §§ 2295-2300; 6 Words and Phrases pp. 5374-5376).

SURGERY

See Practice of Medicine and Surgery; Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Osteopathy.

"Surgery" was said in Smith v. Lane, 24 Hun, 632, to be limited to manual operations usually performed by surgical instruments or appliances. People v. Allcutt, 102 N. Y. Supp. 678, 681, 117 App. Div. 546.

Administering chloroform

Where, in an action on an accident benefit certificate stipulating that insurer should not be liable for death resulting from surgical treatment the evidence showed that insured died while chloroform was being administered preparatory to an operation and an attending physician testified that the proximate cause of death was acute dilatation of the heart immediately caused by the chloroform, and that insured's diseased condition did not contribute to his death, the jury could find that surgical treatment did not include the administering of chloroform; "surgery" being defined as the branch of the healing art that relates to external injuries, deformities, and other morbid conditions to be remedied directly by manual operations, "surgical" being defined as being of or pertaining to surgery, "treatment" meaning the act or manner of treating, "remedy" being defined as something used for the cure or relief of bodily disease, and "surgical treatment" meaning treating a disease by means of surgery. Belle v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 135 S. W. 497, 502, 155 Mo. App. 629.

Dentist

A dentist does not practice "surgery," within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting such practitioners testifying concerning information acquired in attending a patient, etc. Howe v. Regensburg, 132 N. Y. Supp. 887, 838, 75 Misc. Rep. 132.

SURGICAL OPERATION

See Operation.

SURNAME

By the common law since the Norman Conquest, a legal name has consisted of one "Christian name," or that which is given one after his birth or at baptism, or is afterwards assumed by him in addition to his family name, and of one "surname," or family name, which is that derived from the common name of his parents, or borne by him in common with other members of his family. Schaffer v. Levenson Wrecking Co., 81 Atl. 434, 82 N. J. Law, 61.

SURPLUS

The "surplus" is that which remains after expenses and dividends. Marks v. American Brewing Co., 52 South. 983, 985, 126 La. 666.

Where a will gives all testator's property to certain persons, and provides that if, after paying these bequests, there should be a surplus left over, it shall be paid to the named beneficiaries pro rata, the word "surplus" includes the shares of any of the beneficiaries who have died during the lifetime of testator. In re Jones' Estate, 134 N. Y. Supp. 859, 862, 75 Misc. Rep. 47.

Plaintiff in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding borrowed money from certain claimants, agreeing to repay them "out of the surplus" belonging to her from the sale of the property, and agreeing that another claimant should be paid "out of the proceeds of the sale." Held, that the word "surplus" implied that the first of the claimants should be paid out of what was left of the proceeds of the property after all proper deductions had been made, and that neither contract was sufficient to give either of the lenders a claim against the proceeds prior to that of plaintiff's attorneys for their legitimate expenses and fees. Pettibone v. Thomson, 130 N. Y. Supp. 284, 289, 72 Misc. Rep. 486.

"Surplus," as used in Code, art. 93, § 32, as amended by Acts 1892, c. 571, providing that where a married woman dies intestate, leaving children or descendants, the surplus of her estate shall be distributed to her husband for his life, and after his death to the children and descendants per stirpes, means that part of the estate which is left after the debts, costs of administration, etc., are paid. Hunter v. Hersperger, 54 Atl. 65, 67, 96 Md. 292.

Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1923, 6794, 6795 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1311, 3338), providing that the surplus in any fund collected by a county for a specific use may be appropriated to any other legitimate use, and declaring that when there is a balance in the county treasury to the credit of any special fund which is not needed for the special purpose the county court may transfer the balance to a courthouse fund for the erection of a courthouse and when all warrants and debts properly chargeable to a fund in any one year are paid, the residue is a "surplus" and may be transferred. Decker v. Deimer, 129 S. W. 936, 948, 229 Mo. 296.

The word "surplus," as used in Laws 1891, p. 346, c. 164, providing that town officers may expend any surplus moneys for which no provision for expenditure is made to redeem outstanding bonds or for improvements, includes any money owned by and in the possession of the town, not raised by taxation for a specific purpose, not impressed by a trust, or required by contract to be used for a particular purpose. McConnell v. Allen, 105 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 120 App. Div. 548.

The term "surplus," as used in the nomenclature of bankers, does not include undivided profits. Such profits may be surplus in the sense that they are a constituent of capital, but they are not surplus in the commonly accepted sense. It is quite usual, upon the organization of financial corporations, for the stockholders to contribute, besides the share capital, a fund which is known as "surplus." It is also quite usual for the directors or managers of these institutions to set apart and to add to this fund from time to time some part of the accumulated profits of the business in excess of dividend requirements. The fund produced in either of these ways is what is known as "surplus." The term is not used to designate the accumulated profits of ordinary banking firms or individual bankers; and, when the statute uses it, it does so with reference to the particular class of bankers to which alone it is applicable, and means the fund created by corporate or quasi public institutions as an addition to or re-enforcement of the share capital. Leather Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Treat, 128 Fed. 262, 263, 62 C. C. A. 644. See, also, Central Trust Co. of New York v. Treat, 171 Fed. 301, 302.

The life insurance premium actually charged and collected from the insured is applied, first, to pay the policy's proportion of the year's death claims; then to make good its own reserve; then to pay the expenses, including all official salaries; then to pay losses, if any; and, if there should be a balance after paying these items, it is called a "surplus." United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 96 S. W. 889, 893, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

Net profits synonymous

The words "net profits," in P. L. 1904, p. 275, providing that the directors of a corporation shall not make dividends except "from its surplus, or from the net profits," are not synonymous with "surplus." Goodnow v. American Writing Paper Co., 69 Atl. 1014, 1015, 73 N. J. Eq. 692.

SURPLUS PROFITS

Under Laws 1890, p. 1071, c. 564, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1829, c. 688, providing that the directors of a stock corporation shall not make dividends except from the "surplus profits" arising from the business of the corporation, where the stockholders paid into the treasury $500,000 for which no additional stock was issued, and the company thereafter entered into a merger agreement with another corporation, and for the purpose of equalizing the capital and surplus of the merging companies $200,000 was returned to the former stockholders, the sum so returned was not surplus profits of the company, for it did not in any sense arise from its profits or earnings in the course of its business, but was contributed solely for the purpose of strengthening the company and adding to its working capital. People ex rel. North American Trust Co. v. Knight, 89 N. Y. Supp. 72, 74, 96 App. Div. 120.

SURPLUSAGE

"Surplusage" means allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the case; all matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action. Wood v. State, 107 Pac. 937, 942, 3 Okl. Cr. 553. See, also, Neis v. Whitaker, 84 Pac. 699, 700, 47 Or. 517 (citing Bliss, Code Pl. [3d Ed.] § 215).

"The term 'surplusage' comprehends whatever may be stricken from the record without destroying the plaintiff's right of action, as if, for example, in suing the defendant for a breach of warranty upon the sale of goods, he should set forth, not only that the goods were not such as the defendant warranted them to be, but that the defendant well knew that they were not." Prestwood v. McGowin, 41 South. 779, 790, 148 Ala. 475 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Greenl. Ev. [15th Ed.] § 51).

"'Surplusage' is any allegation without which the pleading would be adequate at law. In general, unnecessary averments in an indictment may be treated as mere waste material, to pass unnoticed, having no legal effect whatever." State v. Murphy, 77 S. W. 157, 158, 102 Mo. App. 680.

SURPRISE

See Inadvertence, Surprise, and Excusable Neglect.

See, also, Accident (In Practice).

"Surprise" denotes some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his injury, without any fault or negligence of his own, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. Brandt v. Krogh, 111 Pac. 275, 284, 14 Cal. App. 39; Porter v. Anderson, 113 Pac. 345, 350, 14 Cal. App. 716. See, also, Horn v. United Securities Co., 81 Pac. 1009, 1010, 47 Or. 35.

Surprise as a ground for the granting of a rehearing in equity must be something unexpectedly arising under circumstances which the party was not reasonably called upon to anticipate, and which ordinary prudence and foresight could not guard against. Anderson Land & Stock Co. v. McConnell, 171 Fed. 475, 479.

Where the only service had on a corporation was on its business agent, and he, on the advice of an attorney, paid no attention thereto, and the corporation had no notice of the service of the summons, until after the entry of its default, the corporation was entitled to a vacation of the judgment for "surprise." Roberts v. Wilson, 84 Pac. 216, 217, 3 Cal. App. 32.

Parties are ordinarily bound to anticipate the ruling of the court on motions for nonsuit, and any surprise which follows such a ruling is not such "surprise" as warrants or requires the granting of a continuance or the allowance of an amendment to the pleading. Vulcan Iron Works v. Burrell Const. Co., 81 Pac. 836, 837, 39 Wash. 319.

As equivalent to accident

In legal intentment, "surprise" is practically synonymous with "accident," and the latter is defined to be an unforeseen event, occurring external to the party affected by it and of which his own agency is not the proximate cause, whereby, contrary to his own intention and wishes he loses some legal right or becomes subjected to some legal liability, and another person acquires a corresponding legal right, which it would be a violation of good conscience for the latter person, under the circumstances, to retain. Ludwig v. Walker, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1102, 1103, 59 Misc. Rep. 62.

The word "surprise" is used interchangeably with "accident" to designate the emergencies giving rise to accidents; both words signifying a detrimental situation wherein a party is placed unexpectedly, and against which ordinary prudence would not have guarded. State ex rel. Hartley v. Innes, 118 S. W. 1168, 1170, 137 Mo. App. 420. See, also, Clemans v. Western, 81 Pac. 824, 826, 39 Wash. 290.

Amendment of pleading

The filing of an amended petition was not matter of "surprise," warranting a continuance, where it merely amplified the original grounds of recovery. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cluck (Tex.) 84 S. W. 852. See, also, Pollock v. Jordon, 132 N. W. 1000, 1001, 22 N. D. 132, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1264.

Neglect of counsel

Where a party employs counsel of good reputation and large experience, the neglect of such counsel of matters necessary to the ordinary procedure of the case is a "surprise" to the party, within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6884, entitling him to relief from a default judgment, taken against him through surprise, at any time within one year after notice thereof, in the discretion of the court. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Sisseton, S. D., v. Branden, 126 N. W. 102, 104, 19 N. D. 489, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 858.

Unexpected evidence

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 800, providing that a new trial may be granted for mistake or surprise, the granting of a new trial on a showing by defendant in an action on account, after verdict for plaintiff, that when he heard a witness testify on the trial concerning two payments by defendant to the plaintiff's decedent, and that the account in suit had been paid to decedent, he was at first surprised, but gradually the facts came to him, especially when it was found the draft by which payment of the account in suit was made verified the statement of the witness, is not an abuse of discretion of the trial court. Connally v. Pehle, 79 S. W. 1006, 1009, 105 Mo. App. 407.

Violation of agreement

A judgment taken against a party contrary to an agreement with his adversary is one taken by surprise within B. & C. Comp. § 103, permitting the trial court to relieve against a "judgment taken through surprise," etc. Voorhees v. Geiser-Hendryx Inv. Co., 98 Pac. 324, 326, 52 Or. 602.

SURRENDER

See Voluntary Surrender.

The word "surrender" presupposes the possession or ownership of the thing to be surrendered. Thus, where a codicil directed that the executor should surrender certain evidence of indebtedness against specified legatees, the word implied possession on the part of testatrix, so as to exclude the debts which she did not own. Brown v. Gibson's Ex'r, 59 S. E. 384, 385, 107 Va. 383.

Under a statute providing that, where goods are attached and a bond has been executed by the officer to satisfy the judgment, the officer shall forthwith "surrender" the property attached to the person whose interest has been attached, the word "surrender" means to relinquish or give up, and therefore it is not necessary for the officer to return the property to the place from which it was removed. Clark v. Wilson, 14 R. I. 13.

Plaintiff on surrendering certain stock to decedent, received from him an instrument containing the words "Good for $1,000.00 * * * for ten shares Kinloch Jockey Club stock surrendered to the undersigned, * * * by the owner of said stock J. Kessler and for which I am liable. Joseph D. Lucas." Held, that the word "surrendered" did not mean mere delivery, but imported a transfer of title, a giving up or making over, a relinquishment of a right or privilege, and that the words "Good for $1,000.00" and "for which I am liable" imported a promise on decedent's part to pay plaintiff $1,000 for the stock, so that the instrument contained all the elements of a note as between the parties. Kessler v. Claves, 125 S. W. 799, 801, 147 Mo. App. 88.

Of accused

"Produce" means to bring forward; to lead forth; to offer to view or notice; to exhibit; to show; while "surrender" means to yield to the power of another; to deliver up; to give up, as a principal surrendered by his bail. Under Pen. Code 1895, § 935, providing that bail may surrender their principal in vacation to the sheriff, or in open court, in discharge of themselves from liability, producing or presenting a principal in court is not all that is required to discharge the sureties on a bail bond. In order for a surrender of the principal in open court to be effective, the attention of the court must be called to the presence of the accused principal, and the intention to surrender him must be definitely expressed and understood. Perkins v. Terrell, 58 S. E. 133, 135, 1 Ga. App. 250 (quoting Webst. Int. Dict.).

"Surrender" is made by the delivery of the accused to a person or court having authority to commit or rebail him." Cr. Code, div. 3, § 11 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 38, § 304), providing that, in all cases of bail for the appearance of any person charged with a crime, his sureties may, at any time before default, surrender the principal in their exoneration, or the principal may surrender himself to the proper officer, authorizes a voluntary surrender by the principal in open court; section 14 (section 307), providing that the surrender shall be made to the sheriff, applying only where under that section and sections 13 and 15 (sections 306, 308) the sureties enforce surrender. Young v. Deneen, 77 N. E. 193, 195, 220 Ill. 350 (citing State v. Le Cerf [S. C.] 1 Bailey, 410).

Of estate

"Surrender" is a yielding up of possession of an estate for life or years to him who has the immediate reversion or remainder, wherein the particular estate may merge or drown by mutual agreement. Parsons & Sweeney Oil Co. v. McCormick, 70 S. E. 371, 372, 68 W. Va. 604; Bailey v. Wells, 8 Wis. 141, 158, 76 Am. Dec. 233.

In a warranty deed in the usual form, with a provision that "the possession of said above-described premises to be given" to the grantee, on or before a certain day, which was the next day after the expiration of a lease, the word "given" must be construed as synonymous with the word "surrendered" or "granted." Beakey v. Schwitzgebel, 105 Pac. 42, 43, 81 Kan. 38.

A mere unexecuted agreement for a surrender of leased premises does not operate as a surrender; and, to constitute a "surrender" there must be, in addition to an offer of surrender, an abandonment by the lessee and a resumption of the possession by the lessor, or such a relinquishment by the lessee as will justify a resumption of the actual possession by the lessor. Young v. Berman, 131 S. W. 62, 64, 96 Ark. 78, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 977.

Of option

There is a "surrender" of an option to purchase a mine, where the purchaser signifies his intention to surrender it and forfeit his rights, and the vendor thereupon takes possession and continues therein. K. P. Min. Co. v. Jacobson, 83 Pac. 728, 729, 30 Utah, 115, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 755.

Of preference

The word "surrender," as used in the Bankruptcy Act, providing for the surrender of preferences, includes a voidable preference of which a creditor is deprived by the judgment at the suit of the trustee as well as a surrender by voluntary act. In re Otto F. Lange Co., 170 Fed. 114, 116; Keppel v. Tiffin Sav. Bank, 25 Sup. Ct. 443, 445, 197 U. S. 356, 49 L. Ed. 790; In re Clark, 176 Fed. 955, 963 (quoting and adopting Keppel v. Tiffin Sav. Bank, 25 Sup. Ct. 443, 197 U. S. 356, 49 L. Ed. 790); In re Armstrong, 145 Fed. 202, 210 (citing Keppel v. Tiffin Bank, 25 Sup. Ct. 443, 197 U. S. 356, 49 L. Ed. 790).

SURRENDER BY OPERATION OF LAW

A "surrender" of premises by a tenant may be express or implied. "A surrender of premises is created by operation of law when the parties to a lease do some act so inconsistent with the subsisting relation of landlord and tenant as to imply that they both agreed to consider the surrender as made." Sammis v. Day, 96 N. Y. Supp. 777, 778, 48 Misc. Rep. 327 (quoting Gray v. Kaufman Dairy & Ice Cream Co., 56 N. E. 903, 162 N. Y. 388, 49 L. R. A. 580, 76 Am. St. Rep. 327).

To make a "surrender" by operation of law by a new lease within Laws 1896, p. 592, c. 547, § 207, providing that an interest in real estate other than a lease for a term not exceeding one year cannot be surrendered unless by operation of law, etc., there must be a new valid lease either to the lessee or a third party, and such a new lease by parol is only effective as a surrender when it is within the exception in the statute of frauds. Rogge v. Levinson, 113 N. Y. Supp. 525, 527.

A "surrender" by operation of law takes place where the owner of a particular estate has been a party to some act the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate had continued to exist. Haycock v. Johnston, 106 N. W. 304, 305, 97 Minn. 289, 114 Am. St. Rep. 715 (quoting and adopting Smith v. Pendergast, 3 N. W. 978, 26 Minn. 318).

SURRENDER VALUE

See Cash Surrender Value.

SURREPTITIOUS

"Surreptitious" means fraudulently obtained; falsely crept in; obtained by falsehood, fraud, or stealth, by suppression or concealment of facts. Where the inventor of an improvement in pumps for fire engines had the device placed on an engine of which he was in charge as engineer, where it was publicly tested, and thereafter used successfully for many years without material alteration, and was shown and explained by the inventor to the manufacturers of the engine without any injunction of secrecy, the action of the manufacturers in placing the device on an engine which they subsequently built for another city did not involve any breach of trust or confidence, such as to render the use of the invention on the new engine "surreptitious," fraudulent, or piratical, and defeat its effect as a public use, even though they knew that the inventor contemplated applying for a patent. Eastman v. New York, 134 Fed. 844, 852, 69 C. C. A. 628.

SURREPTITIOUSLY

As used in Rev. St. § 4920, providing that in an action for infringement, the defendant may prove that plaintiff had surreptitiously or unjustly obtained the patent for that which was in fact invented by another, who was using reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting the same, the word "surreptitiously" has no relation to a case where each party to an interference has really and truly proceeded independently and honestly. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Pneumatic Scale Corporation, 158 Fed. 415, 420.

SURROGATE

In Code Civ. Proc. § 2747, providing that the surrogate or Supreme Court may by reference ascertain the rights of the parties interested in the legacy, and grant an order for the payment of the money due, the words "the surrogate" must be deemed to refer to the judicial officer who has or had general jurisdiction over the estate, its representatives, and its management and disposition. Kinneally v. People, 90 N. Y. Supp. 587, 589, 98 App. Div. 192.

SURROGATE'S WITNESSES

Under Laws 1837, c. 460, § 11, providing for the examination of "attesting witnesses," increased in scope by Laws 1841, c. 129, so as to apply "to all witnesses whom any person interested in the proof of a will shall request to be examined," afterwards incorporated with Code Civ. Proc. § 2618, by which a notice is filed and an order procured for the examination before the surrogate of the witnesses named in the notice, called "surrogate's witnesses," parties may waive, either actually or constructively, the necessity of calling any "surrogate's witnesses" not essential to prove the factum of the will. Contestants of a will, who place the names of witnesses in a notice and order and who call such witnesses are bound by the evidence of such witnesses, other than attesting witnesses, except in cases of surprise. In re Hock's Will, 129 N. Y. Supp. 196, 204, 74 Misc. Rep. 15.

Of land

See Block Survey; Call Survey; Legal Survey; Official Survey; Preliminary Survey.

Prior to the act of 1907 (Laws 30th Leg. p. 490, c. 20) school lands could be sold in tracts of 80 acres or multiples thereof, but section 5 (page 491) of such act, regulating purchases by lessees and their assignees, changed the rule, and required such sales to be made "in whole surveys only." Section 6, authorizing purchases by others, provided that no survey should be sold in any county except as a whole, though it might be leased in two or more tracts, and section 6b (page 492) provided for sales "in whole tracts only." Section 6e (page 494) declared that all surveys and unsold portions of surveys should be sold as a whole, that all unsurveyed tracts of 640 acres or less should be so sold, and that all tracts containing 100 acres or less, where-soever situated, should be sold for cash and without condition of settlement. Held that, tracts of the public domain not yet sectionized being referred to in the statutes as unsurveyed lands, the "surveys" should be construed to mean entire sections. Ford v. Terrell, 107 S. W. 40, 101 Tex. 327.

SURVIVE—SURVIVING—SURVIVOR

See If Surviving; Then Surviving.

Surviving issue as meaning children, see Issue (Descendants).

The phrase "surviving grandchild," when used in a testamentary gift to grandchildren, includes any grandchild who may at the time of the death of testator be en ventre sa mere. Hewitt v. Green, 77 Atl. 25, 29, 77 N. J. Eq. 345.

Where a deed in the nature of a testamentary disposition by the grantor of his property provides that, in certain contingencies, the property shall go to his "surviving children," and at the time he has a wife living, those words will not be considered to include children by a subsequent wife, especially where it appears that thereafter the grantor, by a similar deed, made provision for the latter children. Frosch v. Monday, 34 App. D. C. 338, 346.

Testatrix devised land to two nephews, R. and C., for life, with remainders to their children, and provided that if either should die without leaving a child surviving him the share of the one so dying should pass to his "surviving brother," with a limitation over on both dying without children. R. died, leaving a child, who survived C., who died childless. Held, that the child of R. was entitled to C.'s share; the word "surviving" not being intended to attach a condition, but referring to the other nephew. Smith v. Smith, 47 South. 220, 224, 157 Ala. 79, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

Testator, having bequeathed a share of the residue to each of his four sisters, two brothers, and a niece, gave one-half of a full share to five of the eight children of a deceased brother specifically named. Held, that the three children of such deceased brother not named in the will were his "surviving issue" within Act May 6, 1844 (P. L. 564), providing that no devise or legacy made in favor of a brother or sister or the children of a deceased brother or sister of any testator not leaving any lineal descendants shall be deemed to lapse by reason of the decease of the devisee or legatee in the lifetime of the testator, if he shall leave issue surviving the testator, but such devise or legacy shall be good in favor of such surviving issue. In re Bentz's Estate, 70 Atl. 788, 790, 221 Pa. 350.

Testator, by the third clause of his will, gave the residue to his widow for her use during widowhood, providing that she should care for testator's minor children during minority. The fourth clause provided for a division among testator's "surviving children" if his widow remarried, and the fifth clause directed that, if the widow remained unmarried and died, then all of testator's property which she then possessed should be disposed of equally among all his "surviving children," except minor children who should survive their mother, provision for whom should be made under the third clause. Held, that the remainder devised to testator's children under the fifth clause vested at testator's death, and not at the death or remarriage of his widow. Ball v. Holland, 75 N. E. 713, 714, 189 Mass. 369, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005.

When a will was executed, as at testatrix's death, she had five unmarried daughters, one married daughter, and an incompetent son. In the first clause of the will she expressed the desire that her unmarried daughters, or such of them as desired to live together with the son, should live in one house, directing the executors to keep the house in good repair for their use "during the lives of the two youngest of my daughters who may survive me," and that, if such unmarried daughters should prefer to live elsewhere, a fund should be set apart for the maintenance of another house for them, upon the termination of which trust or abandonment of the house her furniture should be given to her "surviving children in equal shares." The second clause directed that the proportionate part which the son would receive of the estate should be set apart for his support, and gave the share of the son upon his death to her "unmarried daughters." The third clause directed the residuary estate to be held in trust "during the lives of the two youngest of my daughters who may survive me, but not beyond the period of ten years after the date of my death," to pay the income "to my children" except the son, but "should, however, any of my daughters have died leaving lawful issue surviving me," the share of such parent should go to the use of her issue. Upon termination of the trust, the fund itself was given to the children, except the son, the issue of any deceased child to receive the share of the parent. The second clause, as originally prepared, contained the words "surviving daughters," instead of "unmarried daughters," which change was made before execution. Held, that testatrix by the words "surviving daughters," which were changed to "unmarried daughters," intended the daughters who were surviving upon the son's death, and the three daughters who were married after testatrix's death, but before the death of the son, were not entitled to share in the fund. Robinson v. Martin, 123 N. Y. Supp. 146, 148, 138 App. Div. 310.

As referring to death of spouse

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 16, declaring that words and phrases must be construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language, but that technical words and phrases or those which have acquired a peculiar meaning are to be construed according to such peculiar meaning, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, providing that if a homestead, selected by the husband and wife or either during coverture and recorded while both were living, was selected from the community or from the separate property of the one selecting it or joining in its selection, it vests, on the death of the husband or wife, absolutely in the survivor. The words "husband" and "wife," as used in section 1474, mean, respectively, a man who has a wife and a woman who has a husband, and do not mean an unmarried man or woman; and the word "survivor," as therein used, refers to the husband and wife as such, and means that, upon the death of the husband as a husband or the wife as a wife, the homestead shall vest absolutely in the survivor of such marriage relation, so that the survivor must be a surviving spouse, and the surviving individual after the dissolution of the marriage is not within the statute. Zanone v. Sprague, 116 Pac. 989, 993, 16 Cal. App. 333.

As referring to death of testator

A gift to various persons, or the "survivors of them," refers to those surviving at the death of the testator. In re Alexander's Estate, 85 Pac. 308, 309, 149 Cal. 146, 9 Ann. Cas. 1141 (citing 2 Jarm. Wills [6th Ed.] 661).

Where an estate is given by will to the survivors of a class to take effect on the death of the testator, the word "survivors" means those living at the death of the testator, but if a particular estate is created, with remainder to the survivors of a class, the word "survivors" means those surviving at the termination of the particular estate. Sullivan v. Garesche, 129 S. W. 949, 952, 229 Mo. 496.

A testator devised his real estate to his wife for life, and on her death in equal portions to his two sons named, and provided that, "in case either of said sons" should not "survive," the wife "then the survivor to take all." Held, that the provision for the contingency of the death of a son referred only to a death occurring after the death of testator, and the child of a son who died in the lifetime of the testator took the deceased son's share, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 39, § 11, providing that, when a devisee being a child shall die before the testator and no provision shall be made for the contingency, the issue shall take the estate devised as the devisee would have done had he survived the testator. Pirrung v. Pirrung, 81 N. E. 1065, 1067, 228 Ill. 441.

The word "surviving," in a will whereby testator bequeathed to his wife all his property for her support during her life or widowhood and whereby he provided that in case of her death or marriage, the whole estate should be divided equally between his surviving children or the issue of any one or more of them who shall have died leaving issue means "surviving" the testator, and not the wife, and the interest of the remaindermen vested as of the date of testator's death. Runyon v. Grubb, 103 N. Y. Supp. 949, 951, 119 App. Div. 17.

The words "surviving children," as used in a clause in a will reading, "but if such daughter shall die without children or lineal descendants, I direct said trustee to dispose of said sixth part of the residue and remainder of my estate among my surviving children as follows," etc., means the children surviving at the time of testator's death, so that their interest in the contingent remainders, limited to take effect in default of issue, became vested immediately upon his death. Stone v. Bradlee, 66 N. E. 708, 710, 183 Mass. 165.

Where a testator devised certain land in trust for his son, to be conveyed on his death in fee simple to his issue, and, in case of his death without issue, to his surviving children, share and share alike, and the beneficiary died intestate, unmarried, and without issue, after the death of the testator, the "surviving" children were those surviving at the death of the testator, under the general rule in Pennsylvania, which has become a rule of property, that the words "survivor" or "surviving," following a prior gift, are understood as referring to the death of testator, unless an intent of the testator to refer them to some other time is plainly and manifestly shown. Black v. Woods, 63 Atl. 129, 213 Pa. 583.

Testator gave all the balance of his estate to his son and two daughters to be divided equally, and in case of the death of either of them the survivor or survivors were to inherit the property bequeathed to them; if more than one survivor it was to be divided share and share alike. Held, that the words "survivor or survivors" meant survivor or survivors at the time testator's death, and the interest in the real estate devised was an estate in fee simple vesting immediately on the death of testator, so that on the death of the daughters' children after the death of the testator their interest passed to their representatives and not to their brother as survivor. Renner v. Williams, 73 N. E. 221, 71 Ohio St. 340.

As referring to happening of other event

Ordinarily the word "survive" means to live longer than some other individual; but it may mean to continue to live beyond a specified period, event, or condition. Where testator devised lands in trust for his daughter, providing that, in case she should "survive" her then husband, the trustees should convey the land to the daughter absolutely and in fee, but that, while she was the wife of her then husband, neither she nor any one for her should have the power to sell or dispose of the property, or do anything which should deprive her of the uses and benefits created, the daughter, on her divorce from such husband, was entitled to the property in fee. Cary v. Slead, 77 N. E. 234, 235, 220 Ill. 508.

"Surviving," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2713, subds. 1-4, exempting to a surviving widow certain articles of property or their value in money, meant that the widow must survive the husband, and not necessarily survive the accounting of his estate. In re Hulse's Estate, 84 N. Y. Supp. 220, 41 Misc. Rep. 307.

The word "survivors," as used in a clause of a will that, "in the event either of my said children die before attaining the age of 21 years, or if my wife should die before the majority of my child L., then the share of my estate of such deceased shall be divided in equal parts between the survivors," refers to children, one or more, who might survive any deceased child or children before arriving at the age of 21 years. Johnson v. Terry, 36 South. 775, 139 Ala. 614.

In a deed to the grantor's daughter for life, with remainder to her children or their representatives living at her death, or if she should die without children then to her brother or brothers and their children surviving, the word "surviving" refers to surviving the life tenant, and not surviving their respective parents. Duke v. Huffman, 75 S. E. 1, 2, 138 Ga. 172.

A provision in a will that, in the event of any of testator's sons dying intestate and unmarried, the share or shares of such son shall go to all testator's "surviving children" in equal proportions, refers to the children of testator who may be in existence at the time such death occurs. Ridgely v. Ridgely, 59 Atl. 731, 734, 100 Md. 230.

The words "surviving children," in a will providing that in the event of the death of any of the children his share in the trust fund should go to his lawful issue upon their arriving at full age, or, if there should be no lawful issue who should arrive at full age, such child's share in the trust fund shall go to the surviving children and their heirs and assigns forever, refer to those surviving at the death of one of the children. Lawrence v. Phillips, 71 N. E. 541, 542, 186 Mass. 320.

Where there is a devise or bequest for life followed by a devise or bequest to the "surviving children" of the testator, at the termination of the life estate, the quoted words mean those of the children of the testator who survive at the death of the life tenant, and unless, on taking the whole will into consideration, the words are plainly used in another sense, they do not include surviving children of predeceased children of the testator. Stout v. Cook, 81 Atl. 821, 822, 79 N. J. Eq. 573.

The "surviving heirs" in a devise to a child, followed by the provision that on his death without bodily heirs the property shall go to the surviving heirs of testator, are the distributees under the statute of distribution in being at the death of the child, and until his death it cannot be ascertained who will take as surviving heirs. Barber v. Crawford, 67 S. E. 7, 9, 85 S. C. 54.

Testator gave a nominal sum to each of his five children, gave the balance to his wife for life, or during widowhood, with a gift over, on her death or remarriage, to his "surviving heirs" equally, and provided that charges against his "heirs, their husbands or wives as contracted * * * by them with me," should be deducted from their share.

A daughter, whose husband was indebted to testator, died before testator, leaving children. Held, that the words "surviving heirs" meant surviving children, and referred to such of the testator's children as should be surviving at the date of their mother's death or remarriage, and that the children of the deceased daughter did not take. Howell v. Steelman, 74 Atl. 976, 977, 76 N. J. Eq. 423.

Where a will provided that if both of testatrix's daughters, to whom she left the bulk of her estate, should die before marriage, the property should be divided equally among "my surviving children," the quoted words meant those of her children living on the death of both daughters before marriage, and as it was uncertain at the death of testatrix which, if either, of her children would be living at that time, the remainder, if it was a remainder, was contingent. When considering the estate over as an executory devise instead of a remainder, the words meant those children of testatrix surviving the two daughters to whom the estate was first given. Sullivan v. Garesche, 129 S. W. 949, 952, 229 Mo. 496.

Where a testator provided that upon the death of his widow $1,200 of the residuary estate was given to three persons named, to be equally divided between them and the survivors and survivor of them, $300 to three other persons and the survivors and survivor of them, and the residue to 24 persons and the survivors and survivor of them, the term "survivors and survivor" referred to survivors at the time of distribution of the residuary estate after the death of the widow. In re Jones' Will, 21 Atl. 950, 46 N. J. Eq. 554.

Testatrix, subject to her husband's life estate, divided her estate into nine equal parts, and gave two parts in fee to two sons, one part in fee to four grandchildren, the children of two deceased daughters, and the remaining six parts in trust to pay over the income to one son and five daughters in equal parts, and provided that, on the death of the son or daughters leaving issue, the income of the part which the parent received should be equally divided among the issue, and, in the event of the death of the son or daughters without issue, the share of the trust estate for the use of the son or daughter so dying should be held for the use of the surviving sons and daughters, to be equally divided between them, and the shares devised should be held on like trusts as before declared, and finally to be divided among their issue as before provided. Four children of the testatrix were the only children who survived her and left issue who survived the death without issue of the last survivor of the six beneficiaries. Held, that the trust estate was properly divided into four equal parts, and each part was properly divided among the children and issue of deceased children of each of the four children; the gift over to the "surviving sons and daughters" meaning sons and daughters surviving the several life beneficiaries dying without issue, and not including sons and daughters who predeceased the testatrix, and the gift over of a share of a life beneficiary dying without issue being to the sons and daughters surviving, to the exclusion of the issue of deceased sons and daughters. Dary v. Grau, 77 N. E. 507, 508, 190 Mass. 482.

As outlive

"In its ordinary as well as in its legal signification the word 'survivor' means one who outlives another, one of two or more persons who lives after the other or others have died." Hill v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. 60 Atl. 446, 447, 101 Md. 60, 4 Ann. Cas. 577.

Others synonymous

"To survive" means simply to remain in life after the death of another, or after a particular date or the happening of a particular event. The primary meaning of the word is to live beyond the life or existence of; to outlive; but it has according to some lexicographers, a secondary meaning, "to live after." Testatrix devised the residue of her estate to two daughters, and the survivor of them, so long as they or the survivor, respectively, remained single and unmarried. She further provided that, if the daughters married, her executors, after the marriage of both, should sell the residue, and that the survivor of the daughters, "being single and unmarried" until the time of her death, shall have full power to dispose of the property given to her absolutely, and that, if she fail to so dispose of it, the property at her death should belong to her heirs at law. One of the daughters married during the life of testatrix, and the other died unmarried before the death of her married sister, leaving a will by which she attempted to dispose of the entire devise. Held, that the word "other" could not be substituted for the word "survivor" in the will, and that, as the unmarried daughter did not "survive" her sister, the devise did not pass by her will, but passed as intestate property of the testatrix. Hill v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 60 Atl. 446, 447, 101 Md. 60, 4 Ann. Cas. 577.

Testator directed the residue of his estate to be divided into the number of shares that he had children, that the share of each son be given to him absolutely, but that the shares of the daughters be invested for their benefit during their lives, and that on the death of either daughter without leaving any child her share "shall be esteemed as part of the residue of the estate, the interest and profits of which to be paid equally to my surviving children." Held, that the word "surviving" should not be read literally, or changed into "other," but should be held to mean stirpital succession, so that the share of a daughter deceased without leaving a child would fall back into the residue to be distributed according to the existing stirpes. Stout v. Cook, 75 Atl. 583, 586, 77 N. J. Eq. 153.

The word "survivor," or "surviving," will be understood as the equivalent of the word "other," where in any other sense it would lead to intestacy or inequality among those standing in the same degree of relationship to the testator, or to a distribution not in accordance with the general scheme of the will. In re Fox's Estate, 70 Atl. 954, 956, 222 Pa. 108.

Testator devised his ground rents to his wife for life, and at her death gave a life estate in an undivided sixth of the rents to each of his children by name, and declared that immediately after the death of the children, respectively, one equal undivided sixth of the rents should go to their child or children absolutely as tenants in common, to be equally divided between them and the issue of any deceased grandchild per stirpes; also that, if any of testator's children died without a child, children, descendant, or descendants living at his or her death, respectively, the part of the child so dying should become the property of testator's surviving child or children, or his or their heirs, absolutely. Held, that the word "survivor," as used in the last clause, did not mean "other," but was to be taken in its ordinary meaning, so that the clause "surviving child or children" limited the right to the surviving child or children of the testator, and did not include the descendants of any deceased child, so that, on the death of testator's son without issue, his interest passed to his sole surviving sister. Wilson v. Bull, 54 Atl. 629, 632, 97 Md. 128.

Testator gave the use of a farm and other property to a nephew for life and to his children in fee, and provided that his other estate should be divided equally between two nieces, who should have the use of it for life, and the remainder should pass to their children as in the case of the nephew, and "in the case of the death of" the nephew or nieces "the share or shares of such deceased shall belong to the survivor or survivors of the other." Held, that the words "survivor and survivors of the other" included the children of any life beneficiary who predeceased the one dying without issue, for the quoted phrase will be given the meaning of "other and others," and the children of a deceased niece were entitled to a share on the subsequent death of the other niece dying without children. In re Cary's Estate, 69 Atl. 736, 738, 81 Vt. 112.

Where there are limitations to two brothers for life with remainders to their children, and in default of children of either to the "survivor" or "surviving brother," with a limitation over on both dying without children, cross-remainders are intended and necessarily implied between the stirpes of the life tenants, and "surviving" or "surviving brother" must be read "other" or "other brother." Smith v. Smith, 47 South. 220, 224, 157 Ala. 79, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

As relating to benefit insurance

The term "survivors," as used in the code of a mutual benefit insurance association, providing that the purpose of a fund is to pay a sum to survivors of a member at his death, that, if a member shall die whose survivors possess no benefit certificate, the money shall not be paid without the order of court and that, if a member die whose survivors produce a death certificate, the recipient of the money shall give a receipt, does not include a person who is neither a relative nor member of the household of, nor connected by marriage with, the member of the association. Koerts v. Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, Order of Hermann's Sons, 97 N. W. 163, 164, 119 Wis. 520.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1955c, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 138, c. 101, authorizing members of a fraternal beneficiary corporation to name as beneficiary any person or persons designated by the laws of such corporation, or, if the laws thereof permit, providing that the insurance may be made payable to the member's estate, is a limitation on the rights of members; and where the laws of a corporation permitted only "survivors" of the member to be named as beneficiaries, one who was not a relative of a member was not a "survivor," and was not entitled to recover on the certificate, though designated by the member as his beneficiary in the manner provided by the laws of the corporation for changing beneficiaries, and though she had nursed and cared for the member for several weeks prior to his death. Grand Lodge of Wisconsin of Order of Hermann's Sons v. Lemke, 102 N. W. 911, 912, 124 Wis. 483.

A certificate not being void in toto, and providing that subject to the conditions of the certificate the association would pay insured certain benefits, among which was a death benefit to be paid to the beneficiary therein named if surviving, otherwise to be paid to the legal representative of insured and the beneficiary designated to receive the death benefit being in a class prohibited by law, the beneficiary did not "survive" within the meaning of the certificate, and the administrator was entitled to recover the benefit. Oliphant v. American Health & Accident Ass'n, 126 N. W. 806, 808, 147 Iowa, 656.

Plaintiff's wife signed an application for a benefit certificate on a blank printed form, wherein she designated several cousins as beneficiaries in various sums. A certificate was issued on the application, describing the beneficiaries and the respective shares to be paid them. A provision of the society's constitution stated its object to be to give to a sister money benefit in case of her husband's death, and in case of her death to pay "the survivors" such moneys as may be designated in the constitution, etc. It was elsewhere provided that, if any sister did not leave a last will, husband, or children, the law of inheritance of the state should govern, except that a husband who did not live with and properly care for a member could not ask for any death benefit, and in such case her children should be entitled thereto, or such persons to whom the sister wills it. It also provided that a sister who did not live with her husband must make a last will and turn it over to the lodge for safe-keeping. There was no provision limiting the beneficiaries to the husband or children. The member left no children, and plaintiff lived with her and properly cared for and supported her up to the time of her death. Held, that the word "survivors" was too vague to necessarily refer to surviving husband or children, and in view of the inexact language of the constitution, the word "survivors" should be interpreted as the parties to the contract construed its meaning and evidence was admissible that such designations as were made and the methods of procedure pursued were usually recognized by the society, and that printed blanks for that purpose were in use, especially where it was stipulated that the word "will," as used in the last section recited, might be properly translated as "designation." Slavik v. Supreme Lodge of All Bohemian Ladies' Aid Societies, 110 N. Y. Supp. 347, 349, 59 Misc. Rep. 183.

As relating to private easement

A private easement in a highway will continue to exist after the public easement has become extinct only in favor of those who owned a private easement when the public one was extinguished, since, while a private easement may survive the public easement, it cannot "survive" unless both existed at the same time. Tuttle v. Sowadzki (Utah) 120 Pac. 959, 964.

SURVIVABILITY

Where a right of action is so entirely personal that the party in whom it exists cannot by contract place it beyond his control, it will not survive, and hence as a general rule "assignability" and "survivability" of causes of actions are convertible terms. Selden v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 87 N. E. 860, 863, 239 Ill. 67, 130 Am. St. Rep. 180.

SURVIVING PARTNER

As legal representative, see Legal Representative.

SURVIVING PARTY

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1299, providing that, where an appeal is from one court to another, an application for an order of substitution must be made to the appellate court, and that, where personal notice of the application has been given to the proper representative of the deceased party, an order of substitution may be made on the application of the "surviving party," a surviving adverse party may enforce such a substitution when it has not been procured at the instance of the personal representative of the deceased party himself, or of a party associated in interest with the decedent, where there is one; the word "surviving" being not limited to the surviving plaintiff or codefendant, but including a surviving adverse party. Reed v. Farrand, 91 N. E. 541, 542, 198 N. Y. 207.

SURVIVING SPOUSE

As owner, see Owner.

SUSCEPTIBLE OF CULTIVATION

A representation that land was above overflow and "susceptible of cultivation" is not an expression of opinion as to the character of the soil, as it would be susceptible of cultivation, whatever its character, if above water. Matlock v. Reppy, 14 S. W. 546, 548, 47 Ark. 148, 166.

SUSPECT

Reasonable cause to suspect, see Reasonable Cause.

SUSPEND—SUSPENSION

"Suspended" is defined as temporarily inactive or inoperative; held in abeyance. Wisener v. Burrell, 118 Pac. 999, 1001, 28 Okl. 546, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 755, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 356.

"'Suspend' is to cause to cease for a time; to hinder every proceeding; to interrupt; to delay; to stay." Taylor v. State, 38 South. 380, 389, 49 Fla. 69 (by Taylor, J., dissenting, citing City of Little Rock v. Parish, 36 Ark. 166).

To "suspend" means to remove either temporarily or permanently from employment. Markey v. Pickley, 132 N. W. 883, 885, 152 Iowa, 508; Same v. City of Dubuque (Iowa) 132 N. W. 885.

Where the by-laws of a beneficial association provide that each member shall pay an amount according to age, and any member failing to pay by a certain time shall stand suspended from the order, and from all benefits therefrom, the words "shall stand suspended" are equivalent in their legal effect to "cease and determine," and "null and void." Beeman v. Supreme Lodge, Shfield of Honor, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 387, 396.

The expression "shall be suspended" in the constitution of a mutual benefit society, providing that if a member shall fail to pay his assessment within 15 days after being notified thereof, the party so failing to pay shall be suspended, is declaratory merely of the right to suspend for nonpayment of assessments, and it cannot be said that membership or standing has been lost or forfeited as long as the society does not see fit to exercise such right. Such provision is not self-executing, so that a member who has failed to pay within the 15 days is still in good standing; the society having taken no action to suspend him. Jelly v. Muscatine City and County Mut. Aid Soc., 95 N. W. 197, 120 Iowa, 689, 98 Am. St. Rep. 378 (citing Warwick v. Supreme Conclave, Knights of Damon, 32 S. E. 952, 107 Ga. 115; Petherick v. General Assembly of Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420, 72 N. W. 262; Northwestern Traveling Men's Ass'n v. Schauss, 35 N. E. 747, 148 Ill. 304; Puhr v. Grand Lodge German Order of Harugari, 77 Mo. App. 47; Bacon, Mut. Ben. Ass'n, § 385).

The sale of spirituous liquors by a member of a fraternal benefit association was prohibited when insured became a member, and the executive committee had power to suspend a member from all benefits who engaged in any occupation prohibited by the laws of the order, its decision after hearing being final, unless an appeal was taken; but it also had power to reinstate a member upon removal of the cause of suspension. Held, that merely engaging in a prohibited occupation, such as the sale of intoxicants, would not of itself forfeit the rights of a member under his certificate; the word "suspend" ordinarily implying a cessation which may not be permanent. Brown v. Great Camp of Knights of Modern Maccabees, 132 N. W. 562, 566, 167 Mich. 123.

An oil lease provided for stipulated payments to the lessor for the lessee's failure to commence drilling, and also provided that the lessee might "suspend" drilling operations if the price of oil went below 75 cents a barrel. When the lease was executed, the price of oil was below 75 cents a barrel, and thereafter remained below that price. Held, that the lease merely authorized a suspension of drilling operations, and did not authorize a failure on the part of the lessee to commence drilling. McComber v. Kellerman, 124 Pac. 431, 433, 162 Cal. 749.

According to the dictionaries, to "suspend" is to cause to cease for awhile. Where a mining lease provided that the minimum royalty specified therein was to be suspended during the disability of the lessee because of strikes, accidents, or any cause of stoppage of transportation over which the lessee had no control, it was held that the minimum royalty ceased when any of the things happened that are provided against in the lease, and would again become effective when those things in their turn were suspended or ceased. Robinson v. Kistler, 59 S. E. 505, 507, 62 W. Va. 489.

When a "law is suspended," the law continues in esse, for the time being is not operative, but as soon as the power of suspension is relaxed it goes into immediate operation. Arroyo v. State (Tex.) 69 S. W. 503, 505.

"To suspend" merely means, according to Bouvier, a temporary stop for a time. The suspension of a statute is different from a provision which declares that its operation shall cease at a specified time or on the happening of a contingency. The purpose of Const. art. 1, § 28, declaring that "no power of suspending laws in this state shall be exercised except by the Legislature," was to prohibit the Legislature delegating to its officers the power of suspending the laws, and not to prohibit it from providing that a law may cease wholly to operate upon the happening of an event. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Shannon (Tex.) 97 S. W. 527.

The "suspension" of the writ of habeas corpus, which is prohibited by Bill of Rights, § 18, Const. 1875, means a denial to the citizen of the right to demand an investigation into the cause of his detention. State v. Towery, 39 South. 309, 143 Ala. 48.

A mere failure to apply for administration is not a "suspension" within Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, §§ 2, 4, prohibiting suits against an administrator unless the demand is exhibited to, and suit is brought against, him within a specified time after grant of administration, excluding the time administration may have been suspended; the suspension contemplated being one caused by the death, resignation, removal, etc., of an original administrator upon a deceased debtor's estate within the period prescribed for presentation of claims or suing and having no reference to a suspension of administration upon a deceased creditor's estate. Cummings v. Farnham, 71 Atl. 632, 634, 75 N. H. 135.

As punishment

The "suspension" of a naval officer, charged with drunkenness and neglect of duty, from morning until evening of the same day, when he was restored to duty, to give "time to investigate the case," is not such a punishment for the offense as precludes, under the Navy Regulations of 1865, further proceedings against him by court-martial, but must be deemed simply a temporary precaution, for the preservation of good order and discipline. Bishop v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 440, 441, 197 U. S. 334, 49 L. Ed. 780.

As remove

Under Const. art. 12, § 8, conferring on the Governor power to remove officers of charitable and penal institutions, and article 4, § 22, authorizing the Governor to suspend an officer indicted for embezzlement, and Cr. Code 1902, §§ 381, 388, 389, 410, providing for the removal by the Governor of local officers convicted of specific misconduct, and providing for the dismissal from office of any magistrate convicted of neglecting to pay over fines, and Civ. Code 1902, §§ 625, 982, authorizing the Governor to remove for cause any officer appointed by him to fill a vacancy, and authorizing the Governor to suspend magistrates for incapacity, misconduct, or neglect of duty, etc., the Governor has no power to remove magistrates serving for a full term except after trial and conviction, as provided by the Constitution and the statutes, but he may suspend any magistrate when a showing has been made to him by affidavit that the magistrate is probably guilty of embezzlement and a true bill has been found, and he may suspend for incapacity, misconduct, or neglect of duty, but submit the suspension to the Senate for approval or disapproval, and an attempt of the Governor to remove a magistrate without indictment and conviction is without effect as a removal. A "suspension" is the mere temporary withdrawal of the power to exercise the duties of an office, while a "removal" is a complete deprivation of official tenure. McDowell v. Burnett, 75 S. E. 873, 878, 92 S. C. 469.

SUSPENDED SENTENCE

See, also, Sentence Suspended.

The term "suspended sentence," as used in criminal law, refers to the suspension of the execution of a sentence already imposed, and not correctly to the suspending of sentence. Gehrmann v. Osborne, 82 Atl. 424, 428, 79 N. J. Eq. 430.

SUSPENSION OF POWER OF ALIENATION

Under Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 42, which provides that the absolute power of alienation is suspended when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute fee in possession can be conveyed, and that every future estate shall be void in its creation which suspends the absolute power of alienation for longer than two lives in being at the creation of the estate, a devise in trust for an unincorporated religious society incapable of taking by devise, with a disposition over to a substituted devisee if the society was incapable of taking within one year and 11 months after the probate of the will, is void as a "suspension of alienation" for a definite period not dependent upon the term of human lives. Washburn v. Acome, 131 N. Y. Supp. 963, 967, 74 Misc. Rep. 301.

Where a testator bequeathed his house and land to his brother, to hold until the last of his four children should become of age and then to be sold and divided equally between the children, the remainder to the children was vested, and there was no "suspension of the power of alienation." In re Bray, 102 N. Y. Supp. 989, 990, 118 App. Div. 533.

Where a testamentary trust did not authorize the sale of certain premises until the death of survivor of two of testator's daughters, an attempted testamentary disposition by such survivor of certain property, including that embraced in the original trust, by which attempted disposition she ordered that such property should be held in trust for the use and during the life of a certain person, with remainder to persons who could not be ascertained until the death of the cestui que trust, was invalid, since, if it were held valid, it would result in suspending the power of alienation for three lives. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Kip, 102 N. Y. Supp. 137, 139, 52 Misc. Rep. 407.

SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE

Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, is not unconstitutional in authorizing district courts to suspend sentences in certain cases as an invasion of the right to "reprieve" or grant "commutations of punishment" reserved to the Governor by Const. art. 4, § 11, as a "reprieve" postpones the execution of a sentence to a day certain, whereas a "suspension" is for an indefinite time, and a "commutation" is the changing of the punishment assessed to a less punishment. Snodgrass v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 162, 165, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6115, 6116).

Pub. Acts 1907, No. 144, making one abandoning his wife or children guilty of a felony, authorizing the court to suspend sentence on the person convicted giving a bond conditioned that he will furnish his wife and children with necessary care, etc., is not invalid as invading the pardoning power of the executive, and confers no new power on courts possessing at common law inherent power to suspend sentence, which is a judicial function and distinct and different from the power to grant reprieves and pardons, since the "suspension of the sentence" postpones the judgment of the court, while the conviction and liability following it, together with disabilities, remain to become operative on sentence being given, while a pardon reaches both the punishment and the guilt, for it relieves the punishment and blots out the existence of the guilt. People v. Stickie, 121 N. W. 497, 499, 156 Mich. 557.

SUSPENSIVE CONDITION

"The 'suspensive condition' is that to the realization of which is subordinated the birth of a right." It "suspends the very existence of the obligation." Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. St. Louis Cypress Co., 46 South. 193, 197, 121 La. 152.

SUSPENSORY

A "suspensory" is designed to slightly hold up male private organs, to relieve muscular or nervous strain, and not to protect them against injury. Sharp & Smith v. Physicians' & Surgeons' Appliance Co., 174 Fed. 424, 425.

SUSPICION

See On Suspicion; Reasonable Ground of Suspicion.

Reasonable cause to suspect, see Reasonable Cause.

That state of mind which in a reasonable man would lead to inquiry is called mere "suspicion." Stuart v. Farmers' Bank of Cuba City, 117 N. W. 820, 822, 137 Wis. 66, 16 Ann. Cas. 821. See, also, United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 628.

In an action by the seller of goods against bankers who had made advances to factors to whom plaintiff had consigned its goods by bills of lading made out to such factors to recover the proceeds of the goods, an instruction that, if defendants had a "suspicion" that the factors were not the owners of the goods, it was their duty to make inquiry of plaintiff and that defendants were bound by whatever knowledge such inquiry would have elicited, deprived defendants of the benefit of Factors Act (Laws 1830, p. 203, c. 179) § 3, providing that every factor intrusted with any bill of lading shall be deemed to be the true owner thereof since the essence of a "suspicion" implies the absence of known facts. Kinston Cotton Mills v. Kuhne, 113 N. Y. Supp. 779, 784, 129 App. Div. 250.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON

"Suspicious person" in police parlance is a vague and shadowy term, varying with the circumstances of each case. Thus an arrest may not lawfully be made with nothing but suspicion or hearsay to support it, and a sworn statement of detectives that plaintiff was known to them as a common cheat and gambler, and as an associate of criminals and disreputable persons, without any fact showing the source of such knowledge, did not show that plaintiff was a "suspicious person," so as to authorize a taking of his photograph for the rogues' gallery. Owen v. Partridge, 82 N. Y. Supp. 248, 251, 40 Misc. Rep. 415.

SUSPICIOUS PLACE

What constitutes a "suspicious place," within a police regulation requiring a report as to all suspicious places, is to be determined by the exercise of good judgment and discretion on the part of the captain of the precinct, as he is required to make the report; but such judgment and discretion are not a mere whim or caprice on his part, but must have for their foundation some evidence. People ex rel. Stephenson v. Greene, 87 N. Y. Supp. 172, 175, 92 App. Div. 243.

SUSTAIN

The liability of the principal to the surety in the bond, under the indemnity agreement set forth above, does not constitute a claim provable in bankruptcy against the estate of the principal until the surety has actually paid the obligee in the bond the damages sustained by reason of the principal's default. No such damage has been sustained or incurred by the surety, within the meaning of the agreement, until after actual payment. R. P. Williams & Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 75 S. E. 1067, 1071, 11 Ga. App. 635.

Civ. Code, art. 3537, provides that prescription runs from the day the damages are "sustained." Plaintiff's mule was struck by a train, and sustained a flesh wound. He was treated for a few days, and then turned out to pasture, where he was left to get well, but instead he died. Held, that the damages were not "sustained" until the mule died, and hence limitations did not begin to run against plaintiff's right to recover for the death of the mule until that date. Jones v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 51 South. 582, 125 La. 542, 136 Am. St. Rep. 339.

SUSTAINED BY SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE

A case where the verdict is under the evidence, inadequate, is a case "not sustained by sufficient evidence," within Code, § 3755, authorizing the trial court to grant a new trial where the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, etc. Tathwell v. City of Cedar Rapids, 97 N. W. 96, 98, 122 Iowa, 50.

SUSTENANCE

"Sustenance during quarantine" covers no more than the supplies left on the homestead during the widow's quarantine, or her reasonable board during the same period, and does not embrace the widow's mourning outfit or any expenses to attend the funeral of her husband; and the reasonableness of a sum to be allowed depends on the circumstances of the particular case. In re Mehn's Estate, 124 N. Y. Supp. 173, 176.

SWALE

As water course, see Water Course.

SWAMP

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS

"Swamp lands," as distinguished from "overflowed lands," are such as require drainage to dispose of needless water or moisture on or in the lands, in order to make them fit for successful and useful cultivation. State ex rel. Ellis v. Gerbing, 47 South. 353, 357, 56 Fla. 603, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337.

"Swamp land" is simply land that is too wet for cultivation; the characteristic by which it is distinguished from arable land, but it is none the less land. It is a mere state or condition of land, the existence of which must of necessity be passed on by the state's agency as an incident of its office.

McCarter v. Sooy Oyster Co., 75 Atl. 211, 215, 78 N. J. Law, 394.

SWEAR—SWORN

See Duly Sworn; Subscribed and Sworn to.

Witness as person sworn, see Witness.

The word "swore" does not technically and necessarily imply a judicial administration of an oath. Any utterance or an affirmation with an appeal to God is to swear an oath, no matter how or before whom the utterance is made. That is its common import. In law it has a more technical meaning, and implies that the swearing has been officially done, but not necessarily judicially done. It is not sufficient, in an indictment for subornation of perjury, to charge that defendant procured the witness falsely and upon oath to depose, etc., since such averment relates to the acts of defendant and not the witness; nor is the defect cured by further expressions which assume, without stating that the witness was sworn, such as that when he was so sworn, or when he swore, he did not believe the things which he testified to be true. U. S. v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325, 338, 340.

The word "swear," in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2353, providing that any person who, in a proceeding or investigation authorized by law, shall knowingly swear falsely is guilty of perjury in the second degree, means to state facts under the sanctity of an oath or affirmation administered by an officer having authority to administer the oath in that particular proceeding or investigation. State v. Dallagiovanna, 124 Pac. 209, 210, 69 Wash. 84, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249.

The use of the phrase, "who were elected according to law to well and truly try and true deliverance make between the state of West Virginia," etc., was inadequate as a statement that a juror was "sworn." State v. Moore, 49 S. E. 1015, 57 W. Va. 146.

At a county seat election, voters at several precincts, on entering the polling places, were asked by the clerk the questions necessary to enable the clerk to fill out the blanks in the voter's affidavit required by section 12, art. 4, c. 31, p. 382, Session Laws 1907-08. The voter having answered fully, the clerk filled out the blank in the affidavit; whereupon the voter, in the presence of the special election commissioner, signed the affidavit, after which the special election commissioner, who is authorized by law to administer oaths to voters at such elections, explained the affidavit to the voter, and asked if he understood same to be his affidavit of qualification as a voter, or asked if he understood he was signing an affidavit that he was a legally qualified voter, to which the voter answered, "Yes," and the election commissioner thereupon signed his jurat upon the affidavit, and the voter was given a ballot and permitted to vote. Held that, by reason of section 2182, Compiled Laws 1909, said acts on the part of the voter and of the election officers constituted a "swearing" by the voter to said affidavit, as required of him by said section 12, supra. City of Blackwell v. City of Newkirk, 121 Pac. 260, 264, 31 Okl. 304, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 441.

The phrase "sworn bailiff," in the record in a homicide case, showing that the jury was placed in charge of a "sworn bailiff," is sufficient to show that the bailiff was duly sworn, and the court on appeal would presume, after verdict, that the bailiff was duly sworn. Williams v. United States, 88 S. W. 334, 338, 6 Ind. T. 1.

SWEARING

See, also, Profane—Profanity.

A reply by accused to the district attorney, while testifying before a grand jury, "It is none of your damn business," etc., did not constitute swearing and cursing in a "public place." Morrison v. State, 118 S. W. 541, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 20, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 811.

SWORN COMPLAINT

It is sufficient compliance with the requirement of an act relating to the disposing of an intruder on Indian lands that a "sworn complaint" shall be filed, if the complaint is verified by the authorized attorney of the tribe or nation which is plaintiff, who states that the facts alleged are within his knowledge. Brought v. Cherokee Nation, 129 Fed. 192, 195, 63 C. C. A. 350.

SWORN COPY

"A copy made by the witness, who swears to its correctness, is a sworn or examined copy. So, also, is one which the witness has compared with the original and found correct. The witness, however, must state that the instrument produced is a copy, although no particular language need be used." "It is sometimes said that a copy must have been compared with the original by the witness, either directly or by following while another read the original. And it has been held that a copy made from memory is not admissible, though the witness swears it is a true copy." Biddy v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 412, 107 S. W. 814, 815 (quoting and adopting 10 Enc. Ev. p. 865).

SWORN TO A LIE

The words "swore a lie," as used in a petition for slander, alleging that defendant did maliciously say of petitioner the following false and defamatory words, to wit, "S. A. Powell swore a lie," standing alone, import the crime of false swearing, rather than perjury. Gillis v. Powell, 58 S. E. 1051, 1053, 129 Ga. 403 (citing Smith v. Wright, 55 Ga. 218).

SWEAT BOX

Confession induced by means of keeping the prisoner in a dark cell, or "sweat box," under circumstances leading him to believe that he would be kept there until he did confess, could not be used against him. People v. Siemsen, 95 Pac. 863, 867, 153 Cal. 387.

SWEEP

A "sweep" on a log raft is an appliance in the nature of an oar used at the ends for steering and managing the raft in its navigation. The Mary, 123 Fed. 609, 611.

SWEETMEATS AND PRESERVED FRUITS

Marmalade is dutiable under the provision of the tariff act of 1897, relating to "sweetmeats and preserved fruits," rather than as "jelly." Bogle v. U. S., 175 Fed. 889, 891.

SWELLS

The word "swells," as used in a six months' guaranty against "swells" in the sale of canned tomatoes, refers to defective cans in which the tomatoes may be packed, and the defect may be in the can itself or in the manner in which the tomatoes are packed. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 430, 440, 213 Ill. 561.

SWIFT

The mechanism which winds raw silk as reeled from the cocoon, so as to form a thread for manufacture, is known as a "swift." Klots v. U. S., 139 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

The unexpected jarring of a passenger car, variously described as "swift," "quite violent," "terrible," "awful," "very severe," and "unexpected," as the train was passing over a cross-over switch used during the repair of one of the railroad company's bridges, which resulted in a passenger, who was standing near the open door of a car, being thrown from the car and injured, did not constitute negligence on the part of the carrier. Foley v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 N. E. 765, 766, 193 Mass. 332, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

SWINDLE—SWINDLING

SWINDLING

See, also, Confidence Game; False Representation.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 943, which defines "swindling" as the acquisition of money or instruments of writing, conveying or securing a valuable right, by some deceitful pretense or fraudulent representation, where a person secured the indorsement of his note by another upon false representations that he was solvent, that he owed but a limited amount (naming it), and owned property of a value greatly in excess of such amount, and that a named person would loan him a given amount if the note was indorsed by the person to whom the representations are made, etc., he acquired a valuable right, and his act is "swindling," within the purview of the statute. Hubbert v. State (Tex.) 147 S. W. 267. But a representation that one will invest in certain property, and a failure to do it, is but a breach of the promise, not a basis for swindling. Johnson v. State, 123 S. W. 143, 145, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 347.

The pretense must be made to some one, and must be so declared in the indictment; and it must be alleged that the pretenses so made were relied upon, and the party was induced to part with the ownership of the property on the faith of such representations, which must be shown to be false, and that the party knew they were false when he made them. Hunter v. State, 81 S. W. 730, 732, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 498. A debtor for merchandise, who agreed to give a check on a bank in payment, on the creditor making out an itemized account and attaching it to the check, and who represented that the check would be paid, and who gave a check, to which was attached the account, is not guilty of "swindling" merely because the check was not paid for want of funds, since the debtor acquired no property or right by means thereof, or impaired the right of the creditor. Allen v. State, 126 S. W. 571, 572, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 494. The offense consists of the willful false representation as to a substantial and material fact, resulting in inducing another to part with his property. La Moynes v. State, 111 S. W. 950, 953, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 221. A defendant who falsely represented that he was the owner of land free from incumbrance, and purchased personal property on credit, securing the price by a deed of trust on the land, is guilty of "swindling," within Pen. Code 1895, arts. 943, 944, though the person swindled had constructive notice by means of the records that the land was incumbered. Brown v. State, 138 S. W. 604, 606, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 592. And so, where an indictment charged that defendant, in order to obtain $10 from prosecutor, represented that he was the owner of certain real estate in El Paso county, Tex., and by means of false pretenses and fraudulent representations induced prosecutor to exchange such sum for an instrument purporting to be a conveyance of the land described, and by such false pretenses prosecutor was induced to part and did part with the possession of the money to accused, when, in fact, accused did not own the land or have the right to sell the same, or make a valid deed thereto, etc., sufficiently charged the crime of "swindling." Yoakum v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 910, 911.

"Swindling" is an offense eo nomine. Where a bail bond recited that accused was charged with "swindling" over the value of $50, it was not objectionable for failure to state whether the offense was a felony or a misdemeanor. White v. State (Tex.) 74 S. W. 770.

Theft distinguished

Where title to property is acquired by means of a false pretext, the offense is "swindling"; while if the mere possession of the property is parted with by the owner by means of the false pretext, it is "theft." Thus, where defendant and another obtained money from the prosecutor under the false pretense that defendant had his father's corpse on the train, and that they were about to put it off because the express charges had not been paid, and that he would have plenty of money when he got to his destination, and that he had a check he could cash at a point further down the road, the offense was "swindling," and not "theft." Bink v. State, 98 S. W. 249, 250, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 450; Id., 98 S. W. 863, 865, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 445.

A foot race was arranged between H. and W.; one T. being H.'s backer, and defendant G. being W.'s backer. Prosecutor gave T. a sum of money to bet on the race, on the latter's promise that it, or an equivalent sum, should be returned, whatever the outcome of the contest; prosecutor not intending to part with his money. The money was placed in a satchel, and after the race G. and W. claimed the same, and it was turned over to them. Held, that such acts constituted "theft," and not "swindling." Glasgow v. State, 100 S. W. 933, 935, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 635.

SWITCH

In railroad

See Derail Switch; Flying Switch; Running Switch.

Split the switch, see Split.

A "switch" is a device used for the transfer of cars from one track to another. The fact that a street railway switch was so constructed that it was liable to "catch and hold vehicles" does not, of itself, show that the switch was such a structure as to render the railroad liable for injuries to a traveler in a buggy the wheels of which were caught by the switch, and who was thereby thrown to the ground and injured. Morie v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 962, 116 Mo. App. 12.

The purpose of a "switch" is to direct a car from the course, while that of a "crossing" is to keep it on the course. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 130 Fed. 542, 546.

The words "turnouts" and "switches," in Acts Tenn. 1903, c. 216, providing that any railroad company may build turnouts and switches without altering its charter, relate to tracks in the nature of side tracks adjacent to and used in connection with another line of track, and do not refer to a track which branches off entirely from the existing line to a distant objective point. City of Memphis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 539, 106 C. C. A. 75.

An approach to the Ohio river bridge of the Illinois Central Railroad, consisting of the tracks leading to the bridge and the embankment and steel structure upon which they rest, used in connection with its charter lines to connect with the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, is not a branch or lateral line, but a "switch" or side track, which it is empowered to acquire by section 1 of its charter, as needful to carry into effect its purposes, and falls within sections 18, 22, imposing a tax on gross receipts and exempting its charter lines from other taxation. State Board of Equalization v. People, 82 N. E. 324, 334, 229 Ill. 430.

A "switch rod" is a member connecting and holding in alignment the movable opposite rails of a railroad switch. The Elfborg patent for an adjustable switch rod, in which an eccentric is used as a means for adjusting the length of the rod in a split switch, is not a pioneer patent. Ajax Forge Co. v. Morden Frog & Crossing Works, 156 Fed. 591, 592.

An ordinance granting a street railroad company the right to lay its tracks required the single tracks to be laid in the center of the streets, and authorized double tracks on a certain street, to be laid on either side of the center of the street. The company sought to construct in a certain block of such street two tracks which continued parallel for a short distance on each side of the center line, when they reunited with the single track. Held, that the word "switch" has a meaning in addition to its technical meaning, depending upon its character, the word ordinarily meaning a side track constructed to permit the passage of cars from and to the main track; and the track which the company sought to construct was a "switch," and not a "double track," within the meaning of the ordinance. City of Denison v. Denison & S. R. Co., 127 S. W. 804, 805, 103 Tex. 344.

As machine

See Machine.

As turnout

See Turnout.

SWITCH TARGET

A "switch target" is a device so adjusted to the switch stand that the switch cannot be opened or closed without shifting the target. A switch target is not a "signal," within a statute making a railroad company liable for injuries caused by the negligence of an employé having charge of any signal. The statute is applicable only to such signals as are complete within themselves, and not to subsidiary parts of another device, and so operated that by the negligence of the operator they may be made to speak falsely. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 83 N. E. 369, 374, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

SWITCH TRACK

SWITCHING

See Service in Switching.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 5260, authorizing county commissioners to require railroad companies to maintain flagmen at highway crossings traversed by tracks used for "switching" purposes, applies to tracks used for side-tracking trains to permit other trains to pass, and is not restricted to tracks used in making or breaking up trains. Pennsylvania Co. v. Mosher, 94 N. E. 1033, 1036, 47 Ind. App. 556 (citing Words and Phrases).

SWITCHMAN

See Railway Freight Brakeman or Switchman.

As laborer, see Laborer.

SWITCHMAN'S SHANTY

As business office, see Business Office.

SWITCHYARD

A railroad "switchyard," where railroads may be required to use more care to look out for trespassers, does not include every switch or siding at a station or in the country along the main line of travel, nor does the rule apply to a yard guarded by walls and fences to keep trespassers out. Fowler v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 66 S. E. 900, 902, 133 Ga. 664.

SWIVEL

Where an employer furnished a safe boat with which to row its employés to their place of work, the fact that the boat was provided with tight oars, otherwise known as "swivel oars"—that is to say, the oarlock was so arranged that when the oar was in position it was tight, the oarlock being fastened to the oar by an iron pin about the size of an eightpenny nail transversing it and the lips of the oarlock—did not render the employer liable for the death of a servant who was drowned by the overturning of the boat. Chrismer v. Bell Telephone Co., 92 S. W. 378, 380, 194 Mo. 189, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492.

SWORD

The provision for "swords" in the tariff act of 1897 relating to "swords, sword-blades, and side-arms," does not include so-called "bone swords," used as curios, ornaments, etc. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 165 Fed. 64.

SWORE

See Swear—Sworn.

SYMBOL

Conceding that the use of a figure of a book, with words indicating that it represents the Holy Bible, is a "symbol common to all the people" and therefore within the prohibition of the election law and that the prohibitory language is mandatory, the use of such symbol on the ballots is a mere irregularity, which will not invalidate a local option election, it not appearing that it in any way influenced the election. Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 296, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

SYMBOLICAL DELIVERY

The giving of a key to a box containing notes has been held to be a good "symbolical delivery" of the notes. Hagemann v. Hagemann, 68 N. E. 381, 383, 204 Ill. 378 (citing Stephenson's Adm'r v. King, 81 Ky. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 173; Telford v. Patton, 33 N. E. 1119, 144 Ill. 611).

SYMPTOM

See Objective Symptom; Subjective Symptoms.

SYNOD

According to the constitution of the Presbyterian Church, the "Synod" has jurisdiction over three or more presbyteries. Mack v. Kime, 58 S. E. 184, 195, 129 Ga. 1, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675.

SYPHILIS

Among a certain class of people, the word "pock" is a synonym of "syphilis," or, according to Webster's International Dictionary, what is called French or Spanish pox. Mills v. Flynn (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1082, 1084.

SYRIAN

As White person, see White Person.

SYRUP

See Grenadine Syrup; Maple Syrup.

"Syrup" as defined by the United States Department of Agriculture, is the product obtained by purifying and evaporating the juice of a sugar-producing plant without removing any of the sugar. Syrup thus obtained from cane is cane syrup, syrup so obtained from sorghum is sorghum syrup, and syrup so obtained from corn is corn syrup. People v. Harris, 97 N. W. 402, 403, 135 Mich. 136.

The term "syrup" has an accepted meaning as commonly and properly understood and applied to articles of food for table use, and in this sense is employed in Laws 1907, c. 557, and kindred legislation, regulating the sale thereof, to designate articles of food which are in common use as table syrups, such as maple, sugar cane, and refiner's syrup. McDermott v. State, 126 N. W. 888, 892, 143 Wis. 18, 21 Ann. Cas. 1315.

SYSTEM

See Catalogue System or Method; C. G. S. System; Commercial System; High Tension System; Multiphase System; Proportional System.

The word "system" imports a unity of purpose as well as an entirety of operation. Board of Education of City of Ardmore v. State, 109 Pac. 563; 565, 26 Okl. 366.

Of bookkeeping

The "system of bookkeeping," which the Railroad Commission is empowered to prescribe for carriers doing an intrastate business, and by Rev. St. 1895, art. 4571, is not limited to a record of facts, but includes assumed facts based on theory, opinion, or supposed averages. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Texas & P. R. Co. (Tex.) 140 S. W. 829, 832.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4571 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 6667), giving the Railroad Commission "power to prescribe a system of bookkeeping," since "system" means "method" and "bookkeeping" is the art of recording in a systematic manner the transactions of merchants, traders, and other persons engaged in pursuits connected with money, the commission cannot order the apportionment of items of expense to be made upon a purely arbitrary basis of "car miles" in a certain ratio between passenger traffic and freight, and orders prescribing that certain conclusions and deductions be entered upon the books of the railroads are not authorized. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Texas, 150 S. W. 878, 880, 105 Tex. 386 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 842).

Of common schools

A kindergarten is not a part of the "system of common schools," required by Const. art. 9, § 5, to be provided by the Legislature. Los Angeles County v. Kirk, 83 Pac. 250, 252, 148 Cal. 385.

Of mining

The claimant of a mining claim need not prepare plans and specifications to show how he intends to develop it; the requirement that he adopt a "system" or "general system" simply meaning that the work as commenced should be such that, if continued, will lead to the discovery and development of supposed veins, or, if these veins are known, that the work will facilitate the extraction of the ores. Nevada Exploration & Mining Co. v. Spriggs (Utah) 124 Pac. 770, 772.

Of railroad

As used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 42, amended by Pub. Laws 1901, p. 160, c. 145, relating to taxation, the word "railroad" comprehends the equipment, roadbed, sites of depots and warehouses, and other real estate, and the words "line or system" cannot be disconnected from it, and mean in this connection a railroad operated as a part of a line or system extending beyond the state. State v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 60 Atl. 901, 902, 100 Me. 202.

Of sewerage

Act April 25, 1907 (P. L. 1907, p. 267), authorizing the construction of an intercepting sewer, or a system of sewerage, in any city through which a stream runs, and into which the sewage of the city is emptied, so that all sewers emptying into such stream shall be connected with such system, does not authorize the building of a "system of sewerage" as an improvement distinct from an intercepting sewer so as to embrace more than one object; but the words "or a system of sewerage" refer to the word "intercepting," and should be read, in connection with it and the purpose of the act, as meaning a system of intercepting sewers. Summerton v. City of Elizabeth, 73 Atl. 89, 90, 79 N. J. Law, 170.

Of waterworks

See Waterworks.

SYSTEMATIZED DELUSION

A "systematized delusion" is one based on a false premise, pursued by a logical process of reasoning to an insane conclusion; there being one central delusion, around which other aberrations of the mind converge. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 412, 87 Ark. 243.

T

T-RAIL CUTTER

A "T-rail cutter" is a steel wedge-shaped instrument, sharp at one end, with a head on the other, about 2 inches broad and 8 or 10 inches long, having in the center a handle some 20 inches in length. One person holds it in place by the handle, while another strikes it with a sledge. Langhorn, Johnson & Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 91 S. W. 255, 256.

TABLE

TABLE BOARD

The word "board," in the ordinary acceptance of the term, covers both room rent and table board. A "boarder" is ordinarily one who has food and lodging in another's house or family for a stipulated price. If it has the narrower meaning, it is usually designated "table board." Heron v. Webber, 68 Atl. 744, 745, 103 Me. 178.

TABULATED

Where a plea in bar to the granting of a liquor license alleged the adoption of local option in the county under the local option law of 1908 (Acts Sp. Sess. 1908, c. 2), and that the returns of the vote were "tabulated" by the election commissioners, and the vote when tabulated showed a majority of 917 in favor of such prohibition, and that on a date subsequent to the election the auditor certified the vote to the board of county commissioners, and the same was duly recorded in the commissioners' record of the county, the word "tabulated," as so used, was synonymous with canvassed, the duties of the canvassers being purely ministerial, consisting of the mathematical tabulation of the votes of the different precincts, as returned to them. Kunkle v. Coleman, 92 N. E. 61, 63, 174 Ind. 315.

TACKING*Annexing

"Tacking" means annexing. Monmouth County Electric Co. v. McKenna, 60 Atl. 32, 35, 68 N. J. Eq. 160.

Doctrine of "tacking."

The doctrine of "tacking" is that any kind of a conveyance, so long as it purports to convey title absolutely, satisfies the rule for color of title; good or bad faith in taking or holding possession being immaterial. Illinois Steel Co. v. Budzisz, 121 N. W. 362, 364, 139 Wis. 281.

TACKLE

TAGLIABUE

The "Tagliabue" or open cup test is a test to determine the inflammability of kerosene oil. State v. Boylan, 65 Atl. 595, 596, 79 Conn. 463.

See Estate Tail.

TAKE*As administering oath

The word "take," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 4417, providing that "attorneys cannot 'take' affidavits required of their clients unless specially permitted by law," means that the attorney cannot administer an oath to his client. Moultrie Lumber Co. v. Jenkins, 49 S. E. 678, 121 Ga. 721 (citing Wilkowski v. Halle, 37 Ga. 678, 95 Am. Dec. 374).

As prescribe

Act Feb. 11, 1893 (Loc. Laws 1892-93, p. 491), empowering a certain corporation to construct a bridge, and authorizing it to "take" reasonable tolls, did not grant the power to prescribe tolls, though the act was silent respecting the fixing of tolls and there was no express reservation of the power to the Legislature. Tallassee Falls Mfg. Co. v. Commissioners' Court of Tallapoosa County, 48 South. 354, 356, 158 Ala. 263.

TAKE A FEE

Rev. St. 1898, § 2108, provides that when an absolute power of disposition, not accompanied by any trust, shall be given to the owner of any particular estate for life, such estate shall be changed into a fee absolutely in respect to the rights of creditors and purchasers, but subject to any future estates limited thereon in case the power shall not be executed. Section 2109 provides that, when a like power of disposition shall be given to any person to whom no particular estate is limited, such person shall also "take a fee" subject to any future estates that may be limited thereon, but absolute in respect to creditors and purchasers. "Difficulty is suggested in giving to the words 'shall be changed into a fee' in section 2108 the same meaning as would be applicable to the words 'shall take a fee' in section 2109, declaring the interest of the donee of a power to whom no special estate is limited. It does not seem to us serious. Section 2108 was framed to include the situation of the donation of a power to one who already held an estate for life or years, who therefore could not be said to 'take' a fee by the mere donation of the power. The phrasing was well adapted to express the declaration that upon such donation he should have a fee so far as rights of creditors or purchasers might be involved." Auer v. Brown, 98 N. W. 966, 969, 121 Wis. 115.

TAKE AWAY OR WITHDRAW

The quoted words in Rev. St. U. S. § 5408, subjecting an officer who fraudulently "takes away or withdraws" or destroys a record or document, mean a taking away or withdrawal whereby some injury is attempted or inflicted on the record or document, or on some one who has an interest in it and is entitled to use it. Martin v. United States, 168 Fed. 198, 204, 93 C. C. A. 484.

Under a will which put two daughters and two grandchildren in separate classes, the grandchildren to take and receive subject to a clause providing for a trustee to "take and hold" and manage such of the estate as was given to the grandchildren until the contingencies named in still another clause, in the meantime using the profits for their education and support, the intent was to vest title in the trustee; the words to "take and hold" being sufficient to imply, if not create, title, and not implying mere possession in the trustee. McCoy v. Houck (Ind.) 99 N. E. 97, 100.

TAKE EFFECT

A policy of life insurance and the application on which the same was issued provided that it should not "take effect or be in force" until delivered to the applicant in person during his lifetime and while in good health. The expression "take effect or be in force" merely intended to distinguish between policies which have not been delivered and those which have been delivered. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 132 Fed. 555, 559.

The phrase "to take effect from and after the death of the husband," in an antenuptial agreement providing for the annual payment of a certain sum to the wife in lieu of dower, the same to take effect from and after the death of the husband, does not describe the time of the payment, but the event which brings the annuity into existence—the time from which it begins to run. Mower v. Sanford, 57 Atl. 119, 120, 78 Conn. 504, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008.

TAKE EFFECT AT MY DEATH

Where the form of a deed is actually employed, such phrases as "vest at my death," "take effect at my death," and the like, may well be construed as merely designed to postpone possession or enjoyment by the grantee till after the death of the grantor.

An instrument attested as a deed and in all respects in the form of a deed should, though it contains the words "this deed to take effect at my death," be treated, not as a will, but as a conveyance passing title in present, with right of possession postponed till the death of the maker. Nolan v. Otney, 89 Pac. 690, 691, 75 Kan. 311, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317 (quoting West v. Wright, 41 S. E. 602, 115 Ga. 277).

TAKE ENTIRE CHARGE

Where real estate agents agreed with the owner of premises to take entire charge of the premises for a specified time, the term "take entire charge" imports a promise to act as the owner's agent for such time in the care and management of the property. Seymour v. Warren, 71 N. E. 260, 261, 179 N. Y. 1.

TAKE HIS OWN LIFE

The word "suicide," and the words, "to die by his own hand," or "by his own act," or "to take his own life," mean the same thing, and convey the idea of voluntary, intentional self-destruction. A provision in a life insurance policy to the effect that if the insured, "whether sane or insane, die by his own hand," the policy shall be null and void, is valid; and its breach renders the policy void, unless the assured was in such a state of mind as to be unconscious of the physical nature of the act of self-destruction. In the absence of any proof as to his insanity, all the presumptions are in favor of his sanity, and of his consciousness of the character of the act which he committed. Dickerson v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 65 N. E. 694, 696, 200 Ill. 270 (citing Grand Lodge, Independent Order of Mutual Aid, v. Wieting, 48 N. E. 59, 168 Ill. 408, 61 Am. St. Rep. 123; Supreme Lodge, Order of Mutual Protection, v. Gelbke, 64 N. E. 1058, 198 Ill. 365; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Terry, 82 U. S. [15 Wall.] 580, 21 L. Ed. 236; Bigelow v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co., 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. Ed. 918; Home Benefit Assoc. v. Sargent, 12 Sup. Ct. 332, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. Ed. 1160).

TAKE THE PLACE OF

Where the vote of a town for the discontinuance of a highway made it conditional on a certain person at her own expense building a highway to "take the place of" the one discontinued, the new highway was to be a highway legally laid out upon petition to the selectmen and in the manner provided by law. Town of New London v. Davis, 59 Atl. 369, 373, 73 N. H. 72.

TAKE THE SAME ESTATE

Under Rev. Laws, c. 135, § 21, providing that, if a legacy be made to a relative of testator and he die before testator, his issue surviving testator shall "take the same estate" which the person whose issue they are would have taken, if he had survived the testator," they take the legacy as, under Rev. Laws, c. 141, § 23, the legatee would have taken it, subject to set-off in the probate court of the debts of the legatee to testator's estate. Tilton v. Tilton, 82 N. E. 704, 196 Mass. 562.

TAKE UP NOTE

The phrase "take up the note" does not any more strongly imply that the debt evidenced by the note in question is to be finally discharged than that the person "taking up" a note will assume the place of the original payee or holder, with the privilege in that event of being subrogated to all pre-existent rights of the former holder. Bridges v. Phillips, 73 S. E. 423, 10 Ga. App. 279.

TAKEN

Appeal taken

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 677, relating to vacation appeals, provides that: "In case of death of any or all of the parties to a judgment before an appeal is taken, an appeal may be taken by, and notice of an appeal served upon, the persons in whose favor and against whom the action might have been revived, if death had occurred before judgment." Section 679 provides for term-time appeals, where it is said: "When an appeal is taken during the term at which judgment is rendered," etc. Held, that an appeal is not "taken" in a strict sense until it has been fully perfected, but that the "taking" of an appeal, within sections 677 and 679, refers particularly to the time of giving notice thereof to appellee, and that the word "taken" is manifestly used in a like sense in section 679. Bruillets Creek Coal Co. v. Pomatto, 88 N. E. 606, 608, 172 Ind. 288.

Bond taken

Civ. Code Prac. § 493, provides as to the proceedings under section 489, subd. 3, by a guardian to sell and to maintain and educate his ward, that he must give a bond which by subdivisions 2 and 3 must be approved by the court and recorded with an order of sale and certified by the clerk of the court, who shall deliver it to the county clerk to be recorded, and, if it be not given, any order of sale or conveyance made thereunder shall be void. Held, that a bond was not "taken" within the meaning of the statute unless taken by an order of the court, and, if there was no order, the sale was void. Watkins v. Northern Coal & Coke Co., 116 S. W. 1192, 132 Ky. 700.

The word "taken," in the certificate attached to a bail bond, reciting that the bail bond was "taken," subscribed, and acknowledged by the deputy clerk of the court, does not imply that the clerk had "taken" the bond as of his own authority, where it appeared that the bond was taken and approved by the sheriff of the county before the principal therein was released from custody. Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Conner, 87 Pac. 591, 594, 17 Okl. 135 (citing Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Sellers, 82 Pac. 575, 15 Okl. 419).

Judgment, order, or other proceeding taken

The word "taken," in Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a "judgment, order, or other proceeding, taken" against him through his mistake or excusable neglect, provided that application therefor is made within six months after the "judgment, order, or proceeding was taken," is used in the same sense as the words "rendered" or "rendition," when used with reference to a judgment, and while the word "rendered" is appropriate in reference to a judgment or decree, but not to a proceeding or order, the word "taken" is adopted as a term applicable to judgments, orders, and proceedings or either of them, and has relatively the same meaning as rendition. Where a party had no actual notice of a proceeding, nor any knowledge of judgment therein until it was filed, there should be some fixed manifestation of the judgment or proceeding before it can be considered as taken against him, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1661, authorizing the court, after hearing a petition for partial distribution, to order the same by first requiring the distributees to give a bond for a payment of their share of the debts, etc., an order for partial distribution must be prepared, approved, and signed by the judge after the hearing and granting of the petition therefor, and the signing and filing of a formal order is a taking thereof within section 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him, provided the application is made within a specified time. Brownell v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 109 Pac. 91, 93, 157 Cal. 703.

Poison taken

Where a benefit certificate provided that no benefit should be paid where death or disability resulted from poison or other injurious matter "taken or administered accidentally or otherwise," the word "taken" should be construed, in connection with the word "administered," to mean an internal taking; and hence such clause did not preclude a recovery for death resulting from insured coming in contact with poison ivy while cutting a branch in the woods adjoining a city. Dent v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 183 Fed. 840, 841.

The word "taken," in a statute punishing the administering of poison to a person with intent to kill, "and which shall have been actually taken by such" person, etc., means any method by which the system is made to absorb the poison designedly administered, including the administration of poison by enema, or taken by the mouth, or by rubbing it into the skin by means of massage. State v. Stuart, 40 South. 1010, 1011, 88 Miss. 406.

Votes taken

Laws 1905, p. 137, c. 88, § 5, provides that, when ballots of absent voters are not challenged before the county canvassing board, it shall count such votes "taken," as herein provided, and add the same to the total result in the precinct where the voter resides. Held, that the votes of absent voters are "taken" when received by the judges on election day, and hence, where the envelopes are found genuine and entitled to be opened, the board has no discretion, in absence of challenge, to refuse to count the votes. Pratley v. State ex rel. Campbell, 99 Pac. 1116, 1124, 17 Wyo. 371.

TAKEN BACK

Where a contract between a principal and sales agent stipulates that the agent shall not be entitled to commissions on a sale of machinery "taken back" by the principal, the agent is not entitled to commissions on a sale of machinery which is not paid for by the purchaser, and which the principal is obliged to take back in a worn condition, on foreclosure of a mortgage given by the purchaser to secure the price; this being a taking back within the meaning of the contract. Reeves & Co. v. Watkins (Ky.) 89 S. W. 266, 267.

TAKEN BY PUBLIC OFFICERS

While in legal contemplation it may be permissible to attribute the act of taking a bond, required by a city, to the municipality, yet in fact it is of necessity the act of public officials; and hence a bond taken by a city from a sewer contractor for the protection of materialmen and laborers is "taken by public officers," within the purview of a statute directing public officers to take bonds from contractors, although executed to protect the interests of the city. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore v. Dickey, 88 Pac. 66, 69, 74 Kan. 791.

TAKEN IN THE ACT

Under Penal Code 1895, art. 672, providing that a person shall be justified in killing another taken in the act of adultery with the slayer's wife, an instruction charging that the term "taken in the act of adultery" meant that the husband must see the parties together in such a position as to indicate with reasonable certainty "to a rational mind" that they had just then committed or were about to commit the adulterous act, and did not require that the husband be an actual witness to the copulation placed too high a burden of proof on accused; he being justified in acting on appearances causing "him to reasonably believe" from his standpoint that the parties were guilty. Gregory v. State, 94 S. W. 1041-1043, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 73.

TAKEN ON EXECUTION

The words "taken on execution," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 4905, providing that lands and tenements taken on execution shall not be sold until public notice by advertisement, referred "obviously to a general execution where there had been a seizure or levy." Nor- ton v. Reardon, 72 Pac. 861, 863, 67 Kan. 302, 100 Am. St. Rep. 459.

TAKEN UP FROM THE CIRCUIT

Laws 1907, p. 174, § 6, creating the city court of Flovilla, requiring the solicitor of that court to represent the state in cases carried therefrom to the Supreme Court in which the state is a party, and providing that for services rendered in the Supreme Court the solicitor shall be paid the same fees allowed to Solicitors General even if a writ of error would lie to a decision of the city court, does not apply to cases carried by certiorari to the superior court and then by writ of error to the Supreme Court; such a case being one "taken up from the circuit," within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 11, par. 2, and Civ. Code 1895, § 5862, making it the duty of the Solicitor General to represent the state in cases in the superior courts of the circuit and in all cases taken up from the circuit to the Supreme Court, and he is entitled to receive the fee provided for such services. Letson v. State. 68 S. E. 60, 61, 7 Ga. App. 745.

TAKING

See Actual Taking; Fraudulent Taking.

A statute providing that aliens may take and hold lands by devise and descent only, and may convey the same at any time within five years, makes a distinction between acquiring, taking, and holding, and a limitation on the taking or acquiring is made; and an alien not residing in the state, and who has not made a declaration of citizenship, cannot take by purchase, but can only take by devise and descent, and such an alien can hold and convey only for the limited period, and at the end of the period the land will escheat. Lehman v. State ex rel. Miller, 88 N. E. 365, 367, 45 Ind. App. 330.

The exercise of the legislative power of fixing or regulating rates and charges for services performed or engagements undertaken may be a "taking" by the state of private property, and the "taking" away from the contract parties of their right of private contract, which is private property. German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 189 Fed. 769, 775.

A "levy," is under Rev. St. 1909, § 2195, defined as a "taking," which means to gain control or possession of, in any way. Butler v. Imhoff, 142 S. W. 287, 290, 238 Mo. 581.

Since a railroad company is a quasi public corporation, the property of the railroad is "private property" and cannot be taken for private use, and therefore Act 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 596), providing that railroad companies shall build side tracks connecting industrial enterprises with their main lines for the delivery and receipt of freight, the cost thereof to be paid by the enterprises and repaid by the companies in annual installments of 20 per cent. of the freight collected, is violative of Const. U. S. Amend. art. 14, and Const. art. 1, §§ 5, 17, as authorizing the taking of private property for private use. Mays v. Seaboard Air Line R., 56 S. E. 30, 34, 75 S. C. 455 (citing Moore v. Columbia & G. R. Co., 16 S. E. 781, 38 S. C. 1).

Under a strict construction of Laws 1903, p. 172, c. 122, declaring that whenever any property covered by a chattel mortgage shall be taken and sold by virtue of the mortgage pursuant to the power of sale therein, the owner of the mortgage shall file an affidavit setting forth certain information, the voluntary delivery of the mortgaged chattels by the mortgagor to the mortgage is not a "taking" by the latter within the meaning of the statute, so as to require the filing of the affidavit. Hammel v. Cairnes, 107 N. W. 1089, 1090, 129 Wis. 125.

Code Civ. Proc. § 283, provides that in an action for recovery of specific property the jury may assess the value of the property and assess damages, if any claimed, which the prevailing party has sustained by reason of the taking of the same. Section 299 provides that in an action to recover personalty judgment may be for possession, or recovery of possession or the value thereof if delivery cannot be had, and damages for "taking." Held not to authorize punitive damages in an action for claim and delivery. By a well-known rule of construction, for the sake of consistency, "taking," used in section 283, is to be interpreted and applied as in section 299. To be consistent with section 299 the provision of section 283 as to damages to the prevailing party sustained by reason of the "detention or taking and withholding" such property must be held to mean that, when the prevailing party is the plaintiff, the jury must assess the damages for the detention, but when the prevailing party is the defendant, and the property has been taken in the claim and delivery proceedings, the jury may assess for such taking and for the withholding. Tittle v. Kennedy, 50 S. E. 544, 546, 71 S. C. 1, 4 Ann. Cas. 68.

The taking away by legislative enactment of the free exercise of the right of private contract is an appropriation by the state of private property within the meaning of the fourteenth constitutional amendment. German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 189 Fed. 769, 775.

It is not a "taking" of private property for private use without the consent of the owner, which is inhibited by Const. 1901, art. 1, § 23, for the Legislature to authorize a manufacturing company to close a portion of a street, where there yet remains to the property owner a convenient and reasonable outlet to neighboring thoroughfares. Jackson v.

Under Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 19, 34 Stat. 904, providing that if any shipowner shall make any charge for the return of any alien brought to the United States and not entitled to enter, or shall take any security from him for the payment of the charge of deportation, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, an indictment alleging that defendant at Bremen collected return passage from certain proposed immigrants who were within the excluded classes, and held the money as security for a charge to be made for deportation, did not charge the taking of the money as security within the United States, since to retain money taken in a foreign country was not a continuous repetition of the "taking" within the United States by reason of the fact that the aliens were brought to the United States and ordered deported because not entitled to enter. United States v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, 186 Fed. 391, 395.

Under Civil Damage Act (Code 1906, c. 32) § 26, providing that if a landlord's property be "seized or taken" for any fine, etc., by reason of his tenant's unlawful acts, such landlord may recover damages and costs, a "lien" upon a landlord's property, being defined as a hold or claim which one has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge, does not constitute a "seizure or taking" of his property within the meaning of the statute. Brown v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 74 S. E. 868, 869, 70 W. Va. 613.

TAKING (In Abduction)

"Taking away" is synonymous with "abduction." King v. Hanson, 99 N. W. 1085, 1089, 13 N. D. 85.

The word "taking," in Pen. Code, § 282, defining abduction, does not require physical force or compulsion, as any deception, persuasion, or inducement is sufficient. People v. Smith, 100 N. Y. Supp. 259, 261, 114 App. Div. 513.

When defendant, to whom a girl had been temporarily committed for a proper purpose, conceived the intent to use her for a purpose prohibited by statute, and interposed his will between her and her guardian's control, he "took" her from her father for that purpose. People v. Lewis, 75 Pac. 189, 190, 141 Cal. 543.

The word "takes," in the first section of Act May 28, 1885 (P. L. 27), relating to rape of a child under 16 years of age, does not mean merely a taking of a woman child by force, but it means a taking by artifice, cajolery, craft, persuasion, or promise, or by the purely voluntary surrender of the person taken. Commonwealth v. Walker, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 14, 16.

To "take," in the active sense, means to lay hold of, to seize with hands or otherwise. The word "take," as used in the statute providing that if any person take any woman unlawfully and against her will, to marry him or any other person, he shall be fined, means to obtain possession by force or artifice; to get the custody or control of; to reduce to one's power of will. Under the statute, such taking is an essential to constitute the crime. State v. Hromadko, 99 N. W. 560, 561, 123 Iowa, 665.

Prosecutrix testified that, as she was returning home along a railroad, she noticed a negro, and from his actions became suspicious and alarmed; that she slackened her steps, but, when he noticed that she had done so, he did likewise, and frequently turned and looked at her; and that she then became thoroughly frightened. The negro finally sat down on the railroad track until she had advanced to within 20 feet from him. About this time she attempted to pass him. A freight train came along and he left the track, and climbed through a barb wire fence, and said to her: "Come over here. You are going to come over here. You had better come over here." With that, she started and ran screaming down the track, and the negro also ran in the same direction on the inside of the wire fence which separated the railroad right of way from the adjoining pasture, until they came in sight of some men at work on the railroad, when he desisted. The negro's acts did not constitute a "taking," but were sufficient to justify submission of the case to the jury on the question whether they constituted a "detaining" of the prosecutrix against her will with intent to have carnal knowledge of her. McKey v. Commonwealth, 140 S. W. 658, 659, 145 Ky. 450.

TAKING (In Attachment)

If a sheriff, in serving attachment papers on a person, walked into his store, asked him for his key, which such person surrendered, and then told him to take his cash and get out, and followed him out and locked the door, such act constituted a "taking" of everything in the store, and rendered the plaintiff in attachment responsible for anything unlawfully taken. Schwartzberg v. Central Avenue State Bank, 115 Pac. 110, 112, 84 Kan. 581.

TAKING (In Eminent Domain)

See, also, Property Taken.

Any substantial interference with private property which destroys or materially lessens its value, or by which the owner's right to its use and enjoyment is in any substantial degree abridged or destroyed, is a "taking," within Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., 77 Pac. 849, 852, 28 Utah, 201.

In Laws 1897, p. 887, c. 27, relative to an addition to a certain park, and providing that the provisions of law relating to the "taking of private property" for public streets and places shall be applicable so far as the same shall be necessary for the acquiring of the land, the terms "taking of private property" and "acquiring all land," require not only the vesting of title, but payment for the property. In re City of New York, 89 N. Y. Supp. 6, 8, 95 App. Div. 552.

The word "taken," as used in Const. Art. 1, § 17, providing that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed, for public use, without adequate compensation being made, and, when taken such compensation shall be first made or secured by a deposit of money, means actually invaded and appropriated. Settegast v. Houston, O. L. & M. P. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 197, 200, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 623 (citing and adopting Gainsville, H. & W. Ry. Co. v. Hall, 14 S. W. 259, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, and Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Eddins, 60 Tex. 656, and limiting Rio Grande & E. P. Ry. Co. v. Ortiz, 12 S. W. 1129, 75 Tex. 602, and Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fuller, 63 Tex. 467).

Where an owner continues in the use and enjoyment of his property and property rights after the completion of a public improvement to the same extent and for the same purpose as before, his property has not been "taken" within Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation, and it cannot be "damaged" within that provision except by the invasion of a theoretical legal right. Salt Lake City v. East Jordan Irr. Co., 121 Pac. 592, 595, 40 Utah, 126.

Any act involving an actual interference with or disturbance of property rights, and not causing merely consequential or incidental injury to property or property rights, as distinguished from a prohibition of its use or enjoyment, or a destruction of interests in the property, constitutes a "taking" of the property. School Corporation of Andrews v. Helney, 98 N. E. 628, 630, 178 Ind. 1, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023.

Any actual and material interference with private property rights is a "taking" of property within the meaning of the provision in the Constitution referring to the taking of private property for public purposes without just compensation. Board of Com'rs of Portage County v. Gates, 93 N. E. 255, 259, 83 Ohio St. 19.

Any destruction, interruption, or deprivation of the usual and ordinary use of property amounts to a "taking" of the same without compensation, in violation of Const. art. 1, § 14. Knowles v. New Sweden Irr. Dist., 101 Pac. 81, 83, 16 Idaho, 217.

Under Const. art. 1, § 11, authorizing an owner to recover just compensation as of the time when his property was taken by condemnation, and under the New Haven city charter (13 Sp. Laws, p. 388), providing that lands shall be deemed to have been taken on the city paying the compensation fixed, authorizing an appeal to the superior court for the reassessment of damages, and providing that no land taken shall be occupied by the city until all appeals shall have been disposed of, an owner appealing to the superior court for and obtaining a reassessment in excess of the amount originally awarded is not entitled to interest from the date of the original assessment, but is only from the date of the reassessment until payment thereof; the word "taken" meaning the exclusion of the owner from his private use and possession, and the assumption of the use and possession for the public purpose. Bishop v. City of New Haven, 72 Atl. 646, 648, 82 Conn. 51.

The word "taken," as used in the charter of the town of Newborn, providing that the mayor and council shall have power to lay out and abolish streets and alleys and to extend and change the same as the public interest may require "by paying the owner just compensation for the property taken for any such purposes," means property actually seized or appropriated. Stowe v. Town of Newborn, 56 S. E. 516, 127 Ga. 421.

The term "taken," in Const. La. 1898, art. 167, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just compensation being first paid and in the same provision in the Constitution of 1879, is used in its proper signification in legislation relative to the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Amet v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 41 South. 721, 722, 117 La. 454.

In the constitutional provision as to compensation for property taken for public use, the term "property" includes the fee-simple title to the thing owned, whether it be burdened with an easement or not; and the term "taken" includes the appropriation of that thing or of some interest or estate in it, by actual, physical possession, such as exists when a railroad is constructed and operated on it. McCammon & Lang Lumber Co. v. Trinity & Brazos V. Ry. Co., 133 S. W. 247, 249, 104 Tex. 8, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 662, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 870.

To deprive one of the ordinary beneficial use and enjoyment of his property is in law equivalent to the "taking," if it is within the constitutional provision as to the taking of private property for public use, and is as much a taking as though the property itself were actually taken. In earlier times it was held that property could be deemed to be taken within the meaning of the constitutional provision only when the owner was wholly deprived of its possession, use, and occupation. But a more liberal doctrine has long been established, and an actual physical taking of property is not necessary to entitle its owner to compensation. A man's property may be taken, although his title and possession remain undisturbed. Where the owners of property condemned for railroad purposes remained in possession and had the use of the property until the final order of condemnation, the service of summons was not a "taking" of the property, within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation"; and hence they were not entitled to interest on the assessment of condemnation from the date of the service of summons in the action to verdict, less rents and other benefits of possession received by them during that period. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Jones, 80 Pac. 732, 734, 29 Utah, 147.

A judgment of condemnation of property amounted to a "taking" of the property for public use, and the price for such "taking" then became justly due the owner. State ex rel. Donofrio v. Humes, 75 Pac. 348, 350, 34 Wash. 347.

A direct injury to property is a "taking" thereof, within the constitutional meaning of that word relating to the "taking" of property for public use. Leffmann v. Long Island Ry. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 647, 648, 47 Misc. Rep. 169.

"Any injury to the property of an individual which deprives the owner of the ordinary use of it is equivalent to a 'taking,' and entitles him to compensation. So a partial destruction or diminution of the value of property by an act of government, which directly and not merely incidentally affects it, is to that extent an appropriation." City of Clinton v. Franklin (Ky.) 83 S. W. 142, 143 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. [3d Ed.] p. 545, and citing City of Henderson v. McClain, 43 S. W. 700, 102 Ky. 402, 39 L. R. A. 349; City of Mt. Sterling v. Jephson [Ky.] 53 S. W. 1046; City of Ludlow v. Detweller [Ky.] 47 S. W. 881; Layman v. Beeler, 67 S. W. 995, 113 Ky. 221).

Any actual and material interference with private property rights is a "taking" of property within the meaning of the provision in the Constitution referring to the taking of private property for public purposes without just compensation. Board of Com'rs of Portage County v. Gates, 93 N. E. 255, 259, 83 Ohio St. 19.

A law which deprives the owner of the beneficial use and free enjoyment of property, or restrains its use and enjoyment so as to materially affect its value, "takes" his property without compensation, within the meaning of the Constitution. People ex rel. M. Wineburgh Advertising Co. v. Murphy, 113 N. Y. Supp. 855, 857, 129 App. Div. 260.

Appropriation of land for railroad

The appropriation of land for railway purposes is a "taking" within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution of this state providing that private property shall not be taken without compensation. McCord v. Eastern Ry. Co. of Minnesota, 116 N. W. 845, 846, 136 Wis. 254.

It has been held that a constitutional guaranty that private property shall not be "taken" or "appropriated" without compensation did not embrace mere consequential damages resulting to property abutting on a street, or other improvements thereof, but only to a trespass upon or physical invasion of the property. The reverse of this, however, is held by courts determining like questions under different constitutional and statutory provisions. Damages to be allowed by commissioners appointed under statute to inspect real property and consider the injury which the owners may have sustained by reason of a railroad, and to assess damages for the appropriation of his land, are not limited to real estate taken and injured, but may be such damages as the owner actually sustained to either his real or personal property by such appropriation of his land. Blincoe v. Choctaw, Q. & W. R. Co., 83 Pac. 903, 906, 16 Okl. 286, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890, 8 Ann. Cas. 689 (citing and adopting Northern Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 644, 25 L. Ed. 336; Rigney v. City of Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; City of Chicago v. Taylor, 8 Sup. Ct. 820, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. Ed. 638; Brown v. City of Seattle, 31 Pac. 313, 5 Wash. 35, 18 L. R. A. 161; City of Pueblo v. Strait, 36 Pac. 789, 20 Colo. 13, 24 L. R. A. 892, 46 Am. St. Rep. 273, and citing and distinguishing Seldon v. City of Jacksonville, 10 South. 457, 28 Fla. 558, 14 L. R. A. 370, 29 Am. St. Rep. 278).

Assessment against gas company

A gas company has no such property right in the location of its pipes and mains, laid under an exclusive franchise to supply gas to the city and its inhabitants, as to make the imposition upon it of the cost of changes in the location of such pipes and mains, necessitated by the construction of the municipal drainage system authorized by Act La. July 9, 1896, a "taking" of property without due compensation. New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Drainage Commission of New Orleans, 35 South. 929, 111 La. 838; Id., 25 Sup. Ct. 471, 474, 197 U. S. 453, 49 L. Ed. 831.

Compelling adjoining owner to clean sidewalk

An ordinance requiring owners, etc., of property to remove snow from adjoining sidewalks, does not infringe the constitutional prohibition against the "taking of private property for public uses" without just compensation. State v. McCrillis, 66 Atl. 301, 303, 28 R. I. 165, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635, 13 Ann. Cas. 701.

Consequential injury

The Legislature has complete control over the public highways, so that what is done in and on them by lawful authority cannot be considered a nuisance, and consequential injuries resulting are not within the Constitution prohibiting the "taking of property" without compensation. In re City of Detroit, 128 N. W. 250, 252, 163 Mich. 229.

When the Legislature authorizes something to be done in the neighborhood of land which diminishes its value, but would not be actionable at common law if done by a neighboring owner, if the statute provides no compensation, the owner cannot claim any under the Constitution, because what is done does not amount to a "taking." And even if the thing authorized would be actionable at common law, and a nuisance, but for the statute, still it is not necessarily a "taking"; and, unless it does amount to that, no compensation can be recovered if the statute does not give it. Lincoln v. Commonwealth, 41 N. E. 489, 492, 164 Mass. 368 (citing Titus v. City of Boston, 36 N. E. 793, 161 Mass. 209).

Under a Massachusetts statute relating to the metropolitan sewer, and providing that the commonwealth shall pay all damages sustained by reason of the "taking" of land for sewer purposes, one who used the waters of a natural pond on his land in his business could not recover for the temporary drying up of the same, caused by the work of constructing a part of the sewer under a highway. Chelsea Dye House & Laundry Co. v. Commonwealth, 41 N. E. 649, 164 Mass. 350.

"When soil is removed from its natural position by one owner, and the soil of an adjoining owner is thereby permitted to fall, such result is not a consequential damage, but a direct injury. * * * It is true that the word 'damaged' has been held to mean such damages as were recoverable at common law between individuals; but in view of the rule that the carrying away of land by its own weight is not consequential damage, but is an actual infringement and 'taking of property,' we think the same rule should apply where the land is carried away by means of water which is released in a public street by any means which would amount to an actual 'taking' and a resulting damage." Hence, where land is carried away by means of water which is released in a public street through the operations of certain railroads in constructing a tunnel under the street, the damage so occasioned is an actual infringement and "taking of property," within the Constitution declaring that private property shall not be "damaged" for public use without just compensation. Farnandis v. Great Northern R. Co., 84 Pac. 18, 20, 21, 41 Wash. 486.

Same—Additional use of streets

Injury of an easement in the street fronting property by a railroad company is the taking of private property for public purposes for which compensation must be made under Const. § 242, providing that injury to property by a corporation in exercise of the right of eminent domain is taking thereof for which compensation must be made. Stein v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 116 S. W. 733, 736, 132 Ky. 322.

A claim for permanent injury done to property by the location of railroad tracks in the street in front of the same is a "claim for the taking of property." Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. Co. v. Clemmons (Ky.) 86 S. W. 1125, 1126.

The limitation on the right to define the uses to which streets and highways may be put must be given such a construction as will not defeat the original purposes of the creation of streets and highways, and where a particular use to which consent has been given by the municipal authorities as authorized by law is in the nature of a public use, and is not more burdensome than other public uses which are within possible contemplation at the time of the creation of the highway, it is not a "taking or damaging" of property within the Constitution, prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation. The inauguration of a new use of a highway under proper authority within the general purposes for which the highway was created is not a "taking or damaging" of the property of the abutting owner within the Constitution. Kipp v. Davis-Daly Copper Co., 110 Pac. 237, 240, 41 Mont. 509, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666, 21 Ann. Cas. 1372.

A sale of a franchise by a police jury to a corporation to operate an electric car system over a public road is not a deprivation of property in the abutting owners, prohibited by the Constitution, but the use of the road by the public and abutting owners must not be interfered with. Friscoville Realty Co. v. Police Jury of Parish of St. Bernard, 53 South. 578, 580, 127 La. 318.

The occupation of a street by a railroad is not a "taking" of property of an abutting owner who does not own the fee in the street, within the provision of the Constitution, that when property is taken for public use, compensation must be first made; but the occupation of a street by a railroad is a "taking" of the property of one owning the fee of the street within the constitutional provision that, when property is taken for public use, compensation shall be first made or secured by a deposit of money, and such occupation is not a mere damaging for which compensation may be made subsequently. McCammon & Lang Lumber Co. v. Trinity & Brazos V. Ry. Co., 133 S. W. 247, 248, 104 Tex. 8, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 662, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 870.

Same—Diversion of water

The diversion of the water of a nonnavigable stream by the United States, so as to deprive a landowner of its natural flow adjacent to and upon his premises, for the purpose of improving the navigation of other navigable waters, is a "taking of property" of such landowner, within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which entitles him to just compensation therefor. Cohen v. United States, 162 Fed. 364, 367.

Same—Easement of access

A "taking" of private property for public use, within statutes and constitutional provisions forbidding the same without compensation, may result without conversion of the property or any part thereof, as where the right of ingress and egress over a street to and from abutting lands is obstructed. Foster Lumber Co. v. Arkansas Valley & W. R. Co., 95 Pac. 224, 226, 227, 20 Okl. 583, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231.

The discontinuance or vacation of a street in such a manner as to prevent access to the property of an adjoining owner is a "taking" of property within the constitutional inhibition, and cannot be lawful without compensation to such owner. Ridgway v. City of Osceola, 117 N. W. 974, 975, 139 Iowa, 590.

Where the grade crossing commissioners created by Laws 1888, c. 345, as amended by Laws 1890, c. 255, abolished a grade crossing without encroaching on private property of abutting owners, there was no "taking" of property within the Constitution, though the structures impaired to some extent the access of the abutting owners to their premises from which damages resulted. In re Grade Crossing Com'rs of City of Buffalo, 94 N. E. 188, 190, 201 N. Y. 32.

Same—Flowing land

Ordinarily the overflowing of land in exercising a water right or by a milldam is a "taking" within the meaning of that word in the statutes relating to eminent domain. Gaylord v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 68 N. E. 522, 524, 204 Ill. 576, 63 L. R. A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 235.

The construction of a levee by a levee district, created by the Legislature, to protect lands from inundation by flood waters of a river does not "take" or damage for public use, within Const. art. 2, § 22, land between the river and the levee, though the levee obstructs sloughs and bayous, not forming natural outlets of the river, of sufficient capacity to relieve the river from the increased flood water, injuring the land, thereby raising the flood waters on the land. McCoy v. Board of Directors of Plum Bayou Levee Dist., 129 S. W. 1097, 1100, 95 Ark. 345, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396.

Flowage of lands by a village raising a dam used in operating an electric light plant is a "taking" within Const. c. 1, art. 2, prohibiting the taking of private property for public use, if such taking by the village is for a public use. Doty v. Village of Johnson, 77 Atl. 866, 868, 84 Vt. 15.

In order that the flooding of lands resulting from the construction of a dam on a stream by the United States for the improvement of navigation shall constitute a "taking" of the land within the meaning of the fifth constitutional amendment, and entitle the owner to recover compensation therefor, it must amount to a permanent flooding and an actual ouster of the owner, the effect of which is the practical destruction of the value of the land. There is not such taking where the land was previously subject to overflow each year in time of freshets, to such extent that it had not been cultivated for many years, and the only effect of the dam was to increase such overflows in extent and frequency, the land for the most part being free from water practically all the time; and in such case there can be a recovery only with respect to such portion as is permanently covered. Coleman v. United States, 181 Fed. 599, 603.

The flooding of lands consequent upon the private erection of a dam under the authority of legislation enacted in the exercise of the police power to subserve the drainage of lowlands does not amount to a "taking," which requires compensation to be made to the owner in order to afford the due process of law guarantied by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, when such flooding can be prevented by raising the height of the dikes around the lands. Where there is a practical destruction or material impairment of the value of one's lands, there is a "taking" which demands compensation, but otherwise where his land is merely put to some extra expense in warding off the consequences of the overflow. Manigault v. Springs, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 132, 199 U. S. 473, 50 L. Ed. 274.

Same—Injuring adjoining property

Consequential injury to an abutting owner, caused by a work of public necessity and convenience performed within the limits of a public street on which his property abuts, is not a "taking of property" for public use within the Constitution. Morris v. City of Indianapolis, 94 N. E. 705, 710, 177 Ind. 369.

Where property adjoining a highway was damaged because of the negligent construction of a ditch therein, such damages would not constitute "a taking of or an injury to private property" for which the county would be liable. Zavalla County v. Akers (Tex.) 91 S. W. 245.

Under Const. art. 1, § 16, providing that no private property shall be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation, the damage must be to the property itself or its appurtenances, or it must affect some right or interest which the owner enjoys in connection with his property, not shared with or enjoyed by the public generally. Plaintiff sold a lot in the middle of a block to a railroad company, and as part payment took a corner lot across the street. The company commenced construction of its road across the first lot; the corner lot not abutting on the right of way. Plaintiff brought action to compel the condemnation of the corner lot. Held that, while his property may be rendered less valuable by reason of the smoke and noise and close proximity to the road, it is only such damage as the public would generally suffer, and is not a "taking" of private property within Const. art. 1, § 16. Clute v. North Yakima & Valley Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 513, 514, 62 Wash. 531.

Controlling appropriation of water

Since the Legislature has power in the exercise of the state's police power to authorize the supervision and control of the appropriation and distribution of the public waters of the state, such supervision cannot constitute the "taking of private property for public or private use without just compensation" within the meaning of the Constitution; not invading any rights of private property. Hamp v. State, 118 Pac. 653, 662, 19 Wyo. 377.

Constructing reservoir

The title of an act referred to an agreement between two towns as "relating to the building of a water basin in said town." The statute authorized the "taking" of all lands which the city deems necessary to carry out the agreement. This means to carry out the plan which the agreement plainly suggests, namely, the construction of a great reservoir, involving general changes in the roads, and providing a place from which the town, as well as the city, may take its supply of water. The instrument of taking, although it recites previous statutes, gives as the foundation of the right the agreement and the statute above referred to, and ends with these words: "All of which lands and water rights said board deems necessary to take in carrying out said agreement." This is equivalent to a statement that the taking of all the lands is under the latest statute. Burnett v. City of Boston, 53 N. E. 379, 380, 173 Mass. 173.

Constructing sidewalk

Under Const. § 242, declaring that municipal corporations taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed, where a city unlawfully constructed a sidewalk on plaintiff's land, to the extent that it occupied his land it amounted to "taking" without compensation. City of Clinton v. Franklin (Ky.) 83 S. W. 142, 143.

Conveying by tax deed

By a tax deed the property of a citizen is conveyed for a consideration that moves to the public, and not to the owner of the property, and it may be said to be a "taking of private property for public use," which can only be done in all cases by a strict compliance with the law authorizing it. Lowenstein v. Sexton, 90 Pac. 410, 411, 18 Okl. 322.

Deductions from teachers' salaries for pensions

Deductions from the monthly salaries of persons holding positions under the school law authorized by P. L. 1907, p. 371, § 219, to form the Teachers' Retirement Fund, do not constitute the "taking" of private property for public use without just compensation; the salary to be paid being the net amount, and not the gross amounts, in computing such deduction. Allen v. Board of Education of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 101, 103, 81 N. J. Law, 135.

Destruction of franchise

The charter of a turnpike company possessing the right, in consideration of its building and keeping a turnpike in repair, to exact tolls for 25 years, and as much longer as the state shall fail to purchase the road, is a contract, and the interest of the company in the turnpike, whether called a franchise or an easement, is a property right, and its practical destruction in whole or in part is a "taking of property," within the Constitution. City of Belleville v. St. Clair County Turnpike Co., 84 N. E. 1049, 1051, 234 Ill. 428, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071.

Discontinued condemnation proceedings

Proceedings by the United States to condemn land for a public building or other governmental purpose may be dismissed at any time before the actual acceptance of the property and payment therefor, until which time there is no "taking" of the property, and the United States is not subject to the payment of costs or damages to the landowners on such dismissal. United States v. Dickson, 127 Fed. 774, 775.

Under Const. art. 1, § 6, declaring that private property shall not be "taken" for public use without just compensation, an appropriation of claimant's property for the purpose of underpinning the walls incident to the construction of canal improvements, anticipating the approval of the plans for the underpinning which were never approved, was void; the canal location being subsequently changed so as to obviate all necessity for the appropriation of any part of claimant's property. Ontario Knitting Co. v. State of New York, 125 N. Y. Supp. 57, 63, 69 Misc. Rep. 145.

Erection of boom

Acts done in the exercise of governmental powers which do not directly interfere with private property do not constitute a "taking" so as to require compensation, so that a boom company which succeeded to the state's rights over its tide lands did not, by erecting a boom therein, take any property of upland owners, so as to require compensation. Grays Harbor Boom Co. v. Lownsdale, 104 Pac. 267, 268, 54 Wash. 83.

Establishing separate schools for negroes

Act March 8, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 205, c. 28, art. 9), providing for separate schools for white and colored children, and that schoolhouses shall be built by the county, but that it shall be at no expense on account thereof, but the school district shall keep such house in repair, and the county shall be at no expense where districts at the passage of the act have schoolhouses for that class of children, white or colored, that are fewer in number in the district, is not unconstitutional because of interference with property rights without just compensation. Board of Education of City of Kingfisher v. Board of Com'rs of Kingfisher County, 78 Pac. 455, 458, 14 Okl. 322.

Exercise of police power

The rule that private property may not be "taken" or damaged for public use without compensation does not apply to injury, damage, or loss of property incidental to the exercise of the police power in the promotion of the public welfare. People v. Eberle, 133 N. W. 519, 522, 167 Mich. 477.

The limitation on the power of eminent domain, that property shall not be "taken" or damaged for public use without adequate compensation, does not of itself impose any restriction on the proper employment of the police power on any subject lying within its sphere in a proper and lawful manner. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. City of Dallas, 84 S. W. 648, 650, 98 Tex. 396, 70 L. R. A. 850.

Expropriation synonymous

The terms "taking" or "expropriation," as used in Acts 1896, p. 142, No. 96, providing that all claims for damages to the owner caused by the taking or expropriation of land for public works shall be barred by two years' prescription, must be construed as equivalents. Amet v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 41 South. 721, 722, 117 La. 454.

Health regulations

Reasonable municipal health regulations under the authority of the state are not void, as "taking" private property without just compensation. State v. Robb, 60 Atl. 874, 876, 100 Me. 180, 4 Ann. Cas. 275.

Uncompensated obedience to a regulation ordained to secure the public health and safety is not a "taking of private property," within the inhibitions of the state or federal Constitution. Cincinnati, I. & W. Ry. Co. v. City of Connersville, 83 N. E. 503, 507, 170 Ind. 316.

The provision of Laws 1901, p. 912, c. 334, § 100, as amended by Laws 1902, p. 937, c. 352, § 47, requiring all school sinks in existing tenement houses in cities of the first class to be removed does not violate the constitutional provision against "taking" private property for public use without just compensation, in so far as it applies to existing buildings. Tenement House Department of City of New York v. Moeschen, 72 N. E. 231, 233, 179 N. Y. 325, 70 L. R. A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439.

Though a riparian owner's right to the reasonable use of the water of a pond includes the right to bathe and swim therein, such right was not primary, but incidental to the ownership of the land, and hence a regulation of the State Board of Health prohibiting bathing in a pond from which a city derived its water supply was not unconstitutional as depriving a riparian proprietor of his property without compensation. State v. Morse, 80 Atl. 189, 191, 84 Vt. 387, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 190, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 218.

Improvement of navigable stream

Improvements under the drainage act of March 29, 1899 (Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 42), which lower the waters of a navigable stream, requiring abutting owners to excavate and deepen the stream, the lowering is a "taking or damaging" of private property for public use without just compensation, within Const. art. 2, § 13. Beldler v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 71 N. E. 1118, 1120, 211 Ill. 628, 67 L. R. A. 820.

Wood creek having been a public highway from the earliest times, having been reserved as a common highway for the benefit of the public by a crown patent, the state could improve it for navigation by incorporating it into the Barge Canal system without compensation to riparian owners for inconvenience from their inability thereafter to maintain a bridge previously constructed over it as a method of access to their lands, though the condition of the creek had changed, and it had practically ceased to be used by the public for navigation with modern vessels of magnitude, or the public had practically ceased to use it as a common highway for travel, as the exercise of an existing right is not such a "taking" within Const. art. 1, § 6, providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, as to entitle riparian owners to compensation. Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 123 N. Y. Supp. 546, 553, 66 Misc. Rep. 434.

Improvement of street

The word "taken," as used in the Constitution of Washington, providing that no private property shall be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, and the statute enabling cities to exercise the right of eminent domain for the taking and damaging of property for public uses, does not mean the same as "damaged." Where a city in condemnation proceedings acquired the right to lower the grade of property abutting on a street 77 feet below the average level of abutting property, and to slope such property back from the street to prevent the soil from sliding into the street, the construction of the slope was not a "taking" of the abutting property, but merely a damaging thereof, within the Constitution and the statute. Compton v. City of Seattle, 80 Pac. 757, 759, 38 Wash. 514.

The fact that a city, after taking a portion of lots for widening a street, awarded compensation therefor, and then assessed the remainder for benefits accruing by reason of the improvement, did not constitute a "taking of property without just compensation." In re City of Seattle (Wash.) 85 Pac. 45, 46.

A change in a street to the damage of adjacent property is not a "taking of private property," for which the municipality is liable for damages under the constitutional provision forbidding the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. Bramlett v. City Council of Greenville, 70 S. E. 450, 452, 88 S. C. 110.

Bringing a street to an established grade by excavating in front of an abutting lot, to such an extent that the soil becomes loose and slides under the street, did not constitute a "taking" of property. Talcott Bros. v. City of Des Moines, 109 N. W. 311, 316, 134 Iowa, 113, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696, 120 Am. St. Rep. 419 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 6852).

A change of grade in a street, regularly and properly made by a municipal corporation, with the acts required to complete the improvement confined within the limits of the street, was not, as to abutting owners, a "taking" of property for public use, and they had no right of action for impairing the use of their property by rendering the access thereto more difficult. McCullough v. Village of Campbellsport, 101 N. W. 709, 710, 123 Wis. 334.

Where plaintiff's premises were separated from the street by a narrow strip of land, and the grading of the street by municipal authorities caused such strip and a substantial portion of plaintiff's property to subside and fall, so as to injure the premises, there was an actual appropriation of the soil to the extent of such injury, amounting to the "taking" of such premises for public purposes, rendering the city liable. Damkoehler v. City of Milwaukee, 101 N. W. 706, 707, 124 Wis. 144.

A charge of the cost of paving a sidewalk as a lien on abutting lots of different proprietors, according to the front-foot rule, without limiting the cost of the improvements by the special benefits received by such abutting lots, may be imposed by the Legislature, or by a city exercising delegated legislative powers, and is not a "taking" of private property for public use without compensation. Wilzinski v. City of Greenville, 37 South. 807, 808, 85 Miss. 393.

Inspection of mining claims

Code Civ. Proc. § 1314, authorizing an inspection of mining claims in an action to determine adverse claims thereto, is not unconstitutional, as in violation of Const. art. 3, § 14, prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property without just compensation, since such temporary invasion is not a "taking." State ex rel. Parrot Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 73 Pac. 230, 237, 28 Mont. 528.

Laying gas pipes

The laying of pipe lines by a gas company without the consent of the landowner or lawful appropriation is a "taking," within the constitutional inhibition against the taking or damaging of private property for a public use before payment of compensation therefor. Lovett v. West Virginia Cent. Gas Co., 65 S. E. 196, 198, 65 W. Va. 739, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230.

Laying tile drain

The right to enter upon land to lay and maintain a tile drain is a "taking of property for public use," within the constitutional provision requiring compensation. Drainage Com'rs of Dist. No. 8 in Town of Oakwood v. Knox, 86 N. E. 636, 637, 237 Ill. 148.

Lowering tunnel

Where a street railroad company, owning lands on both sides of the Chicago river, built a tunnel in the bed of the river between such lands, an ordinance of the city of Chicago requiring a lowering of the tunnel at the company's expense was not a "taking" or damaging of the company's property, within the constitutional provision for compensation to owners whose property is taken or damaged for public use. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. People ex rel. City of Chicago, 73 N. E. 393, 396, 214 Ill. 9.

Moving railroad tracks

An order by the Public Service Commission compelling the railroad company to remove its tracks was not a "taking of property without compensation"; such property being held subject to the exercise of the state's police power. Bacon v. Boston & M. R. R., 76 Atl. 128, 143, 83 Vt. 421.

Penalty for failure to establish depot

Under Act Feb. 2, 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 6), requiring a railroad within 60 days to establish a depot, subject to a penalty for failure to do so, it is not liable for the penalty, it having been an impossibility to comply with it in such time; otherwise, the statute would "take" one's property without just compensation, in violation of the Constitution. State v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 108 S. W. 508, 85 Ark. 422.

Platting a street

"The platting of a street through land of a private owner is not a 'taking' of the land. It is simply the expression of a purpose to take it when occasion for the opening of the projected street arises." In re South Twelfth Street in City of Allentown, 66 Atl. 568, 569, 217 Pa. 362.

Under St. 1903, p. 121, c. 158, § 1, providing that the metropolitan park commission and the officers having charge of public parks may make such reasonable rules as to the display of signs, posters, or advertisements in or near public parks and parkways as they may deem necessary, a rule of the commission forbidding the erection or display on any land or the outside of any building of any sign or advertisement within such distance of any public park as shall render the words or devices plainly visible to the naked eye within the park without the written permission of the commission so interferes with the use of property for advertising purposes as to amount to a "taking" of property for public use without compensation. Nor is such rule reasonable within the meaning of the statute, as applied to advertisements not of indecent or immoral tendencies, or signs not dangerous to the physical safety of the public. Commonwealth v. Boston Advertising Co., 74 N. E. 601, 602, 188 Mass. 348, 69 L. R. A. 817, 108 Am. St. Rep. 494.

Building Code of City of New York, § 144, provides that any sign or advertising device supported or attached over or above any building, etc., shall be deemed a "sky sign," and prohibits such signs from being constructed more than nine feet above the front wall of a building at any part. Relator seeks to erect a sky sign on a building to a greater height than permitted by an ordinance enacted pursuant to the building code, having leased the right to erect signs on the building, and respondent refused to issue a permit on the ground that its erection would violate the ordinance. Held that the ordinance constituted a "taking of property" without compensation, in that it arbitrarily limited the erection of signs above the height stated, and it was not justified as a police regulation. People ex rel. M. Wineburgh Advertising Co. v. Murphy, 113 N. Y. Supp. 855, 857, 129 App. Div. 260.

Act May 3, 1909 (P. L. 417), requires exits, fire escapes, fire extinguishers, and fire preventives for buildings of a certain character, such as theaters, public halls, and other places where persons assemble or the public resort, "other than buildings situated in the cities of the first and second classes." The provisions of the act are enforceable by state officers, no duty to be performed, nor responsibility to be incurred, being imposed upon any city, county, borough, or school district officer, and the fees of any such officer are not regulated thereby, and it has nothing to do with the revenues of counties, cities or townships. Held, that the act is a proper police regulation and does not involve a "taking," injury to, or destruction of property for public use without just compensation within the express inhibition of Const. art. 16, § 8. A. L. Roumfort Co. v. Delaney, 79 Atl. 653, 655, 230 Pa. 374.

Reassessment for street improvements

Laws 1903, p. 572, c. 354, amending Rev. St. 1898, § 1210e, and providing for reassessment of benefits and damages for street improvement in an action brought by a lot owner to recover damages arising from a failure to make a proper assessment, is not repugnant to Const. art. 1, § 13, prohibiting the "taking" of private property without just compensation. Haubner v. City of Milwaukee, 101 N. W. 930, 933, 934, 124 Wis. 153.

Rebuilding bridge

"Injury may often come to private property as the result of legitimate governmental action, reasonably taken for the public good and for no other purpose, and yet there will be no 'taking' of such property within the meaning of the constitutional guaranty against the deprivation of property without due process of law, or against the 'taking' of private property for public use without compensation." The imposition upon a railway company of the entire cost of removing and rebuilding a railway bridge and culvert, made necessary by the proposed widening and deepening of the channel of a creek by drainage commissioners acting under the authority of the Illinois farm drainage act of July 1, 1885, does not amount to a "taking" of private property for public use, which requires compensation in order to afford the due process of law, guaranteed by the federal Constitution, which requires that compensation be made when private property is taken for public use. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 346, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; Id., 72 N. E. 219, 221, 212 Ill. 103.

The action of the Secretary of War in requiring changes in a bridge over an interstate waterway within a specified time and after the parties have been held conformably to Act March 3, 1899, § 18, enacted to secure navigation against unreasonable obstruction, is not such a "taking for public use" of private property as must, under the federal Constitution, be proceeded by the making of or sufficiently securing compensation to the owners of the bridge. President, etc., of the Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States, 30 Sup. Ct. 356, 360, 216 U. S. 177, 54 L. Ed. 435.

A notice to a bridge company to make alterations in a bridge over an interstate waterway conformably to the act of March 3, 1899, was not a "taking of property" within the meaning of the Constitution. Hannibal Bridge Co. v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 603, 606, 221 U. S. 195, 55 L. Ed. 699.

Removal of building from land taken

It is within the power of the Legislature to provide that when it is possible to remove a building so it can be readjusted to premises not taken, it shall not be a "taking" within the Constitution, and Laws 1907, c. 153, § 10, providing that in such a case the measure of damages to the building shall be the cost of readjusting or removing it, is constitutional. City of Tacoma v. Bonnell, 109 Pac. 60, 62, 58 Wash. 593.

Repairing ditches

Act April 15, 1902, § 3 (95 Ohio Laws, p. 155), providing for the cleaning and keeping in repair of public ditches, drains, etc., and providing that, when a ditch needs to be cleaned out, the county auditor, on notice filed, shall direct the county surveyor to make any necessary repairs, is not unconstitutional, as in conflict with article 1, § 19, providing that private property shall not be "taken" for public use without compensation. Taylor v. Crawford, 74 N. E. 1065, 1067, 72 Ohio St. 500, 69 L. R. A. 805.

Where a city has a prescriptive right to maintain a ditch of a certain capacity over plaintiff's land, it has a right to clean out the ditch and maintain it in its previous condition; but it has no right to double its width and depth, and thus take from the plaintiff his property, for this can only be done in a legal and constitutional way, and to widen the ditch and thus take the land is as much a "taking" without just compensation, in violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights, as it would have been to construct the ditch at a place where none had previously existed. City of Owensboro v. Brocking (Ky.) 87 S. W. 1086.

Requiring company to supply water gratis

An ordinance fixing water rates, and requiring a private company to supply, without charge, water to charitable, religious, and educational institutions, constituted a "taking" and appropriation of the property of such company. City of Chicago v. Rogers Park Water Co., 73 N. E. 375, 378, 214 Ill. 212.

Requiring license to sell liquor

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3927, giving a city power to require a license to sell intoxicating liquors within four miles of its corporate limits, does not contravene Const. art. 1, § 21, providing that no man's property shall be "taken" without just compensation. Jourdan v. City of Evansville, 72 N. E. 544-546, 163 Ind. 512, 67 L. R. A. 613, 2 Ann. Cas. 96.

Restricting cutting of trees

The question of what constitutes a "taking" of private property in the constitutional use of the term has been much considered and variously decided. In the earlier cases and in the older states the provision has been construed strictly. In some states in later cases it has been construed more widely to include legislation formerly not considered within the provision. Still more recently, however, the tendency seems to be back to the principles enunciated in the earlier cases. Legislation to restrict or regulate the cutting of trees on wild or uncultivated land by the owner thereof, etc., without compensation therefor to such owner, in order to prevent or diminish injurious droughts and freshets, and to protect, preserve, and maintain the natural water supply of springs, streams, ponds, and lakes, etc., and to prevent or diminish injurious erosion of the land and the filling up of the rivers, ponds, and lakes, etc., would not operate to "take" private property within inhibition of the Constitution. While such legislation might restrict the owner of wild and uncultivated lands in his use of them, might delay his taking some of the product, might defer his anticipated profits, and even thereby might cause him some loss of profit, it would nevertheless leave him his lands, their product, and increase untouched and without diminution of title, estate, or quantity. He would still have large measure of control and large opportunity to realize values. He might suffer delay, but not deprivation. While the use might be restricted, it would not be appropriated or "taken." Such legislation would be within the legislative power, and would not operate as a "taking" of private property, for which compensation must be made. In re Opinion of the Justices, 69 Atl. 627, 628, 103 Me. 506, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 13 Ann. Cas. 745.

Seizure of property used in liquor traffic

The Carnichael Act, passed August 9, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 8), and the Fuller Act, passed August 25, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 63), providing for the issuance of an injunction against liquor nuisances, and authorizing seizures of chattels used in carrying on such nuisances, are not unconstitutional as in effect authorizing a "taking" of private property for public use without compensation, as such constitutional provision does not prevent proper provisions for the forfeiture and confiscation of property used to commit crime. Fulton v. State, 54 South. 688, 694, 171 Ala. 572.

Use of railroad property

To take from a railroad company the exclusive right to the use of its property, or any part thereof, and limit its use therein to a particular purpose, and give another railroad company an equal or joint right in the use of it for that purpose, is a "taking" within the meaning of Const. 1902, §§ 58, 159 (Code 1904, pp. ccxxii, ccviii). Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Interstate R. Co., 62 S. E. 369, 370, 108 Va. 502.

To constitute a "taking of property" it is not necessary that there should be an exclusive appropriation, a total assumption of possession, or an absolute and total conversion of the entire property. Any serious abridgment or interruption of the common and necessary use of property may amount in law to a taking, and entitle the owner to compensation within the Constitution, providing for compensation for a taking of property. Where a city council has by ordinance legally granted to one street railway company the right to construct its railway over a particular part of a designated street, and the company accepts the grant and enters on and takes possession of the right of way, a subsequent grant by the city council or its successor in office, the board of control, of the same right of way or a substantial part thereof to another street railway company for like purposes, will not of itself confer upon the second grantee the right to enter upon and take possession of the right of way so granted, where such entry and possession will materially and injuriously interfere with, interrupt, and abridge the first grantee's use and enjoyment of the right of way; and where the second grantee threatens and is about to take possession of the right of way under and by virtue of its grant without the consent and against the will of the first grantee, and without having appropriated the right so to do, it will be restrained from so doing by injunction. Hamilton, G. & C. Traction Co. v. Hamilton & L. Electric Transit Co., 69 N. E. 991, 994, 69 Ohio St. 402.

Vacation of street

"The legal vacation by a city of streets and alleys, is not a 'taking' * * * without compensation." Scrutchfield v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 88 Pac. 1048, 1050, 18 Okl. 308, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496 (quoting with approval from City of East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 10 N. E. 395, 119 Ill. 200, 59 Am. Rep. 795).

TAKING (In Larceny)

To constitute "a taking," in larceny, the property need only be separated from the owner, so that its removal from one place to another feloniously, intending to convert it to one's own use, is sufficient. State v. De Luca (Del.) 77 Atl. 742, 743 (2 Boyce) 158.

By the "taking" necessary to the offense of robbery is implied that the robber must be in possession of the thing taken, and the offense is not actually completed without such taking, and the thing taken must be of some value and taken from the peaceable possession of the owner. State v. McAllister, 63 S. E. 758, 761, 65 W. Va. 97 (citing 2 Russ. Crimes, 100).

A "taking," to constitute theft, need not be a taking from the actual possession of the owner; but a taking of property without his consent, when not in his actual custody, with intent to deprive him thereof and to appropriate it to the use of the person taking, constitutes theft. Rose v. State, 106 S. W. 143, 144, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 154.

The words "taking and carrying away," as used in defining larceny, mean that the thief has so far succeeded in removing the property that it is completely and permanently lost to the owner. If the wrongdoer by trespass obtain complete possession and control of an item of personal property belonging to another, with the felonious intent to deprive the owner thereof, and carries it or moves it in the slightest degree from the place where he finds it, the asportation is complete, and the crime of larceny has been committed. State v. Rozeboom, 124 N. W. 783, 785, 786, 145 Iowa, 620, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 37.

Taking from the person

The phrase "taking from the person," as used in defining the crime of robbery, does not mean that the goods are actually on the person in the strict sense of that term; but the offense may be committed by forcibly and violently taking property from the presence of the owner, such taking being from the person in a legal contemplation. O'Donnell v. People, 79 N. E. 639, 642, 224 Ill. 218, 8 Ann. Cas. 123 (citing State v. Calhoun, 34 N. W. 194, 72 Iowa, 432, 2 Am. St. Rep. 252; Clements v. State, 11 S. E. 505, 84 Ga. 660, 20 Am. St. Rep. 385; Crawford v. State, 17 S. E. 628, 90 Ga. 701, 35 Am. St. Rep. 242; Turner v. State, 1 Ohio St. 422; Hill v. State, 60 N. W. 916, 42 Neb. 503; Croker v. State, 47 Ala. 53; Houston v. Commonwealth, 12 S. E. 385, 87 Va. 257).

If accused and others caused another's purse to be dropped upon the ground by jostling him, etc., in their effort to commit the larceny, their taking it from the floor was a "taking from the person." People v. Carroll, 128 Pac. 4, 6, 20 Cal. App. 41.

Taking with intent to steal

Where, on a trial for a violation of Pen. Code 1895, § 194, providing that, if any person intrusted with money shall fraudulently convert the same, he shall be punished as therein prescribed, the court repeatedly instructed that the evidence must show, beyond a reasonable doubt, the "fraudulent conversion" of the money intrusted to defendant, it was not necessary to go beyond the statutory definition, and further charge that the conversion must have been with intent to steal; a "fraudulent conversion," in the statutory definition of the offense, being synonymous with "taking with intent to steal" in ordinary larceny. Hagood v. State, 62 S. E. 641, 644, 5 Ga. App. 80.

TAKING ACCOUNT OF STOCK

"Taking an account of stock" is commonly used to denote ascertainment and valuation of items in an inventory. Kipp v. Laun, 131 N. W. 418, 422, 146 Wis. 591.

TAKING APPEAL

The "taking of an appeal" is a matter of procedure, and consists in taking the statutory steps to transfer the case to a higher court; and it can only be taken when allowed by law. Stutsman v. City of Cheyenne, 113 Pac. 322, 324, 18 Wyo. 499.

Filing an appeal bond and obtaining an order of the trial court granting an appeal from an appealable interlocutory order is not "taking an appeal," within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 659; but an appeal is taken only when the same is taken by filing the appeal bond required, and the completion of all the steps necessary to give the appellate court jurisdiction. Barney v. Elkhart County Trust Co., 79 N. E. 492, 493, 167 Ind. 505 citing Elliot's Appellate Procedure, §§ 107, 109; Terre Haute & L. Ry. Co. v. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co., 78 N. E. 661, 663, 167 Ind. 193).

TAKING BAIL

See Bail.

TAKING BY REPRESENTATION

Code, art. 46, § 19, provides that the realty of an intestate who leaves no children shall descend to his brothers and sisters and their descendants in equal degree, equally. Section 21 provides that if no brother or sister or any descendant be living then it shall descend to the father, if living, and if not to the mother, and if no mother be living then to the grandfather on the part of the father, and if no such grandfather living then to the descendants of such grandfather. Section 27 provides that in the descending or collateral line children of deceased parents shall by representation be considered in the same degree as the parent would have been if living, but that there shall be no representation admitted among collaterals after brothers' and sisters' children. Held that, where an intestate left no nearer relatives, grandnieces took to the exclusion of first cousins; the expression "taking by representation" being altogether different from "taking by inheritance," and applying only when parties seek to be considered in the same degree as a deceased parent would have been, if living. Hoffman v. Watson, 72 Atl. 479, 782, 109 Md. 532.

TAKING BY THE SELLER

The taking of property sold upon condition by a marshal in replevin at the suit of the seller was not a "taking by the seller," within Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 541, c. 418) § 116, requiring a seller on condition to retain the property for 30 days on retaking it, to enable the buyer to comply with the contract; the taking by the marshal placing the property in custodia legis. Sigal v. Frank E. Hatch Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 813, 61 Misc. Rep. 332.

TAKING ORDERS

Whether denominated "taking an order" or "making a contract" of sale is merely a different way of characterizing the transaction described in an information for violation of the liquor law forbidding any person to take or receive an order or to contract for the sale of intoxicating liquor with any person in the state. Taking an order is in substance the making of an executory contract of sale, and the making of a contract for the sale of intoxicating liquor would be established by proof that an order therefor was taken. The words "did then and there contract for a sale" do not refer to a completed sale, but to a sale agreed on only, and in this sense there is no substantial difference between that transaction and "taking an order." State v. Sherman, 107 Pac. 33, 35, 81 Kan. 874, 135 Am. St. Rep. 403.

The phrase "taking orders," as used in Sess. Laws 1901, p. 155, § 8, declaring that the act shall not apply to runners traveling for wholesale houses and taking orders, does not contemplate that the runner shall have the goods with him at the time of the sale and deliver them, but in the common acceptance of the phrase the agent or runner sells the goods by sample, taking orders therefor, and thereafter delivers the goods. In re Abel, 77 Pac. 621, 622, 10 Idaho, 288.

TAKING POSSESSION

A factor has no lien upon the goods of the principal unless he holds possession of the goods, and hence a factor acquired no lien on the product of a mill under a contract whereby the factor was to have exclusive sale of its products at a stipulated commission and was to advance 75 per cent. of the net cash value of the goods on hand stored in mill and under which the factor advanced money. The act of the factor's agent, who visited the mill with the mill president and superintendent and took an inventory of all the cloth on the looms and in the basement and warehouse and stated that he took possession of it as the property of the factor and appointed the superintendent as its agent to take charge of the cloth, where the president did not give his consent to the taking of the cloth, which remained in its former position, and the superintendent had no authority to transfer possession thereof to a stranger, did not amount to a "taking possession" of the cloth by the factor so as to give it a lien. Garrison v. Vermont Mills, 68 S. E. 142, 143, 152 N. C. 643.

TAKING TESTIMONY

In a constitutional sense, the viewing by the jury of the place of the crime is not the "taking of testimony." State v. Suber, 71 S. E. 466, 468, 89 S. C. 100.

TAKING WATERS

Under St. 1886, c. 240, § 2, authorizing a "taking" of the waters of Knowles' brook, and a purchase of all land necessary for the preservation and purity of such waters for the water supply of a town, land may be purchased with the expectation of obtaining the waters of Knowles' brook by percolation into wells on the land without "taking" the brook. Inhabitants of Stoughton v. Paul, 53 N. E. 272, 173 Mass. 148 (citing and explaining Bailey v. Inhabitants of Woburn, 126 Mass. 416, 418, 419, and citing Hollingsworth & Vose Co. v. Foxborough Water Supply Dist., 42 N. E. 574, 165 Mass. 186, 188).

St. 1846, c. 167, authorized the city of Boston to take the water of Long pond, etc., and the water which may flow into and from it, and any other ponds or streams within the distance of four miles from said Long pond, and any water rights connected therewith, and also to take land around the margin of Long pond and all land necessary to construct reservoirs, etc. Section 6 provided that the city should be liable for all damages that should be sustained by any persons in their property by "taking of any land, water, or water rights," or by the constructing of any aqueducts, etc., and if the owner of any "land, water, or water rights" shall not agree with the city on the damages, he may apply by petition for the assessment of his damages at any time within three years from the "taking of said land, water, or water rights." Section 8 provided that "no application shall be made to the court, for the assessment of damages for the taking of any water rights, until the water shall be actually withdrawn or diverted by the said city under the authority of this act; and any person or corporation, whose water rights may be thus taken and affected, may make his application aforesaid, at any time within three years from the time when the waters shall be first actually withdrawn or diverted as aforesaid." It was held that it was not entirely clear what is meant by the distinction between the "taking" of water and the "taking" of water rights, but it was suggested that, in general, the taking of a pond or stream with the water in it is a taking of the land and of the water of the proprietors of the pond or stream where the taking is made, and is also a taking of the water rights of such other persons as have the right to use the water elsewhere, such as lower proprietors on a stream, and that it was plain, however, whatever the distinction might be, that under the statute, when what is called "land" or "water" is taken the petition must be filed within three years from the taking, and that when what are called "water rights" are taken the petition must be filed within three years from the time the water is actually withdrawn or diverted, and that this implied that what is called "taking" of water rights is a taking for the purpose of ultimately withdrawing or diverting the water for the use of the city. Dwight Printing Co. v. City of Boston, 41 N. E. 285, 164 Mass. 247.

The taking of a deed of land on a brook, with the right to lay a pipe and construct an aqueduct, the erection of a dam and the construction of a reservoir on the brook, and the diversion of its water into a 10-inch main for use by the inhabitants of the city of Pittsfield, having been done professedly under the authority of St. 1892, p. 164, c. 185, providing for an additional water supply for the city of Pittsfield, are a "taking of water," within the meaning of that act. Bryant v. City of Pittsfield, 85 N. E. 739, 740, 199 Mass. 530.

TAKING WITHOUT DUE PROCESS

Deductions from the monthly salaries of persons holding positions under the school law authorized by P. L. 1907, p. 371, § 219, to form the Teachers' Retirement Fund, do not constitute the "taking" of property without due process of law; the salary to be paid being the net amount, and not the gross amounts, in computing such deduction. Allen v. Board of Education of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 101, 103, 81 N. J. Law, 135.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6371, providing for the appointment of an agent for absent heirs to take charge of the estate for their benefit, section 6372, providing for his bond, section 6373, providing that, when the estate shall remain in the agent's hands unclaimed for one year, it shall be sold under order of the court, and the proceeds, less costs, be paid into the county treasury, section 6374, relating to liability on the agent's bond, and section 6375, relating to payment of the proceeds of the sale to the owner, are not violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that property shall not be taken without due process of law, since the proceedings by which an heir acquires an inheritance is not a "taking" of his property, though it may be sold without his will, as, while the legal title may vest in heirs immediately upon the ancestor's death, it vests subject to administration under the direct provisions of Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4640, so that the title may be divested by administration. Bickford v. Stewart, 104 Pac. 263, 265, 55 Wash. 278, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623, 628.

The levying of a special assessment for local improvement does not constitute "taking" of property without due process of law. Riley v. Carrico, 110 Pac. 738, 739, 27 Okl. 33.

While a statute of a state requiring a railroad company to transport a particular commodity within the state for less than cost does not involve the "taking" of property without due process of law within the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the United States Constitution, so long as the railroad company obtains a fair revenue from the whole of its intrastate business, it does not follow that such a rate to be unreasonable and unjust within Const. art. 284, giving authority to the Railroad Commission to fix reasonable and just rates for railroads must also be obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. &

S. S. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Louisiana, 53 South 890, 901, 127 La. 636.

TALK

See Cross-Talk.

TALKED WITH

To say that a layman "talked with" a physician when he obtained medicine from him meant the same thing as saying that he "consulted" the physician. In an action on an insurance policy, the insurer defended on the ground that a warranty in the application that the insured had not consulted a physician for a certain length of time before his application was untrue. An instruction, requested by the defendant, was that if the insured talked with a doctor with regard to his health, and if the doctor gave the insured certain medicine for some ailment, the verdict should be for the defendant. Before giving the instruction the court changed the words "talked with" to "consulted." Held, that this change was not improper. Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 137 S. W. 292, 295, 157 Mo. App. 1.

TAMPERING WITH A WITNESS

"But the phrase 'tampering with a witness' is only the name for the offense defined by statute as being committed, 'if any person shall willfully or corruptly * * * endeavor to hinder or prevent any person from appearing * * * as a witness, or from giving evidence in any action or proceeding with intent thereby to obstruct the course of justice.' The offense is committed by endeavoring to prevent any person, whether subpoenaed as a witness or not, from appearing and giving evidence. Defendant was guilty of the offense described in the statute, if he willfully and corruptly endeavored to prevent another from appearing as a witness, or from giving evidence, with intent to obstruct the course of justice." State v. Bringgold, 82 Pac. 132, 135, 40 Wash. 12, 5 Ann. Cas. 716.

TANGIBLE OR INTANGIBLE PROPERTY

St. 1891, c. 425, § 1, providing for a collateral legacy tax on property within the commonwealth, whether "tangible or intangible," applies to real estate within the state, and cash bonds of railroad companies of other states, and bonds of the United States, when held or deposited within the state. Callahan v. Woodbridge, 51 N. E. 176, 177, 171 Mass. 595 (citing and adopting In re Whit- ing's Estate, 44 N. E. 715, 150 N. Y. 27, 34 L. R. A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640; In re Houdayer's Estate, 44 N. E. 718, 150 N. Y. 37, 34 L. R. A. 235, 55 Am. St. Rep. 642; State v. Dalrymple, 17 Atl. 82, 70 Md. 294, 3 L. R. A. 372; Alvany v. Powell, 55 N. C. 51).

TANGIBLE PROPERTY

Other tangible property, see Other.

The taxable property in the state of Kentucky may be divided into tangible and intangible. "Tangible property" may itself be divided into that owned by steam railroad corporations, distilled spirits, and all other tangible property. The tangible property, in addition to that of steam railroad corporations and distilled spirits, consists of three classes, to wit, lands, town lots, and personalty. Personalty is divided into that subject to equalization and that not so subject; that not so subject consisting of cash, accounts, notes, bonds, and stocks. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coulter, 131 Fed. 282, 284.

"Tangible property" is that which is capable of being possessed or realized, which is readily apprehensible by the mind, and is real, substantial, and evident. A contract for the sale or realty, containing an unqualified promise to pay, and on which the purchaser promises to pay, a remainder of the purchase price at a certain time, the seller holding the legal title as security for the fulfillment of such promise, creates a debt from the purchaser to the seller which is "tangible" personal property, and therefore taxable notwithstanding a provision for a forfeiture upon a failure to pay the remainder of the purchase price. Williams v. Board of Com'rs of Osage County, 114 Pac. 858, 859, 84 Kan. 508, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Gen. St. 1909, § 9215, and Webst. New Int. Dict.).

Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60, § 260, provides that in determining the separate values of the property within and without the state covered by a mortgage, for the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage taxable thereunder, the State Board of Tax Commissioners shall consider only the value of "tangible property" covered by each mortgage; section 250 provides that "real property" and "real estate" shall include everything a conveyance or mortgage of which can be recorded as a conveyance or mortgage of real property; section 253 provides that a tax is imposed upon the principal debt, which under any contingency, may be secured by a mortgage on real property situated in the state; and Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) §§ 33, 290, 291, declares estates for years to be chattels real, and that leases, excepting a lease not exceeding three years, can be recorded. Held, that real property was "tangible property," and that in determining the proportion of such a mortgage of real property to be taxed the value of the mortgagor's leasehold interests in property without the state was to be regarded as "tangible property." People ex rel. American Ice Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 138 N. Y. Supp. 344, 349, 153 App. Div. 532.

TANK

See Expansion Tank; Septic Tank.

A tank of any kind, as defined by Webster is "an artificial receptacle for liquids; a large basin or cistern." As used in a statute imposing a tax on each oil depot in the state, wherein petroleum or other oils are stored in bulk or tank, the word "tank" is to be construed as referring to oils stored in large oil tanks holding hundreds or thousands of barrels of oil, which are in common use, and not to oils stored in barrels in warehouses or sheds. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 1020, 1022, 119 Ky. 75.

TANK BASIS

TANNIN OR TANNIC ACID

Extract of nutgalls, containing a considerable percentage of tannic acid, which can be obtained therefrom in its commercial form only by a long series of chemical combinations and precipitations, held not to be sufficiently "similar in material" to "tannin or tannic acid" as to be dutiable at the rate applicable to those materials, by virtue of the similitude clause in the Tariff Act of 1897. W. N. Proctor & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 586; United States v. W. N. Proctor & Co., 145 Fed. 126, 131, 76 C. C. A. 96.

TANTAMOUNT

Where it would have been proper to have instructed that silence in a hypothetical case stated was in the nature of an admission, a charge that it was "tantamount" to an admission was substantially correct; the difference in meaning between the two expressions being very slight, and any inaccuracy being eliminated when the jury were told that, if they found the facts as contended by the commonwealth, they would give to such facts such weight as they considered them entitled to. Commonwealth v. McCabe, 39 N. E. 777, 779, 163 Mass. 98.

TAP

A contract to furnish water for public purposes contained this clause: "Said first party agrees to furnish water at its mains, without extra charge, for the following municipal purposes: * * * For eighteen (18) taps or faucets, in computing which each orifice beyond the main shall be counted as one tap, except that in the town hall and in schoolhouses one faucet may be connected with all the water-closets and urinals in any one building." In addition to the water charged in the account annexed, plaintiff has for many years furnished without charge water for the city hall with thirteen separate taps or faucets, for the city farm with six faucets, and for the city farm stable with one faucet; each building being connected with the main by one service pipe. The plumbing for each water-closet and for the urinal in the town hall is entirely separate and distinct from that of each other. Held, that each of these faucets was an orifice beyond the main and must be counted as one "tap." Public Works Co. v. City of Old Town, 66 Atl. 723, 724, 102 Me. 306.

TAPPING HOLE

In the open-hearth furnaces in an iron mill in which iron is melted is a channel with an opening at the bottom called a "tapping hole," through which the molten metal is drawn or let out of the furnace. Illinois Steel Co. v. Coffey, 68 N. E. 751, 205 Ill. 206.

TAPE

Narrow woven cotton strips bearing "featherstitch" or "herringbone" ornamentation, used largely for binding seams, but commercially known as "featherstitch braids" at and prior to the enactment of Tariff Act July 24, 1897 (30 Stat. 181, c. 11, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1662), which shifted braids from the lower duty of the notions schedule (paragraph 320) to the higher duty of the trimmings schedule (paragraph 339), without any change of phraseology to indicate that it was the purpose to depart from the settled commercial meaning of the word "braids," must be deemed dutiable at 60 per cent. under the trimmings schedule, as cotton braids, and not at 45 per cent. under the notions schedule, as "bindings" or as "tapes," especially in view of the settled administrative construction to such effect. United States v. Baruch, 32 Sup. Ct. 306, 223 U. S. 191, 56 L. Ed. 399.

TAPE FILM

A claim of a reissued patent of "a camera having a single stationary lens" is the same as a claim in the original patent of "a single camera," and a "single sensitized tape film" is "a tape film." Edison v. American Mutoscope & Biograph Co., 144 Fed. 121, 123.

TAPE FUSE

There are two kinds of fuse in use in mines, known as "tape fuse" and "string fuse," distinguished outwardly by their coverings; the tape fuse being wound with tape, and the string fuse with string. The interior portion of the tape fuse consisted of a thread of cotton and a train of fine black powder extending through its entire length, incased and inclosed by jute thread. In the string fuse the jute thread which formed the immediate covering of the powder train was inclosed by gutta percha, while the corresponding covering of the double tape fuse was a preparation of coal pitch. Wilita v. Interstate Iron Co., 115 N. W. 169, 170, 103 Minn. 303, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128.

TAPIOCA

"The merchandise [tapioca flour], though entered at the custom house at San Francisco by the importers under various names, such as tapioca, sago, and root flour, is all the same substance, viz., the starch grains contained in and derived from the root botanically known as 'Jatropha manihot.' In the West Indies the root is known as 'cassava' or 'manioc'; in Brazil as 'mandioc'; but all these names indicate the same thing, without change of condition or character. There are two varieties of the root, one of which is very poisonous, and both varieties contain a large portion of starch. The starchy substance constituting the importations involved in this controversy consists of the starch grains obtained from the manihot root by washing, scraping, and grating, or disintegrating it into pulp, which in the poisonous variety is submitted to pressure so as to separate therefrom the deleterious juices. The starch grains settle and the juice is subsequently decanted, leaving as a deposit a powder, which, after repeated washings with cold water and after being dried, is nearly pure starch, and is insoluble in cold water. This is the substance in controversy. If sufficient heat and motion are afterwards applied to this substance, a mechanical change takes place. The grains become fractured and thereby agglutinated. The latter substance is partly soluble in cold water, and is the granulated tapioca known as 'pearl' and 'flake' tapioca of commerce. The importations in question are from China, and are made chiefly for the purpose of supplying Chinese laundrymen, who use the flour as a starch and to a slight extent for food purposes. Its use for starch purposes in the laundry is, however, limited to the Chinese, except that in some instances in San Francisco it is so used in their business by white laundrymen by mixing it with wheat or corn starch. Wheat and corn and potato starch are the starches commonly used in the United States. Tapioca flour is also used in the Eastern states by calico printers and carpet manufacturers to thicken colors, and in the manufacture of a substitute for gum arabic and other gums. It is also sometimes used for sizing cotton goods, and in addition as an adulterant in the manufacture of candy and other articles. Among the white people dealing with the Chinese on the Pacific Coast the substance in question is commonly known as 'Chinese starch.' In the general importing markets of the United States it is commercially known as 'tapioca flour,' and in those markets the term 'tapioca' includes that article in three forms, viz., flake tapioca, pearl tapioca, and tapioca flour. The substance in question is not imported into San Francisco by others than Chinese." Chew Hing Lung & Co. v. Wise, 20 Sup. Ct. 320, 176 U. S. 157, 166, 44 L. Ed. 412.

TARIFF RATE

"Tariff rate" can mean nothing but a regular schedule rate as distinguished from a "special rate," though common carriers may have two special rates applicable to shipments of a given class of property. A shipping contract, reciting that the charge for transportation was at the tariff rate, is a contract for the rate charged for shipment under a nonrelease contract, though it also recites that the rate is less than the rate charged for shipment at the carrier's risk. Holland v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 123 S. W. 987, 993, 139 Mo. App. 702.

When a shipper's contract recites that the rate charged is the "tariff rate," it is to be construed as the highest rate a carrier can charge, and such a recital will control over a recital that the rate was less than the rate charged for shipments at the carrier's risk. McElvain v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 131 S. W. 738, 744, 151 Mo. App. 126.

TAVERN

While an inn or "tavern" is something more than a place where liquor is sold, it cannot be questioned that the most striking feature of the license to keep an inn or tavern under the Inns and Tavern Act is the right it gives to sell spirituous liquors. Conover v. Gregson, 60 Atl. 31, 32, 72 N. J. Law, 103.

Inn or hotel synonyms

There is no legal distinction between an "inn," or "tavern," and a "hotel"; but, if there be such, there is no practical difference between them, such as would render regulations imposed by Act N. J., April 13, 1906, § 4, commonly known as the "Bishop's Law" (P. L. p. 203), subjecting inns and taverns and hotels to the restrictions mentioned in the section, unless such inns and taverns have at least ten spare rooms and beds for the accommodation of boarders, transients, and travelers, necessary and appropriate in the case of small hotels, and not in the case of such inns or taverns. The section, therefore, means that all inns, taverns, and hotels, unless they have at least ten spare rooms and beds for the accommodation of boarders, transients, and travelers, are subject to the restrictions. Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 70 Atl. 363, 365, 75 N. J. Law, 557.

TAVERN KEEPER

One may be a bona fide "tavern keeper," notwithstanding the receipts from the bar are larger than those from the tavern proper. Schneider v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 111 S. W. 303, 304, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 107.

The crucial attributes of a "tax" are that it is a toll upon property without the consent of the owner, and the money secured is to be applied toward governmental expenses of the body politic for whose benefit the imposition is to be made. Heerwagen v. Cross-town St. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 218, 225, 90 App. Div. 275.

A "tax" is a pecuniary burden imposed for the support of the government. City of Savannah v. Cooper, 63 S. E. 138, 140, 131 Ga. 670.

"A 'tax' is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by the government for the use of the nation or state." Webster's Dict. Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature on persons or property to raise money for public purposes. Etna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 59 S. E. 148, 149, 78 S. C. 445, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818.

A "tax" is a tribute on property in return for the protection which the government affords its owner. Buster & Jones v. Wright, 82 S. W. 855, 865, 869, 5 Ind. T. 404 (citing Exchange Bank of Columbus v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 10; Desty, Tax'n, 53).

A "tax" is an enforced proportional contribution levied upon persons, property, or income for governmental needs. Pittsburgh Rys. Co. v. Pittsburgh, 60 Atl. 1077, 1079, 211 Pa. 479.

The word "taxes" means a charge levied on person or property to raise general revenue to support the government. Brownell Improvement Co. v. Nixon, 92 N. E. 693, 695, 48 Ind. App. 195.

"Tax," as used in a constitutional provision providing for the levy of a tax as a condition precedent to the valid issuance of bonds, means a fixed rate of per cent. of the assessed value to be collected annually, without reference to the amount that would be realized each year as values might advance or decline during the life of the bonds. Pettibone v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 74 N. E. 387, 392, 215 Ill. 304.

A "tax" on a civil privilege is fixed as to amount by the classification of the persons or subjects required to pay the tax, and the Legislature may impose such a tax and fix the amount thereof and classify the subjects on which the tax is imposed, so long as the classification is reasonable. Pocahontas Consol. Collieries Co. v. Commonwealth, 73 S. E. 446, 448, 113 Va. 108.

"A 'tax' is an exaction of sovereignty, and not something derived from an agreement." People ex rel. Nassau Electric R. Co. v. Grout, 103 N. Y. Supp. 975, 119 App. Div. 130.

A "tax" is not a "punishment." Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

A "tax" has been variously defined as a burden, or charge imposed, or proportional contribution levied, by the sovereign, for the support of the government and for all public needs or purposes. Louisiana Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Madere, 50 South. 609, 124 La. 635.

A "tax" is a liability created by statute. State v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 112 N. W. 515, 520, 132 Wis. 345 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Certain Lands in Redwood County, 42 N. W. 473, 40 Minn. 512).

"Taxes" are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature on persons or property to raise money for public purposes. City of Austin v. Nalle, 120 S. W. 996, 102 Tex. 536.

"Taxes" are enforced contributions levied for public needs, and are the property of the citizens demanded and taken by the government to enable it to discharge its functions, and the needs of the government constitute both the occasion and the limitation of the taxing power. Madary v. City of Fresno, 128 Pac. 340, 343, 20 Cal. App. 91.

"'Taxes' are defined to be burdens or charges imposed by legislative authority, on persons or property, to raise money for public purposes, or, more briefly, an imposition for the supply of the public treasury." State ex rel. Nettleton Case, 81 Pac. 554, 556, 39 Wash. 177, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152, 109 Am. St. Rep. 874.

Generally speaking, a "tax" is a pecuniary burden laid on individuals or property for the purpose of supporting the government. State of New Jersey v. Anderson, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 140, 203 U. S. 483, 495, 51 L. Ed. 284.

"'Taxation' is the absolute conversion of private property for public use, and its validity rests on the use." State ex rel. Consolidated Stone Co. v. Houser, 104 N. W. 77, 79, 125 Wis. 256, 110 Am. St. Rep. 824 (quoting Attorney General v. City of Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400, 438).

Comp. St. 1901, c. 77, § 182, expressly defines a tax to be "any tax, special assessments, or costs, interest, or penalty imposed upon property." City of Omaha v. Hodgskins, 97 N. W. 346, 347, 70 Neb. 229.

As every one's tax is his share of public expense an unequal division of that expense is not "taxation." Any scheme for a disproportional division of public expense is not "taxation." "Taxation" is a division among the people of the city of the expense of their own government of themselves—a division made by themselves, through their own agents in pursuance of their original contract. Thompson v. Kidder, 65 Atl. 392, 393, 74 N. H. 89, 12 Ann. Cas. 948 (quoting Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 580, 589).

"A 'tax' is the means by which a burden primarily borne by the state is transferred to the citizen. * * * Three things are essential to a 'tax,' as that term is understood by our Constitution: First, the ascertainment of a sum certain, or that can be rendered certain, to be imposed on the collective body of taxpayers; second, a legal imposition of that sum as an obligation on the collective body of taxpayers; third, an apportionment of such sum among individual taxpayers, so as to ascertain the part or share that each should bear. * * * The first two acts above described, namely, the ascertainment of a sum to be imposed on the collective body of taxpayers and its imposition by a legislative declaration to that effect, are essentially legislative acts, or acts proper directly to the law-making function of the government. * * * The third act, namely, the apportionment of the whole sum imposed by way of tax on the collective body of taxpayers upon the separate individuals composing that body, is usually an administrative act, performed under specific statutory directions, ascertaining the mode and time of its performance." Rice v. Shealey, 50 S. E. 868, 870, 71 S. C. 161 (quoting and adopting definition in Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 S. C. 430, 453).

"The power of 'taxation,' indispensable to the existence of every civilized government, is exercised upon the assumption of an equivalent rendered to the taxpayer in the protection of his person and property, in addition to the value of such property, or in the creation and maintenance of public conveniences in which he shares, such, for instance, as roads, bridges, sidewalks, pavements, and schools for the education of his children. If the taxing power be in no position to render these services, or otherwise to benefit the person or property taxed, and such property be wholly within the taxing power of another state, to which it may be said to owe an allegiance, and to which it looks for protection, the taxation of such property within the domicile of the owner partakes rather of the nature of an extortion than a tax, and has been repeatedly held by this court to be beyond the power of the Legislature, and a taking of property without due process of law." Due process of law is denied a Kentucky corporation by a tax assessed under the authority of Ky. St. § 4020, upon its rolling stock permanently located in other states and employed there in the prosecution of its business. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 37, 199 U. S. 194, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.

The power of "taxation" is the power to take from the owner that which is his to help defray the expense of the protection received from the government, and, if the power is illegally exercised, it is an invasion of private right, and, in the absence of specific limitation, the party injured may resort to the courts to vindicate his right against those who attempt such invasion by any form of action which he could use against any other wrongdoer with respect to the same class of injury. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Trapp, 186 Fed. 114, 120, 108 C. C. A. 226.

Assessment for improvements

The assessment of benefits for local improvements has never been regarded as a "tax," or termed such in legislative proceedings in our public or private laws, or in popular intercourse. Board of Improvement of Paving Dist. No. 5 of Ft. Smith v. Sisters of Mercy, 109 S. W. 1165-1167, 36 Ark. 109.

"It is apparent on the face of the Constitution that the framers of that instrument did not use the word 'taxes' and the term 'special assessments' as equivalents of each other, or that either included the other." Farnham v. City of Lincoln, 106 N. W. 666, 668, 75 Neb. 502.

A "special assessment" is a "tax" in the sense that it is an enforced contribution from the property owner for the public benefit, but not in the sense that it is a burden, as he receives an equivalent in the shape of the enhanced value of his property, and only property benefited by the improvement may be assessed, the district being determined legislatively but the amount of the tax is determined judicially, and according to the benefits. Although possessing many points of similarity, special assessments and taxes are inherently different and the same rule of construction where the words are used in statutes will not be indiscriminately applied. State v. Furstenau, 129 N. W. 81, 83, 20 N. D. 540.

Rev. Laws 1902, c. 13, § 86, providing that no action to recover back a "tax" shall be maintained, unless commenced within three months after payment of the tax, applies both to an action to recover back an ordinary municipal tax imposed for general purposes and to an action to recover a local improvement assessment. Wheatland v. City of Boston, 88 N. E. 769, 770, 202 Mass. 258.

"An assessment for benefits by the construction of levees by a levee district is not a "tax," and cannot therefore be legally objected to because nonuniform, or not in proportion to the value of the property. Des Moines & Mississippi Levee Dist. No. 1 v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 145 S. W. 35, 39, 240 Mo. 614, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 543.

Where a contract with brokers for the sale of lots required defendant to furnish a certificate of title, showing the property clear of incumbrances, except " * * * taxes assessed, but not due and payable," defendant was bound to clear the property from all street assessments; the word "tax" being ordinarily used to refer only to taxes assessed for state, county, or city purposes, and not to designate street assessments for public improvements. Alderson v. Houston, 96 Pac. 884, 886, 154 Cal. 1.

The word "assessment" is not included in the word "taxes," so that a warranty in a deed against all incumbrances except "taxes" makes the warrantor liable for an improvement assessment. Sanders v. Brown, 47 S. W. 461, 463, 65 Ark. 498.

An assessment for a public improvement is not a "tax," within the rule that a life tenant must pay ordinary taxes, and, where a public improvement is of a permanent nature, the assessment therefor may be equitably divided between the life tenant and remainderman, but, where the improvement is of a temporary character benefiting the life interest only, the assessment must be paid wholly by the life tenant. Troy v. Protestant Episcopal Church, 56 South. 982, 983, 174 Ala. 380.

There is a distinction between a tax in its ordinary sense and a local assessment for municipal purposes, and under a contract of lease giving the lessee an option to purchase when the amount of rent paid reaches a specified sum, in which the lessee agrees to pay all "taxes" on the premises, the lessee is not liable for a sewer assessment. Johnson v. Dairymple, 123 S. W. 1020, 1023, 140 Mo. App. 232.

The word "taxes" has two well-recognized meanings, one inclusive and the other exclusive of special assessments for local improvements. Which meaning is intended, where the word is used by a written contract, must be determined by the context. Where a company owning a line of railroad grants to another company a right to the joint use thereof for a term of 999 years in consideration of the payment of a stated annual sum, to be increased by interest upon any amounts expended for the permanent improvements by the owner by joint consent, the contract further providing that the expenses of maintaining the property shall be divided in proportion to the use made of it, and that the "taxes" on property jointly used shall be included in the cost of maintenance, the word "taxes," as so used, is to be construed as including such special assessment. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co. v. Kansas City N. W. R. Co., 88 Pac. 1085, 1086, 75 Kan. 167, 12 Ann. Cas. 588 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Though special assessments for local improvements are an exercise of the taxing power, special assessments for the construction of a drainage system, levied on the land specially benefited, are not "taxes" within Const. art. 12, §§ 4, 11, providing that taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws, and for public purposes only, and prohibiting the Legislature from levying taxes on the inhabitants or property in any county or municipal corporation for county or municipal purposes. Billings Sugar Co. v. Fish, 106

Laws 1909, c. 295, which added sections 1210h1, 1210h2, 1210h3, and 1210h4, is under the subhead entitled, "General Taxes; Reassessment When Assessment Void"; the first section providing that, whenever any action is commenced to set aside any sale of lands for the nonpayment of taxes or to cancel any tax certificate or restrain the issuing of bonds, the plaintiff shall, as a condition precedent, deposit the amount of the taxes, interest, and charges thereof. Held that, while there is a distinction between a tax and a general assessment, yet the word "tax" is broad enough to include a special assessment; and as the added sections are general in their nature, and as section 1210h mentions both general taxes and special assessments, the deposit must be made in case of an attack on a special assessment. Wisconsin Real Estate Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 138 N. W. 642, 643, 151 Wis. 198.

St. 1898, § 1164, providing that any person aggrieved by the levy and collection of any unlawful tax by any town, city, or village may maintain an action for the recovery of all money so collected, and in case any such town, city, or village shall pay a judgment recovered after having paid over to the county treasurer the state and county tax levy collected as part of such unlawful tax, it shall be credited by the county treasurer with the amount so paid on the tax for the ensuing year, is found under the subhead of "miscellaneous provisions" among statutes relating to "the assessment and collection of special taxes." Held that, as the statute as first enacted did not include the words "city" and "village," but merely provided for an action against towns, and as the word "tax," while generically broad enough to include special assessments, appears to relate only to general assessments, no action may be maintained under this statute to recover a special assessment for public improvement paid to the city and by it paid to the contractor. Marine Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 138 N. W. 640, 641, 151 Wis. 239.

Where a testator bequeathed unto his wife for life the total income of his estate after deducting taxes, special assessment for sewer improvements equaling about five years income are not to be deducted as taxes; the word "taxes" ordinarily meaning the annual amounts levied upon persons or property for governmental purposes, and not special assessments for benefits of public improvements. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 84 Atl. 629, 632, 80 N. J. Eq. 364.

Same—Commutation

The provisions of section 4, art. 9, of the Constitution, against commutation for "taxes," do not apply to special assessments to pay for local improvements levied upon the property benefited thereby; and municipal authorities have power to settle and compromise suits involving the validity of such special assessments, notwithstanding that section. The Constitution does not use the word "taxes" and the term "special assessments" as equivalents of each other. Farnham v. City of Lincoln, 106 N. W. 666, 667, 75 Neb. 502.

Same—Eminent domain distinguished

The "levy" of special assessments for street improvements is the exercise of a species of the "taxing power" of the state, and not of the right of "eminent domain." New York, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. City of Hammond, 83 N. E. 244, 245, 170 Ind. 493.

Same—Equality and uniformity

A special assessment for local improvement is not a "tax," within the meaning of the constitutional requirement that all taxes shall be uniform throughout the state. Riley v. Carrico, 110 Pac. 738, 739, 27 Okl. 33.

"Taxation," within the constitutional requirement that all "taxation" shall be uniform, refers only to taxes of a general nature, and does not apply to local improvements. Anderson v. Lower Merion Tp., 66 Atl. 1115, 1120, 217 Pa. 369.

Special assessments authorized by Drainage Law (Acts 1909, c. 185) § 11, are not "taxes," within Const. art. 2, § 29, providing that the General Assembly shall have power to authorize the several counties and incorporated towns to impose taxes for county and corporate purposes in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and that all property shall be taxed according to value, etc.; and hence they may be properly levied according to the benefit found to be derived from the improvement by the property assessed. State ex rel. v. Powers, 137 S. W. 1110, 1112, 124 Tenn. 553.

Acts 1905, p. 585, c. 278, authorizing the levy of special assessments for municipal improvements on abutting property benefited thereby, is not in violation of Const. art. 2, §§ 28, 29, requiring that all property be equally and uniformly taxed according to its value throughout the state, and authorizing counties and incorporated towns to impose taxes on property according to value on principles established in regard to state taxation; special assessments not being "taxation," within such provisions. Arnold v. City of Knoxville, 90 S. W. 469, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, 5 Ann. Cas. 881.

Same—Exemptions

The word "taxes," in Const. art. 9, § 3, exempting homesteads from sales under judgments, except for taxes, etc., includes all assessments or impositions authorized under the taxing power, so that homesteads are not exempt from the lien of special assessments for local improvements. Shibley v. Ft. Smith & Van Buren Dist., 132 S. W. 444, 449, 96 Ark. 410.

A street improvement assessment, not made in accordance with the Constitution and laws regulating the levy and assessment of ad valorem taxes, is not a "tax," within Const. art. 16, § 50, exempting the homestead from forced sale for any debt except, among others, taxes due thereon. City of Beaumont v. Russell, 112 S. W. 950, 953, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 351.

A "tax" has reference to the general revenues for the purpose of maintaining and carrying on the government, where the benefits are alike enjoyed by all, and where no special benefits are enjoyed. Consequently a special assessment, levied to defray the cost of a public improvement, is not a "tax," within Const. art. 7, § 2, exempting school districts from taxation. In re Howard Avenue North in City of Seattle, 86 Pac. 1117, 1118, 44 Wash. 62, 120 Am. St. Rep. 973, 12 Ann. Cas. 417.

Section 3 of the private act of December 20, 1860, conferring corporate powers upon plaintiff, which provides that a certain amount of plaintiff's ground, together with the property thereon, "shall be exempt from all taxation, state, county, municipal, and special during the existence of this charter," does not exempt such property from assessments for local improvements; the word "tax" not including assessments, and the word "special" as used with "taxation" referring to special taxes levied and collected in the manner of general taxes, such as road and school taxes, and not to local assessments. Board of Improvement of Paving Dist. No. 5 of Ft. Smith v. Sisters of Mercy, 109 S. W. 1165, 1167, 86 Ark. 109.

Under an act of incorporation providing that the property of the corporation should not be subject to taxes and "assessments," the words "taxes" and "assessments" are not synonymous, but have a different meaning, and thereunder the corporation is exempt from "assessments" of special benefits from local improvements, as well as from taxes for general revenue for public use. State v. Mayor, etc., of City of Newark, 36 N. J. Law, 478, 479, 13 Am. Rep. 464.

The word "assessments," as used in statutes providing for a gross earnings tax, means a burden not included in the word "taxes," and that they exempt the property used for railroad purposes of railway companies paying the gross earnings tax, not only from all general and ordinary taxes, but from all local, special, or extraordinary assessments or charges. In re Drainage Ditch No. 6, 109 N. W. 993, 99 Minn. 454.

"While in a general sense it may be said that a betterment assessment is a kind of tax, still we think that there is a well-understood difference in the meaning of the two terms as generally used in our statutes. The word 'tax' is used when one is speaking of the annual tax, or any other tax which forms a part of the general burden for public purposes, while the word "assessment" is used to designate the amount to be paid into the public treasury as a part of the benefit specially received by reason of some local improvement. The first is a burden, inasmuch as it adds nothing to the value of the estate taxed. The second simply requires the landowner to share with the public the special benefit received by the local improvement, and it cannot be assessed unless there be such benefit, and even then not beyond that. The value of the estate is always diminished by the first, but never by the second. This distinction between the usual legal signification of the words seems, as above stated, to be quite generally recognized in our statutes." Hence an exemption "from taxes" does not exempt from assessment for benefits due to a street improvement. Boston Asylum & Farm School for Indigent Boys v. Charles, 62 N. E. 961, 962, 180 Mass. 485.

The right to "taxation" is essential to the existence of government, and all property of every description is subject to taxation, unless it has been specifically exempted, and all laws exempting property will receive a strict construction, and nothing will be held to be within the exemption which does not clearly appear so to be, and there is a distinction between general taxation and special assessment, and property exempt from general taxation is not necessarily exempt from special assessment. Under Const. 1870, art. 4, § 26, providing that the state shall not be a defendant in any suit, and article 8, § 2, providing that all school lands shall be faithfully applied to school purposes, and article 12, § 6, of the school law, providing that no part of the principal of any township or county school fund shall be expended, lots outside of section 16, donated by Congress, the title to which is in the board of education of a city, are not specially exempted from street improvements. City of Chicago, to Use of Schools, v. City of Chicago, 69 N. E. 580, 581, 207 Ill. 37 (citing People ex rel. Davis v. City of Chicago, 17 N. E. 56, 124 Ill. 636; In re Swigert, 6 N. E. 469, 119 Ill. 83).

Assessment of road labor

Levies payable in labor on highways, though in the nature of a tax, are not understood as embraced in the term "tax"; and statutory provisions for assessment are not applicable to it unless made so by express terms. State v. Ide, 77 Pac. 961, 965, 35 Wash. 576, 67 L. R. A. 280, 102 Am. St. Rep. 914, 1 Ann. Cas. 634.

As costs

A judgment for costs in a criminal prosecution is not a debt "due as taxes" levied by the state, within the exception in Bankr. Act 1898, § 17, and is satisfied by discharge of the judgment debtor in bankruptcy. Olds v. Forrester, 102 N. W. 419, 420, 126 Iowa, 456.

As debt

As incumbrance

See Incumbrance.

Indebtedness for taxes collected

An indebtedness of a bankrupt to a county for taxes collected by him as county tax collector and not accounted for, or which should have been collected, and for which he is liable under the law of the state, is not one for "taxes" legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the county, and as such entitled to priority in the payment over the claims of general creditors. In re Waller, 142 Fed. 883, 886.

License or license fee

"The term 'tax' has come to be applied to all sorts of exactions which swell the public funds, stopping short only of fines imposed as punishment for criminal occurrences. Laws requiring payment to the state of compensation for the enjoyment of a privilege, such as that of a foreign corporation to do business within the state, or requiring contribution to the public treasury as mere police regulation, such as license fees of hawkers or peddlers and saloon license fees, are commonly called 'taxes.' In a broad sense, most of them are referable to the taxing power, though probably no one would regard them as taxes in a constitutional sense." State v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 108 N. W. 594, 602, 128 Wis. 449.

License taxes, imposed by a municipal corporation for revenue, are "taxes," within Const. art. 11, § 12. Hence the power to collect them can be vested in municipalities only by general laws. Ex parte Jackson, 77 Pac. 457, 458, 143 Cal. 504.

In a multitude of cases the words "license" and "tax" are used interchangeably, and some courts treat of them as meaning the same thing. But, when they endeavor to sustain the law or ordinance requiring a license, they locate the authority under the police power of the state, and not its taxing power, for by such shifting of authority some constitutional limitations are avoided. In other cases the charter or enabling act of the city expressly defined the power to license or tax. Pegg v. City of Columbus, 89 N. E. 14, 20, 80 Ohio St. 367, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 453 (citing Tomlinson v. City of Indianapolis, 43 N. E. 9, 144 Ind. 142, 36 L. R. A. 413).

The line of demarcation between a business or "occupation tax" and a license law, or between a tax and a license, is very plain in theory, but often very dim in municipal practice. A "license" to carry on a business or trade has been defined to be an official permit to carry on the same, or perform other acts forbidden by law, except to persons obtaining such permit. Bouv. Law Dict. A "tax" is a pecuniary burden imposed for the support of the government. It has been defined to be the enforced proportional contribution of persons and property levied by the government and for all public needs. A "specified tax" upon all agents and representatives of packing houses, and upon all agents and representatives of dealers in packing house goods or products having a place of business or stock of merchandise in the city and selling to customers therein, is a vocation or "occupation tax." City of Savannah v. Cooper, 63 S. E. 138-140, 131 Ga. 670.

A municipality sustains a dual relation to its streets and thoroughfares—that of sovereign and proprietor. In the latter capacity a municipality may under certain circumstances contract for the use of its streets. A municipal charge for the use of the streets for any lawful purpose is the exercise of the city's right of proprietorship, and is not the imposition of a privilege or license tax. "A 'tax' is a demand of sovereignty. A toll is a demand of proprietorship." But the grant of authority to a telegraph company to set its poles in the street for a fixed rental, when accepted and acted upon, became an irrevocable contract, and the city could not set it aside, or arbitrarily increase the rental above that obligated to be paid. City Council of Augusta v. Augusta & A. Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 992, 993, 130 Ga. 815, 124 Am. St. Rep. 197.

Power conferred on cities of the first class to regulate a business includes the power to license; a license fee not being a "tax" upon an occupation, but a compensation for issuing the license, for keeping the record, and for municipal supervision. Carpenter v. Little Rock, 142 S. W. 162, 164, 101 Ark. 238.

The burden imposed by Laws 1909, p. 654, on manufacturers of, and dealers in, intoxicating liquors, except wines and spirits produced from fruits grown in the state, is not a "tax" within Const. art. 10, §§ 6, 7, providing what property shall be exempt from taxation, and the statute is not invalid because exempting from its operation wines or spirits made from grapes or fruits grown in the state. State v. Parker Distilling Co., 139 S. W. 453, 463, 236 Mo. 219.

The new charter of the city of Baltimore (section 6), authorizing the mayor and council "to license, tax, and regulate all businesses, trades, avocations or professions," conferred on the city the power to impose a charge on commission merchants for the privilege of selling in the city market; such charge being a tax for revenue, and not a license or regu-

Buffalo City Charter (Laws 1891, p. 137, c. 105) § 17, subd. 6, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 83, c. 31, empowering the city to enact an ordinance imposing a "tax" on automobiles "for the privilege" of operating the same on its streets, and to prohibit such use in case of nonpayment of the tax, and to provide a penalty for violation of the ordinance, is repealed by a later act, the Motor Vehicle Law (Laws 1904, p. 1316, c. 538) § 4, subd. 8, providing that the city shall have no power to pass, maintain, or enforce ordinances requiring from owners of automobiles "licenses" or permits to use the streets, or prohibiting them from the free use thereof; a tax for the privilege of operating automobiles on the streets being but a license. City of Buffalo v. Lewis, 108 N. Y. Supp. 450, 452, 123 App. Div. 163.

The word "tax," in Const. § 180, requiring every act enacted by the General Assembly levying a "tax" to specify distinctly the purpose for which the "tax" is levied, and no "tax" levied for one purpose shall be devoted to another, when considered in connection with sections 171, 172, 174, and 181, providing what property shall be exempt, and authorizing the General Assembly by general laws to provide for the payment of license fees on franchises, etc., does not include a license tax, and an act levying a license tax need not specify the purpose for which the "tax" is levied. Brown-Foreman Co. v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 321, 324, 125 Ky. 402.

"Where the fee is imposed for the purpose of regulation, and the statute requires compliance with certain conditions in addition to the payment of the prescribed sum, such sum is a license proper, imposed by virtue of the police power; but where the fee is exacted solely for revenue purposes, and payment of such fees gives the right to carry on the business without the performance of any further conditions, it is a tax." The tax imposed on social clubs by Acts 1902-04, pp. 155, 226, c. 148, cl. 144, requiring social clubs which keep liquors on sale to pay $2 for every member of the club in lieu of all other taxes, is, in view of the provisions of the statute looking to the regulation of such clubs, requiring them to make reports as to their membership, officers, dues, etc., and providing for a forfeiture of their charters for failure to make such reports, a license tax, within the meaning of Code 1904, § 1042, authorizing a city or town to impose a tax in addition to the state tax for the privilege of doing anything for which a "license tax" is required within the city or town, and consequently an additional tax may be imposed by the town in which the club is located. Town of Phebus v. Manhattan Social Club, 52 S. E. 839, 840, 105 Va. 144.

Code Iowa, § 5006, provides a penalty by fine and imprisonment for selling cigarettes in violation of its provisions; and section 5007 imposes an annual tax on every cigarette dealer, which tax is declared to be in addition to all other taxes and penalties, and shall constitute a perpetual lien on all property used in connection with the business, but that payment of the tax shall not be a bar to prosecution under any law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes. Held, that such imposition constituted a "tax," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64a, 30 Stat. 563 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447), providing that the bankruptcy court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due by the bankrupt, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors; the word "tax" in the latter section not being used in any restricted sense, but broadly to include all obligations imposed by the state and general governments under their respective taxing or police power for governmental or public purposes. In re Otto F. Lange Co., 159 Fed. 586, 588.

A "license tax" imposed on a telegraph company for carrying on its business in a certain town is a "tax" in the ordinary acceptance of the term, and is within the provision of the tax laws which provides that the collection of taxes shall not be stayed or prevented by an injunction. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Town of Winsboro, 50 S. E. 870, 872, 71 S. C. 231.

As used in Const. art. 8, § 1, providing that taxes shall be levied upon such property as the Legislature shall prescribe, and declaring that the rule of taxation shall be uniform, the words "taxes" and "taxation" include taxation by means of excise or duty upon occupations and privileges. Nunne-macher v. State, 108 N. W. 627, 639, 129 Wis. 190, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121, 9 Ann. Cas. 711.

By "taxation" is meant the providing of revenue for the ordinary expenses of state or municipal government. The license fee provided for in Laws 1903, p. 232, c. 120, § 15, imposed on persons selling milk, and authorizing the collection thereof by the meat and milk inspector, which office is created by the act, is not a tax, though required to be paid into the state treasury. State v. McKinney, 74 Pac. 1095, 1099, 29 Mont. 375, 1 Ann. Cas. 579.

The registration fee of $2 required by St. 1903, p. 507, c. 473, § 1, providing for the registration of automobiles, is a license fee, and not a "tax for revenue." Commonwealth v. Boyd, 74 N. E. 255, 256, 188 Mass. 79, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464.

A "tax," as ordinarily understood, is a contribution demanded by a sovereign from his subjects as one evidence of their allegiance, in return for his protection. A demand of a certain amount by the Choctaw Nation for the privilege of doing business is simply a license or permit fee, and not a tax, in the ordinary acceptance of that term. Zevely v. Welmer, 82 S. W. 941, 943, 5 Ind. T. 646.

An ordinance enacted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco is entitled "An ordinance imposing a license for the purpose of regulation upon persons * * * selling * * * malt or fermented liquors * * * in quantities of one quart or more, less than five gallons, when the same is contained in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold, * * * requiring a permit therefor." The ordinance makes it unlawful to sell such liquors "without first having obtained a permit therefor from the board of police commissioners, and paying the license fee herein provided"; requires any person doing such act to procure a license, paying therefor "a license fee of $150 per annum"; requires application for renewals to be passed upon by the board of police commissioners, and declares that the ordinance and "the license herein imposed" are enacted to regulate the business described. The charter of the city and county of San Francisco (article 2, c. 2, § 1) authorizes the board of supervisors to make all necessary police regulations; and subdivision 15 authorizes it to impose "license taxes," but provides that no license taxes shall be imposed upon one who, at any fixed place of business, sells goods, etc., except such as require permits from the board of police commissioners, as provided in this charter. Held, that the ordinance was enacted solely for regulation, and not for revenue, and the license imposed was a "license tax" within subdivision 15, so that the board had no power to impose it, since, while a "tax," technically, only includes charges imposed for producing revenue, and not for purposes of regulation under the police power, the term "license tax," as used in the statutes and by the courts, includes license charges of every character, whether imposed for revenue or police regulations, or both. John Rapp & Son v. Kiel, 115 Pac. 651, 653, 159 Cal. 702.

A federal court of bankruptcy, in determining whether a state imposition is a "tax," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64a, 30 Stat. 563, requiring priority of payment thereof, will not be bound by the decisions of the state courts, unless the state decisions have authoritatively expounded the substance of the question, and not merely given the name "tax" to an exaction which is not such. If the Legislature of a state gives the name "tax" to an exaction which is not a tax, and if the courts of the state join in the misnomer, surely the bankruptcy courts are not required to disregard the substance of the thing, to the detriment of other claimants. The state courts may authoritatively expound the substance, and the federal courts will adopt such expositions; but whether the substance constitutes a tax or not is independent of the name. The discussion was as to whether the imposition of a license fee or franchise tax was a tax within the meaning of Bankr. Act 1898, § 64a. The court said: "If it be conceded that the word 'taxes,' in section 64a, includes every contribution to the support of government which any state may exact from the persons, occupations, and possessions of its citizens and corporate subjects, is the charge in question a tax? It is not a capitation tax, for it is not laid upon corporations by the head. It is not an occupation tax, for it has no regard to the business in which the corporations engage. It is not a property tax, for it pays no heed to the extent or value of property, as the Constitution requires." In re Cosmopolitan Power Co., 137 Fed. 858, 862, 70 C. C. A. 388.

"License," in its proper sense, is distinct from "taxation," and an exemption from one does not include an exemption from the other. City of Trenton v. Humel, 114 S. W. 1131, 1132, 134 Mo. App. 595.

A "license" is a price paid for a privilege, while a tax is an enforced proportional contribution levied upon persons, property, or income for governmental needs. Pittsburgh Ry. Co. v. Pittsburgh, 60 Atl. 1077, 1078, 211 Pa. 479.

A "license," as distinguished from a "tax," which has for its object the raising of revenue, is essentially a grant of a special privilege to one or more persons not enjoyed by citizens generally, or at least not enjoyed by the class of citizens to which the licensee belongs. The fee or charge often exacted therefor is in law supposed to cover the cost of issuing the license and the expenses incident to regulating and controlling the business, though it may ultimately result in a source of revenue. To relieve a law imposing a burden or tax upon persons or property from the operation of the constitutional provision relative to taxation, and to impress upon it the quality of a license, it must have for its primary object the granting of some privilege or the imposing of some restraint. Reser v. Umatilla County, 86 Pac. 595, 597, 48 Or. 326, 120 Am. St. Rep. 815.

Same—Corporation fee

The bonus required by Act Pa. Feb. 9, 1901 (P. L. 5) § 3, to be paid to the state by a corporation on an increase of its capital stock, is not a "tax" and is not entitled to preference as such, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64a, 30 Stat. 563. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. York Silk Mfg. Co., 192 Fed. 81, 82, 112 C. C. A. 613; In re York Silk Mfg. Co., 188 Fed. 735.

The obligation of a Pennsylvania corporation, through its treasurer, to collect from the Pennsylvania holders of its obligations a tax of four mills by deducting it from the interest due them, is not a "tax" on the corporation, and an account settled therefore by the state officers is not entitled to a priority in the distribution under the bankrupt law. Penalties imposed on a corporation for failure to return increase of capital stock, file reports, etc., are not "taxes" within the meaning of any law, and are not entitled to priority under the bankruptcy act, and under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57 (j), 30 Stat. 560 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3443), cannot be allowed except for the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained by the act or transaction out of which the penalty arose. A penalty is a fine or punishment or forfeiture, and does not become an obligation until imposed by lawful authority, and the penalties so imposed on the corporation are different from penalties for nonpayment of taxes; the latter being exacted in lieu of interest, while those on the corporation are by way of punishment. In re York Silk Mfg. Co., 188 Fed. 735, 738.

The tax imposed on corporations by Act March 20, 1905, as amended, imposing a license tax on all domestic corporations, with certain exceptions, and all foreign corporations doing business in the state, forfeiting the charter or right to do business in the state on failure to pay, is not a "tax" upon property within Const. Art. 13, § 1, requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, being a license fee for the privilege of existing as a corporation in case of domestic corporations, and for the privilege of doing business within the state in case of a foreign corporation. Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 103 Pac. 341, 346, 155 Cal. 638.

The tax imposed on corporations and persons operating oil wells, by Acts 29th Leg. p. 358, c. 148, is a "tax" on the occupation of owning, controlling, or managing oil wells producing oil, and not an ad valorem tax, and therefore does not violate the state Constitution, fixing the rate of taxation. Producers' Oil Co. v. Stephens, 99 S. W. 157, 158, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 327.

Support of insane relatives

"Taxes" are the enforced proportional contributions from persons and property levied by the state by virtue of its sovereignty for the support of government and for all public needs; and Code, § 2297, which declares that public support of insane persons shall not release relatives liable therefor, and that they shall be responsible to the county for sums paid by it to the state for the hospital expenses of such insane persons, does not impose a "tax," within a constitutional requirement that every law which imposes a tax shall distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied, etc. Guthrie County v. Conrad, 110 N. W. 454, 456, 133 Iowa, 171 (citing 1 Cooley, Tax'n, 1; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215).

Tax on earnings and receipts

A provision in a municipal franchise to a gas company for the payment to the city of a percentage of the company's gross receipts is not a provision for the payment of a "tax," but merely a provision for the payment of a consideration for the privilege. Hanford Gas & Power Co. v. City of Hanford, 124 Pac. 727, 729, 163 Cal. 108.

"A 'tax' has been defined as a forced contribution from a citizen to the state to be applied for governmental purposes." Hence, where a street surface railway company pays to a city a certain sum under an agreement between the parties whereby a percentage of its gross receipts previously payable was reduced in consideration of its granting transfers to passengers thereafter, it is in the nature of a "tax," under Laws 1899, p. 1593, c. 712, § 46, and should be deducted from the special franchise tax. Heerwagen v. Cross-town St. Ry. Co., 71 N. E. 729, 730, 179 N. Y. 99 (citing Davies, System of Taxes, p. 1).

If it be conceded that the aid of firemen is a public purpose, then an act requiring fire insurance companies to pay annually a specified sum on premiums to create a pension fund for disabled firemen would fall under the head of "taxation," for all the requirements are fulfilled, namely that it is an imposition on person or property by the government for a public purpose. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 59 S. E. 148, 149, 78 S. C. 445, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818.

A "tax upon earnings" is a tax which at least covers and includes, unless double taxation is intended, all property necessarily held and used to make that income, including the enjoyment of a franchise, and a tax upon the franchise of a railway company impairs the obligation of a charter exemption from any property tax other than one based on its net profits. Wright v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 242, 246, 216 U. S. 420, 54 L. Ed. 544.

"A business tax measured by gross earnings is a 'tax upon the business which is actually performed,' and is not a 'tax upon property' in any sense, while a tax levied by valuation on the right to do business is a tax upon property, irrespective of whether or not any business or occupation has been carried on. It seems clear that the property tax, based upon the value of the franchise, and a business or occupation tax, based upon the gross earnings, of a public service corporation, are in no wise identical as to the subject of taxation, and do not constitute double taxation in any sense." Lincoln Traction Co. v. City of Lincoln, 121 N. W. 435,

Tolls

A toll of $2 per pole per year, imposed by a city on telegraph companies using its streets, is not a "tax" in the ordinary sense, but is in the nature of a special charge for the use of the streets, and the expense and inconvenience caused to the city and the public thereby, and is reasonable in amount and valid. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. City of Richmond, 178 Fed. 310, 324.

Water rents

Water rents due to a municipality, which are levied on property annually as a tax is levied and made a lien in like manner, are "taxes," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64a, 30 Stat. 563, which a trustee in bankruptcy is required to pay when levied against property of the estate in his possession. In re Industrial Cold Storage & Ice Co., 163 Fed. 330, 392.

"Water rates are not 'taxes,' within the meaning of those constitutional provisions which require a uniformity of taxation." Powell v. Duluth, 97 N. W. 450, 451, 91 Minn. 53.

Where water was delivered to leased premises through meters, the charge being determined by the quantity of water consumed, the water rate was not a "tax," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2231, subd. 3 (Laws 1901, p. 211, c. 466, § 474), authorizing summary dispossession proceedings for a tenant's failure to perform a covenant to pay "taxes." Kleinsteins v. Gonsky, 118 N. Y. Supp. 949, 950, 134 App. Div. 266.

Malmsten*, 113 N. W. 229, 230, 79 Neb. 730.

TAX CERTIFICATE

The term "tax certificate," as used in the statute limiting to one year the time within which an action may be commenced to cancel a tax certificate, includes a certificate issued on a sale of property for nonpayment of an assessment of benefits for street improvements. Pratt v. City of Milwaukee, 68 N. W. 392, 393, 93 Wis. 658.

A "tax certificate" does not pass title to the land, but is a written certification by the county treasurer of the facts as to the sale of real estate, and is the legal evidence on which the purchaser is entitled to a deed or the redemption money, and prima facie evidence of the correctness of the facts recited therein. Keller v. Hawk, 91 Pac. 778, 779, 19 Okl. 407.

TAX COLLECTOR

A "tax collector" is a public officer, and is so treated in the statute relating to the collection of taxes and the compensation of the collector. Massie v. Harrison County, 105 N. W. 507, 508, 129 Iowa, 277.

A "tax collector" is one whose duty it is to enforce the collection of taxes, the tax gatherer, the agent of the county to collect its dues, and does not refer to a county treasurer, to whom the taxes were paid over by the person intrusted with the collection thereof. *Hubbell v. #### TAX DISTRICT

Under Laws 1896, p. 800, c. 908, § 8, providing that every person shall be taxed in the "tax district" where he resides for all personalty owned by him or under his control as trustee or executor, and that, where property is in the possession of two or more persons as executors or trustees, each shall be taxed for an equal portion thereof, each borough of the city of New York must be considered a separate tax district. People ex rel. Moller v. O'Donnel, 75 N. E. 540, 541, 183 N. Y. 9.

Laws 1896, c. 908, § 24, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 550, § 2, provides for the assessment of a tax on bank shares and for its distribution among the tax districts in which the bank shares are taxable. Tax Law, § 2, defines a "tax district" as a political subdivision of the state having a board of assessors authorized to assess property therein. Held, that a county is not a "tax district," within the meaning of such statute. People ex rel. Lawyer v. Board of Sup'rs of Schoharie County, 79 N. Y. Supp. 145, 146, 39 Misc. Rep. 162.

Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 801, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1898, p. 1277, c. 537, and by Laws 1902, p. 504, c. 200) § 10, provides that, when a farm is separated by a line between two tax districts, it shall be assessed to the owner residing thereon where he resides. Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, § 2, subd. 1, defines a "tax district" as a political subdivision of the state, having a board of assessors authorized to assess property therein for state and county purposes. A portion of a farm was situate within a village having a board of assessors without authority to assess property therein for state and county purposes, and a portion thereof was situate outside of the village, and the owner resided on the latter portion. Held, that an assessment of the part within the village for village purposes was not invalid, on the ground that the farm was assessable only in the district in which the owner resided, notwithstanding Village Law (Laws 1897, p. 401, c. 414) § 104, requiring village assessors to prepare an assessment roll of the persons and property taxable within the village "in the same manner and form" as is required for the preparation of a town assessment roll. People ex rel. Champlin v. Gray, 77 N. E. 1172, 1173, 185 N. Y. 196.

Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 802, c. 908) § 13, provides that bank stock shall be assessed in the tax district where the bank or banking association is located, and not elsewhere, whether the stockholders reside in the tax district or not; and by Laws 1901, p. 1350, c. 550, § 24, as amended by Laws 1902, p. 384, c. 126, and Laws 1903, p. 565, c. 267, the tax is to be distributed under direction of the board of county supervisors to the cities, towns, villages, school and other districts in a certain proportion. By subdivision 1 of section 2 of the tax law, as first enacted (chapter 908, p. 796, Laws 1896), it is provided: "Tax district" as used in this chapter means a political subdivision of the state having a board of assessors authorized to assess property therein for state and county taxes." Such subdivision of said section has never been changed. Held, that the tax is not payable only to tax districts as defined in section 2, but villages and school districts are entitled to their proportion. People ex rel. Village of Chatham v. Board of Sup'rs of Columbia County, 75 N. E. 1133, 182 N. Y. 556.

Tax Law, art. 2, § 24, provides for the assessment of taxes on bank stock, and authorizes the distribution and apportionment of such taxes between the "town, city, village, school and other tax districts," in the respective counties in which the stock is taxable. Section 2 of the tax law defines a "tax district" as a political subdivision of the state, having a board of assessors authorized to assess property for state and county purposes. Held that, conceding that village and school districts are not statutory tax districts, because they have no officials authorized to assess property for taxation, the words "other tax districts" nevertheless refer to statutory tax districts, and a county is not such a district as to be entitled to taxes collected on bank stock. City of Utica v. Board of Sup'rs of Oneida County, 95 N. Y. Supp. 839, 840, 109 App. Div. 189.

Village Law (Laws 1897, c. 414) § 104, provides that the village assessors shall prepare an assessment roll of the persons and property taxable in the village in the same manner and form as required by law for the preparation of a town assessment roll. Tax Law, § 2, subd. 1, provides that "tax district" as used in the chapter means a political subdivision of a board of assessors authorized to assess property therein for state and county purposes. Section 29 provides that realty of nonresidents of the tax district shall be designated in a separate part of the assessment roll, and, if it be part of a lot, such part must be identified by boundaries or otherwise, and, if a part of a tract, that part or the part not liable must be described. Held, that section 104 referred to Tax Law, §§ 21, 29, 30, regulating town assessments, so that villages were "tax districts" within section 2, subd. 1, and in assessing the property of nonresidents a description of the property as a certain number of acres situated on a certain side of a road named, within certain farms of larger acreage, was insufficient, so as to make a tax sale under such assessment void. Buffalo Loan, Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Depew Mfg. Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 900, 902, 86 Misc. Rep. 630.

The part of section 1, subsec. "k," Laws 1910, c. 382, which only authorizes a levy for taxes upon property in the particular part of the village designated upon application of a certain number of residents thereof, violates the Bill of Rights, art. 15, requiring every person to contribute his proportion of taxes according to his actual worth in property; that provision practically exempting such part of the village from taxation, since a "taxing district" implies a district subject to taxation by law, and not at the option of its inhabitants. Curtis v. Mactier, 80 Atl. 1066, 1069, 115 Md. 386.

Under Ky. St. § 3006, giving to a city a lien on real estate within its limits for taxes due it, and the statutes providing the manner in which the city shall enforce the lien, and in view of sections 4151, 4152, providing that, where real estate is sold for taxes and the state becomes the purchaser, the purchase shall be for the benefit of the state, county, and taxing district, a sale to the state of real estate for delinquent state, county, or district taxes does not impair a city's lien for taxes due it, where the tax title to property is perfected in the state and the property is sold in satisfaction of the tax claims without making the city a party, the lien of the city for taxes due it remains unimpaired, and the purchaser from the state takes it incumbered with such lien, though the "taxing district" referred to in sections 4151 and 4152 does not mean city, but refers to school district or some subdivision of the county other than a city where a tax may be authorized by law. Kentucky Lands Inv. Co. v. Fitch, 137 S. W. 1040, 1042, 144 Ky. 273, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 672.

Where a town includes a city and school district which overlap in part, and in such part the tax levy exceeds the maximum rate of 3 per cent., and under the amended revenue law, providing that certain taxes are to be extended at full rate and others not to be reduced below a certain minimum per cent., the town tax rate is the only one subject to reduction, the reduction must apply to the entire town, and not merely to the part where the excess exists, as a "taxing district," within the meaning of the law, is the municipality which levies the tax that is to be scaled, since the opposite construction would render the statute violative of Const. art. 9, § 9, requiring that all municipal taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same. People ex rel. Ehrhardt v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 93 N. E. 298, 247 Ill. 458.

TAX EXECUTION

A "tax execution" is final, not mesne, process. No further proceeding is necessary upon it than to levy and collect it. It is more nearly analogous to an execution issued on judgment in a common-law suit. The garnishment issued upon it is more like a garnishment based upon a final judgment. Baxter & Co. v. Andrews, 62 S. E. 42, 44, 131 Ga. 120, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268.

TAX EXEMPTION

As contract, see Contract.

TAX FERRET

A person engaged in the business of searching for property omitted from taxation is known as a "tax ferret." Stevens v. Henry County, 75 N. E. 1024, 1027, 218 Ill. 468, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339, 4 Ann. Cas. 136.

TAX FOR EDUCATION

A tax to maintain a public library is not a "tax for education," within Const. § 184, prohibiting a tax for education other than in common schools, till it has been authorized at an election, provided that the tax now imposed for educational purposes and for the Agricultural and Mechanical College shall remain till changed by law; this having reference to a tax for a school. Ramsey v. City of Shelbyville, 83 S. W. 116, 117, 119 Ky. 180, 68 L. R. A. 300.

TAX FORFEITURES

Where a contract for the preparation of abstracts of title provided that the abstractor should receive a certain price per page for "tax forfeitures," etc., such term, construed most strongly against the abstractor, who made the contract, did not include all the antecedent steps in relation to the asseessment of taxes. McVeigh v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 132 S. W. 638, 642, 96 Ark. 480.

TAX LEASE

As conveyance, see Conveyance.

TAX LIEN

Lien as including, see Lien.

The "foreclosure of tax liens" authorized by the act of 1903 means the lien created by the record of the list of lands sold in the county clerk's office, and not the lien created by the levying of the tax by the common council. City of Rochester v. Fourteenth Ward Co-op. Bldg. Lot Ass'n, 75 N. E. 692, 695, 183 N. Y. 23; City of Rochester v. Rochester Ry. Co., 79 N. E. 1010, 1012, 187 N. Y. 216 (citing City of Rochester v. Fourteenth Ward Co-op. Bldg. Lot Ass'n, 75 N. E. 692, 183 N. Y. 23).

TAX LIST

Return of, see Return.

A "tax list" is a public record required to be made by the county clerk, and in which he is required to transcribe the several assessments, and to enter into distinct columns the description of lands and lots and values, and each description of tax, and to apportion the tax among the respective funds to which it belongs according to the number of mills levied for each of said funds, showing a summary of each distinct tax. Holthaus v. Adams County, 105 N. W. 632, 633, 74 Neb. 861.

TAX PROCEEDING

As civil proceeding, see Civil Action—Case—Suit, etc.

A "tax proceeding" is an action to enforce a lien, and not a mere action to recover the amount of a debt. The judgment enforcing the lien should state facts sufficient to show for what taxes the lien is to be enforced. Rankin v. Porter Real Estate Co., 97 S. W. 877, 878, 199 Mo. 345.

"A 'tax foreclosure proceeding,' in this state, is a proceeding against property, and is in no sense an action against the person of the owner of such property. Its purpose is to charge such property with its just proportion of the public revenues, and the state's dominion over the land exists for that purpose without regard to its ownership. When, therefore, the Legislature provided that the lien for taxes might be foreclosed in the courts against the person to whom the land was assessed, whether that person was or was not the owner of the property, it acted within its powers, and the person foreclosing acquires a legal title by a proceeding as the statute directs." Rowland v. Eskeland, 82 Pac. 599, 601, 40 Wash. 253 (quoting and adopting the definition in Allen v. Peterson, 80 Pac. 849, 38 Wash. 599; Woodward v. Taylor, 73 Pac. 785, 75 Pac. 646, 33 Wash. 1; Washington Timber & Loan

TAX RECEIPT

A "tax receipt" is like any other receipt for money paid, and is only prima facie evidence of payment. Johnson v. Pinson, 56 S. E. 238, 239, 127 Ga. 144.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1870, making personal taxes a lien against the real property of the taxpayer, a "tax receipt," which the treasurer, as collector of taxes, is required to give, is more than a mere acknowledgment of the payment of a specific sum of money, and is written evidence showing that all taxes against the realty have been paid, and so long as taxes upon the personal property of a taxpayer remain unpaid a tax collector is not obliged to receive the tax on the realty and receipt for the same. Ricketts v. Crewdson, 81 Pac. 1, 2, 13 Wyo. 284.

TAX ROLL

See Each Line of Tax Roll.

TAX SALE

See Void Tax Sale.

"A 'tax sale' is an official fact, which is presumptively valid, and hence prima facie divests the original owner's title and right to possession." Nind v. Myers, 109 N. W. 335, 341, 15 N. D. 400, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157.

There is no sale of personal property for taxes levied on it as the term "sale" is ordinarily understood when applied to tax proceedings. Citizens' Savings & Trust Co. v. School Sisters of Notre Dame, 139 N. W. 439, 441, 151 Wis. 619.

Gould's Dig. c. 148, § 111 et seq., provided for the immediate execution of a tax deed to the purchaser, without any preceding certificate of purchase, and declared such deed to vest a good and valid title in the grantee, and authorized redemption by the original owners within a year from the sale. Subsequently the execution of the deed was postponed by law until the expiration of the period of redemption, and provision was made for the issuance of a certificate of purchase at the sale. Sand. & H. Dig., § 6624, prescribes the formalities of the deed, and declares that it shall vest all the title and interest of the former owner, and all claim of the state and county to the lands, in the purchaser. Section 4819 provides that no action for the recovery of lands against any person who may hold the same by virtue of a purchase at a tax "sale" shall be maintained unless plaintiff or his predecessor in interest was seized of the lands in question within two years next before the commencement of the action. Held, that limitations, under section 4819, run from the date of the deed executed in pursuance to section 6624, and not from the date of the sale and certificate of purchase. Haggart v. Ranney, 84 S. W. 703, 705, 73 Ark. 344 (citing Harvey v. Douglass, 83 S. W. 946, 73 Ark. 221; Stephens v. Holmes, 26 Ark. 48; Worthen v. Fletcher, 42 S. W. 900, 71 Ark. 386; Crill v. Hudson, 74 S. W. 299, 71 Ark. 390).

TAX SALE PURCHASER

See Purchaser.

As owner, see Owner.

TAX TITLE

A "tax title" is generally regarded as a definite grant from the sovereignty, which bars all other titles, of record or otherwise, and imports an absolute paramount title as against the world. It is generally accepted that a tax title is a new title, which takes its status, not from the date of the tax judgment sale, but from the date of the tax lien. Oakland Cemetery Ass'n v. Ramsey County, 108 N. W. 857, 858, 98 Minn. 404, 116 Am. St. Rep. 377.

TAX VOTED AND LEVIED

Where taxpayers petitioned for the voting and levying of a tax for a public improvement, and inserted in the petition specified conditions, among which was the enactment of a statute by the Legislature and the adoption of a constitutional amendment, and a constitutional amendment was thereafter adopted, providing that "the special tax for a public improvement voted by the property taxpayers of the city of New Orleans on June 6, 1899, and levied by the city council, is hereby ratified, and its validity shall never be questioned," the words "tax voted and levied" had reference to the tax voted and levied subject to the conditions imposed by the taxpayers in their petition. State ex rel. Saunders v. Kohnke, 33 South. 793, 803, 109 La. 838.

TAX WARRANT

Execution distinguished, see Execution (Writ of).

TAXABLE CREDIT

A contract giving a mere option to purchase land in the future on the terms specified is not a "taxable credit" within the meaning of the tax laws. In re Shield Bros., 111 N. W. 963, 964, 134 Iowa, 559, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061.

TAXABLE VALUE

The true test of a "taxable value" is the producing value to the owner. An individual's true worth, for the purposes of taxation, consists of his real and personal property; but, in the case of a corporation, its franchise, its borrowing power, its earning capacity, its real worth, are not represented merely by its visible property and shares of stock. The taxable value of the corporation is its bonded indebtedness, together with its stock. Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of Baltimore, 61

Atl. 532, 537, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584 (citing Simpson v. Hopkins, 33 Atl. 714, 82 Md. 478).

In a statute providing that property subject to taxation shall be valued at its actual value and assessed at 25 per centum of such value, which assessed value shall be taken as the "taxable value" of the property, the term "taxable value" is not synonymous with or equivalent to "the value of the taxable property." N. W. Halsey Co. v. City of Belle Plaine, 104 N. W. 494, 496, 128 Iowa, 467.

TAXATION OF COSTS

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

TAXED

The words "assessed" and "taxed," in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, § 29, were used interchangeably by the Legislature, and were intended to express the same meaning. State ex rel. Palmer v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1070, 70 Neb. 529.

TAXES DUE

The words "taxes due," employed in Act Aug. 21, 1905, providing that all taxes due the state and county, by persons residing in the new county or upon property included within the limits of the new county, at the time of its creation, shall be payable to the tax collector of the county from which the territory was taken, did not exclude the collection of regular annual county taxes, though they had not actually been levied before the approval of the act. Pope v. Matthews, 54 S. E. 152, 153, 125 Ga. 341.

TAXING OFFICER

Other taxing officer, see Other.

TAXING POWER

The "taxing power," acting within its legitimate sphere, is one which knows no stopping place until it has accomplished the purpose of which it exists, namely, the actual enforcement and collection from every object of taxation of its proportionate share of the public burdens; and, if prevented for any reason, it may return again and again until the tax is collected. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1009, 22 Okl. 761.

The "power of taxation" is an incident to sovereignty, and as stated in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 316-428, 4 L. Ed. 579: "The power of taxing the people and their property is essential to the very existence of government, and may be legitimately exercised on the objects to which it is applicable, to the utmost extent to which the government shall choose to carry it. The only security against the abuse of this power is found in the structure of the government itself. In imposing a tax the Legislature acts upon its constituents. This is, in general, a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation. The people of a state thereby give to their government a right of taxing themselves and their property, and, as the exigencies of government cannot be limited, they prescribe no limits to the exercise of this right, resting confidently upon the interests of the legislator and upon the influence of the constituents over their representatives to guard them against this abuse." And as stated in Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 678: "The power to impose taxes is one so unlimited in force and so searching in extent that the courts scarcely venture to declare that it is subject to any restrictions whatever, except such as rest in the discretion of such authority as exercises it. It reaches to every trade and occupation, to every object of industry, use, or enjoyment, to every species of possession, and it imposes a burden which, in case of failure to discharge it, may be followed by seizure or sale, or confiscation, of property. No attribute of sovereignty is more pervading, and at no point does the power of the government affect more constantly and intimately all the relations of life than through the exactions made under it." As stated in State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 300, 319, 21 L. Ed. 179: "It may touch property in every shape—in its natural condition, in its manufactured form, and in its varying transmutations. * * * It may touch business in the almost infinite forms in which it is conducted—in professions, in commerce, in manufactures, in transportation. Unless restrained by provisions of the federal Constitution, the power of the state as to the mode, form, and extent of taxation is unlimited." I. M. Darnell & Son Co. v. City of Memphis, 95 S. W. 816, 818, 116 Tenn. 424.

The distinction between the "police power" and the "taxing power" is that, while the "taxing power" is exercised for the raising of revenue and is subject to certain limitations, the "police power" is exercised only for the purpose of promoting the public welfare, and though this end may be attained by taxing or licensing occupations, the object must always be regulation, and not the raising of revenue. Robinson v. City of Norfolk, 60 S. E. 762, 764, 108 Va. 14, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 294, 128 Am. St. Rep. 934.

TAX-PAID SPIRIT STAMPS

"Tax-paid spirit stamps," as they are technically called, are nothing more than receipts authorized to be issued by the government to indicate the payment of taxes on distilled spirits, and under the law as amended can only be issued to the distiller and are therefore without value, except for the purpose for which the same are issued, and that purpose can be ascertained by an inspection of the stamps. Under these circumstances, such stamps do not constitute the basis for an action against the government in the hands of one to whom they were not issued, and who does not sustain the relation of a distiller to the government. Harkins v. Williard, 146 Fed. 703, 707, 77 C. C. A. 129.

TAXPAYER

See Property Tax Payer.

As beneficially interested, see Beneficially Interested.

As trustee of express trust, see Trustee of Express Trust.

One owning an interest in a store in partnership with his father is a "taxpayer" within Ky. St. § 4464 (Russell's St. § 5736), authorizing petitions by voters who are taxpayers for a graded school election, though the store is assessed in the name of his father; the tax being paid out of the firm assets. Ralls v. Sharp's Adm'r, 131 S. W. 998, 1000, 140 Ky. 744.

A personal covenant in a lease that the lessee will pay the taxes assessed against the property of the lessor mentioned in the lease does not, as between the taxing district and the lessee, make the lessee the owner or "taxpayer," within the meaning of the general tax act approved April 8, 1903 (P. L. p. 394), and hence entitle him to notice of proceedings by the owner to apportion taxes upon the leased property and other property of the lessor and owner. New Auditorium Pier Co. v. Taxing Dist. of Atlantic City, 65 Atl. 855, 856, 74 N. J. Law, 303.

A resident taxpaying corporation may maintain a bill as a "taxpayer" to restrain illegal acts of its officials in appropriating public funds. Wolff Chemical Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 66 Atl. 344, 345, 217 Pa. 215.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code § 94, providing that no person shall be competent to serve as a juror in the superior courts of the state unless he be an elector and a taxpayer of the state a "taxpayer" is a person owning property in the state subject to taxation and on which he regularly pays taxes, but a showing that a juror was not a taxpayer of the county in which the trial was held was not sufficient to disqualify him. Lasityr v. City of Olympia, 112 Pac. 752, 754, 61 Wash. 651.

Comp. Laws, § 5007, requiring an election for the removal of the county seat when three-fifths of the qualified electors of the county, each elector being a taxpayer thereof as appears by the last assessment roll, who have taken the oath for registration of electors, shall petition the county commissioners therefor, and section 5010, providing that every petition shall be accompanied by the certificate of the registry agent where the petitioners reside, showing that they are qualified electors, as appears by the registry list, or by affidavits filed in his office of persons not registered at the last general or special election, but who are qualified electors, require a petitioner to be a taxpayer whose name appears on the last assessment roll and requires him to be a qualified elector as shown by the lists of the last general or special election or by affidavit that he is a qualified elector, and the fact that one may have failed to register for a special election does not disqualify him where he possesses the substantial qualifications and is a taxpayer and voter as indicated. Persons who appear on the assessment roll as paying taxes only in a partnership capacity are "taxpayers," within Comp. Laws, § 5007. State ex rel. Kaufman v. Martin, 106 Pac. 318, 319, 32 Nev. 197.

Under Revenue Law 1898, p. 346, providing that the word "person" or "persons," "taxpayer" or "taxpayers," shall be held to include firms, companies, associations, and corporations, debts due on open account to a nonresident are taxable at the domicile of the debtor, when they have arisen out of a business carried on in the taxing state, and form part of the capital of the business. General Electric Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 122, 123, 121 La. 116; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 117, 118, 121 La. 108, 126 Am. St. Rep. 313.

Civ. Code 1901, par. 2182, authorizing in any school district the submission to the "taxpayers of the district" the question of the issuance of bonds, when read, as it must be, in connection with paragraph 2185, providing that the election shall be held, except as otherwise provided in the title, in conformity with the general election laws, and in connection with paragraph 2186, providing that the money for the redemption of the bonds shall be raised by taxation on the taxable property in the district, and, in connection with paragraph 2176, making every adult person, who is a citizen of the United States, and who has been a resident of a school district for 30 days, and who is a parent or guardian of a child of school age residing in the district, or who has paid a tax during the preceding year, entitled to vote at any school district election, etc., is not ambiguous and uncertain for failing to provide whether taxpayers include only residents of the district, or nonresidents who are taxpayers, and the persons qualified to vote at such an election are those possessing the qualifications prescribed in paragraph 2176, and the phrase "taxpayer of the district" is limited to those who pay taxes on property within the district, and the paragraph so construed is not in conflict with the organic act (Rev. St. U. S. 1878, § 1860), relating to the qualifications of voters. Hicks v. Krigbaum, 108 Pac. 482, 484, 13 Ariz. 237.

TAXIMETER CAB

The term "taximeter cab" includes, as shown by the evidence, a motor cab. Lynch v. Robert P. Murphy Hotel Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 915, 916.

TEA

As provisions, see Provisions.

"Tea" is defined to be leaves of a shrub or small tree of the genus Thea or Camellia. The shrub is a native of China or Japan. There are other kinds of tea, such as sage tea and camomile tea, etc. The latter are the restricted uses of the word. When one is asked to take a cup of milk or a cup of tea, it would not be necessary to ask what is meant. State v. Carmody, 91 Pac. 446, 448, 50 Or. 1, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828.

In construing a statute, a word should not be given a limited or specialized meaning, unless such meaning is made by legislative enactment; hence, in the act of 1900 (94 Ohio Laws, p. 305), relative to the teacher's pension fund, the word "teacher," not being specifically restricted in its meaning, will comprehend within its purview such instructors as shall have spent a part of the time required in teaching in schools not supported in whole or in part by public taxation. Venable v. Schafer, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 202, 204.

A statute punishing any guardian of any female under the age of 18 years, or any other person to whose care such female shall have been confided, who shall carnally know her, includes a schoolteacher, and the relation of "teacher" and pupil exists as well after the child reaches home as it does in the schoolroom. It exists on Sunday as well as on a school day. State v. Hesterly, 81 S. W. 624, 627, 182 Mo. 16, 103 Am. St. Rep. 634.

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 1090, provides that principals, teachers, and all other members of the teaching staff shall be appointed by the board of education, on the nomination of the board of superintendents, and that such nomination shall be made, except in case of high schools, or training schools for teachers, for the several local school board districts, and the principals, teachers, etc., shall be assigned to duty to such schools as the board shall determine, but, when practicable, teachers shall be appointed for districts in the boroughs where they reside, and that teachers and principals may be transferred from one school to another by the board, provided that a teacher shall not be transferred from a school in one borough to a school in another without his consent; and it further provides that, for all purposes affecting the transfer of teachers, the principal of the school to which it is proposed to transfer a teacher shall have a seat in the board of superintendents. Section 1091, for other purposes, refers to teachers and principals as "such teacher," indicating that the word "teacher," included both classes. Held, that a principal could be transferred to a school in another borough without his consent; the word "teacher," as used in section 1090, not including a principal. Barringer v. Board of Education of City of New York, 125 N. Y. Supp. 540, 541, 140 App. Div. 903.

The limitation of the right to teach a public school, imposed by Ky. St. § 4503 (Russell's St. § 5692), providing that a certificate of the third class shall not entitle the holder to teach in any district reporting 55 or more pupils, includes assistant teachers and principals; and an assistant, employed in such a school under section 4366 (section 5591), authorizing the employment of an assistant holding a certificate of qualification, must have the qualifications prescribed. One who teaches in a public school when he has no license to do so cannot recover compensation. Flanary v. Barrett, 143 S. W. 38, 146 Ky. 712, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 370.

TEAM

As including harness and vehicle

Plaintiff brought replevin for a pair of horses, a buggy, and a set of harness. The answer averred that on a certain day the property was in the possession of M., who left the horses on a city street for more than three hours, without food or shelter, which constituted cruelty to the animals and a violation of an ordinance, requiring defendant, as city marshal, to take up, feed, and shelter the horses, which he did, putting them in the stable of D., who notified M. thereof, whereupon M. directed that the team be brought to him, but afterwards ordered the team to be taken back to the stable. The answer made no mention of the buggy or harness. A witness testified that he remembered the night defendant took the team and buggy. This was the only declaration tending to show defendant seized the vehicle, and there was no testimony as to the harness. Held, that the word "team," as used in the pleadings and testimony, would be treated as including the vehicle and harness, as well as the horses. Krebs Hlop Co. v. Taylor, 97 Pac. 44, 45, 52 Or. 627.

TEAM TRACK

A "team track" is described as a siding on a railroad for loading and unloading cars when freight comes in car load lots. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Chestnut Bros. (Ky.) 89 S. W. 298, 299.

TEAM WORK

"Team work" means work done by a team as a substantial part of a man's business, as in farming, staging, express carrying, drawing of freight, peddling, the transportation of material used or dealt in as a business. This is clearly distinguishable from what is circumstantial to one's business, as a matter of convenience in getting to and from it, or as a means of going from place to place to solicit patronage, or to settle or make collections, or to see persons for business purposes. It is plainly distinguishable from family use and convenience, pleasure, exercise, or recreation. Two horses used by a business man in driving from his home to his place of business, in driving his family about for pleasure and occasionally used by him to make business trips, are not "work horses" within a statute exempting two work horses from execution. Tishomingo Sav. Inst. v. Young, 40 South. 9, 11, 87 Miss. 473, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693, 112 Am. St. Rep. 454, 6 Ann. Cas. 776.

TEAMSTER

As laborer, see Laborer.

TEAR

See Ordinary Wear and Tear.

TECHNICAL

TECHNICAL ERROR

The "technical errors or defects" mentioned in the statute, for which a reversal will not be granted, mean such as do not affect a substantial right and could not in reason have changed the result. People v. Bonier, 72 N. E. 226, 229, 179 N. Y. 315, 103 Am. St. Rep. 880.

Under St. 1893, § 5330, declaring that on an appeal the court must give judgment without regard to "technical errors," the appellate court cannot reverse a criminal case where accused had a fair and impartial trial, though technical errors intervened; the appellate court being established to correct mistakes which deprive a party of a substantial right. Martin v. Territory, 78 Pac. 88, 89, 14 Okl. 598.

TECHNICAL RELEASE

A "technical release" is an instrument under seal or some other form of satisfaction which legally imports full payment. The difference between a "technical release" and a "satisfaction in fact" is that in one case the law regards the claim as paid and will not allow the party to deny by proof, while in the other the claim was in fact paid. Ryan v. Becker, 111 N. W. 426, 427, 136 Iowa, 273, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 329 (citing Eastman v. Grant, 34 Vt. 387; Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 393, 100 Am. Dec. 752; Miller v. Beck, 79 N. W. 344, 108 Iowa, 575).

TECHNICAL TOTAL LOSS

"Technical total loss," as used in a marine policy, is synonymous with "constructive total loss," which takes place when the subject insured is not wholly destroyed, but its destruction is rendered highly probable, or the privation of it, though not quite irretrievable, is such that its recovery is exceedingly doubtful, or too expensive to be worth the attempt. Murray v. Great Western Ins. Co., 25 N. Y. Supp. 414, 416, 72 Hun, 282 (quoting from 2 Arn. Ins. [6th Ed.] p. 951).

TECHNICALLY VESTED

A servient estate, which is given to a donee by will, not absolutely, with absolute power of disposition, but subject to be defeated by his death before attaining a certain age, is a "technically vested estate." Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Ward, 164 Fed. 459, 467 (citing Vanderbilt v. Eldman, 25 Sup. Ct. 334, 196 U. S. 490, 49 L. Ed. 563).

A "telegram" is a message transmitted by the telegraph. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hill, 50 South. 248, 163 Ala. 18, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648, 19 Ann. Cas. 1058.

TELEGRAPH

Telegraphing as interstate commerce, see Interstate Commerce.

A "telegraph" is an apparatus or machine used to transmit intelligence to a distant point by means of electricity. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hill, 50 South. 248, 251, 163 Ala. 18, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648, 19 Ann. Cas. 1058.

Telephone included

The term "magnetic telegraph lines," as used in Sayle's Ann. Civ. St. Tex. 1897, art. 698, providing that corporations created for the purpose of constructing and maintaining "magnetic telegraph lines" are authorized to set their poles and other fixtures, along any of the public roads, etc., includes "telephone lines"; the latter being but another method of accomplishing the one purpose, the transmission of messages by electricity. City of Texarkana v. Southwestern Telephone & Telegraph Co., 106 S. W. 915, 916, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 16 (quoting San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Southwestern Telephone & Telegraph Co., 55 S. W. 117, 93 Tex. 313, 49 L. R. A. 459, 77 Am. St. Rep. 884).

The phrase "to grant the right of way," in subsection 22 of section 11 of the charter act of cities of the first class (chapter 37, p.

84, Laws 1881; section 53, c. 122, p. 187, Laws 1903), construed with section 74 of the general telegraph act (article 8, c. 23, Gen. St. 1868), gives to cities of the first class the right to determine and designate the streets and alleys of the city which may be occupied and used by the posts and wires of telegraph companies and telephone companies. City of Wichita v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 78 Pac. 886, 889, 70 Kan. 441.

In determining the liability of a telephone company for negligence in the transmission or delivery of a message, a telephone company will be treated as a telegraph company; "telegraph" including any apparatus for transmitting messages by means of electric signals, and a "telephone" being a "telegraph." Rehearing, McLeod v. Pacific Telephone Co., 94 P. 568, denied. McLeod v. Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 95 Pac. 1009, 52 Or. 22, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 16 Ann. Cas. 1239.

There are authorities which hold that, in the construction of statutes, the word "telegraph" embraces "telephone" and that statutes concerning telegraph companies include telephone companies as well. But the Arkansas statute, declaring that "telegraph" companies shall be liable for mental anguish or suffering on account of negligence "in receiving, transmitting, or delivering messages," does not include "telephone" companies. A telephone company does not "receive, transmit, and deliver" a message in the ordinary acceptation of those words. It merely furnishes to the patron facilities for carrying on a conversation at long distance. Southern Tel. Co. v. King, 146 S. W. 489, 491, 103 Ark. 160, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402 (citing Northwestern Telephone Exch. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 315, 76 Minn. 334).

The Supreme Court of California, in construing section 591 of the Penal Code, which makes it a penal offense for any person to maliciously take down or injure any line of telegraph, held that the word "telegraph," as used in such section, included in its meaning "telephone." Pol. Code Cal. § 4480, provides that with relation to each other the provisions of the four Codes are to be construed as though parts of the same statute. Held that, under such rule and decision, Civ. Code Cal. § 536, which provides that "telegraph corporations may construct lines of telegraph along and upon any public road or highway * * * within this state," must be construed by a federal court as including telephone corporations, and as authorizing them to construct and maintain their lines in the streets of cities and towns without first procuring the consent of the municipal authorities. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Pomona, 172 Fed. 829, 834, 97 C. C. A. 251.

The words "telegraph corporations," as used in Civ. Code, § 536, prior to its repeal and re-enactment by St. 1905, p. 492, authorizing telegraph corporations to construct lines along or on any public road or highway, etc., could not be construed to include telephone companies, under the rule that grants contained in public statutes must be strictly construed in favor of the public. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Pasadena, 118 Pac. 796, 799, 161 Cal. 265.

The words "telegraph line," in Acts 1849-50, c. 111, Code 1858, § 1316, Acts 1875, c. 142, § 8, and Acts 1885, c. 66, giving to a telegraph corporation the right to construct a "telegraph line" along any public highway or street of any city, do not include a telephone line. Home Telegraph Co. v. Mayor and City Council of Nashville, 101 S. W. 770, 773, 118 Tenn. 1, 11 Ann. Cas. 824.

TELEGRAPH COMPANY

As common carrier, see Common Carrier.

As engaged in quasi public employment, see Quasi Public Employment.

As public service corporation, see Public Service Corporation.

A "telegraph company" is a quasi public corporation, private in the ownership of its stock, but public in the nature of its duties; and hence it follows, both upon reason and authority, that the failure of a "telegraph company" to promptly and correctly transmit and deliver a message received by it is a breach of a public duty imposed by operation of law. Green v. Western Union Tel. Co., 49 S. E. 165, 166, 136 N. C. 489, 67 L. R. A. 935, 103 Am. St. Rep. 955, 1 Ann. Cas. 349 (citing Cashion v. Western Union Tel. Co., 32 S. E. 746, 124 N. C. 459, 45 L. R. A. 160; Landle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 32 S. E. 886, 124 N. C. 528; Cogdell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 47 S. E. 490, 135 N. C. 431).

A "telegraph company" is a public service corporation engaged in a public utility, and in receiving, transmitting, and delivering messages should be treated as an independent principal or contracting party, and be held liable both in contract and tort, the same as other principals. Strong v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 109 Pac. 910, 920, 18 Idaho, 389, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 55.

Railroad company

Kirby's Dig. § 7947, making "telegraph companies" liable for mental anguish or suffering from negligence in the delivery of a message, applies to railroad companies doing a telegraph business. Arkansas & L. Ry. Co. v. Stroude, 91 S. W. 18, 19, 77 Ark. 109, 113 Am. St. Rep. 130.

TELEGRAPH OPERATOR

A "telegraph operator" is different from a "train dispatcher," in that the operator ordinarily is not invested with any control over the running of trains, and he does not occupy the position of a train dispatcher merely because he transmits or delivers orders for the movement of trains, so that his negligence cannot be said to be the negligence of the company. Strotzman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 109 S. W. 769, 779, 211 Mo. 227 (citing McKaig v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 42 Fed. 288; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Clark, 57 Fed. 125, 6 C. C. A. 281; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp, 65 Fed. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233; Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. v. Frost, 74 Fed. 965, 21 C. C. A. 186; Price v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 936, 145 U. S. 651, 36 L. Ed. 843; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 39 Am. Rep. 627; Dana v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. [N. Y.] 23 Hun, 473; Monaghan v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. [N. Y.] 45 Hun, 113; Reiser v. Pennsylvania Co., 25 Atl. 175, 152 Pa. 38, 34 Am. St. Rep. 620).

TELEGRAPH OR TELEPHONE LINES

See Line of Telegraph or Telephone Poles.

The right to maintain "a telegraph or telephone line or lines," when construed as a right appurtenant to the right to maintain the pipe lines, does not import an unlimited number of wires, but only such as may be reasonably necessary for the maintenance and operation of the pipe line. Decree (Ch. 1907) 65 A. 747, reversed. Northeastern Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Hepburn, 69 Atl. 249, 251, 73 N. J. Eq. 657.

TELEPHONE

See Extension Telephone.

Service by telephone, see Service (In Practice).

Telephoning as interstate commerce, see Interstate Commerce.

See, also, Telegraph or Telephone Lines; Transmit—Transmission.

A "telephone" is a instrument by which two persons may talk to each other. Gilpin v. Savage, 112 N. Y. Supp. 802, 805, 60 Misc. Rep. 605.

The word "telephone" implies the transmission of intelligence, messages, or sound to a far point. Doty v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 130 S. W. 1053, 1056, 123 Tenn. 329, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 167.

As convenience

See Convenience—Convenient.

As instrument alone

A franchise to a telephone company which fixes the rates for business and office use, for residence, for party line residence service, business extension telephones, and residence extension telephones, and which provides that at such time as the exchange of the company shall have in operation a specified number of telephones in the city it may increase the rates, does not contemplate in counting the telephones that business extension telephones or residence extension telephones shall be counted as telephones, for a "telephone," when technically defined, means only the instrument itself, but, when considered with reference to the use to be made of it, it must be accompanied with the necessary apparatus for the reception and transmission of messages, and an "extension telephone" is an instrument consisting of bell, receiver, and transmitter connected with a telephone which appears numbered on the list, and is used solely through such numbered instrument without any independent connection with the switchboard. Panhandle Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Amarillo (Tex.) 142 S. W. 638, 639.

The word "telephone," as used in a municipal ordinance constituting a contract between the city and a telephone company, containing a provision for furnishing to the citizens telephone service at a specified rate for business places and dwellings per annum, is used as including all improvements, equipments, and appliances essential in the operation of a telephone to make it most effective in use. Charles Simon's Sons Co. v. Maryland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 57 Atl. 193, 197, 99 Md. 141, 63 L. R. A. 727.

As telegraph

See Telegraph.

TELEPHONE BUSINESS

As public business, see Public Business.

The "telephone business" consists of two well-defined branches—the long-distance system, and exchanges for the local business of cities and villages. State ex rel. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co. v. City of Thief River Falls, 113 N. W. 1057, 1058, 102 Minn. 425.

TELEPHONE COMPANY

As public service corporation, see Public Service Corporation.

As quasi public corporation, see Quasi Public Corporation.

A "telephone company" is a common carrier of intelligence, engaged in a public service, holding itself out to the public, in consideration of certain fees exacted, as able, ready, and willing to enter into contracts which will place persons in direct communication with each other; and it may also hold itself out to render other services, such as the transmission of messages, its liability being measured by the duty assumed. Jones v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 130 S. W. 994, 995, 140 Ky. 165.

"A 'telephone company' is a public quasi corporation when it serves the public." A city council cannot prevent the lessee of a stall in the public market from employing telephonic service, provided the rights of others are not affected and legitimate ordinances of the municipality are not disregarded. Swayze v. City of Monroe, 40 South. 926, 928, 116 La. 643.

A "telephonic system" is simply a system for the transmission of news. It is, perhaps, in a limited sense, and yet in a strict sense, a common carrier. It must be equal in its dealings with all. But relator was not entitled to mandamus against a telephone company to compel the installation of a telephone, where she admitted being a prostitute and keeper of a bawdyhouse in which she desired the telephone installed. Godwin v. Carolina Telephone & Telegraph Co., 48 S. E. 636, 136 N. C. 258, 67 L. R. A. 251, 103 Am. St. Rep. 941, 1 Ann. Cas. 203 (quoting and adopting definition in Commercial Union Tel. Co. v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., 17 Atl. 1071, 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161, 15 Am. St. Rep. 893, and citing Chesapeake & P. Telephone Co. v. Baltimore & O. Telegraph Co., 7 Atl. 809, 811, 66 Md. 399, 414, 59 Am. Rep. 167).

TELEPHONE LINE

The term "telephone line," in a resolution of the council of a city granting the right to a telephone exchange company to occupy the streets, alleys and public grounds within the city, to place therein its poles, wires, and fixtures constituting its telephone line within and through the city, refers to the line the company is at the time constructing through the country, and refers only to its long-distance line. State ex rel. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co. v. City of Thief River Falls, 113 N. W. 1057, 1058, 102 Minn. 425.

The words "telephone line," in a resolution granting the right to a company to construct a telephone line within and through a city, cannot be construed to limit the grant to the construction of a single through line, to the exclusion of an exchange. City of Vermillion v. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co., 189 Fed. 289, 294, 111 C. C. A. 21.

A "telephone line" is a public utility. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Batesville & W. Tel. Co., 97 S. W. 660, 661, 80 Ark. 499 (citing Joyce, Electric Lines, § 275).

TELEPHONE MESSAGE

Sending a telephone message, see Send.

TELEPHONE PROPERTY

As real property, see Real Property.

TELL

An indictment for perjury, which charges that accused falsely testified that he never went to a bank and "told" the bank not to loan to a third person money to meet an obligation, etc., sets forth the perjurious matter, as against the objection that it fails to name the bank officer to whom accused made the statement; for, though the word "tell" imports oral communication, it may be employed where the communication is by writing. People v. Bradbury, 103 Pac. 215, 217, 155 Cal. 808 (citing Stand. Dict.).

TELLER*TELLER'S CHECK

For all practical purposes in modern mercantile transactions, a "teller's check" is but a substitute for a certified check, and much more closely resembles it than it does a bill of exchange, strictly speaking; and it is none the less a check because drawn by an executive officer of the bank upon the institution he serves. Hannon v. Allegheny Bellevue Land Co., 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 266, 273.

TELLTALES

"Telldales" are ropes suspended from a wire across the track to give warning of a low bridge. West v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 179 Fed. 801, 802, 103 C. C. A. 293.

"Telldale signals" are straps of leather attached to a wire extended over a railroad track to warn those working on box cars of the proximity of a "low bridge." Koller v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 220, 221, 113 Minn. 173.

"It was further in evidence that there were warning ropes suspended above the track on each approach to the bridge and about 25 or 30 yards off, called 'telldales.' These ropes were intended to notify brakemen to stoop, and they were suspended at such a distance as to strike the heads of the brakemen as they passed." Hedrick v. Southern R. Co., 48 S. E. 830, 831, 136 N. C. 510.

TEMPERATE

The word "temperate" means "moderate; showing moderation; not excessive, lavish, or inordinate." Temperate damages are such as would be a reasonable compensation for the injury, and are more than nominal damages. Hilton v. Jesup Banking Co., 57 S. E. 78, 79, 128 Ga. 30, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 224, 10 Ann. Cas. 987 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cent. Dict.).

TEMPORARY

"Temporary," as used in the rule against damages to an abutting owner for a temporary street obstruction while constructing an improvement, is the opposite of "permanent," and means a period commensurate with reasonable prosecution of the work. Lefkovitz v. City of Chicago, 87 N. E. 58, 238 Ill. 23.

TEMPORARY ABANDONMENT

"Temporary abandonment" of school land, so as not to lose the rights of a purchaser, must be an abandonment continuing "no longer than the facts justified. Thus, if plaintiff abandoned the land under a well-grounded fear of death or a serious bodily injury, and the facts, if any, that justified such abandonment had continued since that time to the present, the abandonment would be considered temporary, unless plaintiff had abandoned the land permanently." Jones v. Wright (Tex.) 92 S. W. 1010, 1013.

TEMPORARY AILMENTS

As disease, see Disease.

TEMPORARY DAMAGES

"Temporary damages" are such as are recoverable from time to time as they accrue. McHenry v. City of Parkersburg, 66 S. E. 750, 751, 66 W. Va. 533, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860.

TEMPORARY IMPAIRMENT OF POWER TO EARN MONEY

"Temporary impairment of the power to earn money" is another expression for "loss of time." Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Silvers (Ky.) 126 S. W. 120, 123.

TEMPORARY INJUNCTION

See, also, Injunction Pendente Lite.

A "temporary injunction" is a preliminary order of court, and granted at the outset or pending an action, forbidding the performance of threatened acts described in the complaint until the rights of the parties have been determined; and defendants must obey a temporary injunction as construed in the light of the purpose of the original suit, as shown by the complaint and the relief prayed for. Deming v. Bradstreet, 84 Atl. 116, 119, 85 Conn. 650.

A court or judge has no jurisdiction to grant a "temporary injunction" until the beginning of a proper action in which such order may be had. Ex parte Sharp, 124 Pac. 532, 533, 87 Kan. 504, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 460.

A "temporary injunction" is in effect a restraining order. Castleman v. State, 47 South. 647, 649, 94 Miss. 609.

A "restraining order" is an order granted to maintain the subject in controversy in statu quo until the hearing of an application for a temporary injunction, and hence is distinct from a "temporary injunction." Ex parte Grimes, 94 Pac. 668, 670, 20 Okl. 446.

The chief distinction between a "temporary order of injunction" and a mere "restraining order" until the application is fully heard is that the temporary order of injunction does not by its terms indicate or contemplate that a further hearing on the application is to be had before the application is finally acted upon. State ex rel. Keefe v. Graves, 117 N. W. 717, 718, 82 Neb. 282.

Though the terms "temporary injunction" and "restraining order" are often used synonymously, a "restraining order" is effective only until an application for an injunction shall be heard; a "temporary injunction" is a restraining order effective until the trial of the action in which it is issued. The effect, and not the name by which an order may be called, determines to which of two classes it properly belongs. State v. Johnston, 97 Pac. 790, 791, 78 Kan. 615.

The only purpose of a "temporary injunction" is to maintain the status quo until plaintiff may have an opportunity for a trial on the merits. Gillman v. Talley, 119 N. W. 144, 145, 140 Iowa, 718.

The sole object of a "temporary injunction" being to preserve the subject of controversy in the condition in which it is when the order is made till opportunity for a full and deliberate investigation, an order to a sheriff to return articles distrained and taken in his charge is improper. Evans v. Mayes, 62 S. E. 207, 208, 81 S. C. 188.

TEMPORARY INJURY

A "permanent injury" to real property, as distinguished from a temporary or continuing injury, is one of such a character, and existing under such circumstances, that it will be presumed to continue indefinitely. A "temporary or continuing injury" is one that may be abated or discontinued at any time. Worden v. Bielenberg, 138 N. W. 314, 315, 119 Minn. 330.

TEMPORARY INSANITY

Drunkenness is frequently characterized by law writers as "temporary insanity." Waldron v. Angleman, 58 Atl. 568, 569, 71 N. J. Law, 166.

TEMPORARY LOAN

A "temporary loan" within Const. Amend. art. 22, limiting municipal indebtedness, but providing that the adoption of the article shall not apply to temporary loans to be paid out of money raised by taxation during the year in which they are made, is one made for a temporary purpose, to be paid during the municipal year in which it is made and from taxes assessed and collected within the same year, and if such loan, though temporary in its inception, or any part thereof, is carried over into the next municipal year, it loses its temporary character and becomes a debt of the city within the inhibition of said article, limiting a municipal indebtedness to 5 per cent. of the city valuation. Blood v. Beal, 60 Atl. 427-431, 100 Me. 30.

TEMPORARY OBSTRUCTION

The presence of vehicles does not constitute a "temporary obstruction" of a street, within a municipal ordinance requiring every person using a vehicle on any street to drive at the right of the center of the street, but providing that, if the street is temporarily obstructed, such person may use the traveled part thereof, regardless of which side of the center of the street such traveled part may be. State v. Larrabee, 115 N. W. 948, 104 Minn. 37.

TEMPORARY PRIVILEGE

The erection of buildings for the storage of tools and machinery used in the completion of the subway requiring three or more years for such work, and also used for the generation of compressed air power, is permanent in a special sense with reference to the completion of work, and their erection and maintenance are not a "temporary privilege," granted by Laws 1892, c. 556, § 4, prohibiting the use of streets except for such temporary purposes as the proper authorities may grant to facilitate the work. Bates v. Holbrook, 64 N. E. 181, 183, 171 N. Y. 460.

TEMPORARY PURPOSE

That a corporation borrowing money gave its note therefor payable in 30 days justifies the conclusion that it borrowed for "temporary purposes," for which alone, under Laws 1851, c. 122, § 5, it had power to borrow. Leighton v. Leighton Lea Ass'n, 131 N. Y. Supp. 561, 566, 74 Misc. Rep. 229.

TEMPORARY RECEIVER

The term "temporary receiver" perhaps might better be confined to the mere custodian receiver, who is often appointed, upon the filing of the bill, under the general equity power of the court, in order to preserve the assets from waste until the hearing can be had which will determine whether the corporation is to be disabled or not, and its assets vested in a receiver. Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America, 58 Atl. 403, 408, 87 N. J. Eq. 441.

TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

As injunction, see Injunction.

TEMPTATION

"Temptation" is not always invitation. As the common law is understood, it does not excuse a trespass because there is a "temptation" to commit it, or hold property owners bound to contemplate the infraction of property rights because the "temptation" to untrained minds to infringe them might have been foreseen. A mere "temptation" is not an allurement sufficient to legally constitute an invitation to enter the premises of another. Paolino v. McKendall, 53 Atl. 268, 272, 24 R. I. 432, 60 L. R. A. 133, 96 Am. St. Rep. 736; Wilmot v. McPadden, 65 Atl. 157, 160, 79 Conn. 367, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101.

Plaintiff's intestate, a boy 7½ years old, was killed on a Sunday afternoon by the falling of a brick chimney attached to a dwelling house which was being demolished by defendants. The bricks, supporting the chimney, were left in a safe condition by defendants at the close of work on Saturday, the day before, but were removed by deceased and another child while playing on the first floor of the house without defendants' permission. The lot on which the house was situated was not fenced. The building was left unguarded, and no means were taken to prevent persons from trespassing on the land. Held that, though defendants might have contemplated that children would be attracted to the house and that such accident might occur, they were not liable for the death of decedent, since, in the absence of a neglect of some legal duty, the duty was not imposed on them of protecting children from yielding to temptation to unlawfully enter the premises. Willmot v. McPadden, 65 Atl. 157, 160, 79 Conn. 367, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101 (quoting and adopting the definition in Holbrook v. Aldrich, 46 N. E. 115, 168 Mass. 16, 36 L. R. A. 493, 60 Am. St. Rep. 364).

TEN BLOCKS

San Francisco Charter, art. 2, c. 2, § 1, subd. 27, as amended February 5, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 596), precluding authorization of the joint use by two or more street railways of more than "ten blocks," means ten consecutive blocks. Platt v. City and County of San Francisco, 110 Pac. 304, 312, 158 Cal. 74.

St. 1906, p. 2499), providing that every interest in real estate, if granted or devised to two or more persons other than executors and trustees, or husband and wife, shall be a "tenancy in common," unless expressly declared in the grant or devise to be a joint tenancy. Cohen v. Herbert, 104 S. W. 84, 87, 205 Mo. 537, 120 Am. St. Rep. 772.

TENANT

See Cotenant; Eviction (Of Tenant); Joint Tenant; Substitution of Tenant; Subtenant.

A "tenant" is defined to be one that holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, at will, or upon sufferance. Powers v. Ingraham (N. Y.) 3 Barb. 576, 579.

"A 'tenant' is one who occupies the lands or premises of another in subordination to the other's title and with his assent, express or implied; but, in order to create the relation, the two elements must concur." Francis v. Holmes, 118 S. W. 881, 883, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 608 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Wood, Landl. & Ten. § 1); Alexander v. Gardner, 96 S. W. 818, 819, 123 Ky. 552, 124 Am. St. Rep. 378 (citing Wood, Landl. & Ten. § 1; Tayl., Landl. & Ten. § 14); Sharpe v. Mathews, 51 S. E. 706, 707, 123 Ga. 794.

The word "tenant," in Shannon's Code, § 5093, declaring that unlawful detainer is where the defendant either by contract or an assignee of a tenant, etc., has reference to the relation of landlord and tenant, and not to the more remote meaning which the word bears when used in the expression "tenants by the curtesy," "tenants in common," and the like. Shepperson v. Burnette, 92 S. W. 702, 116 Tenn. 117.

Under a statute prescribing punishment of a tenant for keeping a disorderly house on leased premises, one gaining a temporary entry into a house, and using it, not for profit, but for the purpose, on the part of himself and others, during two nights and one day, of having carnal intercourse with a woman shown to have been a prostitute, is not a "tenant," but a mere trespasser. Bates v. State, 76 S. W. 462, 463, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 420.

In an agreement between a father and daughter, providing that the daughter continue to live in certain premises and make it a home for her sister, who lived with her, "without becoming a tenant," until further agreement between the parties, the words "without becoming a tenant" are used in a broad and colloquial sense, and have particular reference to the payment of the rent, and are not used in the strict technical sense of the word "tenant" in the expressions "tenant for life," "tenant for years," etc. Disley v. Disley, 75 Atl. 481, 482, 30 R. I. 366.

One who takes land of another and agrees to cultivate the same and deliver to the owner one-third of the crop is a "tenant" and not a mere "cropper." A "tenant" is one who rents land and pays for it either in money or a part of the crops, or the equivalent. A "cropper" farms the land and is paid for his work in a part of the crop. Hansen v. Hansen, 129 N. W. 982, 983, 88 Neb. 517.

"The distinction between a tenant and a cropper is that a tenant has an estate in the land for a given time, and a right of property in the crops, and hence makes the division thereof between himself and the landlord in case of an agreement upon shares, while a cropper has no estate in the land, nor ownership of the crops, but is merely a servant, and receives his share of the crops from the landlord, in whom the title is." Taylor v. Donahoe, 103 N. W. 1099, 1100, 125 Wis. 513.

Ordinarily the landlord supplies a lodger with furnished rooms, the care and occupation of which the landlord has; the "lodger" merely having the use of rooms without the exclusive possession, while the "tenant" has exclusive possession. Mathews v. Livingston, 85 Atl. 529, 531, 86 Conn. 263, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 195.

As occupant of land

See Occupant—Occupier.

TENANT AT SUFFERANCE

"At common law a 'tenancy at sufferance' was created when a person came into possession of land lawfully and held over wrongfully after his estate had ended. The tenancy was of a most shadowy character, and the landlord could re-enter and bring ejectment for possession without the necessity of prior demand or notice to quit." Wolfer v. Hurst, 82 Pac. 20, 47 Or. 156, 8 Ann. Cas. 725.

An "estate at sufferance" is where one comes into possession of land by lawful title, but keeps it afterwards without title, as where a lessee for a year holds after the term expires without any fresh lease from the owner. Cook v. Howard, 117 Pac. 320, 59 Or. 372. See, also, Sharpe v. Mathews, 51 S. E. 706, 708, 123 Ga. 794 (citing Godfrey v. Walker, 42 Ga. 562, 575; Willis v. Harrell, 45 S. E. 794, 118 Ga. 906).

"A 'tenancy at sufferance' arises when a man comes into possession lawfully, but holds over wrongfully after the determination of his interest, differing in this respect from a 'tenancy at will,' where the holding is by the landlord's permission." One who enters into the possession of land under a deed, claiming in good faith the land as his own, cannot be summarily evicted from the premises as a "tenant at sufferance." Sharpe v. Mathews, 51 S. E. 706, 708, 123 Ga. 794

A "tenancy by sufferance" is where a person who has originally come in possession by a lawful title holds such possession after his title has determined. J. W. Reccius & Bro. v. Columbia Finance & Trust Co., 86 S. W. 1113, 120 Ky. 478 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mendel v. Hall, 76 Ky. [13 Bush] 232, and Irvine v. Scott, 3 S. W. 163, 85 Ky. 262).

A "tenancy at sufferance" arises where the tenant wrongfully holds over after his term, differing from a tenancy at will, where the possession is by permission of the landlord. Thompson v. Baxter, 119 N. W. 797, 798, 107 Minn. 122, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575.

An "estate at sufferance" is created by the laches of the owner or landlord, and his assent, express or implied, that the tenant might continue in possession, or the acceptance of rent, converts an estate at sufferance into an estate at will, or a tenancy from year to year. Powers v. Ingraham (N. Y.) 3 Barb. 576, 579 (citing Rowan v. Lytle [N. Y.] 11 Wend. 616).

A vendor, retaining possession after performance by the purchaser, is not only subject to ejectment, but is liable for damages; and he does not, by continuing in possession, become by that act itself a "tenant by sufferance." Teller v. Schulz, 108 N. Y. Supp. 325, 327, 123 App. Div. 883.

Where a lease is made for a term of one year ensuing, with the privilege of continuing the lease from year to year at the same terms at a fixed monthly rental, it creates a lease for one year with the privilege of extending it for one more year, and after that time, if the lessee holds over without a written extension, though the monthly rental is paid, the lessee under Laws 1906, p. 126, c. 5441, § 4, is a "tenant by sufferance," and has no right to hold the leased premises after notice terminating the lease. Brown v. Markham, 48 South. 39, 42, 56 Fla. 202.

A "tenant by sufferance" has no estate or title, but only a naked possession, without right and wrongfully, stands, in no privity to the landlord, at common law is not liable for rent and is not entitled to notice to quit, and his continued possession is due wholly to the forbearance of the landlord in not evicting him, and no contractual relation, apart from statute, arises out of such possession. Benton v. Williams, 88 N. E. 843, 844, 202 Mass. 189 (citing Warren v. Lyons, 25 N. E. 721, 152 Mass. 310, 9 L. R. A. 353; Edwards v. Hale, 91 Mass. [9 Allen] 462; Haynes v. Aldrich, 31 N. E. 94, 133 N. Y. 287, 28 Am. St. Rep. 636; Delano v. Montague, 58 Mass. [4 Cush.] 42).

TENANT AT WILL

at the will of the lessor, by force of which lease the lessee is in possession, in this case the lessee is called "tenant at will," because he hath no sure or certain estate; for the lessor may put him out at what time it pleaseth him. Such tenant was not entitled to notice to quit, but the law gave him the ripened corn which he had sown, and free entry, egress, and regress to cut and carry it away. This tenancy at will was attended with so many inconveniences that the courts in England early raised an implied contract for a year, and added that the tenant could not be removed at the end of the year without six months' previous notice. Tenancies at will there are held to be estates from year to year merely for the sake of notice to quit. As to every other purpose they are regarded as mere tenancies at will. Where a person enters into possession of the land of another with his assent, under a contract to purchase the same, the vendor may maintain ejectment against him, after default in either of the payments stipulated in the contract, without the previous service of a notice to quit. Powers v. Ingraham (N. Y.) 3 Barb. 576, 579 (citing Rising v. Stannard, 17 Mass. 282; Ellis v. Paige [Mass.] 1 Pick. 43; Phillips v. Covert [N. Y.] 7 Johns. 1; Bradley v. Covell [N. Y.] 4 Cow. 349; Jackson ex dem. Wood v. Salmon [N. Y.] 4 Wend. 327).

"An 'estate at will' is where lands and tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor." Its definition has been so extended as to also include estates at the will of the lessee. Where an oil and gas lease did not state the time in the granting clause for the lease to run, but the habendum clause recited that the lessee, his heirs and assigns, were to hold the premises for 2 years and as long thereafter as oil or gas was found in paying quantities, not exceeding in whole 25 years, and no oil or gas was found within the 2 years, the lease terminated absolutely at the end of 2 years. Brown v. Fowler, 63 N. E. 76, 78, 65 Ohio St. 507 (quoting and adopting the definition in 4 Kent, Comm. 110). See, also, Wiggin v. Woodruff (N. Y.) 16 Barb. 474, 478 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. 110).

"Where one goes into possession of land under an invalid lease, his tenancy, at its inception, is a tenancy at will." Israelson v. Wollenberg, 116 N. Y. Supp. 626, 627, 63 Misc. Rep. 293 (quoting and adopting definition in 24 Cyc. p. 1039).

Possession under an invalid conveyance or contract of sale creates a tenancy at will, and where a tenant goes into possession under an invalid lease his tenancy at its inception is merely a "tenancy at will." A "tenancy at will" is an estate which simply confers a right to the possession of the premises leased for such indefinite period as both parties shall determine such possession shall continue. The estate may arise by implication, as well as by express words. Tate v.

Gainnes, 105 Pac. 193, 194, 25 Okl. 141, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106 (quoting and adopting definition in Rogers v. Hill, 64 S. W. 536, 3 Ind. T. 562; Cunningham v. Holton, 55 Me. 33, 36).

A "tenancy at will" is created where tenements are let by one to another, to have and to hold to him at the will of the lessor by force of which lease the lessee is in possession. Stafford v. Adair, 57 Vt. 63, 65 (adopting definition in Coke on Littleton, § 63; 4 Kent, Comm. 382; 1 Hill. Real Prop. 382).

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4110, providing that all verbal contracts for the leasing of buildings in cities shall be held to be tenancies from month to month, and may be terminated by either party on a written notice, a tenant under a verbal lease for 11 months of city property is a "tenant at will." Gerhart Realty Co. v. Welter, 83 S. W. 278, 279, 108 Mo. App. 248.

An instruction that, where one rents from another without any definite time for duration of possession, the landlord may terminate the tenancy by reasonable notice to quit, and that a "tenancy at will" is where one person lets land to another to hold at the will of the landlord, etc., sufficiently states that, to constitute a tenancy at will, there must not only be a tenancy for an indefinite time, but it must be understood to be subject to the will of the landlord, and such instruction is not subject to criticism on the ground that the statute provides that a tenancy shall be understood to be for one year, unless it is stipulated to be for a shorter term. Laurens Telephone Co. v. Enterprise Bank, 72 S. E. 878, 881, 90 S. C. 50.

A lease for a definite and permissible term, but which reserves to the lessee an option to terminate it before the expiration of the term does not create a mere "tenancy at will," within the operation of the rule that an estate at the will of one party is equally at the will of the other. Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co., 140 Fed. 801, 807, 72 C. C. A. 213.

The characteristics of a "tenancy at will" are uncertainty respecting the term and the right of either party to terminate it by proper notice, and these features must exist, whether the tenancy be express or by implication of law. Thompson v. Baxter, 119 N. W. 797, 798, 107 Minn. 122, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575.

"A 'tenancy at will' is essentially indeterminate by its own terms. It will not end at any certain time by its own mere force." J. W. Reccius & Bro. v. Columbia Finance & Trust Co., 86 S. W. 1113, 120 Ky. 478.

Where parties leased by parol from a brewer certain premises, they to remain as long as they wanted, and the rental to be determined by the number of barrels of beer purchased from the lessor, and to be payable just as the beer bill was payable, they were "tenants at will." Lyons v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Atl. 924, 925, 209 Pa. 550.

The continued occupation of a tenant after the expiration of his term with the knowledge and consent of his landlord and the payment and receipt of rent at the same rate and upon the same rent days as were required by the lease is evidence sufficient to show an agreement for "tenancy at will." A possession recognized by the parties as based upon such stated rent payments, is ordinarily inconsistent with a mere occupancy devoid of any substantial right on the part of the tenant, which characterizes a tenancy by sufferance. Benton v. Williams, 88 N. E. 843, 844, 202 Mass. 189.

"A 'tenancy at sufferance' arises when a man comes into possession lawfully but holds over wrongfully after the determination of his interest, differing in this respect from a 'tenancy at will,' where the holding is by the landlord's permission." Sharpe v. Mathews, 51 S. E. 706, 708, 123 Ga. 794 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Tayl. Landl. & Ten. [9th Ed.] § 64).

TENANT FACTORY

Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 482, c. 415) art. 6, § 86, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 1049, c. 490, requires the owner, agent, or lessee of a factory to provide in each work-room thereof sufficient ventilation and make such persons otherwise liable to a penalty. Section 94, as added by Laws 1906, p. 303, c. 178, and amended by Laws 1908, p. 1217, c. 426, § 2, provides that the term "owner" shall mean the owner of the freehold or the lessee, and defines the term "tenant factory" as a building, separate parts of which are occupied by different persons, and one or more of which parts is so used as to constitute a factory, and makes the owner of such tenant factory responsible for the non-observance of section 86, and provides that the lessee shall permit the owner to enter the premises to comply with the law. Held, that where the owner of a building leases the lower floor under a lease requiring the tenant to observe such regulations, and the latter partitions the floor, puts in workbenches, stoves, etc., thereby creating poor ventilation, the owner is personally liable, though he did not create the condition, and though the tenant may be also liable. *People ex rel. #### TENANT FROM MONTH TO MONTH

A "tenancy from month to month" arises where no definite time is agreed upon and the rent is fixed at so much per month, and is terminable at the expiration of any period for which rent has been paid. Thompson v. Baxter, 119 N. W. 797, 798, 107 Minn. 122, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575. See, also, Brill v. Carsley, 84 Pac. 57, 58, 2 Cal. App. 331.

Where one goes into possession of land under an invalid lease and pays a monthly rent, he becomes a "tenant from month to month." Israelson v. Wollenberg, 116 N. Y. Supp. 626, 627, 63 Misc. Rep. 293 (citing 24 Cyc. p. 1034, B, 2; Id. p. 1035, b).

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4110, providing that all verbal contracts for the leasing of buildings in cities shall be held to be tenancies from month to month, and may be terminated by either party on a month's written notice, a verbal lease for 11 months of city property constitutes a "tenancy from month to month," which may be terminated by the landlord on 30 days' notice. Gerhart Realty Co. v. Welter, 83 S. W. 278, 279, 108 Mo. App. 248.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4110 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2234), declaring an agreement for the occupation of a house or other building in a city not made in writing to be a "tenancy from month to month," and permitting either party to terminate it on one month's notice, a tenant from month to month who vacates without giving one month's notice is liable for the rent for the succeeding month. Sessinghaus v. Knoche, 118 S. W. 104, 106, 137 Mo. App. 323.

Where a tenant occupied a tenement at a certain rental per month, under a verbal agreement, he was a "tenant from month to month," under Rev. St. 1899, § 4110 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2234), providing that all agreements for the leasing or occupation of tenements in cities, not made in writing and signed by the parties or their agents, shall be deemed tenancies from month to month. Haumueller v. Ackermann, 130 S. W. 91, 92, 150 Mo. App. 141.

Tenancy by the month distinguished

"A 'tenancy from month to month,' which may be determined on notice, is said to be in the nature of a tenancy at will. It is created by agreement, or it may be implied from the manner in which the rent is paid. A lease for an indefinite term with monthly rent reserved creates a tenancy from month to month. It is a continuing one, and not a new tenancy, by the renewal at the beginning of each month." In unlawful detainer, where a tenancy is by the month, a definite period, as distinguished from a tenancy for an indefinite period, as from month to month, no notice to quit is necessary, but a demand for possession and refusal to renew such monthly tenancy; and if the ground of the action be for a breach of contract to pay rent, demand for the rent at the time and place stipulated are conditions precedent to right of such action. Bennett v. Hollinger, 66 S. E. 502, 66 W. Va. 385 (citing 24 Cyc. p. 1024; 1 McAdam, Landl. & Ten. § 40).

TENANT FROM YEAR TO YEAR

"Tenancies from year to year" by implication are the results of judicial legislation as a measure of equity and sound policy. Griswold v. Town of Branford, 68 Atl. 987, 989, 80 Conn. 453.

"Tenancies from year to year" grew at an early date by judicial construction out of the old tenancies at will, to obviate the difficulties of which the courts raised an implied lease for a certain period, and ingrafted upon it a rule of law that the tenancy could not be terminated, even at the end of the period, without previous notice. Such tenancy could arise by express contract, while, upon the other hand, it might have arisen by implication; as where a tenant held over after the expiration of a lease with the consent of the landlord and continued to pay a periodical rental, the law raised another term equivalent to the period of payment. These tenancies were determinable by notice, the length of time of which to be given was according to whether the tenancy was strictly from year to year or less, as from quarter to quarter, or month to month, and the like. The right to determine the tenancy by notice was an inseparable incident of the holding, and was exercisable by either the landlord or the tenant, being for the mutual benefit of both; but the parties to such a tenancy could alter the notice necessary to determine it, and could agree to a notice of less duration or period, or they might have waived it entirely by a writing under their hands. Wolfer v. Hurst, 82 Pac. 20, 21, 47 Or. 156, 8 Ann. Cas. 725.

A lease of land for one year, with the privilege of continuing it from year to year so long as both parties may agree, creates a "tenancy from year to year." Hatfield v. Lawton, 95 N. Y. Supp. 451, 108 App. Div. 113.

"An agreement to pay rent is an essential element of a 'tenancy from year to year,' and the times at which it is payable must have reference to a yearly holding, such as by the year, quarterly, or some aliquot part of a year." A tenant's holding over and paying monthly rent beyond the term of a lease for a year relating to urban premises, in which lease rent is reserved by the month and is payable at monthly periods, does not alone imply renewal by the year, but a renewal of the tenancy by the month is implied. Kaufman v. Mastin, 66 S. E. 92, 93, 66 W. Va. 99, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855 (quoting and adopting statement in Washb. Real Prop. § 798).

TENANT IN COMMON

Ouster by tenant in common, see Ouster.

"Tenants in common" are not privies. "They do not claim under each other. They may claim their several titles from entirely different sources. In this respect they differ from joint tenants and coparceners." As said in Co. Litt., "tenants in common are they which have lands or tenements in fee simple, fee tail, or for terms of life, etc., and they have such lands or tenements by several titles, and not by a joint title; and none of them know of this several, but they ought by law to occupy these lands or tenements in common." Allred v. Smith, 47 S. E. 597, 599, 135 N. C. 443, 65 L. R. A. 924.

Plaintiff and defendant contracted to purchase lands, and in order to complete the purchase caused the lands to be conveyed to parties who advanced the purchase price; it being understood between plaintiff and defendant and such parties that the lands should be reconveyed to plaintiff on repayment of the advances, and it being agreed between plaintiff and defendant that each should have an equal share in the lands, and each contribute one-half to the moneys paid or to be paid. Subsequently plaintiff notified defendant that, in case he did not meet his portion of the amount necessary to complete the payment of the advances, plaintiff would make the payment, and refuse to recognize any claim on the part of defendant. Defendant failed to make any payment, and plaintiff sued to quiet title. Held, that plaintiff and defendant were "tenants in common," and plaintiff was not entitled to enforce a forfeiture, and defendant was entitled to a decree declaring him to be owner of an undivided one-half interest in the lands, on the payment of one-half of the purchase price and any other sums plaintiff might have paid, with interest. Anderson v. Snowden, 87 Pac. 356, 358, 44 Wash. 274, 120 Am. St. Rep. 998.

Civ. Code, § 683, declares that a joint interest is one owned by several persons in equal shares, acquired by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared to be a joint tenancy; and section 686 provides that every interest created in favor of several persons in their own right is an interest in common, unless declared in its creation to be a joint interest. Held that, where a note and mortgage were executed in favor of several persons, they held as "tenants in common," so that on the death of one the entire title did not vest in the others by right of survivorship. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. & Mill. Co., 86 Pac. 825, 828, 3 Cal. App. 583.

A lessor and lessee under a cropping contract are "tenants in common" in the crop, and if the lessee mortgages his interest, the mortgagee is subrogated only to the lessee's rights and interest, and to the extent of his mortgage is a tenant in common with the lessor, so that, in order to claim as against the lessor, the mortgagee must fulfill the lessee's contract. Abernethy v. Uhlman, 93 Pac. 936, 938, 52 Or. 359.

A widow, to whom dower has been assigned and set off by metes and bounds, is not a "tenant in common," "joint tenant," or "coparcener" with the owner of the fee, within Gen. Laws 1909, c. 330, § 4, authorizing joint tenants, coparceners, and tenants in common to sue for partition, since her estate is a life estate in severalty in the entire premises within the metes and bounds, and she may not sue for partition. Newell v. Willmarth, 76 Atl. 433, 30 R. I. 529, 19 Ann. Cas. 807.

Plaintiff, who resided on a farm, contracted to let defendant occupy free of rent one of the tenement houses on the farm and carry on the same for a term of years. Each party was to furnish certain things for the farm, and each have produce for his family use without accounting for it. Defendant, according to plaintiff's claim, was to sell everything produced and divide the profits with plaintiff each month, and according to his own claim the products were to be divided; each party selling his half. Held, that plaintiff and defendant were tenants in common of the products of the farm. Mead v. Owen, 67 Atl. 722, 723, 80 Vt. 273, 13 Ann. Cas. 231 (citing Aiken v. Smith, 21 Vt. 172; Frost v. Kellogg, 23 Vt. 308; Willmarth v. Pratt, 56 Vt. 474; Willard v. Wing, 39 Atl. 632, 70 Vt. 123, 67 Am. St. Rep. 657; Sowles v. Martin, 56 Atl. 979, 76 Vt. 180; Hunt v. Rublee, 58 Atl. 724, 76 Vt. 448).

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3341, enacts that all conveyances and devises made to two or more persons shall be construed to create estates in common and not in "joint tenancy," unless it shall be expressed therein that the grantees or devisees so hold the same in joint tenancy and to the survivor of them, or it shall manifestly appear from the terms of the instrument that it was intended to create a "joint tenancy." Testator's will gave his wife his lands for life, and recited that at the decease of the wife testator desired that the lands "be owned equally and jointly" by his children, or, in case of the decease of any of the children, "his or her share to descend to the heirs of their bodies, if any, and, if not, to those surviving." Held, that the estate granted the children was a "tenancy in common." Taylor v. Stephens (Ind.) 72 N. E. 609, 611; Id., 74 N. E. 980, 983, 165 Ind. 200.

Though parties who had joined in the building of a telephone line, each of the parties building a certain section, were not strictly and technically "tenants in common," their rights in and relationship to the property were so analogous to the rights of tenants in common in the property held in common that one of them was entitled to the same relief against the others as one cotenant would be entitled to against another cotenant seeking to interfere unlawfully with the legitimate use and enjoyment of the common property. Hancock v. Tharpe, 60 S. E. 168, 169, 129 Ga. 812.

Where a grantor conveys the fee in land to himself and others, he becomes a "tenant in common with the grantee." Green v. Cannady, 57 S. E. 832, 835, 77 S. C. 193.

Under Gen. St. 1882, §§ 2035-2037, providing that the real and personal property of a married woman shall be her separate property, and giving her power to convey and devise the same, and giving her a right to contract, where a grant is made to a husband and wife in the absence of any express intention of conveying the whole to the survivor, they become "tenants in common." Green v. Cannady, 57 S. E. 832, 834, 77 S. C. 193 (quoting the definition in 1 Sharswood's Blackstone, 181).

Community property

Community property undisposed of by a decree of divorce is thereafter held by the divorced parties as "tenants in common." Tabler v. Feverill, 88 Pac. 994, 996, 4 Cal. App. 671.

Joint tenants distinguished

Under the statute of Arkansas, every interest in real estate granted or devised to two or more persons is deemed to be a tenancy in common, unless expressly declared to be a joint tenancy. Lester v. Kirtley, 104 S. W. 213, 216, 83 Ark. 554.

Tenant by entirety

Where a husband and wife hold as tenants by the entirety, a divorce operates to dissolve the estate by the entirety, after which they hold as "tenants in common." *Hayes v. #### Water right

To constitute a "tenancy in common" in a water right there must be a right to unity of user of the water, and if such right is destroyed the common tenancy ceases to exist. Norman v. Corbley, 79 Pac. 1059, 1060, 32 Mont. 195; City of Telluride v. Davis, 80 Pac. 1051, 1052, 33 Colo. 355, 108 Am. St. Rep. 101.

TENANTABLE

TEND

The use of the word "tend" does not contemplate conjecture. It contemplates that the testimony has a tendency to prove the allegations of the complaint, and not some other theory inconsistent therewith. Shaw v. New Year Gold Mines Co., 77 Pac. 515, 516, 31 Mont. 138.

An instruction that certain circumstances tended to establish accused's guilt, but were not alone sufficient to warrant a conviction, was not on the weight of the evidence, but was a statement that the circumstances might be considered in determining the issue; the word "tend" meaning to move in a certain direction, to be directed as to an end, object, or purpose. Hogue v. State, 124 S. W. 783, 785, 93 Ark. 316.

TENDING

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 781, providing that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect accused with the offense, and article 769, declaring that, in a prosecution for seduction, no conviction can be had unless the testimony of prosecutrix is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect accused with the offense, a prosecutrix is sufficiently corroborated when there are any facts that tend to show that accused committed the offense, and it is error to attempt to lay down a rule as to what particular issues of the case shall be corroborated; the word "tending," meaning to be directed as to any end, object, or purpose. Nash v. State, 134 S. W. 709, 713, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 259.

TENDING TO A BREACH OF THE PEACE

Under Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, c. 410) § 1458, declaring that any threatening or insulting behavior in a public place that tends to a breach of the peace, constitutes disorderly conduct, the words "tending to a breach of the peace" mean such behavior on the part of one which might be resented either forcibly or by loud and boisterous language, regardless of what action is in fact taken by those who are subjected thereto; and the offense is committed by a physical interference with the complainant leaving an elevator, by an assault by jostling complainant with intent to commit robbery from the person, although the fact of the robbery be in doubt. People v. Cohen, 136 N. Y. Supp. 163, 165.

TENDER

TENDER

See Legal Tender; Valid Tender.

"Tender" is an offer by a debtor or other person, who is under an obligation, to pay such debt or to perform such obligation, the actual payment or performance being prevented, by the refusal of the creditor or person entitled to performance, to accept the same. Cape Fear Lumber Co. v. Small, 66 S. E. 880, 882, 84 S. C. 434.

"To constitute a 'tender,' there must be a definite offer to pay on the one hand and an unqualified refusal to accept on the other." Supreme Tent, Knights of Maccabees of the World, v. Fisher, 90 N. E. 1044, 1046, 45 Ind. App. 419.

Readiness to tender is not equivalent to "tender." Cooley v. Bergstrom, 60 S. E. 220, 221, 3 Ga. App. 496.

A "tender" of an uncertified check is sufficient, if it is not objected to on the ground that it is uncertified. Bunte v. Schumann, 92 N. Y. Supp. 806, 807, 46 Misc. Rep. 593.

Where, in an action to recover the purchase price of land sold under parol agreement repudiated by the vendor, the court instructed that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff did ever "tender" the full amount, and that if he did not he was not entitled to recover, plaintiff, not having asked for more specific instructions, could not complain of the court's use of the word "tender." "It is doubtless true that this word, as commonly used in such a connection, imports nothing more than the manifestation of a present readiness, willingness, and ability to perform, provided the other party will perform on his part." Cave v. Osborne, 79 N. E. 794, 795, 193 Mass. 482 (citing Cook v. Doggett, 84 Mass. [2 Allen] 439, 441).

Actual or manual production

In order to constitute a valid "tender," there must be actual ability, accompanied by immediate physical possibility of reaching out and laying hold of the thing to be delivered and the making of a manual proffer thereof, or of placing it in such a position that the person to receive it may lay hold of it if he chooses. Greenwood v. Watson, 171 Fed. 619, 621, 96 C. C. A. 421.

Actual production of money is essential to a "tender." Bolton v. Amsler, 95 N. Y. Supp. 481.

A sufficient "tender" imports, not only readiness and ability to perform, but actual production of the thing to be delivered. Leask v. Dew, 92 N. Y. Supp. 891, 893, 102 App. Div. 529 (quoting and adopting definition in Eddy v. Davis, 116 N. Y. 247, 22 N. E. 362); Alpern v. Farrell, 117 N. Y. Supp. 706, 709, 133 App. Div. 278.

Deposit necessary

The Civil Code has not changed the definition of the term "tender." That term still means what is always meant, an offer of performance. The Code has substituted the requirement of deposit of the thing tendered, at the risk of the creditor, in place of the common-law requirement that a "tender" must be kept good by a readiness to pay and the payment into court. The Code has also made this further innovation on the common law with respect to the effect of a "tender": That a mere "tender" of the debt is no longer sufficient, as at common law, to extinguish a mortgage or pledge of property, but to have that effect the "tender" must be kept good by a deposit of the thing tendered subject to the order of the creditor. Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 174, 13 N. D. 580.

Equivalent to payment

"For the purpose of avoiding * * * the loss of any rights or privileges, the 'tender' is the exact equivalent of payment, and it does not have to be repeated. * * * Tender, when rejected, operates as payment." O'Donnell v. Chamberlin, 91 Pac. 39, 41, 36 Colo. 395, 10 Ann. Cas. 931 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 69, 110). See, also, Leet v. Armbruster, 77 Pac. 653, 143 Cal. 663.

"Tender" is not payment; it is merely an offer to pay. Silver v. Moore, 84 Atl. 1072, 1073, 109 Me. 505.

Liability admitted

"A 'tender,' when made, is an admission of an amount due equal to the sum tendered, and while a verdict may be rendered for more than the amount tendered, it cannot be rendered for less. And this, too, although the tender be defective, or even be offered in a case where it cannot be legally made or pleaded, and for such reasons be held unavailable to save costs." Where, in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, the owner of the property tenders a sum less than that claimed, such tender is an admission of the validity of the lien to that extent, and the court should decree its enforcement for the amount tendered, even though it is adjudged that the lien is invalid. Wm. Cameron & Co. v. Campbell, 141 Fed. 32, 36, 72 C. C. A. 520 (quoting and adopting definition in Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Harp, 6 Colo. 420).

A "tender" in an answer or during the progress of the trial, does not necessarily admit the validity of the plaintiff's cause of action. Craw v. Abrams, 94 N. W. 639, 640, 68 Neb. 546.

Mutual promises

In a case of a "tender," the money must be offered unconditionally, and the offer is an acknowledgment that it is absolutely due; but in case of concurrent promises, or where it is payable upon the performance of some act by the opposite party, no such unconditional offer of tender is required. Douglas v. Hustead, 65 Atl. 670, 673, 216 Pa. 292.

The "tender" of purchase money by a purchaser is not absolute and unconditional, so that he can under no circumstances withdraw it, but is conditional upon the vendor carrying out the terms of the contract on his part, and a tender of money is not invalid because coupled with a demand for the performance of a reciprocal duty enjoined by law upon the person to whom the tender is made. Alpern v. Farrell, 117 N. Y. Supp. 706, 709, 133 App. Div. 278.

Unconditional offer necessary

"A 'tender' is an offer by a debtor, or other person who is under an obligation, to pay such debt, or perform such obligation; the actual payment or performance being prevented by the refusal of the creditor, or person entitled to perform it, to accept the same." An offer by a guarantor to pay an overdue note, if the holder wishes him to do so, accompanied by a display of a sufficient amount of money for the purpose, does not necessarily amount to such a "tender" of payment as will release him from liability, although the creditor says that he prefers the note to the cash. The offer is made contingent upon the creditor's desiring him to make the payment. Crane v. Renville State Bank of Renville, Minn., 85 Pac. 285, 286, 73 Kan. 287.

Offer synonymous

The word "offer" is frequently used by courts and text-writers as synonymous with "tender," and it may be properly so used with reference to articles capable of manual delivery and actually produced. But with respect to heavy articles of merchandise, situated at a distance from the place to which they must be transported, if restored to the vendor, the phrase "offer to return" is more commonly and aptly applied to express a willingness, or to make a proposal to rescind the contract and return the goods. In order to work a rescission, it is not sufficient for the purchaser, who has taken delivery of the goods at the vendor's place of business, to give notice to the vendor that he holds the goods subject to his order, or that the goods are at a designated place subject to his disposal. The goods must be returned to the place where accepted, unless, upon an "offer to return," such offer is refused by the vendor. Mundt v. Simpkins, 115 N. W. 325, 326, 81 Neb. 1, 129 Am. St. Rep. 670 (quoting and adopting definition in Milliken v. Skillings, 36 Atl. 77, 89 Me. 180).

Tender of bill of exceptions

Where, on the day limited, appellant filed a purported bill of exceptions, consisting of the stenographer's notes of a former trial of the case, this was no "tender" of a bill of exceptions, within the meaning of the Code, and the court could not, on a subsequent day, give leave to file a bill of exceptions. City of Catlettsburg v. May, 131 S. W. 15, 16, 140 Ky. 367.

Tender of deed

To constitute a valid "tender" of a deed, a deed duly executed must be produced by the vendor to the vendee, so that the vendee may see that it is regular in form, and that it conveys the estate he bargained for. Where the agent of a vendor of land states to the vendee that he has in his pocket a deed of the vendor, but does not produce it and give the vendee an opportunity to examine it, it is not a sufficient "tender." Leferts v. Dolton, 66 Atl. 527, 217 Pa. 299, 118 Am. St. Rep. 913.

Tender of freight

To entitle a shipper to the statutory penalty for refusal to receive freight for shipment, it is not enough to constitute a "tender" that he place the freight on the carrier's platform or simply asking the agent when the freight can be shipped, but there must be an actual tender, though it is not essential that any particular language be used, but it is sufficient if the language amount in common understanding to a tender and refusal. Wampum Cotton Mills v. Carolina & N. W. Ry. Co., 64 S. E. 586, 587, 150 N. C. 608.

Where a shipper placed lumber on a car with the carrier's consent, and demanded a bill of lading, which was refused, and went to the agent of the carrier several times and asked if he had shipped the car load, and he said he had not, and plaintiff refused to unload the car, there was a tender and refusal to ship on each day from the time the goods were placed in the car until they were finally shipped. Garrison v. Southern Ry. Co., 64 S. E. 578, 583, 150 N. C. 575.

Under Revisal 1905, § 860, authorizing a "tender of judgment," a tender must be of a judgment against all defendants, and must be made in behalf of all of them. A tender by one of two defendants against whom a judgment has been rendered before a justice of the peace, made by the one who appealed to the superior court before the perfecting of the appeal, by merely tendering a sum less than the judgment in full settlement of the judgment is not a "tender" within Revisal 1905, § 860, authorizing a tender of judgment. Wyatt v. Wilson, 67 S. E. 501, 502, 152 N. C. 276.

Tender of resignation

A "tender" is an offer requiring acceptance, but the word is not always used in its technical sense, and, where a member of a club tenders his resignation to take effect immediately, it requires no acceptance. People ex rel. Haas v. New York Motor Boat Club, 129 N. Y. Supp. 365, 368, 70 Misc. Rep. 603.

TENDERED

See Business Tendered.

TENEMENT

"Tenements". and "hereditaments" include every species of realty, as well corporeal as incorporeal. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388.

"The word 'tenements' has never been construed in a will, independently of other circumstances, to pass a fee." Story, J., in Wright v. Denn ex dem. Page, 10 Wheat. 205, 238, 6 L. Ed. 303.

A house upon land to which its owner has no title, but in which he claims and enjoys the right of peaceable possession, is a "tenement," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5086, authorizing the proceedings to try questions concerning unlawful detention of lands or tenements, and, if the same are held unlawfully, to cause restitution. Polson v. Parsons, 104 Pac. 336, 337, 23 Okl. 778, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 104.

While the word "tenement," etymologically speaking, would cover any sort of a house which is of a permanent nature and could be holden, it also sometimes means a community house occupied by persons of small means, the distinguishing characteristics of which are the use in common of certain facilities by people crowded into insufficient space and deprived of many of the essentials of privacy, decency, and health. Lignot v. Jaekle, 65 Atl. 221, 223, 72 N. J. Eq. 233.

Term for years

The word "land" comprehends ground, soil, or earth, pastures, woods, springs, wells, lakes, ponds, and all things which have become a fixed part of the soil. The word "tenement," in its ordinary meaning, means a "house," which is the subject of tenure, and includes, not only corporeal hereditaments, which are or may be held, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of these inheritances, or concerning or annexed to or exercised within the same, though they lie not in tenure. "Tenement" is a word of greater scope than "lands," and though, in its vulgar acceptance, is only applied to houses and other buildings, yet, in its original, proper, and legal sense, it signifies anything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal, kind. The term "hereditaments" includes rights unconnected with land, but generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds, being divided into real hereditaments, which are lands and tenements, and personal hereditaments, which are rights concerning neither lands nor tenements. As so defined, neither the term "tenement" nor "hereditament" includes in law a lease of lands for years. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 494, 225 Mo. 414.

TENEMENT HOUSE

A "tenement house" is defined to be a dwelling house or an apartment in a building used by one family, often, in modern usage, an inferior dwelling house, rented to poor persons, or a dwelling erected to be rented. State v. Rowland Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 58, 59, 153 N. C. 610.

Tenement House Act, Laws 1901, p. 908, c. 334, § 82, provides that in every tenement house a proper light shall be kept burning by the owner in the public hallways upon both the first and second floor during the nighttime. The statute requires, in order to constitute a tenement house within the statute, that it shall be occupied by at least three families who have a common right "in the halls, stairways, yards, waterclosets, or privies, or some of them." Plaintiff's husband rented the first southerly store and the northerly apartment in the building, the first floor thereof consisting of two stores, in the south one of which plaintiff's husband conducted a confectionery business, and next to it on the north was a dry goods store, and plaintiff lived in the apartments over the dry goods store, and defendant and his family lived over the confectionery store. There was a hall on the first floor between the two stores and stairs leading from it to the second floor, which divided the apartments of plaintiff and defendant. That part of the building occupied by plaintiff and defendant was a separate house; there being no communication between it and the dry goods store, and the occupants of that store did not use the hall or stairs. Held, that the statutory requirement of three families was lacking to constitute it a tenement, and there was no evidence that the families had a common right to the halls, yard, etc., except the yard, which plaintiff was permitted to use, but, even if there were three families, including the dry goods store, and they had a common right to the yard, it did not constitute the building a tenement, as the statute required a common right in the halls, etc., or "some" of them, which necessitated a common right in more than one of the accessories named to constitute the building a tenement, and hence defendant was not liable for injuries resulting to an occupant from his failure to light the halls as required by statute. Aldrich v. Lane, 110 N. Y. Supp. 897, 899, 126 App. Div. 427.

Apartment house distinguished

A restrictive covenant in a deed against "tenement houses" is not to be construed as relating to first-class apartment houses having all the conveniences and appliances of the best order of houses, and externally in their architecture of the character and appearance corresponding with first-class dwellings in the immediate neighborhood. Kitching v. Brown, 87 N. Y. Supp. 75, 77, 92 App. Div. 160; Id., 73 N. E. 241, 243, 180 N.

Y. 414, 70 L. R. A. 742 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.); Marx v. Brogan, 98 N. Y. Supp. 88-90, 111 App. Div. 480.

Laws 1901, c. 334, regulating, tenement houses in cities of the first class, by section 2, subd. 1, defined a "tenement house" as any house or building, or portion thereof, rented to be occupied as a residence of three families or more, living independently of each other, and doing their cooking, or by more than two families on any floor so living and cooking, but having a common right to the halls, stairways, yards, water-closets, or some of them. Section 95 declares that in every tenement house hereafter erected there shall be a separate water-closet in a separate compartment within each apartment, provided that, where there are apartments consisting of but one or two rooms, there shall be at least one water-closet for every three rooms. Pursuant to Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, c. 378) § 647, authorizing the city to amend its Building Code, the city defined an "apartment house" to include every building which should be intended or designated for, or used as, the home of three or more families or households, living independently of each other, and in which every such family or household shall have provided for it a kitchen, set bath tub, and water-closet, separate and apart from each other, and that such building should be under the control of the building department of the city of New York. Held that, since the Building Code was a special act and was not in conflict with the tenement house act, the Building Code was not repealed by the tenement house act either for repugnancy or inconsistency, so that, where the compartments in plaintiff's building contained a separate water-closet, set bath tub, and a separate kitchen, it was an apartment house within the jurisdiction of the building department, and not a tenement house within the jurisdiction of the tenement house commissioner. Grimmer v. Tenement House Department of City of New York, 97 N. E. 884, 886, 204 N. Y. 370; Id., 119 N. Y. Supp. 812, 816, 134 App. Div. 896.

The term "apartment or community house" is not synonymous with "tenement," in a covenant precluding the erection of any tenement, apartment, or community house. McClure v. Leaycraft, 90 N. Y. Supp. 233, 234, 97 App. Div. 518.

See Dwelling—Dwelling House.

Garage

The term "tenement house," as used in a building restriction in a deed, does not include a garage and storeroom. Jones v. Williams, 106 Pac. 166, 168, 56 Wash. 588.

TENOR

An indictment for forgery, the essence of which consists in the publication or fabrication of a written instrument, must profess to set out the instrument according to its tenor, except where the instrument is in the possession of accused, destroyed, or for some other reason is not accessible to the grand jury, when the excuse for not setting it out must be distinctly averred. The word "tenor," as so used, imports an exact copy—that the instrument is set forth in the very words and figures. People v. Tilden, 90 N. E. 218, 219, 242 Ill. 536, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215, 134 Am. St. Rep. 341, 17 Ann. Cas. 496.

Where an indictment for uttering a forged note contained the words "tenor, purport, and effect" in referring to the instrument forged, the word "tenor" imported an exact copy of the note, while the words "purport and effect" only meant the substance of the instrument, and were surplusage, being included in the word "tenor," and not in conflict therewith. Teague v. State, 110 S. W. 224, 225, 86 Ark. 126.

Bonds of a municipality contained recitals as follows: "This bond is one of a series numbered from 1 to 23 inclusive of like tenor and date." The bonds in suit were Nos. 17 to 23, inclusive, and were for $500 each. Held, that the use of the word "tenor" fairly imported that the other bonds were for the same amount, and that a purchaser was charged with notice of such fact, and that such bonds were the last of the series and consequently illegal, since the aggregate amount far exceeded the limit placed upon the indebtedness of the municipality by the state Constitution. St. Lawrence Tp. v. Furman, 171 Fed. 400, 402, 96 C. C. A. 356, 17 Ann. Cas. 1244.

TENPIN ALLEY

The statutes use the terms "tenpin alley" and "bowling alley" interchangeably. In the act levying occupation taxes (Rev. St. 1895, art. 5049, p. 1016), every nine or ten pin alley, or any other alley used for profit, by whatever name called, constructed or operated upon the principle of a bowling alley, etc., is amenable to the tax. Webster also defined "tenpin alley" and "bowling alley" as in effect synonymous. An indictment charging in the same count a violation of the occupation law, in that accused pursued the occupation of running a tenpin alley "and" bowling alley for profit without procuring a license, is not vitiated by the use of "and," even if the terms "tenpin alley" and "bowling alley" be not in effect synonymous. O'Neal v. State, 100 S. W. 919, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 100.

TENT

As private residence, see Private Residence.

As public place, see Public Place.

TENTATIVE TRUST*Deposit

A suggested or proposed trust, not completed or consummated, is a "tentative trust." A trust created by a father by his depositing money in a bank in his name, in trust for a son, terminates ipso facto on the son's death in the lifetime of the father, and thereafter the fund remains the property of the father, unimpressed by any trust. In re United States Trust Co. of New York, 102 N. Y. Supp. 271, 272, 117 App. Div. 178.

A deposit made in a bank by one person in his own name for another is merely a "tentative trust," and is revocable at will, unless the depositor completes the gift by some unequivocal act during his lifetime, or dies before the beneficiary, without revocation. Tierney v. Fitzpatrick, 107 N. Y. Supp. 527, 528, 122 App. Div. 623.

TENURE

The word "tenure" is a term of extensive signification, and while it means the mode by which one holds an estate in land, it imports any kind of a holding, from mere possession to the owning of the inheritance. Bothin v. California Title Insurance & Trust Co., 96 Pac. 500, 502, 153 Cal. 718.

The word "tenure," in the subtitle to section 80 of the act to provide a government for the territory of Hawaii (Act April 30, 1900, c. 339, 31 Stat. 156), in the provision for appointment and tenure of officers has a more extended meaning than "term." "Tenure" is the right to hold an office for an indefinite time. "Term" denotes a period of time with fixed limits. W. J. Robinson v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 52, 56.

Where a lease provided that it was for a term of five years, 1905 to 1909, inclusive, and gave the lessee an option to purchase at any time during his "term" by paying $1,280, the "term" within which the option could be exercised was the period of five years between 1905 and 1909, inclusive. Lee v. Cochran, 47 South. 581, 582, 157 Ala. 311.

A guaranty in a lease of a street railroad of the payment of dividends to stockholders of the lessor during the "term of this lease" is to be construed as meaning during the existence of the lease, and not during the term for which it was made. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City Ry. Co., 198 Fed. 721, 764, 117 C. C. A. 503.

Estate synonymous

The word "term," as used in the law of landlord and tenant, signifies "not only the limitation of time, or period granted to the lessee for the occupation of the premises, but it also includes the estate and interest in the land that pass during such period." We-ander v. Claussen Brewing Ass'n, 84 Pac. 735, 736, 42 Wash. 226, 114 Am. St. Rep. 110, 7 Ann. Cas. 536 (quoting 1 Tayl. Landl. Ten. [9th Ed.] § 16).

Under Rev. Civ. Code 1903, § 1238, subd. 5, providing that an agreement for the leasing of real estate for a longer period than one year is invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, an oral lease of real estate for one year for a term beginning a day or two in the future is valid, since the meaning of the word "term" is that period which is granted for the lessee or tenant to occupy and have possession of the premises. It is the estate or interest which he has in the land itself by virtue of the lease from the time it vests in possession. Paulton v. Krelser, 101 N. W. 46, 18 S. D. 487, 5 Ann. Cas. 827.

Testatrix declared: "I devise and bequeath to [beneficiary named], of L., Mass., my cottage and all it contains at N., Mass.—to use for the term of five years or longer." The beneficiary was not of kin to testatrix. The will gave pecuniary and specific legacies. The will contained no residuary clause, and did not dispose of the most valuable real estate of testatrix. Held, that the beneficiary acquired an estate for life in the cottage and its contents; the word "term" expressing equally an estate for years or life, and the words "or longer," if given effect, showing an intention to create an estate for life. Dow v. Abbott, 84 N. E. 93, 97, 197 Mass. 283.

The word "term," in the rule that a tenant who parts with the entire term in his lease is an assignor and the instrument is an assignment, means something more than the mere time for which the lease is given, and the instrument must convey not only the entire time for which the lease runs, but the entire estate conveyed by the lease. Davis v. Vidal, 151 S. W. 290, 292, 105 Tex. 444, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084.

Employment

A judgment of conviction of a teacher of music of the crime provided for in Rev. St. § 7024, having sexual intercourse with a female pupil, will not be reversed because the evidence fails to disclose that the term of employment was for a definite length of time. where the fact is that the teacher was employed to give a certain number of lessons at a stated price per lesson, nothing being provided as to the time within which the lessons should be given. The word "term," as used in this statute, was not intended to mean a definite period, but the time during which the teacher continues to fill his engagement and, by virtue of his employment, has unusual opportunities for such unlawful practice. Easley v. State, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 568, 571.

TERM INSURANCE

A contract whereby a person insured is required to pay from one assessment period to another the actual cost of insurance during that period, without paying an additional sum to make up a deficit in future years, when the cost of carrying the risk on the member's life becomes greater, is for "term insurance," and the policy has no actual net value. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Roth, 122 Fed. 853, 856, 59 C. C. A. 63.

TERM OF CHARTER

See During Term of Charter.

TERM OF COURT

Regular term* of court, see Regular Term. See, also, Session.

A "term of court" is that period of time provided by or in pursuance of some public law within which the court may hold its sessions and transact its business; the term continuing from the time appointed by law to final adjournment, or until the lapse of the term by operation of law. State v. Maddock, 115 Pac. 426, 427, 58 Or. 542.

A "term of court" is not the same thing as the court itself, and is no more than a period of time within which certain functions of the court must be exercised. Its end comes only by adjournment, or by the arrival of the date designated by law for the beginning of another term of the same court for the same county. Territory ex rel. Hubbell v. Armijo, 89 Pac. 267, 268, 14 N. M. 205.

A "term of court" is regarded in law as but one day or a unit of time, and all acts done within the term are regarded as contemporaneous. People ex rel. Naber v. Wells, 99 N. E. 606, 607, 255 Ill. 450.

A "term of court," although continuing for weeks or months, is regarded by the law as but one day. During the term at which a judgment or decree is entered the record remains in the breast of the court, and the court may, at any time during the term, amend it, or set it aside on its own motion or for good cause shown, as justice and the right of the case may seem to require. The court retains jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the litigation until the end of the term, and the judgment or decree does not become final or pass beyond its control until that time. Krieger v. Krieger, 77 N. E. 909, 911, 221 Ill. 479 (citing and adopting 11 Cyc. p. 732; Stahl v. Webster, 11 Ill. 511; Smith v. Vanderburg, 46 Ill. 34; Edwards v. Irons, 73 Ill. 583; Shannahan v. Stevens, 28 N. E. 804, 139 Ill. 428).

A "term of court" expired when the court left the bench, after sitting an extra day to sign judgments on the conclusion of all jury trials. Hardee v. Timberlake, 75 S. E. 799, 800, 159 N. C. 552.

A "term of court" has been defined to signify the period from the first day of the term fixed by law until court is adjourned to the next court in course. Where by statute a term of the circuit court was to be held in one of the counties of the circuit on the first Monday in December, in another county on the second Monday, and in a third county on the third Monday, and the judge of such court adjourned the September term of S. county on November 30th until December 30th, in order to hold such December terms, the September term of S. county was not terminated, and a justice's judgment in forcible entry, rendered during such adjournment, was rendered in term time, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 3370, requiring appeals from such judgments, when rendered in term time, to be returned within six days after such rendition. Warner v. Donahue, 72 S. W. 492, 494, 99 Mo. App. 37.

The act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 83) which makes a grand juror who has served at any term of the superior court ineligible to serve at the next succeeding term does not disqualify grand jurors of a regular term to serve as such at an adjourned term of such regular term. Hall v. State, 62 S. E. 539, 4 Ga. App. 841.

As court

The words "two courts," in Judiciary Act 1789, c. 20, 1 Stat. 73, organizing federal courts and providing that there shall be held annually in each district "two courts," etc., mean two terms of a court. Geiger v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 141 Fed. 169, 176.

As regular term

"Where a statute speaks of 'terms of court,' the terms fixed by law are meant, not special terms appointed by the court." Stafford v. Mingo County Court, 51 S. E. 2, 58 W. Va. 88 (quoting and adopting definition in Tompkins v. Clackamas Co., 4 Pac. 1210, 11 Or. 364; Smith v. Cutler [N. Y.] 10 Wend. 591, 25 Am. Dec. 580).

Code Va. 1904, p. 1633, § 3060, provides in section 3062 that there may be tried at special "term" any civil case not tried at the last preceding "term," any motion cognizable by the court, any criminal case which could be tried at a regular term, and any controversy ready for hearing at law or in chancery, though it could not have been heard at the preceding term; and section 3024, p. 1612, provides that, where the reasons stated in a petition for quo warranto are legally sufficient, the writ shall be returnable to the next "term" of the court. Held, that a writ of quo warranto may not be returned to a special "term"; the phrase "next term," in section 3024, referring to a regular "term," and the matter not being within section 3062. "The word 'term' in some instances may include both regular and special terms. But, as a general rule, when a statute speaks of terms of court, the regular terms fixed by law are meant, and not the special terms appointed by the courts or judges." Stultz v. Pratt, 49 S. E. 654, 655, 103 Va. 536 (citing Commonwealth v. Justices of Court of Sessions of Norfolk, 5 Mass. 435; Smith v. Cutler [N. Y.] 10 Wend. 590, 25 Am. Dec. 580; Tompkins v. Clackamas, 4 Pac. 1210, 11 Or. 364, 366).

The word "term," in Const. art. 5, § 17, providing that the county court shall hold a "term" for criminal business at least once in every two months, and section 29, providing that the county court shall hold at least four terms for criminal business annually as may be provided by the Legislature, or by the commissioners' court of the county, and such other terms as may be fixed by the commissioners' court, relates to such regular terms as may be provided by law; and Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 572, providing that, when any person charged with a misdemeanor in the county court shall desire to make speedy disposition of his case on the plea of guilty, the judge shall be authorized to make a special session to dispose of the cause, is unconstitutional, it being beyond the power of the Legislature to authorize county judges to call indiscriminately special terms to suit themselves in order to take pleas of guilty. Ex parte Cole, 101 S. W. 249, 250, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 166.

Session distinguished

The act of the Legislature of 1906 (House Bill No. 460), providing for holding the county court at Prague, in Lincoln county, uses the words "term" and "session" interchangeably. Rakowski v. Wagoner, 103 Pac. 632, 633, 24 Okl. 282.

Local Option Law (Laws 1905, p. 47, c. 2) § 10, provides that the county court, 11 days after election, or as soon thereafter as practicable, shall hold a "special session," and, if a majority of the votes are for prohibition, the court shall immediately make an order declaring the result of the vote and absolutely prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc. Held, that the court, by announcing the result of the election at a special session called during general term, did not invalidate the proceedings; the words "special session," as used in the act, not being synonymous with "special term" (the word "term" signifying "the space of time during which the court holds a session"), and the word "session" as used referring to a temporary sitting of the court, for the transaction of special business assigned to them, which may occur either during a general or special term, and, if all members are present for such purpose, it is immaterial as to how it was called, or when, providing the time prescribed by the act for such special sitting has elapsed. State v. Edmunds, 104 Pac. 430, 432, 55 Or. 236 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

The session of a judicial court is called a "term." Emerson v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 82 S. W. 1060, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 110 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

The word "session," as used in Rev. St. § 1038, providing that any district court may by order entered on its minutes remit any indictment pending thereon to the next session of the circuit court for the same district, is used as meaning an actual sitting of the court for the transaction of business, and not in the sense of "term." United States v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 659, 660.

The word "term," as used in Act No. 30, p. 56, of 1878, providing that, in all criminal cases in which appeals are allowable under the Constitution, the party desiring to appeal shall file his motion in open court, and that the motion must be filed in the courts other than those of the First judicial district, during the term at which the sentence shall have been rendered, means the session during which the court is actually open, as contradistinguished from the continuous session of ten months, provided for by article 117 of the Constitution. State v. Vicknair, 43 South. 635, 636, 118 La. 963.

As time of session

In law the word "term" is defined as "the time in which a court is held or is open for the trial of causes." So where plaintiff filed an affidavit for an appeal without bond, as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1401, whereupon the court made an order certifying that plaintiff, by presenting such affidavit "within term time," has made proof of his inability to pay the costs of appeal or give security therefor, and is permitted to prosecute his appeal on said affidavit in lieu of a cost bond on appeal, and such certificate was dated May 12, 1904, and showed that the term of court began March 7 and ended May 14, 1904, it was held that the words "within term time" showed that the court was in session when the order was made. Emerson v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 82 S. W. 1060, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 110 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

A court is defined as "the persons officially assembled under authority of law at the appropriate time and place for the administration of justice," while the word

"term," when used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a session. A "session" signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the transaction of business. Therefore there is a clear distinction between "the adjournment of court" and the "adjournment of the term." Parrott v. Wolcott, 106 N. W. 607, 608, 75 Neb. 530 (citing Webst. Dict.; Black, Law Dict.).

The phrase "term of court," in Laws 1903, p. 218, c. 112 § 1, providing that every jury commissioner shall be disqualified to select jurors for two successive terms of court, means a term which is held when the term is opened by a proper judicial officer impaneled and business transacted. It then becomes a term of court within the meaning of the law. Laws 1903, p. 218, c. 112, § 1, provides that every jury commissioner shall be disqualified to select jurors for two successive terms of court. By Laws 1903, p. 175, c. 71, § 3, the regular terms of the superior court of L. county were fixed to be held on the first Monday of March and September in each year; but by Laws 1905, p. 204, c. 89, § 1, the time of holding such term was changed to the second Monday of April and October, so that there was no term of such court in March, 1905. Held, that the fact that commissioners who selected the jury for the April, 1905, term, at which accused was tried and convicted, were also the commissioners who should have selected jurors for the preceding March term, had one been held, did not disqualify them to select jurors for such April term. Territory v. Emilio, 89 Pac. 239, 240, 14 N. M. 147.

A "term of court," within Rev. Codes 1905, § 9791, providing that during each term of court at which a grand jury has been summoned and impaneled, the state's attorney shall file an information against persons accused of crime, etc., means a term of court actually held, and not one that may be held; and a criminal action should not be dismissed for failure to file an information at a term of court at which a defendant cannot be regularly tried by a jury. State v. Fleming, 126 N. W. 565, 566, 20 N. D. 105.

Under Cr. Code, § 390, accused, if committed to prison, must be tried before the end of the second term of the court having jurisdiction of the offense, and a term at which no jury is called and only equity business transacted is still "a term of the court having jurisdiction of the offense." Critser v. State, 127 N. W. 1073, 1074, 87 Neb. 727.

In Conklin v. Ridgely, 1 N. E. 261, 262, 112 Ill. 36, 54 Am. Rep. 204, the court said: "Under the earlier organization of the courts of England, the 'terms' of the court were four periods in each year, commencing and ending on fixed times, and the vacations embraced all the days not included in the terms." Himmelberger-Harrison Lumber Co. v. Keener, 117 S. W. 42, 47, 217 Mo. 522.

An alternative writ of prohibition was issued March 29, 1912, by the Appellate Division for the First Department on application to enjoin a special proceeding pending in the Second Department, on which day the Appellate Division for that department, before adjournment of the March term, but in recess, handed down decisions, and on which day its judges were in attendance at the courthouse and ready to assemble as a court to attend to any business presented. Code Civ. Proc. § 2093, provides that a writ of prohibition issued by an Appellate Division can be granted only at a "term of the Appellate Division" of the judicial department embracing the county wherein the special proceeding is brought, in which the matter to be prohibited originated, unless a term of the Appellate Division of said department is not "in session," when it may be granted by the Appellate Division in an adjoining judicial department. Held, that the Appellate Division for the Second Department was "in session" when the alternative writ was issued, and that the Appellate Division of the First Department was without jurisdiction. People ex rel. Whitman v. Woodward, 134 N. Y. Supp. 910, 911, 150 App. Div. 180.

As time set

In North Dakota there are no "terms" of the district court, in the common-law sense of that word. The district court is always open, and its functions are exercised by a single judge, whose every act as a judge is deemed to be the act of the court. Rev. Codes 1899, §§ 5176, 5178. There are times and places fixed by law for the trial of cases, and no issue of fact can be forced to trial except at such times and places. These sessions for the trial of cases are called "terms"; but that word, as applied to the sessions of the district courts, has lost its common-law meaning, and the district court can exercise its inherent power to grant relief, on motion, from an irregular judgment or order, at any time, unless the time for so doing has been limited by law. Martinson v. Marzolf, 103 N. W. 937, 940, 14 N. D. 301.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4606, providing that in proceedings for the probate of a nuncupative will a citation shall be directed to the widow or next of kin that they may contest the will, and section 6083, declaring that in all cases where citations are issued in probate proceedings they shall be served at least 10 days "before the term at which" they are made returnable, a citation in proceedings for the probate of a nuncupative will must be served at least 10 days before the time set for the hearing, the word "term" in the statute being obsolete by reason of the abolition of statutory terms, and meaning "time"; and hence, where the citation was not only not served but was made returnable on the day it was issued, the court had no jurisdiction. In re Sullivan's

Estate, 82 Pac. 297, 300, 40 Wash. 202, 111 Am. St. Rep. 895.

A recognizance to a police court unauthorized to sentence the prisoner followed Pub. St. c. 212, § 53, relating to conditions of recognizances, without distinguishing between cases where the court could impose sentence and those where it could only hold the accused for trial before the superior court. Held, in view of section 63, providing that an action on a recognizance shall not be defeated for a defect of form, where it shows to what court appearance is required, and the magistrate's authority to take it, the words inapplicable to the case should be rejected as surplusage, or "term" be construed to mean "time," and "sentence" to mean "order," so as to compel an appearance at the "time" expressed therein to await the "order" of the police court. Reed v. Police Court of Lowell, 52 N. E. 633, 635, 172 Mass. 427 (citing State v. Crowley, 60 Me. 103).

TERM OF OFFICE

See Continuance in Office; Existing Term of Office; Unexpired Term.
His term of office, see His.

Ordinarily the word or words "term" or "term of office," when used in reference to the tenure of office, mean a fixed and definite period of time. State ex rel. Polk v. Galusha, 104 N. W. 197, 201, 74 Neb. 188; Gibbs v. Morgan, 39 N. J. Eq. 126, 128.

The words "term of office" may indicate the statutory period for which an officer is elected; but the words may also mean a period shorter than that for which the particular officer was elected, as his "term of office" may be terminated before the expiration of the statutory period by impeachment, resignation, or death. P. L. 1906, p. 76, placing all county clerks on a salary, and requiring payment of all fees, costs, and perquisites, etc., into the county treasury, declares (section 5 [page 78]) that it shall take effect so far as respects such offices, at the expiration of the terms of the present officers; and Const. art. 7, § 2, par. 6, provides that county clerks shall be elected and hold office for five years. Held, that the "term of office," in section 5, was restricted to the term during which the then present clerk was entitled to receive compensation, so that, respondent's predecessor having died in office after the act took effect, but before the expiration of his term, respondent, on being appointed to fill the vacancy, began a new term, and was therefore entitled to a salary only. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Atlantic County v. Lee, 70 Atl. 925, 926, 76 N. J. Law, 327.

The appointment to the office of brigadier general of militia is governed by Const. 1901, § 276, providing that the Governor shall, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint all general officers, whose terms of office shall be four years. Held, that since at common law, even when the term of an office has been fixed and a vacancy happens, the term does not survive, but reverts to the sovereign to be filled again for the full term prescribed by law, and as the term of an office is simply a definite period of time, the provision of the Constitution that the term of such general officers shall be four years applies to an appointment made long after the expiration of the term of the first brigadier general, and the second appointee takes for a period of four years. Clark v. State (Ala.) 59 South. 259, 261.

Laws 1905, p. 221, § 4, provided that the salary of the Adjutant General should be $2,000 per annum, and that the Governor shall appoint the Adjutant General, who shall hold office during the term of the Governor, and may be removed by him at his pleasure. Laws 1909, p. 674, § 3 (Rev. St. 1909, § 8334), fixes the salary of the Adjutant General at $2,500 per annum. Held, that, despite Const. art. 14, § 8, providing that the compensation of state officers shall not be increased during their terms of office, an Adjutant General appointed under Laws 1905, and holding over under Laws 1909, was entitled to the additional compensation, for he was removable at the pleasure of the Governor and hence had no "term of office," for a term of office, as well as any term, implies the existence of a definite boundary. State ex rel. Rumbold v. Gordon, 142 S. W. 315, 316, 238 Mo. 168, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 312.

Laws 1901, p. 197 (Ann. St. 1906, §§ 8145—4 to 8145—8), creating the office of factory inspector, and requiring the Governor within a specified time thereafter, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a factory inspector, who shall hold office for four years, empowers the Governor to fix the commencement and ending of the term, and, where he fixed the end of the term, the appointee's term expired on that date, in absence of other provisions continuing the term; "term of office" being a fixed and definite period of time. State ex inf. Major ex rel. Sikes v. Williams, 121 S. W. 64, 66, 222 Mo. 268, 17 Ann. Cas. 1006.

Const. art. 4, § 26, prohibiting any increase of salary of a state officer during his term, whether the expression "his term of office" is synonymous with his incumbency of the office under a particular election or appointment, or is synonymous with the full term of the office created by article 7 for justices of the Supreme Court, is not so free from doubt as not to be open to solution by judicial construction. The language "his term of office," in Const. art. 4, § 26, may be regarded as treating the term of office of the justice of the Supreme Court created by Const. art. 7, or any particular incumbency thereof, whether of a full term or part of a term. State ex rel. Bashford v. Frear, 120 N. W. 216, 217, 138 Wis. 536, 16 Ann. Cas. 1019.

The phrase "term of office," in Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office, etc., applies only to officers who have a fixed and definite term, and does not apply to appointive officers, who hold at the pleasure of the appointing power, and the constitutional inhibition does not apply to the office of deputy county surveyor, the incumbent of which holds under an appointment of the county surveyor at his pleasure. Harold v. Barnum, 96 Pac. 104, 8 Cal. App. 21.

A deputy, appointed by an officer to hold during the pleasure of such principal, does not hold for a term, within Const. art. 23, § 10, prohibiting the change of the salary of any public officer after his election or appointment, or during his "term of office," except by a law enacted before such election or appointment. Board of Com'rs of Muskogee County v. Hart, 119 Pac. 132, 134, 29 Okl. 693, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388.

Rev. St. 1898, § 3290, providing that a judge may settle and sign a bill of exceptions after he ceases to be judge, is not in violation of Const. art. 8, § 5, limiting the "term of office" of district judges to four years. Larkin v. Saltair Beath Co., 83 Pac. 686, 688, 30 Utah, 86, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982, 116 Am. St. Rep. 818, 8 Ann. Cas. 977.

"There is a difference between the 'right of incumbency' and the 'term of office.' If one who is in office becomes ineligible to hold it longer—as that he moves out of the district—his term of office does not thereby expire, although his right of incumbency ceases. His successor is elected or appointed to fill out his unexpired term." And one continuing to exercise the functions of notary public after his appointment and qualification as postmaster is not guilty of violation of the statute making it a misdemeanor to hold and pretend to exercise an office after his term has constitutionally or legally expired. Palmer v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 588, 589, 122 Ky. 693.

Const. art. 6, § 25, declaring that the compensation of judges of the superior and circuit courts in Cook county shall not be changed during their continuance in office, refers to the "term of office," and not to the individual, so that Laws 1901, p. 207, providing that judges of the circuit and superior courts of Cook county hereafter to be elected shall receive $10,000 per year, instead of $7,000, does not entitle a judge, elected after the passage of the act to complete the unexpired term of a judge elected before the passage of the act, to receive a salary of $10,000. Foreman v. People ex rel. McEwen, 71 N. E. 35, 37, 209 Ill. 567.

Under Const. § 161, which prohibits change of a county officer's salary during "his term of office," one appointed county jailer for the unexpired part of a four-year term, which commenced in 1910 before the taking effect of Laws 1910, c. 61, is not entitled to the increased compensation provided by that act, though appointed after it took effect. Bosworth v. Ellison, 147 S. W. 400, 402, 148 Ky. 708.

TERM OF RECORD

By the act of 1862, incorporated into Revision 1871, c. 78, § 6, the county commissioners for Cumberland were required to hold "annual sessions" on the first Tuesdays of January and June. By the act of 1883 (Rev. St. c. 78, § 6) they are required to hold "annual sessions," viz., "terms of record," on the first Tuesdays of January and June, and regular sessions on the first Tuesdays of each month; that is, terms of record twice yearly, with sessions thereof monthly, to be held regularly on the first Tuesday of each month. In certiorari to quash their proceedings because they did not file their report for the location of a way at their next regular session after the hearing, it was held that the "regular sessions" were but statute adjournments of the preceding term of record, and that such report should be filed at the next record term. The words "terms of record," in the act of 1883, have the same significance and are synonymous with the words "regular session," in chapter 78, § 6, of the Revisions of 1871 and 1883, and these latter words in chapter 78, § 6, of the Revision of 1883, were inaptly used in contrast with the former. State ex rel. Inhabitants of Harpswell v. Cumberland Co. Com'rs, 2 Atl. 880, 881, 78 Me. 100.

TERMS

On a wife's motion to open a default judgment against her in an action for divorce for adultery, on the ground that the summons and complaint had not been served on her, the court found that service had been made, but opened the default on condition of payment of costs and disbursements to date and motion costs. Held, that the condition was not within the discretion given the court by Code Civ. Proc. § 724, to relieve from default judgments on "such terms as justice requires"; it being a mere sham to give her a right to defend her honor only on condition of a payment she was unable to make, and she being lawfully dependent on the plaintiff for support. Fox v. Fox, 127 N. Y. Supp. 989, 991, 143 App. Div. 483.

A resolution adopted by a city council pending a dispute with a street railroad company as to its franchise rights with respect to fares, etc., on certain streets, which permitted the company to continue operations from time to time "upon the same terms and conditions now prevailing in the city, whether due to contract agreement or not," though made when the city knew that the company was collecting extra fares on certain lines which were without the city limits when the franchises for such lines, which authorized extra fares, were granted, did not recognize the company's right to charge extra fares on such lines; the word "prevailing" having no technical meaning and as used signifying that which is common, in operation, or prevalent, while the words "terms" and "conditions" mean the propositions and limitations which comprise the agreement and govern the parties, defining their obligations, and, as applied to an ordinance giving a franchise, signifying the boundary, limit or extent of the grant. City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 139 N. W. 56, 59, 173 Mich. 314.

Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 8809, 8813, 8823, 8834, authorizing the registration of land title on application to the superior court, and providing that the court finding that the applicant has not proper title shall dismiss the application, and declaring that the applicant may dismiss his application at any time before final decree on terms, limits the jurisdiction of the superior court and reserves to an applicant the absolute right to dismissal on terms before final decree, and an applicant may complain of the denial of absolute dismissal, though not prejudiced thereby; the word "terms" meaning such penalty as the court may impose, so as to save the opposing party harmless from loss, and which can be satisfied by the payment of a fixed sum of money. Krutz v. Dodge, 119 Pac. 188, 189, 66 Wash. 178, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 869.

Acts 1882, No. 36 (V. S. 3902-3904 [P. S. 4486-4488]), requiring railroads to give all persons "reasonable and equal terms * * * facilities and accommodations" for the transportation of freight, etc., must be construed in the light of Acts 1882, No. 37 (V. S. 3896), authorizing a railroad corporation to establish rates, etc., and, when so done, it requires a railroad corporation to make rates reasonable and equal as required by the common law, and it is but declaratory of the common law defining the rights and obligations of carriers; the words "facilities and accommodations" relating to the incidents of transportation, the word, "terms" signifying rates. State v. Central Vermont R. Co., 71 Atl. 194, 196, 81 Vt. 463, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065.

The use of the word "terms" in an affidavit accompanying a plea to set aside an office judgment, instead of the statutory word "demand," does not vitiate the affidavit; it being clear that it was used as the equivalent of "demand," although in doing so the affiant misused the word. Ceranto v. Trimboli, 60 S. E. 138, 139, 63 W. Va. 340.

Where an oil and gas lease, which in its beginning purported to be an absolute grant of all the oil and gas in the land, further provided that the grant was made on the terms which thereafter followed, the word

"terms" was broad enough to make the provisions which followed the consideration or conditions of the lease. Logansport & Wabash Valley Gas Co. v. Null, 76 N. E. 125, 126, 36 Ind. App. 503.

Pol. Code 1895, § 345, declaring that an advertisement for bids by a county shall embrace such specifications as will enable the public to know the character of the work and the "terms" and time of payment, does not require an advertisement for bids for a courthouse, under section 344, to state the exact or approximate price at which the contract will be let. Pilcher v. English, 66 S. E. 163, 166, 133 Ga. 496.

Inasmuch as Sess. Laws 1903, p. 73, c. 59, provides, in relation to sales of land acquired by a county pursuant to tax foreclosure proceedings, that the county commissioners may fix "the terms" upon which the sale shall be made, and that the sale must be made for cash, the board of county commissioners are authorized to require the sale to be made subject to confirmation by the board. Phillips v. Welts, 82 Pac. 737, 738, 40 Wash. 501 (citing State ex rel. MacKay v. Phillips, 79 Pac. 313, 36 Wash. 651).

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The words "terms and conditions" in the provision of an order for goods, just above the buyer's signature, that "no terms or conditions are recognized except those expressed in this order," do not so certainly include warranties as to exclude parol evidence of express warranties of quality. Eureka Elastic Paint Co. v. Bennett-Hedgpeth Co., 67 S. E. 738, 739, 85 S. C. 486.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS, RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES

Ordinarily, in the use of legal phraseology, the phrase "terms and conditions, rights and privileges," is not employed to convey power over or relating to the time or period through which the tenure dealt with by the acts is intended to run, but conveys power over or relates to the means, the methods, and the incidents connected with the exercise of such tenure. Such plainly was meant to be the signification of the phrase as used in the acts of 1859, 1861, and 1865, relating to the incorporation of the Chicago city railways, and granting rights thereto in the streets of the city, and providing that the railways shall be constructed, furnished, and operated in such manner and on such terms and conditions and on such rights and privileges as the common council by contract may prescribe. Govin v. City of Chicago, 132 Fed. 848, 855.

TERMINAL

A carrier adopted demurrage rules for coal cars at a terminal at which it maintained two yards for cars until called for. The yards were about four miles apart, and one yard was a mile and a half from dumping piers. The average time to take a car out of the yards and place it on the piers to unload was from 30 minutes to an hour. Both yards were used as the terminal point, and cars placed in either yard could be released when ordered by the shipper, and there was no evidence that, if the cars had been brought to the yard nearest to the dumping piers instead of to the other yard, the detention of the cars would have been less than it was. Held to justify a finding that both yards were a part of the "terminal," within the demurrage rules. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marshall, 182 N. Y. Supp. 41, 43, 147 App. Div. 806.

TERMINAL CHARGE

Demurrage

Demurrage charged for the detention of cars in loading or unloading is a "terminal charge," required to be shown by the schedules of rates filed and published by an interstate railroad company by the terms of the interstate commerce act. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. United States, 188 Fed. 879, 885, 110 C. C. A. 513; United States v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 184 Fed. 543.

TERMINAL COMPANY

As common carrier, see Common Carrier.

Since there is no distinct statutory provision in this state for the incorporation of a "terminal company," such a company must be organized under the general railroad law, and while a company incorporated for the purpose of building a terminal or other short line of railroad for commercial purposes should describe itself in its name, it does not follow that it is any the less a railroad company, though it may select the name "Terminal Company." Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co., 56 S. E. 624, 626, 127 Ga. 520, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

TERMINAL FACILITY

A track which branches off entirely from the existing line of a railroad to a distant objective point of connection with private tracks of a cotton compress company having no track connection with a river is not a "terminal facility," or a turnout or switch, within the meaning of Acts Tenn. 1903, c. 216, authorizing the construction of such tracks. City of Memphis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 539, 106 C. C. A. 75.

TERMINAL POINT

By the "terminal point" of a railroad is not meant the depot as located but the terminus as fixed at a city or town, and where a railroad charter fixed its terminus at a city, the railroad, having authority to abandon one depot site in the city for another, had authority to condemn land for a new site; such act not being a change of its terminus. Chicago

& N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago Mechanics' Institute, 87 N. E. 933, 937, 239 Ill. 197.

Under St. § 1790, making it the duty of railroad companies and of owners of lands adjoining the right of way to construct and maintain a good and lawful fence to the extent of one-half each along the division line of the right of way and the land of adjoining owners, and section 1793, providing that all corporations and persons owning or operating railroads "as aforesaid shall erect and maintain cattle guards at all terminal points of fences constructed along their lines, except at points where such lines are not required to be fenced at both sides, and at public crossings," the "terminal points" at which cattle guards are required to be constructed are points where the parallel fencing for any reason stops and not points at which the road enters and leaves a farm. McKee v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co.'s Receiver, 43 S. W. 241, 102 Ky. 253.

Contract

Lease

The taking of leased property in fee by eminent domain is a "termination of the lease," within Rev. Laws, c. 181, § 1, providing that, when the lessee holds possession without right after the termination of the lease by notice to quit or otherwise, the person entitled thereto may recover possession by summary proceedings. City of Boston v. Talbot, 91 N. E. 1014, 1017, 206 Mass. 82.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 2519, making one who willfully and without force holds over any tenement after the "termination" of the time for which it was let to him, or the person under whom he claims, after demand for possession thereof, guilty of forcible detainer, applies to all cases where the landlord seeks to recover possession from the tenant, or one holding under him, on the ground that the lease has terminated, whether by expiration of the term or by the termination of the lease under any contingency on the occurrence of which it is expressly provided in the contract that it shall terminate, and its termination by breach of covenant not to sublet without consent does not oust the jurisdiction of the justice's court, on the ground that the fact of the breach and the right of re-entry therefor should be tried in the district court. Walther v. Anderson, 114 S. W. 414, 417, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 360.

Prosecution or suit

It may be said that a prosecution may be regarded as "terminated" when it has been disposed of in such a manner that it cannot be revived, so that the prosecutor, if he intends to proceed further, must institute proceedings de novo. Hurgren v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 75 Pac. 168, 169, 141 Cal. 585.

The dismissal of a criminal prosecution with costs against the prosecutor on his failure to produce evidence in support of the charge is such a "termination" of the prosecution as will enable the accused to sue for malicious prosecution. Graves v. Scott, 51 S. E. 821, 823, 824, 104 Va. 372, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1043, 7 Ann. Cas. 480.

TERMINATING SOCIETY

A "terminating society" is one which ceases to exist when the shares of stock have attained to the value of the sum fixed by the articles of the association. Cunningham v. Mutual Loan & Building Ass'n of City of Passaic, 62 Atl. 307, 308, 72 N. J. Law, 175.

TERRITORIAL LIMITS

In the Constitution dividing the state into counties and magisterial districts, cities, and towns, and fixing the "territorial limits" of each, making them distinct and separate from each other for the purpose of taxation, the words "territorial limits" mean the actual boundaries of each of such subdivisions as the same are fixed by law. Robinson v. City of Norfolk, 60 S. E. 762, 763, 108 Va. 14, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 294, 128 Am. St. Rep. 934.

TERRITORIAL SUBDIVISION

TERRITORY

See Best Interests of Territory; Contiguous Territory; Debt Accruing to Territory; Defined Territory; Inhabited Territory; Local Option Territory; Organized Territory; Wild-Cat Territory.

A "territory" of the United States is a portion of the country not included within the limits of any state and not yet admitted as a state into the Union, but organized under the laws of Congress, with a separate Legislature under a territorial Governor and other officers appointed by the President and Senate of the United States. Porto Rico is a "territory," within the meaning of the provision of Rev. St. U. S. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3597), authorizing the executive authority of any state or territory to make requisition for the extradition of fugitive criminals. People of State of New York ex rel. Kopel v. Bingham, 81 N. E. 773, 189 N. Y. 124, affirmed 29 Sup. Ct. 190, 191, 211 U. S. 468, 53 L. Ed. 286. See, also, In re Kopel, 148 Fed. 505, 507 (citing De Lima v. Bidwell, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 182 U. Sup. Ct. 760, 135 U. S. 447, 34 L. Ed. 219; Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 298, 305).

Alaska is a "territory" of the United States within the meaning of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 584, c. 3591, U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1150), extending the provisions of the interstate commerce act to carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property from one state or territory of the United States to any other state or territory, or from one place in a territory to another place in the same territory. Interstate Commerce Commission v. United States ex rel. Humbolt S. S. Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 556, 558, 224 U. S. 474, 56 L. Ed. 849; United States v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 37 App. D. C. 266.

A "territory" of the United States is not a sovereignty, and such legislative powers as it may possess are delegated ones, granted or withheld at the will of Congress. Territory v. Alexander, 89 Pac. 514, 515, 11 Ariz. 172.

TEST

See Bursting Test; Dugas Test; Hammer Test; Water Absorption Test.

TEST ACCEPTED

Plaintiff contracted to sell all the prunes on his trees, estimated at 35 tons, more or less, the contract reciting: "For prunes running orchard run (60 to the pound) when dried, $95 per ton (with variations of $1.00 per point up or down). All prunes to be good merchantable quality. Test accepted at 53." The words in parentheses were erased when the contract was executed. Held, that by the words "orchard run" was meant all the prunes in the orchard, without reference to size in grading, and the phrase "Test accepted at 53" meant that the prunes had been tested and accepted, and that the result was 53 to the pound, and did not mean that defendant should be liable only for such prunes as conformed to the test. Ross v. Frank, 108 Pac. 1025, 13 Cal. App. 88.

TESTAMENT

An instrument from a husband to his wife, containing apt words of conveyance and directing her to hold the property on certain trusts for the grantor, the trustee, and the grantor's children, and reserving a right to direct conveyances by the trustee to others and a power to revoke the entire instrument, was a "deed" and not a "testament." "To determine the character of an instrument, as to its being a will or a 'deed,' it is necessary to ascertain the intention of the maker from the whole instrument, read in the light of surrounding circumstances. If the intention at the time of the execution of the instrument was to convey a present estate, though the disposition be postponed until after his death, it is a 'deed'; but if the intention was that it should not convey any vested right or interest, but should be revocable during his life, it is a will." Cribbs v. Walker, 85 S. W. 244, 245, 74 Ark. 104 (quoting and adopting definition in Bunch v. Nicks, 7 S. W. 563, 50 Ark. 367).

TESTAMENTARY

See Letters Testamentary.

The term "testamentary" does not include every provision by which a person may in his lifetime direct or control the disposition which may be made of his property or his estate after his death. A valid testamentary provision is a provision made by will, duly executed in substantial conformity to law. It speaks from the death of the testator, and not earlier, and until that time the title, legal or equitable, remains unchanged in the testator, and he may sell, convey, and dispose of the same as fully and completely as if no will had ever been made by him. No right, title, or interest of any kind in the thing bequeathed passes to the devisee or legatee until the death of the testator, and not then if it appears that he has disposed of the devise or bequest during his lifetime. But the disposition of property after the death of the owner, the uses it shall be devoted to, and the designation of the persons who shall then come into its beneficial use and enjoyment, is often effectually accomplished otherwise than by will. For example, the owner of real estate may without any valuable consideration make and execute an ordinary deed of conveyance to a designated grantee, and deposit the same in the hands of a third person, to be delivered to the grantee only upon the death of the grantor, and such conveyance is held to be operative, even though made without knowledge or express consent or acceptance of the grantee. Lewis v. Currutt, 106 N. W. 914, 916, 130 Iowa, 423.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY

See, also, Mental Capacity; Sound Mind and Memory.

"Testamentary capacity" means sufficient mind to know the extent and value of testator's property, the number and names of the persons who are the natural objects of his bounty, their deserts with reference to their conduct and treatment toward him, their capacity and necessity, and that he shall have sufficient memory to retain all such facts in his mind long enough to have his will prepared and executed. Lehman v. Lindenmeyer, 109 Pac. 956, 958, 48 Colo. 305; Hoffbauer v. Morgan, 88 N. E. 337, 338, 172 Ind. 273 (citing Walt v. Westfall, 68 N. E. 271, 161 Ind. 648, 662; Teegarden v. Lewis, 40 N. E. 1047, 145 Ind. 98, 101; Id., 44 N. E. 9, 145 Ind. 98; Burkhart v. Gladish, 24 N. E. 118, 123 Ind. 337; Cline v. Lindsey, 11 N. E. 441, 110 Ind. 337.

To constitute "testamentary capacity" a testator need not possess sufficient mind and memory to know the exact extent and value of his property. Friedersdorf v. Lacy, 90 N. E. 766, 768, 173 Ind. 429.

One making a will, who has sufficient mind to know and understand the business in which he is engaged, who has sufficient mental capacity to know and understand the extent and value of his estate, the number and names of the persons who would naturally be supposed to be the objects of his bounty, their deserts with reference to their conduct and treatment toward him, and who can keep these things in his mind long enough to have his will prepared and executed, has "testamentary capacity." Terry v. Davenport, 83 N. E. 636, 639, 170 Ind. 74.

In order to constitute "testamentary capacity," it is necessary that testator at the time of signing the will be capable of knowing what his property is and who are the natural objects of his bounty, and be able to understand the natural consequences and the effect of executing the will; but it is not necessary that he should have sufficient capacity to hold all those things in his mind at the same time, though the absence of either element will render him incompetent. Norton v. Clark, 97 N. E. 1079, 1083, 253 Ill. 557. See, also, Dowie v. Sutton, 81 N. E. 395, 401, 227 Ill. 183, 118 Am. St. Rep. 266.

In order to have "testamentary capacity," testator must have sufficient mind and memory to intelligently understand the nature of the business in which he is employed, and the extent of the property constituting his estate and which he intends to dispose of, and to recollect the objects of his bounty. Hartley v. Lord, 80 Pac. 433, 434, 38 Wash. 221.

A person has "testamentary capacity" who understands the nature of a testament or will, viz., that it is a disposition of property to take effect after death, and who is capable of remembering generally the property subject to his disposition and the persons related to him by the ties of blood and of affection, and also of conceiving, and expressing by words, written or spoken, or by signs, or by both, any intelligible scheme of disposition. If the testator has sufficient intellect to enable him to have a decided and rational desire as to the disposition of his property, this will suffice. Slaughter v. Heath, 57 S. E. 69, 71, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1 (quoting and adopting the definition of Page on Wills, pp. 108-111, § 94 et seq.); Wynne v. Harrell, 66 S. E. 921, 133 Ga. 616 (quoting and adopting definition in Slaughter v. Heath, 57 S. E. 69, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1).

The court, in a will contest, having charged Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3267, 3268, defining the capacity essential to make a will, and that, if testator had intellect sufficient to enable a party to have a rational desire as to the disposition of his property, his desire must be decided in distinction from the ravings of a madman, the silly pratings of an idiot, childish whims of imbecility, or the excited vagaries of a drunkard, and if he had sufficient mental ability to know that he owned his property, and had a decided opinion as to what disposition he wished to make of it, and did make that disposition of it, then he had "testamentary capacity," a further instruction that, whether testator was wise or unwise, if he was not totally deprived of reason, so as to render him mentally unfit to make such a disposition of his property as to know what he was doing, he had capacity, was not error. Wynne v. Harrell, 66 S. E. 921, 133 Ga. 616.

"It is as necessary, in order to have 'testamentary capacity,' for one to have such sensibilities as will enable him to know the obligations he owes to the natural objects of his bounty, as it is for him to have the capacity to know the nature and value of his estate, and a fixed purpose to dispose of it." McDonald's Ex'rs et al. v. McDonald, 85 S. W. 1084, 1085, 120 Ky. 211, 117 Am. St. Rep. 579 (citing Murphy's Ex'r v. Murphy [Ky.] 65 S. W. 165; Wise v. Foote, 81 Ky. 10; Woodford v. Buckner, 63 S. W. 617, 111 Ky. 241).

One to possess "testamentary capacity" must understand the ordinary affairs of life, the value and extent of his property, the number and names of the persons who are the natural objects of his bounty, their deserts with reference to their conduct and treatment of him, their capacity and necessities. Turner v. Anderson, 139 S. W. 180, 186, 236 Mo. 523. See, also, Hughes v. Rader, 82 S. W. 32, 52, 183 Mo. 630 (quoting and adopting the definition in Sehr v. Lindemann, 54 S. W. 537, 153 Mo. 276); Knapp v. St. Louis Trust Co., 98 S. W. 70, 77, 199 Mo. 640 (quoting Brinkman v. Rueggelick, 71 Mo. 553; Farmer v. Farmer, 31 S. W. 926, 129 Mo. 530; Hamon v. Hamon, 79 S. W. 422, 180 Mo. 685).

A person has "testamentary capacity" who is capable of comprehending all his property and all the persons who reasonably come within the range of his bounty, and who has sufficient intelligence to understand his ordinary business and to know what disposition he is making of his property. Holton v. Cochran, 106 S. W. 1035, 1064, 208 Mo. 314; Luebbert v. Brockmeyer, 138 S. W. 92, 96, 158 Mo. App. 196.

The test of "testamentary capacity" is that testator have capacity to retain in memory, without prompting, the extent and condition of his property, and comprehend to whom he is giving it, and be capable of appreciating the deserts and relations to him of others, whom he excludes as beneficiaries;

the test relating, not to the moral quality of the act done, but to testator's mental capacity to do what he did, and not whether he actually appreciated the deserts of and relation to him of one excluded, but whether he had the capacity to do so, and it not being required that he correctly ascertain the legal status of each person apparently standing in natural relation to him. In the exercise of reason he may move upon false or insufficient evidence, or by mistake of law, and thus exclude from his bounty those whom, but for his error, he would have recognized; but stupid error, either in his reasoning or conclusion, is not lack of testamentary capacity. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 411, 87 Ark. 243.

An instruction, in a will contest, that in determining the issue as to the soundness of mind and "testamentary capacity" of testator, before the jury can find in favor of the will, they must believe from a preponderance of the evidence that, at the signing and execution thereof, testator had sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the transaction that he was engaged in, the nature and extent of his property, and to whom he desired to give it, and was giving it, without the aid of any other person, and unless the proponent of the will has shown, by such preponderance of evidence, that he did possess all these requisites, they should find that the writing introduced was not his will. Held, that the instruction was correct. Mowry v. Norman, 122 S. W. 724, 726, 223 Mo. 463.

The test of one's "testamentary capacity" is necessarily the same, whether his insanity be attributable to dementia or insane delusion. Huffaker v. Beers, 128 S. W. 1040, 1041, 95 Ark. 158.

The test of "testamentary capacity" is not whether the person who has made a testamentary disposition of his property was of a high order of intelligence, but whether he knew what he desired to do with his property, and was able to call to mind those to whom he wished to give it, and associate the property to be given with the particular beneficiary in each case. Salinas v. Garcia (Tex.) 135 S. W. 588, 590.

One who is able to know and understand the business in which he is engaged, and who knows that the paper he is executing is a disposition of his property to take effect after his death, and who remembers generally the nature and amount of his property and the persons he desires shall share in his estate, and who conceives and expresses by words or signs an intelligible scheme of disposition, has "testamentary capacity." Berst v. Moxom, 138 S. W. 74, 77, 157 Mo. App. 342.

While a person who has mental power to understand and transact ordinary business has capacity to make a will, it must not be understood that such degree of mental power and vigor is requisite to "testamentary capacity." Mental perception and power to think and reason of a lesser degree may be all that is requisite to the full understanding of everything involved in the execution of a will. The real question is: Did testator, at the time of making the instrument purporting to be his will, have such mind and memory as enabled him to understand the particular business in which he was then engaged? In re Brannan's Estate, 107 N. W. 141, 142, 97 Minn. 349 (quoting and adopting definition given in Ring v. Lawless, 60 N. E. 881, 190 Ill. 520).

Where testatrix had sufficient mental powers to call to mind the particulars of her business and the affairs of life, and to retain them for such a time as to perceive and understand their obvious relations and to form a rational judgment in relation to them, she had "testamentary capacity." In re Mullan's Will, 122 N. W. 723, 724, 140 Wis. 291.

To be competent to make a will, a testator must possess a mind capable of exercising judgment, reason, and deliberation, and of weighing the consequences of his will and its effect to a certain degree upon his estate and family. In re Walker's Will, 128 N. W. 386, 388, 152 Iowa, 154.

An instruction that a person of sufficient mental capacity to make a will is one who has "full and intelligent" knowledge of the act he is engaged in, and "full" knowledge of the property he possesses, etc., does not call for too high a degree of capacity, at least where it is further stated that it was enough if testator had an intelligent knowledge of the nature of the instrument he was executing, and sufficient strength of mind to know and comprehend the natural objects of his bounty, the nature and extent of his estate, and the distribution he wished to make thereof. In re Law's Estate (Iowa) 138 N. W. 531, 533.

Although testator may be weak and infirm, yet if he has sufficient mental capacity to know the objects of his bounty, the extent of his property, and the effect of his will upon his property, this is all that is required to constitute "testamentary capacity." Stull v. Stull, 96 N. W. 196, 202, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 389 (citing O'Connor v. Madison, 57 N. W. 105, 98 Mich. 183).

The true standard of "testamentary capacity" is the ability clearly to discern and discreetly to judge of all those things and all those circumstances which enter into the nature of a rational, fair, and just disposition of his property. Bidwell v. Piercy, 63 Atl. 261, 268, 71 N. J. Eq. 83 (citing Thorp v. Smith, 54 Atl. 412, 65 N. J. Eq. 400).

The test of "testamentary capacity" is whether testator's mind was sufficiently sound to enable him to know and understand the business in which he was engaged when he executed his will, and weakness alone will not invalidate a will if there was mind and memory enough to direct the disposition of the property intelligently. In re McNitt's Estate, 78 Atl. 32, 33, 229 Pa. 71.

Mere belief in Spiritualism does not, ipso facto, constitute an "insane delusion," rendering the believer wanting in "testamentary capacity." Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 81 N. E. 482, 486, 169 Ind. 154, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673.

A man may be peculiar and even insane upon some special topic, and yet have "testamentary capacity"; the question not being whether he says or does absurd things at certain times, but whether, at the particular time of executing his will, he knows what his duties and obligations are and what he desires to do in respect of them. Calligan v. Haskell, 128 N. Y. Supp. 293, 294, 143 App. Div. 574.

TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION

Subjects connected with testamentary disposition, see Subject.

TESTAMENTARY EXPENSE

Where a woman domiciled in England died possessed of personal property in England and Pennsylvania, and left two wills, one disposing of her Pennsylvania property and the other of her English property, and the latter provided that testamentary expenses and the duty on all legacies bequeathed free of duty should be paid out of the English property, the estate duty payable to the British government under St. 57 and 58 Vict. c. 30, is a "testamentary expense" payable out of the English property alone. In re Kortright's Estate, 85 Atl. 109, 110, 237 Pa. 138.

TESTAMENTARY MIND

One who has not mind and memory enough to understand the ordinary affairs of life, the nature of his property, the number and names of the persons who are the natural objects of his bounty, their capacity and necessity, has not a "testamentary mind." Crum v. Crum, 132 S. W. 1070, 1073, 231 Mo. 626.

TESTAMENTARY TRUSTEE

Code Civ. Proc. § 2472, gives each surrogate jurisdiction to control and settle the accounts of testamentary trustees, and to remove them and appoint a successor. Section 2514 provides that, unless a contrary intent is expressly declared or plainly apparent from the context, the expression "testamentary trustee" includes every person who is designated by a will or by any competent authority to execute a trust created by will. 2 Rev. St., pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 3, § 66, as amended by Laws 1850, c. 272, as amended by Laws 1866, c. 115, as amended by Laws 1867, c. 782, as substantially re-enacted by Laws 1871, c. 482, was re-enacted as Code Civ. Proc. § 2802, as amended by Laws 1885, c. 518, and permits any trustee created by will or appointed by any competent authority to execute any trust created by will to file at any time an intermediate account and to annually render and finally judicially settle his accounts before the surrogate having jurisdiction, and provides that in such annual accountings the surrogate shall have commissions, etc. Before the amendment of 1885, section 2802 merely provided that a testamentary trustee could at any time file an intermediate account and the vouchers in support of it with the surrogate having jurisdiction of the estate. Held that, while under section 2802 a trustee appointed by the Supreme Court upon the death of the testamentary trustee could file intermediate accounts and render annual accounts to the surrogate's court, neither that section, construed in view of the amendment thereto, nor the other sections of the Code, authorized the Surrogate's Court to allow a final voluntary accounting by such trustee upon the termination of the trust; only the Supreme Court which appointed the trustee having jurisdiction of such accounting. Runk v. Thomas, 123 N. Y. Supp. 523, 526, 138 App. Div. 789.

TESTATOR

See Presence of the Testator.

The word "testator" applies to "testatrix," irrespective of the act concerning statutes, because "testatrix," as Webster defines it, means "a female testator." Walker v. Hyland, 56 Atl. 268, 271, 70 N. J. Law, 69.

TESTIFY

To "testify" is to make a solemn declaration, verbal or written, to establish some fact. Ex parte Welborn, 141 S. W. 31, 34, 237 Mo. 297.

The word "testify" ordinarily means the making of any statement under oath in a judicial proceeding. State v. Murphy, 107 N. W. 470, 475, 128 Wis. 201 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 6932, 6933).

Production of documents

Statements compiled by employees of a corporation from its books and records, which were before a grand jury and produced to the grand jury by an officer of the corporation in a subpoena duces tecum, do not constitute testimony given or documentary evidence produced by such officer within the meaning of Act Feb. 25, 1903, c. 753, § 1, 32 Stat. 904, which grants immunity in certain cases to a witness "on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise"; the preparation or production of the statements in such case being the act of the corporation, and not of the witness. Helke v. United States, 192 Fed. 83, 87, 90, 112 C. C. A. 615.

TESTIMONY

See Direct Testimony; Expert Evidence or Testimony; Involuntary Testimony; Material Evidence or Testimony; Negative Testimony; Phonographic Report of Testimony; Positive Testimony; Taking Testimony.

More testimony, see More.

Such testimony, see Such.

The word "testimony" means a statement made by a witness under oath in a legal proceeding. Poe v. State, 129 S. W. 292, 295, 95 Ark. 172; Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Ward, 85 Pac. 459, 463, 16 Okl. 131; Edelstein v. United States, 149 Fed. 636, 640, 79 C. C. A. 328, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236.

"Testimony" is evidence given orally, and it does not include documents. State v. Winney, 128 N. W. 680, 681, 21 N. D. 72.

"Testimony," in legal as well as in common usage, signifies a statement of facts by witnesses, and to disprove the testimony of a witness is to disprove the facts testified to by him. Clark v. State, 63 S. E. 606, 5 Ga. App. 605.

The word "testimony," as used in the statute granting immunity to a witness, but reserving the right to prosecute for perjury, is broad enough to include statements that are false. State v. Murphy, 107 N. W. 470, 475, 128 Wis. 201 (citing 8 Words & Phrases, pp. 6932, 6933).

The word "testimony," in a stipulation providing that evidence taken in a suit shall be used, not only in that case, but also in another case, the same as if the said "testimony" had been taken for each of the cases respectively, embraces all the evidence, whether written or oral. United States v. Luce, 141 Fed. 385, 390.

The word "testimony," as used in Code 1896, § 1797, providing that the execution of any instrument of writing attested by witnesses may be proved by the "testimony" of the maker thereof, without producing or accounting for the absence of the attesting witnesses, means the statement of the maker as a witness on the stand or before a commissioner, not his declarations out of court, nor evidence of them given by another witness on the stand. Sledge v. Singley, 37 South. 98, 99, 139 Ala. 346.

Code Civ. Proc. § 872, subd. 4, requires the affidavit for an order for the examination of a party before trial to set forth "that the testimony of such person is material and necessary," etc. Rule 82 of the general rules of practice requires the affidavit to specify the acts and circumstances "which show that the examination of the person is material and necessary." Held, the change of terminology from "testimony" in the section to "examination" in the rule does not change the meaning. Cherbuliez v. Parsons, 108 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322, 123 App. Div. 814.

Evidence distinguished

While strictly "testimony" and "evidence" are not synonymous terms, the former, as used in a statute which provides that after the testimony on both sides, the state's counsel shall open and conclude the argument to the jury, except that, if the defendant introduces no "testimony," his counsel shall open and conclude after the testimony on the part of the state is closed, means either oral or documentary evidence. Hargrove v. State, 45 S. E. 53, 117 Ga. 706.

A charge that if any witness has willfully testified falsely, the jury are at liberty to wholly disregard his testimony "except so far as the same is corroborated by other creditable testimony in the case" is not erroneous, because using the word "testimony" instead of "evidence"; the two words being synonymous as commonly understood. State v. Winney, 128 N. W. 680, 681, 21 N. D. 72.

While some authorities define the words "testimony" and "evidence" as technically different, making "evidence" the more comprehensive term, in common expression, even in courts, they are used synonymously, and charges are not faulty because "testimony" is referred to, where technically "evidence" might be the more proper term. Jones v. City of Seattle, 98 Pac. 743, 745, 51 Wash. 245.

The term "testimony" is not as comprehensive as "evidence," and in fact is but a species or kind of evidence; but in a certificate to the stenographer's transcript, certifying that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct transcript of the testimony and other proceedings had on the trial, the term "testimony," when coupled with the expression "other proceedings," may be treated as synonymous with "evidence," making the certificate equivalent to a statement that it contained all the evidence. Mitchell v. Jensen, 81 Pac. 165, 167, 29 Utah, 346.

There is a difference between the terms "evidence" and "testimony." The former is the more comprehensive term, and includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. The latter in common acceptation embraces only the statements of witnesses upon oath, and does not include proof by writings or from other sources. A statement that the record contains all the "testimony" will, however, ordinarily be taken to amount to a statement that it contains all the "evidence." Dibble v. Dimick, 38 N. E. 724, 725, 143 N. Y. 549.

"The words 'testimony' and 'evidence' are not synonymous terms. Testimony is evidence; but evidence may or may not be testimony, or may consist of more than testimony. The word 'testimony' is a restricted term, consisting only of the statements of witnesses; while the word 'evidence' is a comprehensive term, embracing not only testimony, or the statements of witnesses, but also documents, written instruments, admissions of parties, and whatever may be submitted to a court or jury to elucidate an issue or prove a case." Bouvier defines "testimony": "The statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation." Black defines "testimony": "Any species of proof or probative matter legally presented at the trial of an issue by the act of the parties, and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, concrete objects, etc., for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court or jury as to their contention." Hence, "testimony" is not the proper word to be employed in a bill of exceptions to show that it contains all the evidence, and to warrant an assignment of error that the evidence is insufficient to support a decision. Crooks v. Harmon, 81 Pac. 95, 96, 29 Utah, 304.

A certificate of the official stenographer "that the above and foregoing * * * contains a full and correct transcript of my stenographic notes of the testimony taken and oral proceedings had on the trial," and an order of the judge settling the bill of exceptions reciting that the foregoing is "a correct transcript of the proceedings herein," do not show that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence; the word "testimony" including only the oral statements of the witnesses while testifying, and not being synonymous with the word "evidence" including any species of proof submitted to a court or jury. Carter v. Cummings-Nielson Co., 97 Pac. 334, 335, 34 Utah, 315 (citing 3 Words & Phrases, p. 2523).

In an action to recover a balance due on a building contract, an instruction that the facts must be decided by the jury from the "testimony," even if erroneous, as excluding by the use of the word "testimony," in place of "evidence," the documentary evidence in the case, was not misleading, where the concluding sentence directed the jury not to consider anything but the "evidence" introduced before them. Fitzgerald v. Benner, 76 N. E. 709, 716, 219 Ill. 485.

The statement in the printed record of appeal that "this was all the 'testimony' introduced on the trial of this cause" is not the equivalent of the statement that "this was all the evidence introduced on the trial of this cause." An assignment of error in relation to the evidence will not be considered, unless the record shows affirmatively that all of the evidence is made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions. The word "testimony" is not synonymous with the word "evidence." Guarantee Gold Bond Loan & Sav- ings Co. v. Edwards, 104 S. W. 624, 629, 7 Ind. T. 297.

What witnesses say under oath is "testimony," and so much of it as impresses the mind of the judge as the truth is "evidence"; and it is by "evidence," and not by "testimony," that the judge must be governed in passing upon questions of fact. Mick v. Mart (N. J.) 65 Atl. 851.

Qualification of witness essential

The word "testimony," or "to testify," implies the usual preliminary qualification of taking an oath to speak the truth. Such an implication is so reasonable and well understood among lawyers and legislators that we would do violence to common intelligence to impute to Congress any other intention in the legislation in question, providing that no "testimony" given on the examination of a bankrupt shall be offered against him in any criminal proceeding. Edelstein v. United States, 149 Fed. 636, 640, 79 C. C. A. 328, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238.

"The use of the phrase 'testimonial evidence' must not be understood as applicable exclusively to assertions made on the witness stand. Any assertion, taken as the basis of an inference to the existence of the matter asserted is testimony, whether made in court or not. Assertions made on the witness stand are merely the commonest class of testimonial evidence. The qualifications of a witness are equally essential in the use of extrajudicial assertions." Thus, where a statute provides that those of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination are incompetent, it is error to admit in evidence a confession of accused, made two days after the commission of the offense, without permitting him the opportunity to show that he was of unsound mind when it was made. State v. Berberick, 100 Pac. 209, 215, 38 Mont. 423, 16 Ann. Cas. 1077, (quoting 1 Wigmore, Ev. § 479).

TEXAS FEVER

"Texas fever" is a deadly disease of cattle. Wilson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 108 S. W. 590, 591, 129 Mo. App. 658; North & Douglas v. Woodland, 85 Pac. 215, 217, 12 Idaho, 50, 56, 57, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921.

TEXAS RED RUST-PROOF OATS

Where a sale of "Texas red rust-proof oats" was made through a broker, in a suit by the purchaser against the seller for damages alleged to have resulted from the delivery of oats of a different kind, it is competent for the broker to testify that the contract of sale was made with reference to the mutual understanding of the purchaser and broker that "Texas red rust-proof oats" included only oats raised in the state of Texas, and that no contrary understanding of this trade term was known to the trade. W. O. Brackett & Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 56 S. E. 762, 763, 127 Ga. 672.

TEXTURE

In the tariff act provision that unenumerated articles shall be dutiable at the rate applicable to enumerated articles which they resemble in "texture," etc., "texture" does not relate to liquids, but only to the structure of woven fabrics. Stratton v. Komanda & Co., 148 Fed. 125, 126.

THALWEG

"The term 'thalweg' is commonly used by writers on international law in definition of water boundaries between states, meaning the middle, or deepest, or most navigable, channel. And while often styled 'fairway,' or 'midway,' or 'main channel,' the word itself has been taken over into various languages." The deep-water sailing channel, or "thalweg," emerging from the mouth of Pearl river and extending eastwardly to the north of Half Moon Island, through the Mississippi Sound and Cat Island Pass, between Cat Island and Isle à Pitre, and through Chandeleur Island Sound, northeast of the Chandeleur Islands, to the Gulf of Mexico, is the true boundary line between the states of Mississippi and Louisiana, under the act of April 8, 1812, admitting Louisiana into the Union, with a boundary described as extending along the middle of the Iberville river and Lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain to the Gulf of Mexico, and thence bounded by the said Gulf to the mouth of the Sabine river. State of Louisiana v. Mississippi, 26 Sup. Ct. 408, 421, 202 U. S. 1, 50 L. Ed. 913.

THAT

See For That.

Where by his will testator creates an estate in fee in his eldest son, and then provides "that in case" the devisee "dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of" testator's second son, the word "that" must be construed as "but" or "provided that." In re Carothers' Estate, 119 Pac. 926, 928, 161 Cal. 588.

THAT IS TO SAY

See, also, Videlicet.

The words "that is to say," as used in a will whereby the testator, after giving the real estate to his wife, devised to his daughter his personal property, and in fee simple all the real estate, "that is to say that if at the death of my wife my daughter, M., shall then be living the fee to said real estate shall vest in her," etc., clearly mean the same as if the testator had said "by this I mean that if," etc., or "provided if at the death of my wife," etc. Orr v. Yates, 70 N. E. 731, 734, 209 Ill. 222.

THAT WHEREAS

THE

The word "the," as used in an act entitled "An act providing for the manner of adopting children," implies that the remedy indicated shall be exclusive. Succession of Dupre, 41 South. 324, 326, 116 La. 1090.

An indictment beginning "In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas" is not insufficient under the constitutional requirement that an indictment begin "In the name and by authority of the state of Texas." The use of the article "the" before the word "authority" does not add to or vary the sense and meaning of the constitutional requirement. Spencer v. State, 90 S. W. 638, 639, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 580.

As all

The phrase "the evidence," as used in an instruction, means all the evidence. Adams v. Pease, 113 Ill. App. 856, 360.

The definite article "the" has sometimes been construed to mean "all of the." Thus Code, § 4019, providing that, when "the" property of a person shall be seized by process, the debts owing to employes for labor within 90 days shall be preferred debts and paid in full, requires that "all the property" of a debtor should be seized before labor claimants could have preference. Anundsen v. Standard Printing Co., 105 N. W. 424, 426, 129 Iowa, 200 (citing Born v. Home Ins. Co., 81 N. W. 676, 110 Iowa, 383, 80 Am. St. Rep. 300; State v. Mateer, 62 N. W. 684, 94 Iowa, 42).

As designating a particular object

The article "the" directs what particular thing or things are to be taken or assumed as spoken of, and determines what particular thing is meant. It is used before nouns with a specifying or particularizing effect, so that its use immediately preceding "state" in the constitutional requirement that indictments shall conclude "against the peace and dignity of the state," points out the state whose peace and dignity has been offended, and its omission in the indictment is a fatal defect.

State v. Campbell, 109 S. W. 706, 712, 210 Mo. 202, 14 Ann. Cas. 403.

THEATER

See Proprietor of Theater.

A "theater" is a building especially adapted to dramatic, operatic, or spectacular representations; a playhouse. People v. Klaw, 106 N. Y. Supp. 341, 351, 55 Misc. Rep. 72 (quoting and adopting the definition in Stand. Dict.).

A "theater" is a playhouse, a building for the representation of a theatrical performance. Gould v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 172, 179.

The word "theater," as used in section 8369, Rev. Codes, making it a misdemeanor to keep open and maintain a theater on Sunday, means a theatrical performance or entertainment and does not include all shows, though a "show" includes a theatrical performance. State v. Penny, 111 Pac. 727, 729, 42 Mont. 118, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155.

The word "opera" is different in meaning from the words "opera house," in that the former may have no relation to the building in which it may be rendered, and so a "theater" may mean a place where plays are produced, whereas a "theater building" may be such, whether plays are produced therein or not. In a suit to recover for the construction of a modern $30,000 "theater building" according to agreement, the costs for the bare building, the usual, necessary, permanent equipment such as plumbing, heating, and lighting apparatus, seats, curtains, and scenery adapted to and intended for use in that particular building, may be recovered, but not for the piano, furniture, carpets, and similar articles, movable and practically as well adapted to use elsewhere, as the latter are not essential parts of a "theater building." Neher v. Viviani, 110 Pac. 695, 698, 15 N. M. 400.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 199, prohibiting the opening on Sunday of places of public amusement, including theaters and such other amusements as are exhibited and for which an admission fee is charged, the word "theater" does not mean the building, but the performance or exhibition given; and, while a moving picture show is not a theater, it falls within the prohibition of the statute as one of "such other amusements" prohibited. Ex parte Lingenfelter, 142 S. W. 555, 559, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 30.

A moving picture show is within Rev. Codes, § 6825, forbidding the conducting on Sunday of any "theater," playhouse, circus, or show or any such place of public amusement. Ex parte Bossner, 110 Pac. 502, 503, 18 Idaho, 519.

Under Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 56, c. 117, § 1, providing that no person, etc., without having first obtained a proper license therefor, shall be engaged in, etc., any trade, that is to say, exhibiting circuses, etc., and section 5 providing that every building, etc., where theatrical performances are exhibited, shall be deemed a circus within the meaning of this act, one maintaining a moving picture show must procure a license; the word "theatrical" meaning of or pertaining to a theater or scenic representation resembling the manner of dramatic performers. State v. Morris (Del.) 76 Atl. 479, 480, 1 Boyce, 330.

THEATER TICKET

A ticket of admission to a race track, a theater, a concert, or any such entertainment, is a mere revocable "license." Buenzle v. Newport Amusement Ass'n, 68 Atl. 721-723, 29 R. I. 23, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1242.

A "theater ticket," or a ticket to any other place of amusement, is a mere license, revocable at the pleasure of the theatrical manager. It does, however, constitute a contract between the proprietor and purchaser of the ticket to the extent that the proprietor is bound to perform or respond in damages for breach of his contract, but he is not liable in an action for trespass or tort. Taylor v. Cohn, 84 Pac. 388, 47 Or. 538, 8 Ann. Cas. 527.

"A 'theater ticket' is a license issued by the proprietor, pursuant to the contract, as convenient evidence of the right of the holder to admission to the theater at the date named, with the privilege specified, subject, however, to his observance of any reasonable condition appearing upon the face thereof. The license, although granted for consideration, is revocable for a violation of such condition by the holder of the ticket in the manner specified therein." Collister v. Hayman, 76 N. E. 20, 21, 183 N. Y. 250, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 5 Ann. Cas. 344 (citing Purcell v. Daly [N. Y.] 19 Abb. N. C. 301; Burton v. Scherpf, 83 Mass. [1 Allen] 133, 79 Am. Dec. 717; McCrea v. Marsh, 78 Mass. [12 Gray] 211, 71 Am. Dec. 745; Greenberg v. Western Turf Ass'n, 73 Pac. 1050, 140 Cal. 357; Pingrey's Extraordinary Contracts, § 509; Wandell's Law of the Theater, 221; Goddard's Bailments & Carriers, § 333).

THEATRICAL PERFORMANCE, PANORAMAS, ETC.

A company giving an entertainment consisting of panoramic reproductions of battles of the Anglo-Boer war, with portrayal of military maneuvers, but with no circus rings, trapeze acting, wild beasts, or clowns, is assessable with a license tax, under Acts 1902-03, p. 205, c. 148, § 108, providing for the as-assessment of a license tax upon "theatrical performances, panoramas, etc.," and not under section 111, providing for a license tax upon "shows, circuses, and menageries." Boer War Spectacle v. Commonwealth, 60 S. E. 85, 86, 107 Va. 653.

THEFT

See Loss by Theft.

See, also, Fraudulent Taking; Larceny.

"Theft," or larceny, is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another with intent to convert it to the use of the taker without the consent of the owner. State v. Stewart (Del.) 67 Atl. 786, 788, 6 Pennewill, 435.

A taking, to constitute "theft," need not be a taking from the actual possession of the owner; but a taking of property without his consent, when not in his actual custody, with intent to deprive him thereof and to appropriate it to the use of the person taking, constitutes theft. Rose v. State, 106 S. W. 143, 144, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 154.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 862, providing that it is not necessary, to constitute "theft," that possession and ownership of the property be in the same person, and that one has possession who exercises actual care, control, and management of the property, whether lawfully or not, an allegation, in an indictment for breaking and entering a house with intent to take personalty, that such property belonged to a certain person, was supported by proof that he had the exclusive care, control, and management of the property. Clark v. State, 125 S. W. 12, 13, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 181.

To constitute "theft" under Pen. Code 1895, art. 861, punishing "theft by false pretext," the fraudulent intent must exist at the time of obtaining the goods and the representations must be false, while to constitute "theft" under section 377, relating to "theft by conversion by bailee," the goods must have been obtained under contract of bailment, and the fraudulent intent must be conceived subsequent to obtaining possession. Price v. State, 91 S. W. 571, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 131.

In a conversion under bailment, the fraudulent matters occur after obtaining lawful possession of the property. If the fraudulent purpose existed at the time of getting the property, and false pretenses were employed to get possession, with the then existing purpose of appropriating the property, and appropriation did occur, it would be "theft" under the general statute, and not under the statute with reference to conversion under a contract of hiring or borrowing. Pickrell v. State, 132 S. W. 938, 940, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 572.

A foot race was arranged between H. and W.; one T. being H.'s backer, and defendant G. being W.'s backer. Prosecutor gave T. a sum of money to bet on the race, on the latter's promise that it, or an equivalent sum, should be returned, whatever the outcome of the contest; prosecutor not intending to part with his money. The money was placed in a satchel, and after the race G. and W. claimed the same, and it was turned over to them. Held, that such acts constituted "theft," as defined by White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 858, and not "swindling" or "fraudulent conversion by a bailee," though the money was obtained by fraudulent pretext. Glasgow v. State, 100 S. W. 933, 935, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 635.

Criminal intent

To constitute "theft," the fraudulent intent to convert to the taker's own use must exist at the time of taking; for, if the original taking is not fraudulent, no subsequent appropriation of the property would constitute theft. Richards v. State, 116 S. W. 587, 588, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 278.

To constitute "theft," the taking must be fraudulent. Young v. State, 83 S. W. 808, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 468.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 861, providing that the taking must be wrongful, so that, if the property came into the possession of the person accused of theft by lawful means, the subsequent appropriation of it is not theft, but if the taking was with intent to deprive the owner of the value thereof, and appropriate the property to the use and benefit of the person taking, and the same is so appropriated, the offense of "theft" is complete where, in a prosecution for theft of a mule, which defendant took and sold, it appeared that he had the owner's consent to the taking of the mule, but not to the selling thereof, it was necessary to prove that he intended at the time of taking the mule to appropriate it, in order to convict him of theft. Flagg v. State, 103 S. W. 855, 856, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 602.

Embezzlement distinguished

"Embezzlement" partakes largely of the qualities and nature of "theft," in that it is a peculiar way of converting money obtained by virtue of a trust relation. The fraudulent idea pervades embezzlement, as it does theft. The difference mainly in the two offenses consists in the manner of obtaining possession of the property and the time the fraudulent intent was conceived. Leach v. State, 81 S. W. 733, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 507.

One assisting a person, having possession, as employé, of horses of another, in driving them away with the purpose of appropriating them, is guilty of "embezzlement," and is not guilty of "theft." Pearce v. State, 98 S. W. 861, 862, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 507.

Larceny synonymous

"Larceny" is only another name for stealing or "theft." State v. Fair, 76 Pac. 731, 733, 35 Wash. 127, 102 Am. St. Rep. 897.

To "steal" a domestic animal, in violation of Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2480, punishing stealing of live stock, is larceny in the sense in which "larceny" is used in section 5224, providing that, when property taken in one county by larceny has been brought into another, the jurisdiction of the offense is in either county; the words "steal," "larceny," and "theft" having the same meaning. Cox v. Territory, 2 Okl. Cr. 668, 104 Pac. 378-380 (citing Hughes v. Territory, 8 Okl. 28, 56 Pac. 708; And. Law Dict.; Webst. Int. Dict.).

THEFT FROM THE PERSON

See, also, Larceny from the Person.

"Theft from the person" is the form of theft in which the property is taken from the person. Miles v. State, 103 S. W. 854, 855, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 587.

To constitute "theft from the person," it is not essential that it occur in a concealed manner and out of the observation of others; and where money was taken without the victim's knowledge, and while he was asleep or stupefied, the spectators being misled by accused's statement that the victim was his brother, the theft was privately done, within the statute. Black v. State, 104 S. W. 897, 898, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 8.

"Theft from the person" may be either wholly unknown to the person whose property is stolen, and privately, or it may be taken from his person so suddenly as to prevent effective resistance. Johnson v. State, 117 S. W. 964, 965, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 411; Grant v. State, 127 S. W. 173, 174, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 123.

A guest at a hotel, on retiring placed his pants, in a pocket of which was his pocket-book, with $72 in money, under his head. The proprietor during the night entered his room, secured the pants, and stole the money. Held not to show a "theft from the person." Gibson v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 776.

THEIR

As its

The word "their," as used in Laws Ga. 1833, p. 264, relating to the charter of the Georgia Railroad Company, and providing that the stock of the company and its branches shall be exempt from taxation for a fixed period, and after that shall be subject to a tax not exceeding a specified per cent. per annum on the net proceeds of their investments, does not refer to the shareholders who should become interested in the enterprise, but refers to the corporation, and is used in the same sense as if the pronoun "its" had been used instead of "their." Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 132 Fed. 912, 914.

THEIR CHILDREN

Where a widow with one child married a widower with six children, and two children resulted from the marriage, and he took out a policy of insurance, payable to the wife, in trust for herself and "their children," his children by the first wife were entitled to their share in the proceeds. The words "their children" might be used in one connection to designate the children having a common parentage, and in another connection to designate the children of the husband and the children of the wife spoken of. Neither law nor common usage has affixed such unvarying meaning to the word "their" as to prevent its appropriate use for the latter purpose. Lehman v. Lehman, 64 Atl. 598, 599, 215 Pa. 344.

THEIR DEATH

Testatrix directed that a fund be set apart sufficient in amount to produce an income of $6,000 a year, and out of such income to pay her brother $4,000 each year, and another brother $2,000 a year for the term of their natural lives, respectively, and after "their death" the capital of the fund to go to other persons named. Held, that the words "their death" must be construed to mean "after their respective deaths." Collins v. Wardell, 54 Atl. 417, 419, 65 N. J. Eq. 366.

THEIR HEIRS

Where an estate in lands is granted to a husband and wife for life, with remainder to "their heirs," the presumption of law is that the heirs of each, as a separate class, take a moiety of the remainder. Irvin v. Stover, 67 S. E. 1119, 1122, 67 W. Va. 356.

THEIR HEIRS AT LAW

The words "their heirs at law," in a deed directing a trustee to pay rents to decedent and his first wife and at their death to convey to "their heirs at law," mean heirs of decedent and such wife, and not the heirs of survivor; decedent's second wife thus taking no equitable interest under the deed. Crandall v. Ahern, 85 N. E. 886, 887, 200 Mass. 77.

THEN

The word "then" does not always imply consecutiveness; afterwards, later, at another time, being some of its meanings. Ventress v. Town of Clayton, 51 South. 763, 764, 165 Ala. 349.

The word "then" as used in connection with the devise of property, has been held to be an adverb of time, but the general rule is that it does not point to the time, but indicates the event. In re Fitzpatrick's Estate, 81 Atl. 815, 816, 233 Pa. 33, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 320.

A will read: "Upon the death of my said wife and all of my first named three sisters, I will the other two-thirds 'then' to those who would 'then' be entitled thereto under the intestate laws." Held, that as first used "then" is a conjunction, meaning "in that event," and that as used in the second connection it is an adverb of time, meaning "at that time." Wood v. Schoen, 66 Atl. 79, 81, 216 Pa. 425.

The word "then," as used in a deed of trust stipulating that, in case of the absence from the county of the trustee, another person should become his successor, and in the absence of the trustee and his successor "then the then sheriff of said county, * * * who shall thereupon become their successor to the title * * * with all the powers, duties and obligations thereof," may sell, etc., plainly has reference to whosoever is sheriff at the time of the default. McNutt v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. W. 703, 704, 181 Mo. 94.

A deed of trust conveyed the property to the "sheriff of W. county," in trust, etc., to hold the same to such grantee and to his successor or successors in trust, and to his or their assigns forever. It further provided that if the grantor made default in certain conditions, at the option of the holder, the "then" acting sheriff of W. county, might sell the property, etc. Held, that time of foreclosure was the potential consideration in the interest of the grantor to which time the word "then" referred, so that the acting sheriff at the time the creditor elected to institute foreclosure proceedings was the sheriff authorized to make the sale. Feller v. Lee, 124 S. W. 1129, 1133, 225 Mo. 319.

In Bankr. Act, § 60, subds. "a," "b," as amended by Act June 25, 1910, c. 412, § 11, subds. "a," "b," 36 Stat. 842, providing that if at the time of transfer by an insolvent debtor or entry of judgment against him, the judgment or transfer "then" operates as a preference, and the person receiving it shall then have reasonable cause to believe that it would effect a preference, etc., the word "then" refers to the time the judgment was entered. Galbraith v. Whitaker, 138 N. W. 772, 774, 119 Minn. 447, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427.

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 390, providing that, where a cause of action which does not involve real property within the state accrues against a person who is not "then" a resident of the state, an action cannot be brought thereon in the state after the expiration of the time limited by the law of his residence for bringing a like action, etc., the phrase "not then a resident of the state" must be construed with the other phrase, "the law of his residence." The word "then" in the first phrase obviously refers to the point of time referred to immediately before this phrase, namely, the time when the cause of action accrued. Hence the phrase "law of his residence" means the law of the debtor's residence at the time the cause of action accrued, and not at the time when the action was commenced. Utah Nat. Bank v. Jones, 96 N. Y. Supp. 338, 339, 109 App. Div. 526.

As at that time

A will devising testator's land to his widow for life, and providing that after her death the remainder of the estate should go to testator's son and daughter, share and share alike, and in case of their death "then" to their children only, and, if no children are left by them, that the survivor of testator's children should inherit the other's share, did not give the son and daughter an estate in fee; they being entitled to nothing more than a life estate in any contingency, the word "then" as used, being an adverb of time, and meaning "at that time." If either of them dies leaving children, the estate vests in such children; on death of either without leaving children, the life estate vests in the survivor; and upon his death leaving children, they would take the whole estate in full. If both of testator's children die without children, the fee becomes intestate property. Kleinhans v. Kleinhans, 97 N. E. 1077, 1078, 253 Ill. 620.

Act March 5, 1874 (P. L. p. 27; 2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 1923, § 35), provides that, when a building on leased premises is injured by fire without fault of the lessee, the landlord shall repair the building as speedily as possible, or, in default thereof, the rent shall cease until the building shall be put in complete repair, and that, in case of total destruction of the building, the rent shall be paid up to the time of such destruction, and then and from thenceforth shall cease unless the parties have otherwise stipulated in their lease. Held, that the statute does not give a tenant an option to be availed of within a reasonable time as to whether he will terminate the lease or not, but the word "then" in the clause, "and then and from thenceforth," refers to the time of destruction making the lease terminate at that time, in the absence of a contrary provision in the lease, and, where the lessee has paid an installment of rent in advance, he may recover from the lessor such portion thereof as would have been earned after the destruction of the premises. Carley v. Liberty Hat Mfg. Co., 79 Atl. 447, 448, 81 N. J. Law, 502, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545.

Where a will gave testator's wife a life estate in all his real and personal property, and provided that at the death of the wife all his property should be sold and converted into money, and that "then," after the payment of the debts of the wife and a specific legacy, an equal division should be made among all the children, the distribution between the children was to be made after the death of the widow, the sale of the property, and the payment of the obligations referred to. Nelson v. Nelson (Ind.) 72 N. E. 482, 485.

Death of taker referred to

Under a deed to a mother for life, "then" to the heirs of her body forever, the heirs take a future contingent, and not a vested, interest, within Civ. Code, §§ 694, 780, declaring that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who will have a right to immediate possession on the ceasing of the precedent interest, and that when a remainder on an estate for life is not limited on a contingency defeating such precedent estate it is deemed to be intended to take effect only on the death of the taker; the word "then" referring to the time of the expiration of the life estate. Hall v. Wright, 120 Pac. 429, 431, 17 Cal. App. 502.

Death of testator referred to

A will created a trust, and provided that on the death of the beneficiary the fund should pass to testator's sister and two brothers, and should be equally divided between them, and that "after" the fund for the trust was set aside the residue should go in trust for the benefit of his father and mother for life, and thereafter to his sister and brothers. The provision as to the residue was as follows: "After my executrix and executors have paid my just debts and set aside the aforesaid sum * * * then it is my will and I give and bequeath to my said executrix and executors all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate real and personal, in trust, however, and for the uses and purposes following," etc. It was contended that the creation of the residuary trust "after" the prior created trust indicated an intention to exclude from the residuary trust all of that which was included in the former trust, and the words "after" and "then" were relied on as indicating such intentions. It was held, however, that these words were to be considered words of description, rather than of exclusion and limitation, and the provision of his will creating a residuary estate was deemed to speak as of the date of his death, so it would include all property that had been devised or bequeathed to others, including a legacy which had lapsed. Langley v. Westchester Trust Co., 73 N. E. 44, 46, 180 N. Y. 326.

As in that case or event

A life estate in all of the testator's property, real and personal, as given to his wife, who is charged with the administration of the estate for the benefit of herself and the other beneficiaries named in the will, is not enlarged into a fee simple estate in either the real or personal property by the phrase, describing the property to go over, "whatsoever what may be left," nor in such case is a fee simple estate in remainder, defeasible by the death of the devisee without leaving a child or children surviving him, enlarged into an absolute estate in fee simple by the insertion, after the naming of the event the happening of which shall divest the estate, of the phrase

"then the estate left over." The word "then" is not used in the chronological, but the sequential, sense, and means the same as the words "in that case," or "in that event." Behrens v. Baumann, 66 S. E. 5, 7, 66 W. Va. 56, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092.

Where in a will there is a devise to a son, and if he dies without lineal descendants living at the time of his decease "then" over, these words are not by themselves, without assistance from other parts of the will, sufficient to create an estate by implication in the lineal descendants; but the son takes a fee defeasible upon his death without lineal descendants living at the time of his decease, and in the event of lineal descendants living at the time of the son's decease his fee becomes absolute, and such descendants have no interest under the will as against his grantee. Anderson v. United Realty Co., 86 N. E. 644, 647, 79 Ohio St. 23.

Adverbs of time, such as "upon," "then," "from and after," etc., in the devise or bequest of a remainder limited upon a life estate, are construed to relate merely to the time of enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting in interest. Staples v. Mead, 137 N. Y. Supp. 847, 850, 152 App. Div. 745.

The words "then to pay after the termination of the life estate" do not mean a gift in future, but a present gift, and vest the remainder upon the death of testator, but postpone the enjoyment of the gift until the death of the life tenant. In re Allison, 102 N. Y. Supp. 887, 892, 53 Misc. Rep. 222.

THEN AND THERE

Where the day and date of the first fact alleged is given, and the others are stated as having "then and there" occurred, it is to be inferred that the facts alleged were coexistent—occurring at the same point of time. State v. Hand, 58 Atl. 641, 71 N. J. Law, 137.

The words "then and there" as used in an indictment merely bring forward prior averments of date and venue, and do not otherwise enlarge the description of the offense. Shaw v. United States, 165 Fed. 174, 175, 91 C. C. A. 208.

The words "then and there" being used in an indictment simply to avoid repeating the time and place at which the offense is charged to have been committed, their omission in the conclusion of the indictment or elsewhere is immaterial, where the time and place of the offense is sufficiently charged in the beginning thereof. State v. Seiberling, 127 S. W. 106, 107, 143 Mo. App. 318.

An indictment alleging that accused, at a county, on a date specified, sold liquor to persons named, "minors under the age of 21 years," sufficiently charges that the sale was made to minors in the county on the date mentioned without the words "then and there" immediately preceding the quoted words. The words "then and there" in an indictment refer to some former allegation, and are only necessary when it is essential to refer to such former allegation. State v. Holden, 127 S. W. 399, 400, 142 Mo. App. 502.

An indictment, charging a physician with issuing a prescription for intoxicating liquor which was not "then and there" to be used for medicinal purposes, was not defective in the use of the quoted words; their effect being to charge the offense as at any time within the limitation of the crime and at any place in the county, and not at the immediate time and place. State v. Pomeroy, 147 S. W. 144, 145, 163 Mo. App. 288.

The formal part of an indictment recited that: "At the November, 1908, term of the district court of Carter county, state of Oklahoma, begun and held in the city of Ardmore in said county, on the 9th day of November, 1908, the grand jury of said county, good and lawful men, legally drawn and summoned according to law, and then and there examined, impaneled, sworn, and charged according to law, do present and find," etc. Held that the words "then and there" have direct reference to the expression "at the November, 1908, term of the district court," and not to the phrase "on the 9th day of November, 1908," so as to identify the grand jury which returned the indictment as one which was impaneled on the 9th of November, and which was discharged on November 19th prior to the commission of the offense charged. Fooshee v. State, 108 Pac. 554, 556, 3 Okl. Cr. 666.

The words "then and there," used in an indictment charging a seduction of a female who was "then and there an unmarried female of previous chaste character," refer to the time of and immediately before the seduction. State v. Sortviet, 110 N. W. 100, 101, 100 Minn. 12.

Where the charging part of an indictment for murder is in one sentence, and the word "feloniously" is so connected with subsequent portions of the sentence as to modify them by a fair interpretation, it is unnecessary to repeat the word in connection with each act constituting the crime; but where the pleader uses words to describe the intent with which the assault was made, the words "then and there," used in connecting the infliction of the mortal wound with a felonious intent, will be interpreted to refer to the time and place merely, and not as a vehicle to carry the intent with which the assault was made through the indictment so as to modify the intent in making the mortal wound. Wright v. United States, 90 Pac. 732, 733, 18 Okl. 510, 11 Ann. Cas. 995.

Where the third count of an indictment, referring to the first count, alleged that defendant "did on the day and date and in the county and state aforesaid," etc., the omission of the word "there" from the expression "then and there," in the charging part of the indictment, did not render it defective; such expression having reference to the previous time and place alleged. Manovitch v. State, 96 S. W. 1, 2, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 260.

When an act is done, and time and place alleged, and it is averred that then and there another act occurred, and other acts are alleged in the same manner, this necessarily imports that all the acts were coexistent, and that they occurred at the same time. The word "then" refers to a precise time. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 8678 (Acts 1897, p. 316, § 1), authorizes dealers in beverages to file with the circuit court clerk a written description of the trade-mark, initial, etc., stamped upon their bottles, and provides for the recording and publication thereof for not less than two weeks in a newspaper in the county, and also for the recording of the description in the office of the secretary of state. Section 8680b (Acts 1897, p. 316, § 5) punishes any one filling, buying, selling, etc., any bottle belonging to a dealer who has complied with section 8678, with the intent to defraud such dealer. An indictment under section 8680b charged the offense as committed on the same day on which it was returned, and alleged that the dealer had "then and there and theretofore" filed with the circuit court clerk the required description, which had been recorded, and that the clerk "then and there" caused a copy to be published "for not less than two weeks" in a certain newspaper, and that such description was "then and there also filed" with the secretary of state, and by him "then and there" recorded. Held, that the indictment was bad for failing to show that the dealer had complied with section 8678, and that the required publication had taken place before the purchase constituting the offense occurred. State v. Barnett, 65 N. E. 515, 516, 159 Ind. 432.

As instantly

A statement in an indictment that the deceased "then and there instantly died" is a sufficient allegation that the death occurred within a year and a day after the assault. Commonwealth v. Snell, 75 N. E. 75, 77, 189 Mass. 12, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1019.

As time and place previously mentioned

Where an indictment for permitting gambling on premises stated the date of the offense and laid the venue in a certain county of the state, it was sufficient to refer thereafter in the indictment to the time and place by using the words "then and there." De Los Santos v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 919, 920.

An indictment alleging that a local option election was held on a certain day, and thereupon an order prohibiting sales was made, and that defendant "then and there" sold liquor, is bad. The words "then and there" refer back to the date before alleged when the local option election was held, and show a sale at a time when the same could not be unlawful. O'Reilly v. State (Tex.) 85 S. W. 89.

An indictment alleging that defendants on a certain date "then and there being, and acting together, did 'then and there' * * * feloniously take, steal, and ride away" three horses belonging to two different persons, sufficiently alleged that the animals were taken at the same time and place, so that it was proper to charge the stealing of all animals in one indictment. State v. Clark, 80 Pac. 101, 46 Or. 140.

In an affidavit for violating the local option law, it was alleged that at an election held it was determined that the sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited in justice precinct No. 4, in a county and state named, and the necessary orders made and publication had, and that thereafter, on a date specified, a person named "did then and there sell intoxicating liquors" to a person named. The information followed the complaint, except that, instead of the words "then and there," the words "thereafter in said justice precinct" were used. Held, that there was no variance between the affidavit and the information as to the place where the alleged sale took place; both affidavit and information charging the offense to have been committed in prohibited territory. Moreno v. State, 143 S. W. 156, 157, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 660.

An information charging that in a certain town, voting precinct, and county of the state, while a public election was being held on a certain day, defendant then and there unlawfully and willfully gave to another intoxicating liquor, sufficiently charged, by the use of the words "then and there," that the offense was committed in the town specified. Walker v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 318.

The words "then and there," as used in an indictment, have reference to the day before named therein. State v. Bonney, 34 Me. 223, 225.

THEN LIVING

Under a will which directs trustees, on the death of testator's child, to convey the principal of the share so held for such child's benefit to such child's lawful issue then living by representation, but if such child shall die without leaving lawful issue living at the time of such child's death, then upon such child's death to add the principal of the share held for such child's benefit equally to the shares held for the benefit of any other children "then living," the words "then living" as first used refer to the death of the child, and not of the testator. Clarke v. Fay, 91 N. E. 328, 329, 205 Mass. 228, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454.

Testatrix devised a residuary estate in trust to pay the income to her brothers for life and survivor, with remainder to the issue of one of them, and provided that, on the death of the brothers leaving no issue "then living," the "then remaining" property should be divided into three parts, one part to be divided equally between three cousins, the children of an uncle, one part to be divided equally between two cousins, the children of an aunt, and one part to an uncle, and, in case of the "previous decease" of either of the cousins or of the uncle leaving issue, the share of the deceased should be paid to such issue by right of representation, and, if there were no issue "then living," the share should be divided equally among the survivors of the cousins and the uncle, or the whole to the survivor of them. The last surviving brother, both of whom died without issue, survived a cousin, a child of the aunt, who died leaving no issue, and the uncle leaving two daughters. Held, that the words "then living," "then remaining," and "previous decease" referred to the period of distribution, and testatrix intended that the survivors should be ascertained at the period of distribution, and the share of the deceased cousin must be divided equally between the four surviving cousins, to the exclusion of the children of the deceased uncle. Hall v. Hall, 95 N. E. 788, 789, 209 Mass. 350.

Testator devised land in trust for the benefit of his brother J. for life, with provision that if J.'s wife survived J., one-third of the income was to be paid her during her life, and the remaining two-thirds were to be divided among J.'s children in the proportion of three-eighths to A. and five-eighths equally to his other children then living during the life of their mother, and that immediately after the death of J. and wife said real estate should be vested in the children of J. in the same proportion as mentioned as to the income, and that if any of the children be then deceased, under age and without issue, the surviving children of J. should take the share of said decedent in the same proportions, but if either of said children be then deceased, leaving lawful issue, such issue should take the share that the deceased parent would have taken if living. Held, that the interest which a child of J. took under the will was a vested remainder, and not contingent on his surviving his parents, or subject to be divested by his dying before them without issue, he being of age when he died; the words "then living," applying only to the division of the income. Jacobs v. Whitney, 91 N. E. 1009, 1012, 205 Mass. 477, 18 Ann. Cas. 576.

A will after giving life estates, provided that at the death of the life tenants, or in case "I should survive" them, "then at my death * * * I give" certain property, "to the three youngest children then living of" one of such persons. Held that the phrase

"then living" refers to the words "at my death," rather than to the death of the life tenants, vesting the estates in such children at the death of testator subject to the life estates. Van Deusen v. Van Deusen, 122 N. Y. Supp. 718, 719, 138 App. Div. 357.

A testator bequeathed to his wife the income from funds for her life, also a cash legacy and personal property, and devised to her their homestead for life; and a later item of his will declared that it was his intention that the provisions in favor of his wife should have precedence over all other gifts, devises, or legacies. Another clause declared that it was his wish that his executors should have ample time in which to administer and settle his estate, so that no property should be unduly sacrificed by a speedy sale. The testator also bequeathed to trustees, on the death of his wife, a part of the fund of which she was given the income for life for the establishment of a children's hospital, which fund, upon the failure of the city to comply with certain conditions, was to pass into and become a part of the residue, and to be distributed to the then living children of the testator's brothers and sisters. The testator gave specific legacies to his nephews and nieces, who were his heirs, and also gave specific legacies to his brothers and sisters, besides giving them the remainders in part of the funds bequeathed to his wife. The residuary clause recited that all the rest and residue of the testator's estate, "after providing for the devises, bequests and legacies" mentioned, and after so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the expense of taxes on his homestead and keeping the same in repair for the benefit of testator's wife, was devised and bequeathed to the then living children of his brothers and sisters. Held that, if the testator intended there should be a number of residuums, to be distributed from time to time, his intention would be carried out, but the idea would give a new meaning to the term "residuum" or "residuary estate," which means that which is left when all the debts and particular legacies are discharged; but, in view of the testator's solicitude for his wife, and the fact that part of the fund of which she was given a life income was directed to be disposed of as part of the residuum, and in view of the use of the word "after," which ordinarily denotes subordination as to time, the will created only one residuum, which was not to be distributed until after the death of the testator's wife; the words "then living" referring to the death of the wife. In re Stark's Will, 134 N. W. 389, 395, 149 Wis. 631.

The words "if then living," in a will providing that "in case of the decease of either of my said three sons before the decease of their mother, leaving lawful issue, the issue of such deceased son shall take by representation the share the parent would be entitled to if then living, and in case of default of such issue, then my said executors shall pay over to my surviving sons equally the portion of said trust property herein bequeathed to the son so dying without issue," refer to the time when interest or principal is payable out of the share of a son who had died leaving no issue. Hendricks v. Hendricks, 69 N. E. 736, 738, 177 N. Y. 402.

THEN ON HAND

The words "then on hand," in a contract between plaintiff and defendant, in one of the clauses of which it was agreed that, on the execution of a certain license to defendant by a patentee, plaintiff would execute and deliver to defendant a bill of sale of all its property "then on hand" at plaintiff's factory, on receiving from defendant a specified cash sum, plainly means, not on hand at the time the contract was signed, but that might be on hand at a future date, to wit, upon the execution of the license, and such contract is a mere option, and does not bind defendant to pay the sum named on the execution of the license. New York Pelton Floor Co. v. Tucker & Vinton, 89 N. Y. Supp. 410, 411, 43 Misc. Rep. 429.

THEN OWNED

In an agreement providing for the sale of stock of a member of a corporation, together with its proportion of the surplus, to the other stockholders, the expressions "then owned," "the stock of the deceased," "his entire holdings of stock," were used in referring to the disposition of the stock of members dying or retiring from the concern. Held, that the agreement embraced new stock created from the surplus. Jones v. Brown, 50 N. E. 648, 649, 171 Mass. 318.

THEN REMAINING

A will gave testator's widow the sole use and benefit of all the property during her life and while unmarried, and provided that on her marriage a certain distribution should be made, and also provided that at her death unmarried there should be a certain distribution of the estate "then remaining." The will directed payment of debts and certain expenses, and the assets included quite an amount of live stock. The use of the phrase "then remaining" did not show an intention to authorize the widow to sell real estate. The widow had no right to use the corpus of the estate, either real or personal, without accounting for the same to those who, on her death or remarriage, should become entitled to the fee. Thompson v. Adams, 69 N. E. 1, 3, 205 Ill. 552.

Testatrix devised a residuary estate in trust to pay the income to her brothers for life and survivor, with remainder to the issue of one of them, and provided that, on the death of the brothers leaving no issue "then living," the "then remaining" property should be divided into three parts, one part to be divided equally between three cousins, the children of an uncle, one part to be divided equally between two cousins, the children of an aunt, and one part to an uncle, and, in case of the "previous decease" of either of the cousins or of the uncle leaving issue, the share of the deceased should be paid to such issue by right of representation, and, if there were no issue "then living," the share should be divided equally among the survivors of the cousins and the uncle, or the whole to the survivor of them. The last surviving brother, both of whom died without issue, survived a cousin, a child of the aunt, who died leaving no issue, and the uncle leaving two daughters. Held, that the words "then living," "then remaining," and "previous decease" referred to the period of distribution, and testatrix intended that the survivors should be ascertained at the period of distribution, and the share of the deceased cousin must be divided equally between the four surviving cousins, to the exclusion of the children of the deceased uncle. Hall v. Hall, 95 N. E. 788, 789, 209 Mass. 350.

THEN SURVIVING

A testator, survived by a widow and six children, directed that the residuary estate should be held in trust to pay the income to the widow, and on her death to divide the estate into as many equal shares as "I may have children living at the time of the decease of my said wife * * * or issue of any deceased child living at such division," and provided that, if any of the children should die leaving no issue, the share set apart to any child so dying should be divided among his children "then surviving," share and share alike. Held, that the words "then surviving" referred to the time of the death of a child without issue, and survivorship was a condition precedent to any child becoming entitled to any interest in the share of a child dying without issue, and the share of a son of testator, who died without issue after the death of a brother and sister leaving issue, went to the surviving children of testator, to the exclusion of grandchildren. Davies v. Davies, 113 N. Y. Supp. 872, 875, 129 App. Div. 379.

THEOLOGICAL OR RELIGIOUS SEMINARY

The holding of morning exercises in the public schools, consisting of the reading by the teacher without comment of nonsectarian extracts from the Bible, King James' version, and repeating the Lord's Prayer and the singing of appropriate songs, in which the pupils are invited, but not required to join, does not convert the schools into a "sect or religious society, theological or religious seminary" or a "sectarian school," within Const. art. 1, § 7, and article 7, § 5, providing that no money shall be appropriated from the treasury for the benefit of any sect or religious society, theological or religious seminary, or for the support of any sectarian school; a "theological or religious seminary" being a place for the preparation of men for the ministry, or for the teaching of religious doctrines. Church v. Bullock, 109 S. W. 115, 117, 104 Tex. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, affirming (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1025.

THEORY

See Association Theory.

The "theory of the case" refers to the facts on which the right of action is claimed to exist, and if the facts stated as the basis of a right to recover are sufficient, either at common law or by statute, the complaint is good as against a demurrer, though the pleader himself may have been mistaken as to the law awarding him his right. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Rogers, 87 N. E. 28, 31, 45 Ind. App. 230; State ex rel. Millice v. Petersen, 75 N. E. 602, 604, 36 Ind. App. 269.

THERE IS NO CHANGE

An applicant for a life insurance policy, instead of being required by the examiner to answer specific questions in the application, signed a statement written by the examiner across the blank questions which were identical with those answered on a previous examination by the same examiner for insurance in another company. The statement asserted that the answers on such previous examination "still held good, and are valid in regard to this examination." Held, that such statement was a reiteration of the truth of the statements given on the prior examination, and the words "there is no change from last examination" did not mean that each question was read and answered. Fletcher v. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. of City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1105, 1106, 62 Misc. Rep. 546; Id., 119 N. Y. Supp. 801, 135 App. Div. 205.

THEREAFTER

Under Rev. St. 1879, § 1574, making it an offense to remove or cause to be removed and placed in a public road any dead animal or other nuisance, to the annoyance of the citizens, and providing that if such nuisance be not removed within three days thereafter it shall be deemed a second offense, the term "three days thereafter" means three days after conviction, and an indictment which, in order to supply a basis for a prosecution for a failure to abate a continuing nuisance within three days after conviction, pleads a continuance of the nuisance from the time it was created until the filing of the information, does not charge two distinct offenses, and hence is not bad for duplicity. State v. Murray, 140 S. W. 899, 902, 237 Mo. 158.

It being clear from the record of a prosecution for violation of an ordinance by breach of the peace in using offensive language that "thereafter," in an instruction claimed to have exonerated defendant if he used the language after the marshal shot his brother, was used, and must have been understood, not in the sense of after the affair was a past matter, but in the sense of not before the wrongful conduct of the marshal in assaulting defendant and shooting at his brother running from arrest for a misdemeanor, its use is not ground for reversing an acquittal. City of Stanberry v. O'Neal, 150 S. W. 1104, 1107, 166 Mo. App. 709.

In a statute providing that judges of the supreme, district, and county courts shall be elected at the first general election, and "thereafter" at the general election next preceding the time of the termination of their respective terms of office, the word "thereafter" can have no other meaning than that, at the general election next preceding the time of the termination of each and every subsequent term of office as they shall follow each other in succession, a successor shall be elected. State ex rel. Polk v. Galusha, 104 N. W. 197, 200, 74 Neb. 188.

An instruction that "if you believe from the evidence that the conductor of defendant requested of plaintiff his fare or ticket a short time after leaving the depot," and that he thereafter again requested the plaintiff to produce his ticket or pay his fare, and that he failed to do so, whereupon he was required to leave the train, "you will find for the defendant," is faulty, in that it fails to state that plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable time to pay his fare. A "short time" after leaving the depot might mean one second, five minutes, or more, being a relative term, and might be either a reasonable time or not, and so the word "thereafter" might mean immediately, or any subsequent time after the first demand. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Scarborough, 42 South. 706, 712, 52 Fla. 425.

The word "hereafter" pertains to something that will occur in the future. Webster defines it as a future existence or state; in time to come, or some future time or state. Where under the terms of an original contract 10 per cent. of the contract price was to be retained until the final completion of the work and an assignment of the contract provided that the assignee should have all the compensation "hereafter accruing," the words "hereafter accruing" reserved the 10 per cent. earned at the time of the assignment of the contract to the assignor. Ercanbrack v. Faris, 79 Pac. 817, 818, 10 Idaho, 584.

An order giving plaintiffs 30 days to make and serve a case-made, and giving defendant 5 days after service to suggest amendments, the case to be signed and settled on 2 days' notice of either party at "any time thereafter," fixes no time for settling and signing a case-made when the trial judge's term of office has expired. State ex rel. Lauder et al. v. Lewis, 83 Pac. 619, 72 Kan. 234 (citing and adopting Mowery v. Wilson State Bank, 72 Pac. 539, 67 Kan. 128; Butler v. Scott, 75 Pac. 496, 68 Kan. 512).

THEREAT

The word "thereat," in Const. art. 11, § 8, declaring that a freeholder's charter should be submitted to the qualified electors of the city at a general or special election, and that, if a majority of the electors voting thereat shall ratify it, it shall be submitted to the Legislature, refers to the particular phrase "general or special election," and has exactly the same meaning as if the sentence had read, "if a majority of such qualified electors voting at such election shall ratify the same." City of Santa Rosa v. Bower, 75 Pac. 829, 830, 142 Cal. 299.

THEREBY

The words "and thereby" in an instruction are synonymous with the phrase "in consequence thereof." Pope v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 113 Ill. App. 503, 507.

Where an indictment charges that D. "did unlawfully and from a premeditated design to effect the death of one G. make an assault on the said G., and a certain pistol, which then and there was loaded with * * * leaden bullets and by him the said D. had and held in his hand, he, the said D., did then and there unlawfully and from a premeditated design to effect the death of the said G., shoot off and discharge at and upon the said G., thereby and by thus striking the said G. with the said leaden bullets, inflicting on and in the body of the said G. one mortal wound," etc., the homicidal act or efficient cause of death is charged to have been perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect death, although the words "from a premeditated design to effect death" are not repeated when the infliction of the mortal wound is charged, since these words, previously alleged, are connected with the mortal stroke by the words "thereby and by thus." The word "thereby" in the indictment signifies "by that means," or in consequence of the preceding allegations, and refers to all that precedes it, both as to the act of firing the pistol and to the premeditated design with which the pistol was discharged. Daniels v. State, 41 South. 609, 611, 52 Fla. 18 (citing Union Rolling Mill Co. v. Gillen, 100 Ill. 52; Lieuallen v. Mosgrove, 54 Pac. 200, 202, 664, 33 Or. 282).

"Thereby," as used in an instruction that it was negligence on the part of a railroad company to run its trains through a city at a speed prohibited by law, and if the railroad did so run its trains and "thereby" injured or destroyed the property of a person who was himself in the exercise of reasonable care, it would be liable, meant that the railroad must have injured the property by so running at a prohibited speed; the word "thereby" referring to the unlawful speed, and the instruction therefore requiring the unlawful speed to be the proximate cause of the injury. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Crose, 73 N. E. 865, 869, 214 Ill. 602, 105 Am. St. Rep. 135.

The word "thereby," as used in a count alleging that, while plaintiff was engaged in leaving defendant's car at a station to which he had been carried therein, defendant's servant in charge or control of the car, acting in the line and scope of his authority as such, wantonly or intentionally caused the car to start or jerk, and "thereby" wantonly or intentionally caused plaintiff to suffer the injuries set out, must be given a natural significance, and is the equivalent of "in that way," and hence was insufficient to aver wantonness or an intention on the part of defendant's servant to inflict the injuries, in the absence of an averment or showing of purpose to inflict the injury. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Brown, 43 South. 342, 343, 150 Ala. 327.

THEREFOR

See Value Therefor.

The word "therefor" is defined as meaning for that, or this, or it. Ercanbrack v. Faris, 79 Pac. 817, 818, 10 Idaho, 584.

THEREFROM

Where the evidence showed that plaintiff's injuries were permanent, a charge that the jury, in estimating the damages, should consider plaintiff's "loss of time and such damages, if any, as you may from the evidence find it is reasonably certain he will suffer in the future therefrom," did not authorize damages for loss of time which plaintiff might suffer in the future, for the word "therefrom," in the charge, referred to damages plaintiff would suffer in the future as a result of the injuries. Hales v. Raines, 130 S. W. 425, 428, 146 Mo. App. 232.

THEREOF

Testator bequeathed all the residue of his estate to his wife for life with power to make such disposition thereof as might be necessary for her comfort and support. Held, that the word "thereof" meant "of that" and "that" was a demonstrative pronoun referring to "estate" as its antecedent, and hence the widow's power of sale was not limited to her life estate, but included a sale of the fee of such property as was reasonably necessary for her comfort and support. Griffin v. Nicholas, 123 S. W. 1063, 1067, 224 Mo. 275.

In Act June 23, 1911 (P. L. 1123), entitled "An act establishing in each county a board of viewers * * * and providing for the charges upon the respective counties in the matter of salaries, costs and expenses thereof," the word "thereof" refers, not to the immediate antecedent, but to the board of viewers to be established in each county. In re Reber's Petition, 84 Atl. 587, 590, 235 Pa. 622.

THEREON

The word "thereon," in Rev. St. c. 93, § 53, providing that whoever labors at cutting, hauling, or sawing of spool timber, or in the manufacture of spool timber into spool bars, has a lien thereon for the amount due him for his personal services, etc., embraces both the spool timber and the spool bars before named in the section. Chamberlain v. Wood, 60 Atl. 706, 707, 100 Me. 73.

THERETO

"Thereto," in an affidavit of merits stating that "deponent has fully and fairly stated his defense to said action and all the facts relative thereto to his counsel," refers to "action." Larocque v. Conhaim, 92 N. Y. Supp. 99, 101, 45 Misc. Rep. 234.

THERETOFORE

As heretofore

See Heretofore.

THEREUNTO

Civ. Code, § 1741, provides that no agreement for the sale of real estate is valid unless in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged, "or his agent thereunto authorized in writing," and validates any agreement for the sale of real estate which is either subscribed by the owner or his agent, authorized in writing; the word "thereunto" being an elliptical form of expression for the phrase "to do that." Bacon v. Davis, 98 Pac. 71, 72, 9 Cal. App. 83.

THEREUPON

According to Webster the word "thereupon" means "immediately; at once; without delay." But under Const. 1870, art. 5, § 16, providing that every bill passed by the assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor, and that, if he approve, he shall sign it, "and thereupon it shall become a law," and that any bill which shall not be returned by the Governor within 10 days after its presentment to him shall become a law, as if he had signed it, unless the assembly shall by an adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall be filed, with the Governor's objections, in the office of the secretary of state 10 days after such adjournment, or become a law, the Governor has 10 days within which to consider a bill, and the mere fact that he has signed it does not cause it to become a law while it remains in his possession within the time limited, but he may reconsider his action. People ex rel. Partello v. McCullough, 71 N. E. 602, 604, 210 Ill. 488.

From a statement in the record that the hearing began on a certain date, where each successive step in the case, including the settling and signing of the bill of exceptions is introduced by the term "thereupon," without naming any other date, it will be inferred that one step followed another without delay, and that all occurred on the date named in the entry. Humbarger v. Humbarger, 83 Pac. 1095, 1096, 72 Kan. 412, 115 Am. St. Rep. 204 (citing Dewey v. Linscott, 20 Kan. 684; Hill v. Wand, 27 Pac. 988, 47 Kan. 340, 27 Am. St. Rep. 288).

Construing the words "upon making the resolution as aforesaid," in an allegation, in an action to recover a delinquent stock assessment, that upon the making of the resolution as aforesaid, the secretary caused notice of the assessment to be published, as including the element of time, they may be held to have been used in the sense of "forthwith" or "thereupon," both of which words, when used in reference to time, are generally construed to mean without delay or lapse of time, and the complaint is not altogether lacking in the statement of a fact from which the inference may be drawn that the notice was published at the time of the passage of the resolution in pursuance of which it was given. Bottle Min. & Mill. Co. v. Kern, 99 Pac. 995, 996, 9 Cal. App. 527 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 6954).

A corporation comes into existence only when it has substantially complied with Rev. Codes, §§ 3808, 3825, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 106, and section 3817, requiring the filing of articles of incorporation and a certified copy thereof with the clerk of the county and the secretary of state, and authorizing the secretary of state to issue his certificate to the corporation, "thereupon the persons signing the articles and their associates and successors shall be a body politic and corporate"; the term "thereupon," whether taken to signify "in consequence of which," or "immediately after," or "in consequence," clearly importing into the statute the meaning that all the statutory steps, when taken, create a corporation. Merges v. Altenbrand, 123 Pac. 21, 23, 24, 45 Mont. 355.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1394, 1395, provide that, to organize a fraternal beneficial association, there must be articles of agreement by at least three persons, who must submit the articles to the circuit court for its approval, the formal decree of which shall be attached to the articles of agreement and recorded by the recorder of deeds and filed with the secretary of state, who shall issue a certified copy of the articles, which becomes the charter of incorporation, and "thereupon" the petitioners, their associates and successors, shall be a body corporate, by the corporate name designated in the charter, which, together with the articles, shall be evidence of the incorporation of the association. Held, that the statute makes the certificate of the secretary of state the final act of incorporation; the word "thereupon," as used, meaning that, upon the issuance of the certified copy of the articles with prior certificates attached, the association becomes a body corporate. Sloan v. Loyal Fraternal Home Ass'n, 123 S. W. 57, 59, 139 Mo. App. 443.

As immediately

"Thereupon" means "upon that or this; immediately; at once; without delay." Hence minutes which show the presence of accused during the trial up to the time the jury retired and then recite: "Defendant thereupon waived the polling of the jury. * * * Defendant thereupon waives time for sentence and elects to be sentenced at this time"—sufficiently show his presence when the verdict was rendered. State v. De Lea, 93 Pac. 814, 816, 36 Mont. 531 (quoting and adopting the definition of Webst. Dict.).

"Thereupon," as used in St. 1891, p. 196, relating to street improvements, and providing that, after certain publications of notices of street improvements, the street superintendent shall thereupon cause to be conspicuously posted, etc., means upon those precedent conditions, and does not mean immediately, but that the posting shall follow within a reasonable time. Porphyry Paving Co. v. Ancker, 37 Pac. 1050, 1051, 104 Cal. 340.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1118, providing that within five days after the time for filing statements in election contests the county clerk must notify the superior court of statements filed, and it shall "thereupon" order a special session on a day not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of the order, is not mandatory in the sense that the order must be issued upon the same day the court is notified of the contest, the word "thereupon" not necessarily meaning "immediately"; so that, where the sheriff failed to serve citation upon contestee as prescribed by statute, the court could vacate the original order calling a special session and make another designating a day for hearing the contest after issuance of an alias citation: Code Civ. Proc. § 1121, giving it all powers necessary to a determination of the contest. Hagerty v. Conlan, 115 Pac. 762, 765, 15 Cal. App. 643.

A party against whom judgment is rendered May 22, 1908, and who, within time properly extended, served on his adversary a case made on October 1, 1908, which on the same day was returned with a waiver of suggestion of amendments, did not abandon his appeal where he has the case-made duly signed and settled, on proper notice, on December 12th; Comp. Laws 1909, §§ 6074, 6075, requiring that a case-made, after settlement, shall thereupon be filed with the papers in the case; the word "thereupon" not being used as meaning "immediately," though such word is one of the synonyms of "thereupon." Denver, W. & M. Ry. Co. v. Adkinson, 119 Pac. 247, 249, 28 Okl. 1.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1118a, providing that within five days after the end of the time allowed for filing statements of contested elections the county clerk must notify the superior court of all statements filed, and the court shall thereupon order a special session to be held not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of the order, the word "thereupon" does not necessarily mean immediately, and a delay of six days in making the order for the special session was not unreasonable. Dudley v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 110 Pac. 146, 148, 13 Cal. App. 271.

THERMOSTAT

A rule of a heating company requiring the installation of a "thermostat," i. e., an automatic regulator of heat, was reasonable, and, where it appeared that there was no contract with the heating company to furnish heat for any definite time, and that the Railroad Commission was to be appealed to as to whether a thermostat should be put in, the heating company could not be enjoined from disconnecting its pipes on the plaintiff's refusal to install a thermostat. Walbridge v. Berlin Public Service Co., 138 N. W. 44, 46, 151 Wis. 69.

THESE

THESE CONVEYED PREMISES

Where a deed conveying the west half of a building also gave the grantee the sole use and occupancy of the middle basement and cellar, the basement and cellar being divided into three parts by east and west partitions, but reserved the right to pass through "these conveyed premises" to the grantor's remaining part of the building, the phrase "these conveyed premises," included the east middle basement and cellar, so that the grantor could pass through that part as well as the other parts conveyed. McWilliams v. McNamara, 70 Atl. 1043, 1047, 81 Conn. 310.

THEY

A will provided that the estate be equally divided between testator's wife and three children, to be theirs during their natural life, and to the children and heirs of their bodies, if any they have at the time of their death, if not, to revert to the estate in gross and be again divided between testator's wife and children and to their heirs, "they" to take a life estate only; and all the grandchildren to take only such share as their deceased parent would have taken. Held, that the quoted word "they" would be construed to refer to the children of the testator, and not to any grandchild who might share in the lapsed share of a child who had died without issue, since the dominant purpose of the will was to vest the life estate in his wife and children, and remainder in fee to his grandchildren. Davenport v. Collins, 51 South. 449, 96 Miss. 716.

THIEF

The word "thief," in its ordinary acceptation, imputes the crime of larceny, and is actionable per se; but if the word be spoken of the plaintiff in relation to a past act or transaction known to the hearers, and which was not larceny or indictable as a crime, the use of such word is not actionable. Merrill v. Marshall, 113 Ill. App. 447, 450.

To speak of one as a "thief" is only prima facie actionable per se, malice being the gravamen of the charge; and where the word is used as a mere term of abuse, or relates to a transaction that was fraudulent, but not criminal, defendant is not bound to strict proof. Eddy v. Cunningham, 125 Pac. 961, 962, 69 Wash. 544.

THIEF BOTE

"Thief bote" is when a party robbed not only knows the felon, but also takes his goods again, or other amends, upon agreement not to prosecute, and is frequently called "compounding of felony," and formerly was held to make a man an accessory. State v. Hodge, 55 S. E. 626, 627, 142 N. C. 665, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709, 9 Ann. Cas. 563 (citing Russ. Cr. 194; Bish. Cr. Law, 648; Black, Law Dict. 240; 8 Cyc. p. 492).

THING

See Incorporeal Thing; Matter or Thing; Valuable Thing.

Any article or thing, see Any.

Other thing, see Other.

The word "thing" is defined as "that which is or may become the object of thought; that which has existence or is conceived or imagined as having existence; any object, substance, attribute, idea, fact, circumstance, event, etc. A thing may be material or ideal, animate or inanimate, actual, possible, or imaginary." And the word "operation" is defined as "the course of action or series of acts by which some result is accomplished; process. In surgery, the act or series of acts and manipulations performed upon a patient's body, as in setting a bone, amputating a limb, extracting a tooth, etc." An indictment under the federal statute for mailing a letter giving information where and how and of whom and by what means articles and things designed and intended for the procuring of an abortion might be obtained states an offense, where it sets out a letter written to defendant inquiring for some medicine or other means for accomplishing such result, and a letter, alleged to have been mailed by defendant in reply, which, when read in connection with the letter of inquiry, in effect offers for a stated consideration to effect the desired result by some treatment or operation, although the particular means is not specified; the word "thing," as used in the statute, being a comprehensive term, which includes any kind of treatment or operation. United States v. Somers, 164 Fed. 259, 261, 262 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 323, c. 486, § 780, authorizing the marshal to enter any building to examine "the stoves and pipes thereto, ranges, furnaces, and heating apparatus of every kind whatsoever, including the chimneys, flues, and pipes with which the same may be connected, engine rooms, boilers, ovens, kettles, and also all chemical apparatus or other things which in his opinion may be dangerous in causing or promoting fires," and empowering the fire commissioner to require the owner to "alter, remove, or remedy the same," does not authorize the commissioner to require an owner to make changes in a dumb-waiter shaft extended from the basement to the roof, but without connection with the outer air at the roof, though the same will communicate a fire once started in one part of the building to the rest of the building, since the same cannot be designated "things" within the statute. Lantry v. Mede, 111 N. Y. Supp. 833, 834, 127 App. Div. 557.

THING IN ACTION

See Chose in Action.

THING IN CONTROVERSY

The phrase "thing in controversy," in Act Cong. March 1, 1895, c. 145, § 4, 28 Stat. 696 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 48), providing that the commissioner's court shall have exclusive jurisdiction "where the amount or value of the land or of the property or thing in controversy does not exceed $100," designates any and every thing which may arise in dispute between two or more parties, and the commissioner's court has jurisdiction of an action for trespass to realty, based on an unlawful entry thereon and removal of earth therefrom, where the damages claimed do not exceed $100. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Loper Bros., 98 S. W. 150, 151, 6 Ind. T. 432

THING OF VALUE

Where an indictment for burglary charged that defendant, with intent to steal, broke into a store "in which goods, merchandise or watches, things of value," were kept for use, sale, or deposit, etc., the words "things of value" were used as descriptive of the term "watches" only; and, it being unnecessary to aver or prove that the goods and merchandise had value, it was immaterial that there was no evidence as to the value of a watch alleged to have been stolen and found in defendant's possession, or as to the things kept in the store, it having been proved that goods were kept for sale in the store as alleged. McCormick v. State, 37 South. 377, 378, 141 Ala. 75.

Dog

A dog not only is property, but is a "thing of value"; and the owner may maintain an action against one who wantonly and maliciously kills or injures his dog. Columbus R. Co. v. Woolfolk, 58 S. E. 152, 153, 128 Ga. 631, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 119 Am. St. Rep. 404.

THINGS PUBLIC

"Public things" are those the property of which is vested in the whole nation, and the use of which is allowed to all the members of the nation. Of this kind are navigable rivers, seaports, roadsteads and harbors, highways and beds of rivers, as long as the same are covered with water. Hence it follows that every man has a right freely to fish in the rivers, ports, roadsteads and harbors. The use of the banks of navigable rivers or streams is 'public.' Accordingly every one has a right freely to bring his vessels to land there, to make fast the same to the trees which are there planted, to unload his vessels, to deposit his goods, to dry his nets, and the like. Nevertheless, the ownership of the river banks belongs to those who possess the adjacent lands." Civ. Code La. arts. 453, 455. State v. Bayou Johnson Oyster Co., 58 South. 405, 408, 130 La. 604.

THINK

See As She Thinks Proper; I Think.

As believe

"The word 'think' has various meanings. Its meaning must be ascertained from the connection in which it is used in a sentence. Some of its meanings, according to Webster, are 'to form an opinion by reasoning; to judge; to conclude; to believe.' An instruction that if the jury should find in favor of plaintiff they should assess her such damages as they think, under the evidence, would compensate her for the pain and suffering she has endured by reason of her injuries, and such further sum as they think would fairly compensate plaintiff for the injuries sustained, can be as well understood by the jury as if the word 'believe' or 'find' had been used instead of the word 'think.' Ilges v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 93, 95, 102 Mo. App. 529.

As recollect or remember

"Think" may mean "to cognize, apprehend, grasp intellectually" and is often equivalent to "recollect, recall." Cent. Dict. It is also defined as "to call to mind, remember, recollect," and "to call anything to mind, exercise recollection, have remembrance." Stand. Dict. It is also defined by Webster as meaning, among other things, "to recollect or call to mind." Therefore, when a witness prefaces a statement of facts by the words "I think," it does not necessarily mean that he is merely giving conjecture and guess as to the fact. Boice v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 83, 120 App. Div. 643.

The ordinary presumption is that a witness who uses the expression "I think" means that his observation is indistinct or his recollection uncertain regarding the matter testified to, rather than that he is without personal information on the subject. Losey v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 198, 201, 84 Kan. 224, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 414.

THINK BEST

Where testator made specific devises of his real estate, and also directed the sale of a portion, and division of the proceeds among named beneficiaries, a subsequent provision of the will appointing executors to dispose of his property as they "think best" merely vested in the executors a discretion as to the time and manner of selling the property he had directed sold. Thompson v. Thompson (Ky.) 87 S. W. 790, 792.

THIRD

THIRD PARTY

The former owner and grantee of a tract of land sold and conveyed for nonpayment of taxes thereon is a "third party," within the meaning of the proposition of law that the acts of an officer de facto will be sustained in any proceeding, collateral or direct, in the interest of third parties or the public. Old Dominion Building & Loan Ass'n v. Sohn, 46 S. E. 222, 228, 54 W. Va. 101.

A mortgagor's grantee who has promised to pay the mortgage debt to the holder of the mortgage as a consideration for the transfer is not a "third party" in contemplation of Kirby's Dig. § 5399, requiring payments on the mortgage to be entered on the margin of the record in order to extend the operation of the statutes of limitation as to third parties. Kenney v. Streeter, 114 S. W. 923, 925, 88 Ark. 406.

Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2776, provides that when property is sold by a conditional sale, in order for the reservation of title to be valid as against "third parties," it shall be evidenced in writing and not otherwise, and the written contract shall be executed and attested in the same manner as mortgages on personal property, but, as between the parties themselves, the contract as made shall be valid and may be enforced whether evidenced in writing or not, and section 2777 declares that conditional bills of sale must be recorded within 30 days after their date, and in other respects must be governed by the laws regulating the registration of mortgages. Held, that the term "third parties," as used in section 2776, and in accordance with the general law, meant creditors having a lien on the property conditionally sold, and not ordinary creditors, and that, as to the latter, the conditional sale contract was valid though not recorded. John Deere Plow Co. v. Anderson, 174 Fed. 815, 817, 98 C. C. A. 523. See, also, Southern Pine Co. v. Savannah Trust Co., 141 Fed. 802, 810, 73 C. C. A. 60.

THIRD PERSON

The term "third person" in Laws 1900, p. 130, c. 90, providing that a conveyance of land, etc., between husband and wife shall not be valid as against any third person, unless the conveyance be acknowledged and filed for record, includes only any person in a position to be prejudiced by the secret conveyance; and hence, where a wife conveyed property to her husband by an unrecorded deed valid as to her, and her husband insured it, the deed was not void as to the insurance company, since, as nobody but insured or his wife could be the real owner, and the wife had parted with her interest to insured, the company could not have been prejudiced. Groce v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 48 South. 298, 299, 94 Miss. 201, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732.

The term "third person," as used in 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. Ill. c. 95, § 1, providing that a chattel mortgage shall not be valid as against the interests of any third person unless possession shall have been delivered, or unless the instrument shall be recorded, etc., includes every one outside of the immediate parties to the instrument and their privies, both the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy and his simple contract creditors, though not having reduced their claims to judgment. In re Beckhaus, 177 Fed. 141, 146, 100 C. C. A. 561.

The words "third persons," as used in Ky. St. § 2128 (Russell's St. § 4631), declares that a gift, transfer, or assignment of personal property between husband and wife shall not be valid as to third persons, unless in writing, acknowledged, and recorded as chattel mortgages, etc., do not include any person not a party to the transaction who has no interest in the property, and who does not sustain to the donor the relation of creditor, or to the property that of an innocent purchaser, and hence an heir of a husband could not object to the validity of a gift made by him to his wife because not evidenced by a writing under such section. McWethy's Adm'x v. McCright, 133 S. W. 1001, 1002, 141 Ky. 816.

The acts of a de facto officer are valid as to third persons and the public, and by "third persons" is meant those persons having business of an official character with such officer, and not third persons in the usual legal sense in which the term is used.

State v. Ely, 113 N. W. 711, 712, 16 N. D. 569, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638.

THIRDS

See Dower.

The words "dower" and "thirds" in themselves have each a uniform, established meaning, both in law and in common usage; the former meaning a widow's life estate in one-third of the inheritable real estate of which the husband was seised during coverture, and the latter meaning her absolute estate in one-third of her husband's personal property remaining after payment of his debts. Where a will, creating a trust, provided for division of the trust fund into shares and a conveyance of the shares to beneficiaries, subject to dower and thirds of testator's wife, and a codicil provided for the capitalization of the widow's dower and thirds, by the widow's "dower and thirds" was meant a third interest for life in the real property and an absolute third interest in the personal property, but not an absolute third in both real and personal property. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co., 62 Atl. 814-816, 102 Md. 649.

Plaintiff, who agreed to release and quitclaim to defendant, her son, her "dower and thirds" in all the real property owned by her deceased husband at the time of his death in consideration of certain monthly payments for her support to be made by defendant, contended that the expression "dower and thirds," etc., meant no more than would be expressed by the single word "dower," and that, as a right to an allotment of dower was not recognized in California, where some of the real property was situated, she was not bound to convey an interest in such lands; the word "thirds" referring only to personal property. Held, that the word as used in the contract referred to the actual interest in the California real estate to which plaintiff succeeded, and that she was bound to convey the same; the provision of the contract where the word was used relating only to real estate of the deceased, and the disposition of his personal property being completely provided for in other parts of the contract. Gail v. Gail, 112 N. Y. Supp. 96, 99, 127 App. Div. 892.

THIRTY DAYS

Where the official journal of a parish is published on every Saturday, a statute requiring that a notice of election "shall be published for 30 days in the official journal of the parish" is complied with if the notice is published in the official journal five consecutive Saturdays and the election is held 32 days after the first publication. Lower Terrebonne Refining & Manufacturing Co. v. Police Jury of Parish of Terrebonne, 40 South. 443, 444, 115 La. 1019, 112 Am. St. Rep. 291.

THIS

Revenue Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 120) § 276, declares that, if any property shall have been omitted in the assessment of any year or number of years, the same, when discovered, shall be listed and assessed by the assessors. Section 277 provides that if the tax on property liable to taxation has been prevented from being collected for any year, it shall be added to the tax for any subsequent year. Section 278 declares that no such charge for tax and interest for previous years as provided for in the "preceding" section shall be made against any property prior to the date of ownership of the person owning such property at the time the liability for such omitted tax was first ascertained, provided that the owner of the property, if known, assessed under "this" and the "preceding" section shall be notified by the assessor or clerk as the case may require. Held, that the word "this" in section 278 did not refer to an assessment under that section, which contained no provision for assessment, but referred to section 277, and the word "preceding" to section 276, and, since the assessment which before the revenue act would have been made under section 276 by the assessor is now made by the board of review, the notice required by the proviso of section 278 must be given prior to the assessment of omitted property by the board of review, so that the statute is not unconstitutional as failing to provide for due process of law in the assessment of such omitted property. People ex rel. Edgar v. National Box Co., 93 N. E. 778, 779, 248 Ill. 141.

THIS ACT

Acts 1903, p. 408, c. 177, prohibited the running at large of certain animals in certain counties, and was amended by Acts 1905, p. 670, c. 316, section 1 of which provided that chapter 177, p. 408, of the published Acts of 1903 be so amended as to strike out section 2 and provide that "this act" shall only apply to counties adopting it by a majority vote. Held, that the words "this act" referred to the act of 1903, as amended, and not solely to the act of 1905. Wright v. Cunningham, 91 S. W. 293, 294, 115 Tenn. 445.

THIS AGREEMENT

One paragraph of a contract stipulated that the party of the first part "will not again engage in the manufacture and sale of regalia, alone or in conjunction with others, within five years of the date of this agreement, under penalty of five thousand dollars liquidated damages, to be paid to the party of the second part if 'this agreement' is violated." Held, that the forfeiture named applies only to this paragraph of the agreement, and not to any other paragraph of the agreement. Floding v. Floding, 73 S. E. 729, 731, 137 Ga. 531.

THIS ARTICLE

Denver City Charter 1893, art. 7, § 62 (Sess. Laws 1893, p. 225, c. 78), provides that no action or proceeding shall be commenced to review any assessments authorized by "this article" unless commenced within 90 days after the passage of the ordinance making the final assessment. Held, that such article did not apply to sidewalks constructed under the charter of 1885, as amended by Laws 1889, the assessment for which was levied as provided by Charter 1885, art. 10, and not under the charter of 1893. City of Denver v. Dunning, 81 Pac. 259, 260, 33 Colo. 487, 3 Ann. Cas. 674.

Election Law (Laws 1911, c. 891) § 56, provides that any action or neglect of members of a political convention or committee, or of any inspector of primary election, or of any public officer or board, with regard to the right of any person to participate in a primary election, convention, or committee, or to enroll with any party, or with regard to any right given to, or duty prescribed for, any voter, political committee, officer, or board, by "this article," shall be reviewable by summary proceedings, etc., before the Supreme Court, or a justice thereof, within the judicial district where the transaction, act, or neglect of duty took place. Held, that the phrase "this article" is not limited to article 4, which does not prescribe any duties for inspectors of primary elections, but includes articles 4a and 4b, supplemental to article 4, regulating primary elections and conventions. In re Ward, 137 N. Y. Supp. 659, 660, 78 Misc. Rep. 15.

THIS DAY SOLD

The words "this day sold" indicate a present sale. Yick Sung v. Herman, 83 Pac. 1089-1091, 2 Cal. App. 633.

THIS STREAM

Where the state forest, fish, and game commission passed an order prohibiting fishing in Canada creek in the town of Lee, and its tributaries within the town, for three years, but the alleged regulations filed in the town clerk's office did not identify the stream, except by the words "this stream," the copy filed was fatally defective for indefiniteness. People v. Worden, 79 N. E. 1013, 1015, 187 N. Y. 322.

THIS UNION

The phrase "this union," used in Const. U. S. art. 4, § 3, providing that new states may be admitted by Congress into this Union, means a union of states equal in power, dignity, and authority, each competent to exert that residuum of sovereignty which is not delegated to the United States by the Constitution itself. Coyle v. Smith, 31 Sup. Ct. 688, 690, 221 U. S. 559, 567, 55 L. Ed. 853.

THIS YEAR

Where a contract of employment terminated on the 15th day of December, and on the 23d day of that month the employé, in conversation with his employer, referred to the previous contract and requested to be employed for "this year," his proposal should not be interpreted as a proposal for employment from the 23d to the close of the year; but the unmistakable inference is that he wanted to be hired for another year, running either from the expiration of his first contract or from the date of the conversation. Embrey v. Hargadine-McKittrick Dry Goods Co., 91 S. W. 170, 171, 115 Mo. App. 130.

The statutory limitation on the power of the county board to contract for bridge building to cost a sum not greater than the amount of money on hand in the county bridge fund derived from a levy of "previous years" and two-thirds of the levy of the "current year," gives no authority to the board to take into account the levy of the "current calendar year" prior to the making of such levy. Until it is made, there is no "levy of the current year." Ordinarily, the terms "this year," "current year," or "the previous year," mean in each instance the calendar year in which the event under discussion took place and the one before it, but the Legislature did not have this meaning in putting the words into this statute. Clark v. Lancaster County, 96 N. W. 593, 599, 69 Neb. 717.

THOROUGHLY DESTROYED

The lease, under which plaintiff rented five stories of a six-story building, provided for adjustment of rent if the building was partially destroyed by fire, and that if it was thoroughly destroyed either party might cancel the lease. A fire destroyed about 14 per cent. of the entire building and destroyed the entire brick wall on one side, the greater part of that on another side, most of the tile partitions on four floors, and practically all of the wood and plaster work, but leaving its foundation, the greater part of the steel frame, and many other parts intact, so that it could be restored for less than one-half of the cost of building it. Held, that the building was "thoroughly destroyed," so as to entitle the lessor to cancel the lease. City of Paris Dry Goods Co. v. Spring Valley Water Co., 101 Pac. 678, 679, 10 Cal. App. 212.

THOUGHT

"Belief" is that conviction which follows from the consideration of facts or evidence, while a "thought" may be no more than a mere conceit or fancy. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. O'Neal, 52 South. 953, 955, 169 Ala. 83.

THOUGHTLESSLY

The word "thoughtlessly," as used in the rule that a person approaching a crossing is required to stop, look, and listen, and, if he omits to do so and walks "thoughtlessly" upon the track, he cannot recover, means to take such step without due attention and care. Wheeler v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 102 Pac. 347, 355, 16 Idaho, 375.

THREAD

See Ordinary Threads.

As embroidery cottons, see Embroidery.

In its ordinary meaning, the word "thread" is a twisted filament of a fibrous substance, as cotton, flax, silk, or wool, spun out to considerable length. In a specific sense, "thread" is a compound cord, consisting of two or more yarns firmly united together by twisting. Cent. Dict. A secondary meaning is "a fine filament, or thread-like body of any kind; as a thread of spun glass; a thread of corn silk." Cent. Dict. Consequently a fine band of rubber filamentous in form may properly be called a "thread." Haskell Golf Ball Co. v. Perfect Golf Ball Co., 143 Fed. 128, 130.

In the Tariff Act provision relating to "cotton cloth in which other than the ordinary warp and filling threads have been introduced in the process of weaving to form figure," the term "threads" is used in a sense including the remnants thereof so introduced, clipped off where appearing at intervals on the back of the fabric. R. B. Maclea Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 688.

THREAD OF A LAKE

Every abutting owner on a lake is entitled to the land under water in front of his premises to the "thread of the lake," which, where there is no outlet or inlet, passed through the center of the lake along its longest diameter. Calkins v. Hart, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 1053, 64 Misc. Rep. 149.

THREAD OF A STREAM

The "thread of a stream" is the middle line between the shores, irrespective of the depth of the channel, taking it in the natural and ordinary stage of the water. The channel and the thread of the river are entirely different. The channel may be one side of the thread of the river or the other. Inhabitants of Warren v. Inhabitants of Thomaston, 75 Me. 329, 332, 46 Am. Rep. 397.

The "thread of the stream," when called for as a boundary line of private estates, is the middle line between the shores, irrespective of the depth of the channel, taking them in the natural and ordinary stage of the water, at medium height, neither swollen by freshets nor shrunk by droughts. State v. Munice Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 445, 119 Tenn. 47 (quoting definition in Branham v. Bledsoe Creek Turnpike Co., 69 Tenn. [1 Lea] 704, 27 Am. Rep. 789).

Where one bank of a nonnavigable stream is much steeper than the other, placing the thread of the stream, as measured from highwater mark, on an exposed sand bar on one bank, when the water is low, the "thread of the stream" should be ascertained by measuring from the low-water mark. Micelli v. Andrus, 120 Pac. 737, 740, 61 Or. 78.

THREAT

See, also, Intimidation.

A "threat," within Gen. St. 1902, § 1296, subjecting to punishment any person who shall threaten or use any means to intimidate any person to compel him against his will to do or abstain from doing any act which such person has a legal right to do, is a menace of such nature as to unsettle the mind of the person on whom it operated. State v. Stockford, 58 Atl. 769, 773, 77 Conn. 227, 107 Am. St. Rep. 28.

"A 'threat' is any menace of such a nature and extent as to unsettle the mind of the person on whom it operates, and to take away from his acts that free, voluntary action which alone constitutes consent. Such a threat, coupled with the damage necessarily flowing from it in the prosecution of a conspiracy to do an unlawful thing, is sufficient to constitute a good cause of action." Where an association of retail druggists in a certain city and wholesale druggists formed a combination to maintain a maximum schedule of prices, and in pursuance of the plan refused to sell to plaintiff, a retailer who had refused to join the combination, and coerced and intimidated vendors of like commodities by means of threats to blacklist and boycott such vendors if they sold to plaintiff, whereby such vendors were deterred from selling to plaintiff, the parties to the combination were liable to plaintiff for resulting damages to his business. Klingel's Pharmacy of Baltimore City v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1032, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 1184 (citing 8 Cyc. p. 639).

A "threat" is defined to be a menace of such a nature as to unsettle the mind of the person on whom it is intended to operate, and to take away from his acts that free, voluntary action which alone constitutes consent. Bouvier says that the threat must be such as to operate to some extent, at least, on the mind of the one whom it was intended to influence. A "threat" of any public accusation, as well as one by formal complaint and course of law, is within V. S. § 4921 (P. S. 5735), declaring a punishment for a person who maliciously threatens to accuse another of crime with intent to extort money. State v. Louanis, 65 Atl. 532, 533, 79 Vt. 463, 9 Ann. Cas. 194.

A "threat," within Rev. St. 1899, § 1863 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1285), providing that accused, charged with carrying a concealed weapon, may show that he has been threatened with great bodily harm, or had good reason to carry the weapon in necessary defense, etc., is a menace or declaration of purpose or intention to do great bodily harm to the person of another, or to injure or destroy his property, or to unlawfully invade his home. State v. Dees, 109 S. W. 800, 801, 129 Mo. App. 293.

An indictment charging that defendant "did by a written communication threaten injury to A. G., etc.," is a sufficient allegation that there was a delivery to A. G., being substantially the words of the statute (L. O. L. § 1929); a "threat" being a declaration of a purpose to work an injury to another and designedly put forth by the individual making the threat, either directly or indirectly, so as to operate upon the mind of the person threatened, and a "communication" being that which is communicated or imparted; intelligence; news; a verbal or written message; and these two words in the indictment include not only the utterance of the threat, but also the bringing the same to the notice of the person threatened. State v. Scott, 128 Pac. 441, 442, 63 Or. 444 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 8964).

Where defendants accused the state's witness of the crime of adultery, and for that reason demanded that he pay them money, and the witness at first refused, but after being subjected to maltreatment, and being held a prisoner in the defendants' room, yielded to their demand and executed a check, the primary cause of the issuance of the check was the wrongful accusation, and the defendants were guilty of extortion by means of a "threat" to make a wrongful accusation of crime. State v. Barr, 120 Pac. 509, 510, 67 Wash. 87.

Allegation that an employer required an employé to agree not to remain a member of a labor organization as a condition of retaining the employment does not show a "threat"; a "threat" involving the use of some impelling force against the will or desire of the person threatened. State ex rel. Smith v. Daniels, 136 N. W. 584, 586, 118 Minn. 155.

A petition alleging that defendant said to plaintiff that he "could have sent another man after" the plaintiff did not amount to a "threat" to prosecute for a criminal offense in the absence of an averment that in the community where the language was used the language was well understood to mean a "threat" to send the sheriff with a warrant. Bond v. Kidd, 50 S. E. 934, 122 Ga. 812.

A threat "to proceed against you criminally" is equivalent to a "threat" to accuse a person of a crime, within the meaning of Pen. Code, §§ 558, 560, relating to threats. People v. Eichler, 26 N. Y. Supp. 998, 1000, 75 Hun, 28.

Advice distinguished

For an officer to merely tell accused to tell the truth is advice merely, and not a "threat," within Code Cr. Proc. § 395, authorizing evidence of a confession, unless procured by threats. People v. Randazzio, 87 N. E. 112, 114, 194 N. Y. 147.

As cruelty

As duress

See Duress.

THREATENING LETTERS

A letter charging the addressee with having deprived the writer of money and with offenses, and stating that things the addressee and another had done and said would cost more than $700, that the writer hoped the addressee would "get out of the N. L. of H., and not be turned out," and that the writer thought she would make charges against the addressee's husband "in the Masons" as soon as litigation should end, etc., is insufficient on its face to constitute a "threatening letter," within Code 1906, § 1377, providing punishment for sending such letters. State v. Jamlson, 54 South. 843, 99 Miss. 248.

THREE

Three days

Const. art. 4, § 12, providing that every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the Governor, and, if not returned to the house in which it originated within "three days," Sundays excepted, shall become a law, does not require a bill to be returned in three calendar days, but allows three days, during each of which the house where the bill originated is in session so that it may be returned to it. State ex rel. Corbett v. South Norwalk, 58 Atl. 759, 760, 77 Conn. 257.

A "three days' notice" of a meeting of appraisers in condemnation proceedings is a notice given three days before the meeting is to be held. One publication in a daily paper is a notice, and if it is made three days in advance of the time set it is a "three days' notice." A requirement that at least three days in the official city paper shall be given of the meeting of the appraisers in condemnation proceedings is satisfied by the publication of a notice in one issue of such paper nine days before the time set. Harrison v. Newman, 80 Pac. 599, 600, 71 Kan. 324 (citing Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Shipley, 19 Atl. 1, 72 Md. 88).

Where judgment was rendered on January 24th, an application for a new trial entered on January 27th was not entered within "three judicial days" from rendition of the judgment, as required by statute. Harlan v. Braxdale's Adm'r (Ky.) 35 S. W. 918.

Three days thereafter

See Thereafter.

Three consecutive weeks

The phrase "three consecutive weeks," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 6021, providing that the treasurer shall give notice of the sale of real property for delinquent taxes by publication once a week for "three consecutive weeks," means 21 days, and where the first publication of notice for a delinquent tax sale was made November 2d, and the last publication November 16th, and the sale was made on November 20th, the sale was void. Cadman v. Smith, 85 Pac. 346, 348, 15 Okl. 633.

Three successive weeks

Section 4, c. 48, p. 61, Acts 1905 (section 896, Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905), provides that proof of service by publication shall show "publication for three successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation, * * * the last publication to be five days before the day set for the hearing." Held, that the phrase "publication for three successive weeks" means three successive publications in a weekly newspaper on its weekly days of issue, and that a publication for a full period of 21 days is not required. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Indianapolis & L. Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 65, 66, 168 Ind. 360, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197 (citing Bachelor v. Bachelor, 1 Mass. 256; Swett v. Sprague, 55 Me. 190; Alexander v. Alexander, 41 N. W. 1065, 26 Neb. 68).

Three times successively

See Successively.

THREE-CARD MONTE

"Three-card monte" is said to be a sleight of hand game or trick played with three cards, one of which is usually a court card. The performer throws the cards face down upon a table in such a manner as to deceive the eye of the onlooker, who is induced to bet that he can pick out the court card. While the cards are manipulated by one person alone, who is commonly called the "dealer," the game is generally known and understood to be a confidence game, and is also declared by the statute to be a confidence game or swindle known as "three-card monte." State v. Edgen, 80 S. W. 942, 944, 181 Mo. 582 (citing Stand. Dict. p. 1147).

THREE FEET WIDE IN THE CLEAR

An entrance hall is "three feet wide in the clear" to the rear of the stairway, as required by Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, p. 895, c. 334) § 20, it being in fact 3 feet 5 inches in width for all such distance, except that a chimney breast 4 feet wide extends into it from the side wall 1 foot. Umberg v. Neinken, 112 N. Y. Supp. 618, 619, 128 App. Div. 165.

THREE-FIFTHS OF THE VOTERS

The phrase "three-fifths of the voters voting at such election" contained in Const. art. 8, § 6, providing that no municipal corporation shall become indebted exceeding a certain amount without the assent of three-fifths of the voters therein voting at an election to be held for that purpose, means three-fifths of the voters who vote upon the proposition, and not necessarily three-fifths of all the votes cast at the election. Fox v. City of Seattle, 86 Pac. 379, 380, 43 Wash. 74, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1037.

THREE-NOTCHED ROAD

A "three-notched road" is a road the trees along the side of which are marked with three notches. Brumley v. State, 103 S. W. 615, 617, 83 Ark. 236.

THREE STRANDS OR CORDS

The Tariff Act provision relating to gloves stitched with more than "three single strands or cords" does not include gloves having but three points each, each point having three distinct rows of stitching, though the stitching shows nine chains of embroidery on the outside of the backs of the gloves and nine single rows of stitching on the inside. United States v. La Fetra, 172 Fed. 297, 298.

V. S. 3921 (P. S. 4505), inflicting a penalty if a person having control of a detached engine or engine with a passenger train attached runs it into or through a passenger depot at a speed exceeding four miles an hour, was intended to apply only to passenger depots covering the main tracks of the railroad into and through which trains running on such tracks must pass; the word "into" being used in the sense of "inside of" or "within" and "through," meaning from end to end or from side to side of, into or out of at the opposite, or at another point. Flint's Adm'r v. Central Vermont R. Co., 73 Atl. 590, 591, 82 Vt. 269.

As into

A subscription to a railroad provided that it was in consideration of the railroad's contract to construct and operate a road "through or into" a certain town. Held, that while the words "through or into" definitely express the thought that the road was intended to go inside the city limits, "into" carrying the notion of entering, and "through" of passing in and then out of the city boundaries, the contract was nevertheless substantially performed by the construction of a new line to a point outside the city where a junction was made with an old road, over which trains were transported from the new line into the city. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Houck, 97 S. W. 963, 966, 120 Mo. App. 634.

THROUGH BILL OF LADING

A bill of lading which acknowledges the receipt of merchandise consigned to a point in another state, names the route and railroads over which the shipment is to be made, contains an agreement by the initial carrier to deliver to the next connecting carrier, and provides that as to each carrier upon the route the service is to be rendered in accordance with the conditions stated therein, is a "through bill of lading," having reference to the usual method in use by connecting carriers. Standard Oil Co. of New York v. United States, 179 Fed. 614, 621, 103 C. C. A. 172.

THROUGH FREIGHT

As the term is ordinarily employed, "through freight" is that which comes to a railroad company from some other road, or which starts at some point on one line, but in order to reach its destination is turned over to a connecting carrier. It requires the services of two or more railways. Hill v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 799, 128 Ga. 705.

THROUGH THE MOTHER

"From and through," as used in a statute making children capable of inheriting from and through their mother, and giving them the right to distributive shares of the personal estates of any of their kindred on the part of their mother, includes inheritance directly from the mother and indirectly from any one to whom or from whom kinship can be traced through her, either in ascending or descending line. By the use of the word "from" it was the intention of the Legislature to allow the child to inherit real property from the mother direct; the descent being direct on her death. "Through" means by means of, the channel by means of which. From is direct. "Through" is indirect as well. "Through" lets in any one to whom or from whom the blood of kinship can be traced through the mother. Wherever the blood of kinship can be traced "through the mother," there follows the right to inherit either in ascending or descending line. Berry v. Powell, 105 S. W. 345, 348, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 599.

THROUGH ROUTE

The Missouri Pacific Railway Company received car loads of beer in St. Louis for transportation to Leadville, Colo., issuing receipts therefor showing contents, weight, destination, and consignee, and that the shipment was received subject to its uniform bill of lading, to be delivered to the consignee and routed over the line of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company. At Pueblo, Colo., it turned the cars over to the latter company, which moved them to Leadville on a local waybill, showing the consignor and consignee and the rate and charge of each company. The two companies had no established joint rate between St. Louis and Leadville, but they constantly exchanged traffic between such points; each charging its own local rate to and from Pueblo. The total freight was collected by one, either from the consignor or consignee, and daily settlements were made between them. Held, that such course of business was in fact the establishment of a "through route" between the two points, within the meaning of section 6 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 2, 34 Stat. 586, which requires the filing of schedules of the "separately established rates" applied by a carrier on through traffic, when there is a through route, but no joint rate, and that such rate established by the Denver Company was within the terms of the act, and as a part of the through charge was subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission under section 15 of the act as amended. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 195 Fed. 968, 973.

Under the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 6, 24 Stat. 380), as amended March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. 855, c. 302, § 1), requiring several common carriers operating a "through line" engaged in interstate commerce to file schedules of rates constituting the basis of a through interstate rate, each carrier, though operating a line wholly within a state, which line is a portion of a through route engaged in interstate commerce through a common arrangement between several connecting carriers, is bound to comply with such act. United States v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 153 Fed. 630, 632 (citing Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 9 Interst. Com. R. 205; United States v. Wood, 145 Fed. 405; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 15 Sup. Ct. 802, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. Ed. 910).

THROUGH TICKET

"Through tickets," in the form of coupons, are to be regarded as distinct tickets for each road, sold by the first company as agent for the other companies. The rights and liabilities of the parties are the same as if the purchase had been made of the defendants at their station." McCullum v. Southern Pac. Co., 88 Pac. 663, 667, 31 Utah, 494 (quoting and adopting definition in Knight v. Portland, S. & P. Ry. Co., 56 Me. 234, 96 Am. Dec. 449, and citing 4 Elliott, R. R., § 1596).

THROW

THROW OUT

The words "throw out," in Rev. St. 1908, § 1884, declaring it a felony for one to willfully and maliciously throw out a switch, remove, or in any manner loosen a rail, or place any obstruction on a railroad, with the intention of derailing a train, clearly include a willful and malicious displacement of a switch in any manner, with intent to cause a train, or any part of it, to leave the track on which it is running, so that it is error to admit testimony of a different and narrower meaning of the word. People v. Feehan, 111 Pac. 241, 242, 48 Colo. 535.

THROWING

Raw silk, in the skein as drawn from the cocoon in a single thread formed by several filaments, must be subjected to the process of "throwing," which consists of winding, twisting, doubling, and redoubling the raw silk, before it can be used in manufacture. Klots v. U. S., 139 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

THUS

Where an indictment charges that A. "did unlawfully and from a premeditated design to effect the death of one B. make an assault on the said B., and a certain pistol, which then and there was loaded with * * * leaden bullets and by him the said A. had and held in his hand, he, the said A., did then and there unlawfully, and from a premeditated design to effect the death of the said B., shoot off and discharge at and upon the said B., thereby and by thus striking the said B. with the said leaden bullets, inflicting on and in the body of the said B. one mortal wound," etc., the homicidal act or efficient cause of death is charged to have been perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect death, although the words "from a premeditated design to effect death" are not repeated when the infliction of the mortal wound is charged, since these words, previously alleged, are connected with the mortal stroke by the words "thereby and by thus." The word "thus" means "in the way just indicated." Daniels v. State, 41 South. 600, 1, 52 Fla. 18.

TICKER

A "ticker" is an instrument which by means of a type wheel actuated by electrical pulse, automatically prints in plain, ordinary type, upon a strip of paper, messages transmitted electrically from a distance. National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel., 119 Fed. 294, 295, 56 C. C. A. 198, 60 L. A. 805.

TICKET AGENT

A ticket agent of a local railway company, who sells through joint tickets over the local line within the state and also over a foreign line beyond the state with which the local railway company has a joint traffic agreement, is not a "ticket agent" of the foreign company on whom process may be served, under Rev. Laws 1905, § 4110. Slaughter v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 119 N. W. 398, 400, 106 Minn. 263.

TICKET SPECULATOR

"A 'ticket speculator' is one who sells tickets at an advance over the price charged by the management. A clause in a theater ticket providing that, if sold by the purchaser at the sidewalk, it would be refused at the door, is valid and enforceable as against all subsequent purchasers, where its purpose is to prevent purchase of tickets by ticket speculators to resell at an advance. Collister v. Hayman, 75 N. E. 20, 21, 183 N. Y. 250, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 5 Ann. Cas. 344.

TIDE

TIDE LAND

"Tide land" is land over which the tide ebbs and flows. Woodward v. Davidson, 150 Fed. 840, 842.

"Tide land" is that which is daily covered and uncovered by the ordinary ebb and flow of normal tides. State ex rel. Ellis v. Gerbing, 47 South. 353, 356, 56 Fla. 603, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337; People ex rel. State Board of Harbor Com'rs v. Kerber, 93 Pac. 878, 879, 152 Cal. 731 (citing People ex rel. Teschemacher v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379; Rondell v. Fay, 32 Cal. 354; City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 50 Pac. 277, 118 Cal. 160, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93).

In the absence of legislative definition, "tide lands" are the lands between the lines of ordinary high tide and mean low tide. Pearl Oyster Co. v. Heuston, 107 Pac. 349, 350, 57 Wash. 533, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1007.

According to the legislative definition, "tide lands" are all lands over which the tide ebbs and flows from the line of ordinary high tide to the line of mean low tide, except in front of cities where harbor lines have been established or may be established, where such tide lands shall be those lying between the line of ordinary high tide and the inner harbor line, and excepting oyster lands. It cannot be shown, by way of collateral attack on a deed from the state, that lands sold and conveyed by the state as second-class "tide lands" were in fact "oyster lands," subject to purchase under a subsequent application therefor. Welsh v. Callvert, 75 Pac. 871, 872, 34 Wash. 250.

"Tide lands" are such as are covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the ordinary or neap tides, and constitute the seashore which the state controls, and land extending to the line indicated by high-water mark at ordinary or neap tide is the subject of private ownership. Elchelberger v. Mills Land & Water Co., 100 Pac. 117, 122, 9 Cal. App. 628.

Sand bars not uncovered by the "mean lower low water," but sometimes exposed when the tide fell below the zero line, by reason of a strong wind or abnormal barometric conditions, are parts of the bed of the stream, and not "tide lands," which alone the state land board, under the power given them by Laws 1891, p. 189, to sell tide flats not adjacent to the shore and situate in the tide waters of the Columbia river is authorized to sell and convey. Van Dusen Inv. Co. v. Western Fishing Co., 124 Pac. 677, 680, 63 Or. 7.

Plaintiff sued to restrain the State Land Board from leasing certain tide lands, and alleged that plaintiff was engaged in fishing for salmon in the Columbia river, which were hauled upon the shore of tide lands described, of which plaintiff was the owner by mesne conveyances from the state, and also of the accretions thereto, that a survey had been made of an imperceptible accumulation of land by natural causes in front of plaintiff's land, and that T. had applied to the board for a lease thereof, which, if granted, would prevent plaintiff from pursuing its business. Plaintiff, though alleging that the lands in controversy were covered by water to a depth of four to six feet for a large part of the day, also charged that the land lay between ordinary high and low tide in the river. Held, that the land could reasonably be inferred to be "tide lands," part of an island, within Laws 1907, p. 206, providing that no accretions to islands previously sold by the state should be leased, and that no tide or overflowed lands except those connected with the shore should be sold until 10 years after the approval of the act. Taylor Sands Fishing Co. v. Benson, 108 Pac. 126, 127, 56 Or. 157.

"Tide lands," as used in Const. art. 15, § 3, providing that all tide-lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in the state fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for navigation shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations, are not limited to lands covered and uncovered by daily efflux and reflux of the tide, but embrace lands properly described as submerged lands. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 119 Pac. 1073, 1074, 161 Cal. 610, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686.

TIDE WATERS

The terms "tide waters" and "navigable waters" are used synonymously in England. Olds v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 112 N. W. 952, 958, 150 Mich. 184 (quoting and adopting Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. Ed. 1018).

The words "seaworthy," "seaworthiness," and "tight and sound," as used in reference to a vessel, mean the sufficiency of such vessel in materials, construction, equipment, and outfit for the trade or service in which it was employed. Paddock-Hawley Iron Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. of Providence, R. I., 93 S. W. 358, 360, 118 Mo. App. 85.

An agreement in the charter party to deliver the ship "tight," staunch, and strong is not necessarily violated, notwithstanding she may have an accumulation of grass, shells, and barnacles. Glasgow Shipowners' Co. v. Bacon, 139 Fed. 541, 542, 71 C. C. A. 329.

TIGHT MORTGAGE

A "tight mortgage" is one which allows no days of grace or a limited number after default in paying interest or principal before foreclosure proceedings may be begun. Cunningham v. McCready, 69 Atl. 82, 83, 219 Pa. 594 (citing And. Law Dict. 689).

TILE

So-called "Welsh quarries" are not dutiable as "tiles," but as "brick, other than fire brick," which they closely resemble in material, quality, texture, and the use to which they are put, within the meaning of the so-called "similitude clause." Traitel Bros. v. United States, 131 Fed. 994, 995.

TILE DRAIN

TILL

Until synonymous

Act Aug. 31, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 305), provided that respondent's term as jury commissioner under appointment made by the Governor ran "till the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January, 1911," and that on the expiration of each term the Governor should appoint successors who should hold office for three years from the expiration of the term of their respective predecessors. Held, that the word "till" meant "up or down to; as far as; until," the words "to," "till," and "until" being synonymous, and, "until" being primarily a word of exclusion, respondent's term did not include any part of the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January, and hence, since the term of the existing Governor did include that day, there was a vacancy in the office of jury commissioner which the Governor had power to fill by appointment. Oberhaus v. State ex rel. McNamara, 55 South. 898, 902, 173 Ala. 483.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines the word "to" as a term of exclusion, unless by necessary implication it is manifestly used in a different sense. Webster recognizes the words "to," "till," and "until" as synonymous in the sense here used. The Century Dictionary gives like recognition as to the use of these words. Where on the 25th day of February, plaintiff in error was allowed to the 15th day of March to make and serve a case for the Supreme Court, the time granted expired at 12 o'clock midnight, March 14th. Maynes v. Gray, 76 Pac. 443, 69 Kan. 49, 105 Am. St. Rep. 146, 2 Ann. Cas. 518.

"Timber" is such stuff as is suitable for building and allied purposes. Gulf Yellow Pine Lumber Co. v. Monk, 49 South. 248, 159 Ala. 318.

"Timber" is a generic word, meaning "trees," felled or standing, to be used for building. Kaul v. Weed, 53 Atl. 489, 490, 203 Pa. 586.

"Timber" used as a generic term, according to Webster, means that sort of wood which is proper for buildings, or for tools, utensils, furniture, carriages, fences, ships, and the like; usually said of felled trees, but sometimes said of those standing, and not the articles in their completed state, for the manufacture of which the timber may be used. Butler & Barrow v. McPherson Bros., 49 South. 257, 95 Miss. 635.

The term "timber" as commonly used in this country, signifies either growing trees, or large sticks, and is not commonly applied to small pieces or rails or cordwood into which the larger pieces may be worked up. Anderson v. Miami Lumber Co., 116 Pac. 1056, 1058, 59 Or. 149.

In England the term "timber" does not include all kinds of wood, what kind of wood in England is deemed to be timber depends on custom. In this country the term "timber" when applied to standing trees, generally means such as are suitable for use in the erection of buildings or in the manufacture of tools, utensils, furniture, carriages, fences, ships, and the like. Lord v. Meader, 60 Atl. 434, 435, 73 N. H. 185 (citing Alcott v. Lakin, 33 N. H. 507, 509, 66 Am. Dec. 739; Jackson v. Brownson (N. Y.) 7 Johns. 227, 235, 5 Am. Dec. 253).

Generally the word "timber," as used in a contract selling standing timber, unless modified or controlled by other expressions, in the contract means such trees as are fit to be used in buildings or similar construction; that is, trees of a size fit to be used in the construction of dwellings or ships; trees too small to be used for these purposes, not, strictly speaking, being considered as timber, although their products are utilizable for the construction of interior work in dwellings, or for the manufacture of tools and other appliances. Broad River Lumber Co. v. Middleby, 194 Fed. 817, 819, 114 C. C. A. 521.

A deed, reserving to grantor the "timber" growing on certain lands, retained title to all trees then of a size suitable to make lumber, not including saplings or undergrowth. Hicks v. Phillips, 147 S. W. 42, 148 Ky. 670.

The meaning of the word "timber" has more or less flexibility, depending upon time, place, and circumstances, as well as the language in which it is employed, and may be shown to include cordwood. Fogo v. Boyle, 109 N. W. 977, 978, 130 Wis. 154 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 6972, 6973).

To show the meaning of the word "timber" in a contract of sale of what "timber" the seller had on the land in the neighborhood, evidence of what business the buyer was engaged in as known by the seller, and of what was the common acceptance of the word in that business and in that locality, is admissible. The meaning of the word is not so accurate a designation of what was sold as to preclude investigation of the meaning of the word. Kerl v. Smith, 51 South. 3, 4, 96 Miss. 827.

The word "timber," as used in a lease of land for the purpose of cutting "all and singular timber suitable for sawmill purposes growing on" the land, includes green and growing timber, and not all timber on the land suitable for sawmill purposes at the time of the execution of the lease, since the word "timber" is used to denote green wood of the age of 20 years or more, such as oak, ash, elm, beach, maple, walnut, hickory, poplar, cypress, pine, gum, and other forest trees. Handcock v. Massee & Felton Lumber Co., 56 S. E. 1021, 127 Ga. 698 (citing Dickinson v. Jones, 36 Ga. 97).

The word "timber," as used in Act Feb. 25, 1901 (P. L. 11), protecting timber on forestry reservations, is not confined to trees of such size that planks, boards, shingles, and other lumber may be made therefrom. It applies to saplings and other small growing woods on the lands of the commonwealth. Commonwealth v. La Bar, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 228, 231.

In a contract for the sale and cutting of "timber," which provides that the vendee agrees "to draw all of said timber off the lot on or about April 12th, * * * after which date he has no further right on said premises or in any timber left therein," the word "timber" includes, not only the standing timber, but all timber cut, but not drawn off, on that date. McNeil v. Hall, 94 N. Y. Supp. 920, 923, 107 App. Div. 36.

As firewood

Where a party, by a written contract, purchased all the timber on certain land except certain kinds, and there was nothing to show that by the word "timber" the parties meant to include all growing trees of any size, but there was evidence that they only intended to include those large enough for construction purposes, the purchaser was not entitled to cut trees which, because of their size, were fit only for firewood. Balderson v. Seeley, 125 N. W. 37, 38, 160 Mich. 186, 136 Am. St. Rep. 428, 19 Ann. Cas. 1049.

Growth synonymous

Where one conveyed to another "all the timber and growth of timber" on certain land, with the privilege of at all times entering on the land and removing the timber, the instrument included timber to be subsequently grown; "timber" being defined as wood or forest land, and the term "growth" being defined as that which has grown or is growing, anything produced, a product, the words in such circumstances not being synonymous. Baker v. Kenney, 124 N. W. 901, 904, 145 Iowa, 638, 139 Am. St. Rep. 456.

Land

As land, see Land.

Where a broker's contract employed him to purchase timber options for a percentage of the net profits from the sale of the timber, and certain land was purchased in order to obtain the timber thereon, the word "timber" in the contract of employment could not be extended to include the land, so as to entitle the broker to a percentage of the net profits of the sale of the land, as well as the timber. Wilson v. James, 106 Pac. 618, 619, 57 Wash. 143.

Lumber

Where, in a suit by attachment the affidavit set up a lien for stumpage, under Code 1907, § 4814, for timber sold, and the complaint charged for lumber sold, but also claimed under a lien for stumpage under the statute, which gives a lien for timber sold, the word "lumber," as used therein, is synonymous with "timber," when considered in connection with all the averments of the complaint and the affidavit, as against an objection that there was a fatal variance between the pleading and proof, since it can reasonably be construed to harmonize with the affidavit and evidence showing a sale of timber, as distinguished from lumber. Sligh v. Frix, 51 South. 601, 602, 165 Ala. 230.

Railroad ties

Where an instrument conveying all the timber and logs suitable to be manufactured into cross-ties, also provided that, after the expiration of the time fixed in the contract, all the timber left should revert to the seller, the word "timber" will not be construed to include manufactured cross-ties, but means growing trees and logs. Johnson v. Truitt, 50 S. E. 135, 136, 122 Ga. 327. See, also, Mahan v. Clark, 68 Atl. 667, 669, 219 Pa. 229, 12 Ann. Cas. 729 (citing Johnson v. Truitt, 50 S. E. 135, 122 Ga. 327).

A deed of land reserved to the vendors the title to all timber of the land which they could remove not later than a specified date, and provided that all the timber thereon which should not be removed by that date should belong to the vendees. Held, that "timber" meant any timber standing or lying on the ground in its natural state, and railroad ties manufactured from trees on the land at a cost of 15 cents each, the greater part of their value being the result of skill and labor expended in their manufacture, were not timber, and the vendees did not become the owners thereof, where they were still on the land at the expiration of the contract date for removal of the timber. Butler & Barrow v. McPherson Bros., 49 South. 257, 95 Miss. 635.

Saw logs

The lien given by Civ. Code 1895, § 2809, persons furnishing sawmills with "timber and logs," applies to timber and logs severed from the soil by human agency, and not to standing trees, though sold to be severed from the realty by the purchaser and converted into lumber or logs for his mill. Ray v. Schmidt & Co., 68 S. E. 1035, 7 Ga. App. 380.

Slabs

Slabs are not included in the material designated as "lumber and timber" in the statute giving a lien on the lumber and timber for services in cutting logs. Engl v. Harris, 100 N. W. 1046, 1048, 123 Wis. 407.

TIMBER FOR SAWMILL PURPOSES

See Suitable for Sawmill Purposes.

"Timber" is not a word of invariable meaning. It may be used to designate wood suitable for building houses or ships, or for use in carpentry, joinery, etc., or trees cut round and squared, or capable of being squared or cut into beams, rafters, boards, etc., or growing trees suitable for constructive purposes, or trees generally, or woods, or a single tree of wood, whether suitable for use in construction or already in use. Cent.

Or the body, stem or trunk of a tree. Rev. Dict., Rawle's Revision. The meaning given the term depends upon the context in which it is used, and sometimes upon the occupation of the person who uses the term. In construing a contract where the word appears, it is not only proper, in defining what is intended by the parties, to look to the terms of the contract, but also to the occupation of the contracting parties and the purposes for which the contract was entered into. An owner of land entered into a contract with the proprietor of a sawmill for the sale of "all the timber for sawmill purposes," on a given parcel of land. A portion of the purchase money was to be paid on as the "sawmill was located ready for sawing on said land." If this amount was not paid, the mill was to be removed from the land before "sawing any timber on." There were stipulations "that the stumps from which such sawmill timber is to be cut shall be two feet high, and not more than two feet from the ground, and, no timber is to be cut from said land * * * that is less than 14 inches in diameter"; that stumps less than two feet high, or any cut less than 14 inches in diameter, be a violation of this contract and a forfeiture thereof"; and that the buyer to have twelve months in which to saw timber." Held, that only such portions of trees as were capable of being sawed under the contract. Penn v. Avera, 52 S. E. 324, 124 Ga. 147.

United States v. Stores, 14 Fed. 824; Lumber Co. v. Gaskin, 50 S. E. 164, 122 Ga. 2).

A deed conveying all of a lot of land, save and except "the timber on said lot of land suitable for turpentine purposes and the timber thereon suitable for sawmill purposes, except dead timber for plantation purposes, which is hereby reserved by said" grantor "unto himself, his heirs, and assigns, with the privilege of utilizing the same for turpentine purposes, within and during a period of five years from the date of this instrument, and with the privilege to him, the said grantor, to cut and remove the timber on said lot of land suitable for sawmill purposes within and during the space and period of eight years from the date of the instrument, the said grantor to have the further privilege of such ingress and egress in, from, upon, and over said lot of land as may be necessary for the removal of said timber and turpentine products therefrom," reserves to the grantor, for sawmill use during the specified time, all the dead timber on the land suitable for sawmill purposes, with the right to the grantee to have and enjoy during this time so much thereof as may be necessary for plantation use. Lankford v. Peterson, 56 S. E. 774, 127 Ga. 666 (citing Gray Lumber Co. v. Gaskin, 50 S. E. 164, 122 Ga. 342).

TIMBER LANDS

Rev. Codes, § 1580, provides that timber lands and lands chiefly valuable for timber must be sold for cash on the day of sale. Section 1599 provides that timber and timber lands belonging to the state may be sold by the State Board of Land Commissioners, at their option upon installments. Held, that state lands covered with timber which has been previously sold by the state, and the purchaser granted a fixed period in which to enter upon the land and remove the timber, is "timber land," within the sections, and, when sold, must be sold subject to section 1599. Pike v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 113 Pac. 447, 452, 19 Idaho, 268, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1344.

Rev. St. 1892, § 1469, giving a right to enjoin trespass to real estate to any person "claiming to own timbered lands," does not confer such right on one claiming to own only the "turpentine boxes," or the turpentine in the trees with the privilege of cutting, boxing, and scraping the same. Hall v. Horne, 42 South. 383, 386, 52 Fla. 510 (citing Doke v. Peek, 34 South. 896, 45 Fla. 244, 110 Am. St. Rep. 70; McDonald v. Padgett, 35 South. 336, 46 Fla. 501).

In an action on a note and to foreclose a mortgage securing the same, plaintiff's petition alleged that the instruments were executed on the 10th day of December, 1892; and a supplemental petition alleged that, at the time defendants executed the instruments, defendants were not living on the land, or occupying it as a homestead. Defendants' plea was that at the time the instruments were executed the land involved was being occupied as a homestead. Held, that the word "time," as used in the supplemental petition, referred to the date given in the original petition, and hence the issue raised was whether the premises were occupied as a homestead December 10, 1892. De-laney v. Walker, 79 S. W. 601, 602, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 617.

A lease, contemplating construction by lessee of a building before a designated date, provided for semiannual payments of a percentage of profits earned for the half year, authorized issue by lessee of interest-bearing bonds before completion of the building, required a monthly deposit by lessee for a fund out of which to pay rent, taxes, insurance, interest, and as a sinking fund for payment of the bonds, and provided deduction from profits if any payment should be made "at the time of and not prior to the time of the respective actual payments thereof." Held, that the word "time" referred to the half-year period at expiration of which the net profit should be calculated and paid, and payments during a half-year period where there was no income could not be carried forward to a succeeding half-year period and deducted from income during such profit-earning period. Grosse v. Barman, 100 Pac. 348, 353, 9 Cal. App. 650.

As referring to a day

The publication of a notice 20 successive "times" in a daily newspaper is equivalent to a publication for 20 successive "days." White v. Bates, 84 N. E. 906, 909, 234 Ill. 276.

Under the statute providing for the election by the members of the bar of a special county judge "if at the time" appointed to hold court the judge does not appear, the special judge may be elected on the first day of the term, but may be ousted by the subsequent appearance of the regular judge. Porter v. State, 86 S. W. 767, 768, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 125.

As solar or standard time

"When the Legislature prescribes the times at which a term of the court shall begin and shall end, the true time at the place of holding the court is meant; and the true "time" is to be determined by the instant at which the sun passes the meridian of the place for which it is to be calculated, and not by the time of its passage at some other place." Therefore, in determining the "time" of the expiration of a term of court, limited by statute to a certain day, "solar time," and not "standard" or railroad time, should be used, though the community has generally adopted standard time. Texas Tram & Lumber Co. v. Hightower, 96 S. W. 1071, 1072, 100 Tex. 126, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046, 123 Am. St. Rep. 794.

TIME CHECK

A "time check," issued by a contractor, or his foreman, to a laborer, containing a memorandum of the time of labor and the amount he is entitled to receive therefor, is the evidence and symbol of his claim for such labor. The indorsement in blank of such a check and a delivery thereof is an assignment in writing of the claim for labor, as required by the statute. Small v. Smith, 139 N. W. 133, 135, 120 Minn. 118.

TIME FOR ANSWERING

As used in Comp. St. § 200, providing that the defendant, at any time before the time for answering expires, may apply for a discharge of the attachment, the phrase "time for answering" refers to the time in which the defendant shall appear and answer the summons, as required by section 68, subd. 3. Vaughn v. Dawes, 17 Pac. 114, 115, 7 Mont. 360.

TIME FOR COLLECTION OF TAXES

Const. Amend. 2, Kirby's Dig. § 2767, and Acts 1907, p. 1256, provided as one of the qualifications of a voter that he should exhibit a poll tax receipt or other evidence that he had paid his poll tax "at the time of collecting taxes next preceding the election," and by Const. Amend. 9, Kirby's Dig. § 2772, Acts 1893, p. 245, and Acts 1909, p. 945, § 4, the "time for collecting taxes" is defined as the period between the first Monday in January and the last Saturday next preceding the first Monday in July, on which last-named date the collector is required by law to make his final settlement in the county court, and declares that any person liable to pay full taxes and who has paid the same at any time within the dates named shall, if possessed of the other qualifications required by law of an elector, be entitled to vote at any election held in the state at any time before the first Monday in July of the year succeeding that in which the payment was made. Held, that the "time for collection of taxes" within such constitutional amendment has reference to a period already expired next before the day of election at which the elector proposes to vote; and hence electors otherwise qualified who were required to pay full tax, but who had not done so, and obtained a receipt therefor during the time for collecting taxes between the first Monday in January and the Thursday preceding the first Monday in July the year 1909, were not qualified electors entitled to vote or eligible to election office at a school election held in May, 1910, though they may have paid their full tax during the time for collecting taxes in 1910 prior to the election in May, prior to the expiration of the time for collecting taxes, it not being a payment within the constitutional provision "at the time of collecting taxes next preceding such election." White McHughes, 133 S. W. 1026, 1027, 97 Ark.

TIME OF ACCIDENT

The words "time and place," in a statute defining a description in the notice of the time and place of the occurrence of the injury, mean a statement of the day and hour of the injury, and a description of the locality where the person injured received the direct injury from the negligent act, as nearly as these facts can be given. Peck v. Fair Haven & Westport R. Co., 58 Atl. 757, 758, 77 Conn. 161; Wright v. City of Omaha, 110 N. W. 754, 755, 124 Neb. 124.

TIME OF ASSESSMENT

In assessing a tax upon the property liable to taxation in any town or city, two references to time must inevitably be made: (1) the point of time must be taken to which the values of all the property shall be reduced simultaneously, and the value of each parcel of property at that point of time must be estimated and affixed to it. (2) Some period of time must be occupied by the assessors in the work of receiving statements, making estimation of values, reckoning the tax, writing out and filing the roll. Both of these times may be called the "time of making the assessment"; but one is important to the taxpayer, and the other is not. It is material to the taxpayer when or during what period of time the work of the board of assessors is performed, except that portion of which consists in receiving his return; but of the utmost importance to him to have his property valued as of the same time with the other property in the town, and to know the time the assessors had in mind when they valued its value. Matteson v. Warwick & Watery Water Co., 68 Atl. 577, 579, 28 R. I. 1.

TIME OF BANKRUPTCY

The Bankrupt Act defines "time of bankruptcy" to mean the date when the petition is filed. Shute v. Patterson, 147 Fed. 506, 83 C. C. A. 75.

TIME OF LAST SICKNESS

See Last Sickness.

TIME OF RENDITION OF JUDGMENT

See Rendition of Judgment.

TIME OF SALE

The "time of sale" mentioned in the amendment to the act relative to the sale of lands, approved March 19, 1912 (P. L. p. 131), is referable to a day, that is, the day of sale. Therefore it is as though the act read "the last publication (of the notice of sale) to be not more than seven days prior to the day appointed for selling," etc. Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Fitzgibbon & Crisp Carriage & Wagon Co., 84 Atl. 1042, 81 N. J. Eq. 1.

TIME OF SUIT

When the charter of a bank declares that the stockholders of a bank shall be individually liable, "at the time of suits," for the ultimate payments of debts of the bank, in a given proportion, no cause of action arises against the stockholders until there has been a suit by a creditor against the bank, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of the stockholders until after the date of such a suit. Wheatley v. Glover, 54 S. E. 626, 627, 630, 125 Ga. 710.

TIME OF WAR

See In Time of War; War.

TIME SAVED IN LOADING

Under a charter providing that dispatch money is to be allowed the charterer for "time saved in loading," the phrase "time saved in loading" means the amount of time saved to a vessel from the time allowed for loading by the charter. Pool Shipping Co. v. Samuel, 200 Fed. 36, 40, 118 C. C. A. 264.

TIME SPECIFIED

Where a car company agreed to make and deliver a number of cars to the railway company on or before April 1, 1900, subject to delays from unavoidable contingencies, but that, if it failed to deliver the cars "within the time specified," it would forfeit and pay to the railroad company, as liquidated damages, $5 per day for every car so delayed, the "time specified" in the damage clause meant all the time specified for the delivery of the cars in the earlier part of the contract (that is to say, a time on or before April 1, 1900, plus the time during which the delivery might be delayed by the unavoidable contingencies), and the car company was not liable for the stipulated damages during that time. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Eastern R. Co., 121 Fed. 609, 615, 57 C. C. A. 635.

TIMEKEEPER

A "timekeeper" is a person who keeps, marks, regulates, or determines the time. Specifically, a person who keeps a record of the time spent by the workmen at their work;

one who notes and records the time at which something takes place, or the time occupied in some action or operation, or the number of hours of work done by each of a number of workmen. Jenkins v. Penn Bridge Co., 53 S. E. 991, 993, 73 S. C. 526 (quoting definition in Cent. Dict.).

Acts 1905, p. 538, provides that the wages of a railroad employé shall continue after his discharge, where such employé requests his foreman or timekeeper to send his wages to any designated station and request is not complied with within seven days from the time it is made. Plaintiff, a station agent, on discharge, made demand for his wages to his successor. He did not designate the station at which the wages were to be sent. Held, that the division agent who appointed him was plaintiff's "foreman" or the "keeper of his time" within the statute, and since his request did not comply with the statute, he was not entitled to wages after discharge. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McClerkin, 114 S. W. 240, 241, 88 Ark. 277.

TIMOMETER

A "timometer" is an instrument for automatically recording elapsed time in minutes as well as in seconds, used specifically in recording the length of time a long-distance telephone has been used. Calculagraph Co. v. Wilson, 132 Fed. 20, 25.

TIPPERS

In unloading coal from a vessel, the coal was hoisted by buckets, and raised so far above the level of the apron or platform as would allow the bucket to clear the wheelbarrow that was to receive the coal. The men who unloaded the coal were called the "tippers" and "wheelers." Garant v. Cashman, 66 N. E. 599, 600, 183 Mass. 13.

TIPPLE

To "tipple" is to drink intoxicating liquors, and to "take a dram" is the same thing. City of Joplin v. Jacobs, 96 S. W. 219, 119 Mo. App. 134.

In view of prior legislation on the liquor traffic, the word "sale" in the title of Acts 1909, c. 1, entitled an act to prohibit the "sale" of intoxicating liquors as a beverage near a schoolhouse, where a school is kept, whether the school be in session or not, includes all sales without regard to their form or character; and the word "tipple," in section 1, declaring it unlawful "to sell or tipple" any intoxicating liquors as a beverage within four miles of such a schoolhouse, denotes a subdivision of the more comprehensive term "sale," as used in the title, and its equivalent "to sell" as used in the body; and the word "or," between "sell" and "tipple," is used in a disjunctive sense, the prohibition not being against tipple sales alone, but as well against any other sales; and the words "as a beverage" refer to a sale of liquor, not necessarily to be consumed by the immediate purchaser, but to be finally used, when it reached the consumer, as a beverage, so that a sale in wholesale quantities of intoxicating liquors, by a manufacturer thereof to a wholesaler, with only a general and promiscuous purpose, includes a beverage sale, within the prohibition of the statute. J. W. Kelly & Co. v. State, 132 S. W. 193, 195, 123 Tenn. 516.

The word "tipple," in the act of 1877, means to sell to be drunk at the place of sale. State v. Wilson, 91 S. W. 195, 198, 115 Tenn. 725 (quoting and adopting the definition in Harney v. State [Tenn.] 8 Lea, 113).

TIPPLING HOUSE OR SHOP

See, also, Grogshop.

A "tippling house" is a place where spirituous liquors are sold and drank in violation of law (Bouv. Law Dict.); or, as defined by this court under our statute, a place where spirituous liquors are sold without license in less than a quart, or in any quantity to be drank at the place (Dunnaway v. State [Tenn.] 9 Yerg. 350; Sanderlin v. State [Tenn.] 2 Humph. 315). The word "tipple," in the act of 1877, means to sell to be drank at the place of sale. State v. Wilson, 91 S. W. 195, 198, 115 Tenn. 725 (quoting and adopting the definition in Harney v. State [Tenn.] 8 Lea, 113).

In some jurisdictions, there is a distinction made between a "dramshop" and a "tippling house," in others, no distinction is recognized. Both are places where intoxicating liquors may be purchased at retail. In a legislative sense, there is a recognized difference and distinction made between them in Missouri. The Legislature has designated a licensed place for the sale of intoxicating liquors as a dramshop, and to be a dramshop, as known to the law, it must be licensed. The charter of cities of the third class does not authorize the suppression of the dramshop known as such by the general law. Such cities have no power, either under the authority to suppress tippling houses or under the general law regulating dramshops, to adopt an ordinance making it unlawful for a keeper of a dramshop to allow women to enter the dramshop and obtain liquor. City of Joplin v. Jacobs, 96 S. W. 219, 119 Mo. App. 134.

Whether or not a "restaurant" is a dramshop or "tippling house" depends upon the character of the business that is carried on therein. Denver, City Ordinance 2, No. 102, § 1, providing that no person or corporation within the city shall directly or indirectly sell or give away any intoxicating malt liquors, to be drank on the premises or sold or given away, without a license obtained from the city, was applicable to a person who was a bona fide restaurant owner, and who sold liquor only to customers to be drank only in connection with a meal. Scanlon v. City of Denver, 88 Pac. 157, 38 Colo. 401.

A "tippling house" is a place where intoxicating liquors are sold and drank, where one may tipple or drink intoxicants at the place. The drinks may be either sold or taken away. Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 145, 19 Okl. 149.

The words "tippling shop," in Wilson's Case, 103, § 388, providing that the city council shall have power to regulate, prohibit, and suppress "tippling houses," etc., mean the modern common saloon, where liquors are kept and sold as a place to be drank at the bar, and it may be either a licensed or an unlicensed saloon. Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 144, 145, 19 Okl. 149.

A saloon or dramshop is a "tippling house," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 43, prohibiting the keeping open of a drinking shop on Sunday. State v. Meagher, 114 Mo. App. 266 (citing Webster v. Worcester, Dicts. and Bouv. Law Dict. defining "tippling house"; Werner v. Washington, 29 Fed. Cas. 705; Woods v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 1 B. Mon. 74; Hussey v. State, 28 S. E. 54; Williams v. State, 28 S. E. 624; Ga. 511, 39 L. R. A. 269; Mohrman v. State, 32 S. E. 143, 105 Ga. 709, 43 L. R. A. 70 Am. St. Rep. 74; State v. Heckler, 104 Mo. App. 417; State v. Kurtz, 64 Mo. App. 123; State v. Lucas, 67 S. W. 971, 94 Mo. App. 123.

A barroom is a "tippling house," within the law requiring such places to be closed on Sunday. Kolman v. State, 58 S. E. 1070, 2 Ga. App. 648.

See Restrictive Title.

Expressed in the title, see Express.

The "title" of an act is no part thereof; it may be looked to for aiding and determining the intent of the lawmakers. Proc. v. Territory, 92 Pac. 389, 390, 18 Okl.

The "title" of an act is no part thereof, and a law having no title is not invalid. Loewen v. Myers, 88 Pac. 1046, 1047, 18 Okl. 300 (citing Choctaw, O. & G. R. R. Co. v. Alexander, 7 Okl. 591, 54 Pac. 421).

The "title" of an act, within Const. art. 3, § 16, requiring that every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title, is a conclusive index to the legislative intention. The framers of the Constitution in using such term evidently meant that the title to the act should indicate both to the lawyer and the citizen the general scope and purpose of the legislative intent, and that such title should put the citizen on notice of the proposed legislation. State v. Coffin, 74 Pac. 962, 967, 9 Idaho, 338.

Under the Constitution, providing that the object of a statute must be single and must be expressed in its title, the "title" of an act is in the nature of a label by which the object of the act is displayed, and is not a table of contents, nor an index to everything that the statute enacts. Gottuso v. Baker, 77 Atl. 1038, 1039, 80 N. J. Law, 520.

The word "title," in Const. art. 3, § 35, providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, implies that the title need not be as full as the act itself. The purpose of the constitutional provision is merely to reasonably apprise the legislators of the contents of the bill, to the end that surprise and fraud in legislation may be prevented. The title of Laws 1901, c. 117, entitled "An act to prohibit railroad and railway companies or corporations from permitting Johnson grass or Russian thistles from going to seed on their right of way," and fixing a penalty, is sufficient to sustain a provision for damages to persons injured, and so much of the statute as authorizes a recovery of such damages is not in violation of the Constitution. Doepenschmidt v. International & G. N. R. Co., 101 S. W. 1080, 1081, 100 Tex. 532.

"Title" is the means whereby a man hath the just possession of his property. Holcombe v. Trenton White City Co., 82 Atl. 618, 634, 80 N. J. Eq. 122; Adams v. Hopkins, 77 Pac. 712, 717, 144 Cal. 19; Stryker v. Meagher, 107 N. W. 792, 76 Neb. 610 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Dict.); State v. Welde (S. D.) 135 N. W. 696, 701.

The word "title," as used in a deed from a mortgagor to a mortgagee, stipulating that the mortgage was not to be considered as merged in the title, but was to be held as protection to title, meant the title as it existed at the time of the conveyance, and which was then the subject of consideration. The purpose of this provision in the deed was to protect the grantee against any liens or charges on the title which might have intervened intermediate the execution of the mortgage and the deed. Coon v. Smith, 88 N. Y. Supp. 261, 262, 43 Misc. Rep. 112.

"In strictness, the word 'title' is applicable only to real estate; but it is also sometimes used to denote a similar attribute of personal property. When so used, it has a kindred meaning and contemplates some specific tangible thing having some resemblance to real property in its characteristics which justifies the borrowing of the term. It is rarely, if ever, used to denote the ownership or transitory and intangible objects." Jones v. Gould, 149 Fed. 153, 157, 80 C. C. A. 1.

The word "title" is sometimes used in the signification of a regular chain of transfer from or under the sovereignty of the soil. It is sometimes used in the sense of the particular conveyance under which a man holds his property. Fall v. Fall, 106 N. W. 412, 113 N. W. 175, 184, 75 Neb. 104, 121 Am. St. Rep. 767 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 6979).

Possession under a claim of ownership in itself constitutes "title" in a low degree. It is sufficient to give plaintiff standing to bring an action against those who have no title at all. Waller v. Julius, 74 Pac. 157, 68 Kan. 314.

"Possession" means actual control of property by physical occupation, while "title" is the means whereby one holds possession of his land. Collar v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 56, 60, 72 Misc. Rep. 274.

"Possession" is prima facie evidence of, and one of the elements of, title, and a court has no power to take it from a man without a hearing, since to do so would be to violate the maxim that no man shall be condemned in person or deprived of title without a day in court and due process. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. Ritz, 56 S. E. 257, 261, 60 W. Va. 395, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1225 (citing Bettman v. Harness, 26 S. E. 271, 42 W. Va. 433, 36 L. R. A. 566; Crossland v. Crossland, 44 S. E. 424, 53 W. Va. 108).

The word "title" in Comp. Laws 1909, § 5621, providing that, where a petition has been filed, the action is pending so as to charge persons with notice thereof, and while pending no interest can be acquired by a third person against the plaintiff's title to the subject-matter, includes an action or claim to enforce a vendor's lien. Holland v. Co-field, 112 Pac. 1032, 27 Okl. 469.

While Code Civ. Proc. § 1632, makes a conveyance on foreclosure a bar against each party to the action and every one claiming under him "by title accruing after the filing of notice of pendency of the action," the authority for filing the notice is section 1670, and its effect is prescribed in section 1671 as "constructive notice to a purchaser or incumbrancer of the property affected thereby," and the word "title" does not extend to that acquired by infants by inheritance. Gruner v. Ruffner, 119 N. Y. Supp. 942, 943, 134 App. Div. 837.

Plaintiff leased certain premises to defendant under a lease which expired May 1, 1912, and on June 16, 1911, plaintiff's agent wrote defendants, stating that at a meeting of the executive committee of the trustees of plaintiff corporation "it was voted to grant you, if you so desire, a lease of the premises now occupied by you for three years after the expiration of your present lease. * * * If you desire a five years lease they will be willing to grant two additional years * * * both under same conditions as present lease," to which defendants replied, requesting plaintiff's agents to "please to have a new lease made as per your letter of June 16th for three years, and the two year renewal clause at the prices mentioned," and stating that defendants would be in on the same day to sign the lease. Held, that such equitable rights as defendants acquired under such instruments did not constitute "title" in defendants, as that word was used in Gen. St. 1902, § 1081, providing that in actions of summary process, if it be found that defendant is plaintiff's lessee and holds over after the termination of his lease, etc., and defendant does not show a title in himself, judgment should be rendered for plaintiff, so that defendants could not rely on such instruments as a defense to summary proceedings. Giering & Bentley v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 84 Atl. 930, 932, 86 Conn. 208.

Under Civ. Code, arts. 2642, 2656, providing that delivery of an incorporeal right may affected by the giving of the title, and deriving that without delivery there is no giving in payment, a giving by a debtor and a receipt by the grantor of open accounts is a title, without notice to the debtors on the accounts; "title" meaning the material evidence of the incorporeal right, and an open account not being evidenced by such a title as to serve for the purpose of delivery. Lehman Dry Goods Co. v. Lemolne, 56 South. 324, 129 La. 382.

"Grantor had already used the necessary proper words to make an absolute, vest title by the instrument in his children, when he provided that the conveyance would not take effect until after his death, in the title should immediately vest, he necessarily meant, if we are to give effect to what he was doing, to use the word 'title' in connection as a synonym of 'possession,' which at his death should pass to the grantor. Such a construction comports, as we have shown, with the general tenor of the will, and is sanctioned by reason and authority." McLain et al. v. Garrison, 89 S. 284, 285, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 431.

Under Act June 4, 1897, providing that cases in which a tract covered by an unperfected bona fide claim or by a patent is included within the limits of a public forest reservation, the settler or owner may relinquish the tract to the government, and select thereout a tract of vacant land open to settlement, not exceeding in area the tract covered by his claim or patent, the owner herein referred to is one holding both the legal and equitable title to the patented land. At the time of the application for such exchange the officers of the land department should obtain knowledge from any source as to the title which the applicant proposed to relinquish was one obtained by the perpetration of fraud, it would be the duty of the department to reject the application, because the title which in the hands of such person is tainted with fraud, and therefore voidable, is not the kind of "title" which the law contemplates the government shall receive in exchange for its lands. United States v. Hyde, Fed. 545, 549.

Estate in fee

"Title" does not necessarily mean a fee estate, but covers all the lesser estates in land. Snodgrass v. Copple, 101 S. W. 1091, 203 Mo. 480 (quoting 8 Words and Cases, p. 6980).

As used in Laws 1882, c. 239, amending St. § 4269, providing that when defendant shall have in good faith acquired a title interest upon land, and enters under the same believing such title to be valid, and thereafter have cut timber therefrom, the plaintiff, if he shall recover, shall recover only the actual damage sustained by reason of such cutting. The word "title" does not mean a valid title in fee, but it must mean title apparently good, but which in fact for some reason is invalid. Befay v. Wheeler, 53 N. W. 1121, 1123, 84 Wis. 135.

As ownership

"Title" is the right to or ownership in land. The sale of land involved the sale of title, and is affected by the transfer of title. Titles sold and transferred may be good, bad, or doubtful, absolute or limited. The same title may be satisfactory to one purchaser and not to another. One might be quite willing to buy a doubtful title, while another would not be satisfied with a marketable title so limited as to involve a special risk of litigation in his use of the property purchased." Lieberman v. Beckwith, 65 Atl. 153, 154, 79 Conn. 317, 8 Ann. Cas. 271.

The term "title," used in speaking of an abstract of title to land, means "ownership." A contract to sell real estate, which requires the vendor to furnish "a complete abstract of title * * * in ample time" for the purchaser to have the same examined within a specified time, "and if said title is found to be good" the vendor shall execute a deed, and the purchaser shall pay part cash and execute notes for the balance, requires the vendor to furnish an abstract of title showing good title before the purchaser is obliged to do anything under the contract, or before he incurs any liability thereunder. Bowles v. Umberson (Tex.) 101 S. W. 842, 844.

As right of possession

The legal "title" to real property carries with it the right of possession, which is sufficient under Rev. Laws 1905, § 4073, to authorize an action to recover the same from one in possession without right or title. Norton v. Frederick, 119 N. W. 492, 494, 107 Minn. 36.

The term "title," in Comp. Laws 1897, providing that any claim of title to lands made by plaintiff in his declaration shall be deemed to be admitted by defendant, unless he files a bond and pays fees, costs, etc., does not embrace the fact of possession, nor any right founded on possession of land. It is synonymous with the right of possession. An allegation in a declaration in an action of trespass, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 11204, to recover damages for cutting down and carrying away trees, that defendant cut down and carried away without leave of plaintiff, "the owner thereof, * * * trees of great value, * * * then and there being and standing * * * on the land of said plaintiff," is not an allegation of title to the land on which the trees stood, within the meaning of section 786. Reynolds v. Maynard, 100 N. W. 174, 175, 137 Mich. 42.

Claim or grant distinguished

A "claim" is, not only legally speaking, but in ordinary parlance, clearly distinguishable from a "grant" or a "title." A "claim" is defined in the Century Dictionary (verbo "Claim") as "the thing claimed or demanded ; specifically, a piece of public land which a squatter or settler marks out for himself with the intention of purchasing it when the government offers it for sale; as, 'he staked out a claim.'" "A 'grant,' on the contrary, has a distinctly broader meaning. It implies an acquired right, and is described by Mr. Bouvier as applicable to the conveyance of incorporeal rights. But in the larger sense the term comprehends anything that is granted or passed from one to another, and is applied to every species of property. It therefore necessarily implies a 'title' or vested right in the grantee from the grantor, or has a much more pregnant signification than 'claim.'" Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 35 South. 747, 754, 111 La. 563.

Interest distinguished.

The word "interest," as used in a fire insurance policy declaring that the policy shall be void if any change shall take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, is not synonymous with title, but means some right different from title. It cannot mean a greater estate than title, since title, as used in the policy, is intended to mean estate. The word must therefore be used in contradiction to "title," as including any right in the property less than title. Therefore, if the insured is the owner of the title, the word "interest" has no application. Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 84 Pac. 717, 718, 73 Kan. 127, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 9 Ann. Cas. 459.

The word "interest," when applied to property, has a variable meaning. It may be used as synonymous with "estate" or "title," or may denote something less than an estate or title. The word "interest," as used in an insurance policy, is not synonymous with "title." It means some right different from "title." It cannot mean a greater estate than "title," since "title" is used to mean the entire estate in such a policy, and, when used in contradiction of title, means any right in property less than title, and the word "interest" as used in a judgment holding that plaintiff's title to certain real estate is valid, and that defendants had no right or claim thereto and no estate or interest therein, is sufficient to cover a mortgage lien. Hillyard v. Bancher, 118 Pac. 67, 69, 85 Kan. 516.

The words "interest" and "title," as used in a policy, which provides that it is to be void if any change other than by death of insured takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insured, are not synonymous. The word "interest" is broader and more comprehensive than the word "title." It embraces both a legal and equitable right. The doctrine contended for, that when the condition is against a change in the title there is no breach unless there is a change in the legal title, and that since the insured retains the legal title the policy is not avoided by a transfer of the equitable title, cannot be applied to a condition against a change of interest. The true test is whether the vendor has dominion over the property insured, and, if he has, a change in interest has been affected and the policy is void. Brickell v. Atlas Assur. Co., 101 Pac. 16, 19, 10 Cal. App. 17 (quoting Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 113 App. Div. 728; Id., 82 N. E. 1124, 189 N. Y. 526).

There is a change of "title," as well as of "interest" and "possession," within a fire policy declaring it void in case of any change in the interest, title, or possession of the insured property, where insured, the owner in fee of the insured property, makes a contract of sale of it, declaring that deed shall pass when final payment is made, and that the purchaser shall pay all taxes and assessments levied against the property subsequent to contract, and shall have the right to occupy the property before passing of title, as tenant of the seller, without pay, and the purchaser goes into possession and is not in default. The word "interest" is broader and more comprehensive than the word "title," since it embraces both legal and equitable rights, and the words are not synonymous. The true test is whether the vendor has parted with the absolute control and dominion over the property insured. In this case, there was a change in possession within the meaning of that word as used in the policy. While the agreement designates the occupancy of the vendee as that of a tenant of the vendor without pay or rent, the contract gives and secures to him more than the rights and interests of a tenant. He is charged with the liabilities, and entitled to enforce the rights, of a purchaser in possession, and cannot be ejected as a tenant regardless of such rights. The possession of the vendee is absolute and exclusive of the vendor, as long as he performs the contract. Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 221 (citing Lett v. Guardian Fire Ins. Co., 125 N. Y. 82, 25 N. E. 1088).

Receiver's receipt

"Although 'title' does not finally pass from the United States until the issuance of a patent, it is well settled that the receiver's receipt issued to a homestead entryman in possession and claiming land under Rev. St. U. S. § 2290, constitutes ample 'title' to enable him to maintain or defend a suit concerning the land." Thompson v. Basler, 84 Pac. 161, 148 Cal. 646, 113 Am. St. Rep. 321.

TITLE BOND

Though a "title bond" cannot take the place of a recorded deed, and is insufficient to pass the legal title, it gives the holder an equitable right superior to a claim of title upon the part of a purchaser or creditor with notice. Where a bond for title was executed, in which the vendee agreed to pay the price work as a mechanic to be performed on a mill at the vendor's election, at any time within five years from date, and no part of the work was done on the mill, because it was abandoned by the vendors, but it was agreed at the value of certain work and material furnished by the vendee in the erection of a dwelling house for one of such vendors should be credited on the price, the vendee was entitled to a conveyance on payment of the consideration in money, less the value of the work and materials furnished for the house, dated as of the date they were furnished. McGuire v. Whitt (Ky.) 80 S. W. 474, 475.

TITLE BY ADVERSE POSSESSION

A "title acquired by adverse possession" is a title in fee simple, and is as perfect a title as one by deed from the original owner by patent or grant from the government. Cornely v. Andrews, 82 Pac. 899, 901, 40 Wash. 580, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, 111 Am. St. p. 983 (citing 1 Cyc. 1135, B; 1 Am. & Eng. c. of Law [2d Ed.] 883).

TITLE BY LIMITATION OR PRESCRIPTION

The essential elements constituting "title limitation" are defined by Rev. St. 1895, s. 3343, 3347, 3348, 3349, declaring that any person who has the right of action for the recovery of any lands shall institute his suit before within ten years after the accrual of his cause of action, etc. Logan v. Meads, S. W. 210, 212, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 477.

Possession of land for over 15 years, to constitute "title by prescription or limitation," must be hostile and adverse as against the owner. One who has title to a quarter section, and by mistake as to the boundary line occupies a strip in an adjoining section owned by another, without any intention to take or hold land beyond the section line, or to occupy land which does not belong to him, will not acquire title to such strip by adverse possession. Scott v. Williams, 87 Pac. 550, 551, Kan. 448.

TITLE BY POSSESSION

Rights arising under the mining laws of the United States are classified as title in fee simple, "title by possession," and the common equitable possession. The first vests in the grantee an indefeasible title, while the second vests a title in the nature of an easement only. The first, being an absolute grant by purchase and obtained without condition, is not defeasible; while the second, being a mere right of possession and enjoyment of the land without purchase and upon condition, may be defeated at any time by the failure of the party in possession to complete the condition, viz., to perform the labor or make the improvements required by the statute. O'Connell v. Pinnacle Gold Mines Co., 131 Fed. 106, (quoting and approving definition given in Enson Mining & Smelting Co. v. Alta Min- ing & Smelting Co., 145 U. S. 428, 12 Sup. Ct. 877, 36 L. Ed. 762).

TITLE BY RELATION

See Relation (In Contract, Conveyance, or other Transaction).

TITLE GUARANTEED

By the phrase "title guaranteed," in a receipt for the purchase price of land, the vendors impliedly agreed to convey a good and sufficient title. Goldstein v. Hensley, 88 Pac. 507, 508, 4 Cal. App. 444.

TITLE IN FEE

A "title in fee" is a full and absolute estate beyond which and outside of which there is no other interest or right. Balley v. Henry, 143 S. W. 1124, 1127, 125 Tenn. 390.

Under Laws 1895, c. 986, authorizing the taking of land for the construction of a bridge and approaches by title in fee, the term "title in fee" must be construed in the light of the purposes for which the statute was enacted; and hence the lands taken for the bridge and its structural approaches were necessarily taken in fee simple absolute, because their taking was accompanied by a physical entry and appropriation on the part of the city, to the exclusion of the public and adjoining owners, but in the case of land taken for widening of streets and changing of street lines, because this was simply a taking of "title in fee" for the purposes to which such lands were to be devoted, that is, for streets in which the adjoining owners and the general public would have the easements pertaining to public streets. In re Harlem River Bridge, 66 N. E. 584, 586, 174 N. Y. 28.

TITLE INSURANCE

"The sole object of 'title insurance' is to cover possibilities of loss through defects that may cloud or invalidate titles." It "is not mere guesswork, nor is it a wager. It is based upon careful examination of the muniments of title and the exercise of judgment by skilled conveyancers. A policy of 'title insurance' means the opinion of the company which issues it as to the validity of the title, backed by an agreement to make that opinion good in case it should prove to be mistaken, and loss should result in consequence to the insured." "Title insurance" is "a contract to indemnify against loss through defects in the title to real estate or liens or incumbrances thereon." Foehrenbach v. German-American Title & Trust Co., 66 Atl. 561, 563, 217 Pa. 331, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 118 Am. St. Rep. 916 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Cooley, Ins. 12).

TITLE LEGALLY INSUFFICIENT

A stipulation that the purchaser will buy, unless the title be "legally insufficient," means no more than a marketable title, and cannot support the construction that the vendor undertook to sell a title which appeared perfect on the records, or to make a showing of title deeds which were entitled to record. Cowdery v. Greenlee, 55 S. E. 918, 920, 126 Ga. 786.

TITLE OF NOBILITY

See Confer Title of Nobility.

TITLE OR BOUNDARIES OF LAND

An action for damages for fraud inducing a purchase of realty does not affect the "title or boundaries of land," within St. 1893, § 1562 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 1872), providing that the probate court shall not have jurisdiction of any matter wherein the "title or boundaries of land" may be in dispute. Newell v. Long-Bell Lumber Co., 78 Pac. 104, 14 Okl. 185.

TITLE OR INTEREST

The phrase "disclaim any title or interest," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4779, providing that where defendants "disclaim any title or interest" in land, the subject-matter of the action, they shall recover their costs, is not satisfied by a defendant limiting his disclaimer to "any right or interest in his own right," where he has an inchoate interest by virtue of his marital relations. Moore v. Wallace, 82 Pac. 825, 16 Okl. 114.

TITLE PAGE

A preliminary page in a periodical which followed advertisements and preceded general reading matter, containing in display type the name of the publication and also the volume, number, and date of the issue, and a copy of which was deposited as the title to obtain copyright protection, must be considered the "title page" within the meaning of Act June 18, 1874, c. 301, 18 Stat. 78, upon which or the page following the copyright notice is required to be printed, rather than a subsequent page containing the title in smaller type but without volume, number, or date, and the printing of such notice on the latter page only was not such a compliance with the express requirement of the statute as will sustain an action for infringement. Freeman v. The Trade Register, 173 Fed. 419, 424.

TITLE TO REAL ESTATE

It is now well settled "that to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction under Const. art. 6, § 12, because the 'title to real estate' is involved, it must appear that the title to real estate will, in some way, be directly affected by the judgment to be rendered in the case. It is not sufficient that the question of title may be incidentally, collaterally, or necessarily inquired into, to settle the issues. The judgment to be rendered must directly affect the title itself to the real estate. If the judgment rendered by the lower court could be satisfied by the payment of money, without affecting the title to real estate, the case would not fall within our appellate jurisdiction under this provision of the Constitution." Lawson v. Hammond, 90 S. W. 431, 433, 191 Mo. 522 (quoting and adopting definition in Price v. Blankenship, 45 S. W. 1124, 144 Mo. 209, and citing Rothrock v. Cordz-Fisher Lumber Co., 47 S. W. 907, 146 Mo. 57, Bradley v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 49 S. W. 867, 147 Mo. 634; Edwards v. Missouri, K. & E. Ry. Co., 50 S. W. 89, 148 Mo. 513; Force v. Van Patton, 50 S. W. 906, 149 Mo. 446; Bethune v. Cleveland, St. L. & K. C. Ry. Co., 51 S. W. 465, 149 Mo. 606; Cox v. Barker, 51 S. W. 1051, 150 Mo. 424; Bonner v. Lisenby, 57 S. W. 735, 157 Mo. 165; Ozark Land & Lumber Co. v. Robertson, 59 S. W. 69, 158 Mo. 322; Turney v. Sparks, 59 S. W. 73, 158 Mo. 365; Bruner Granitoid Co. v. Klein, 70 S. W. 687, 170 Mo. 225; Klingelhoef v. Smith, 71 S. W. 1008, 171 Mo. 455; Balz v. Nelson, 72 S. W. 527, 171 Mo. 682; Porter v. Kansas City & N. C. R. Co., 74 S. W. 992, 175 Mo. 96; State ex rel. South Missouri Pine Lumber Co. v. Dearing, 79 S. W. 454, 180 Mo. loc. cit. 63; Christopher v. People's Home & Sav. Ass'n, 79 S. W. 899, 180 Mo. 568; State ex rel. Reed v. Elliot, 79 S. W. 696, 180 Mo. 658).

A dispute regarding boundaries does not in a proper sense involve the "title to real estate," and hence a jury trial in such cases cannot be demanded as a matter of right. Mathis v. Strunk, 85 Pac. 590, 591, 73 Kan. 595.

An action which has for its object, in part, the setting aside of a deed of trust of real estate as without consideration and fraudulently procured, involves "title to real estate," and an appeal therein to the Court of Appeals must be certified to the Supreme Court. Long v. Greene County Abstract & Loan Co., 122 S. W. 3, 138 Mo. App. 321.

A suit to set aside a deed for fraud directly involves "title to real estate," within the Constitution, defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and when appealed to the Court of Appeals will be transferred to the Supreme Court. Schroeder v. Turpin, 122 S. W. 1, 138 Mo. App. 320.

An appeal from an order sustaining a motion to quash an execution levied on real estate claimed by defendant to be exempt as his homestead, before the sale of the property, did not involve the "title to real estate," so as to confer appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court. Lawson v. Hammond, 90 S. W. 431, 433, 191 Mo. 522.

A case presenting the question whether one is entitled to a homestead right in certain land, so that it will be exempt from execution, does not involve "title to real estate," within Const. art. 6, § 12, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction in cases involving "title to real estate," for to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction it must appear that the "title to real estate" will in some way be directly affected by the judgment to be rendered in the case. Snodgrass v. Copple, 101 S. W. 1090, 1091, 203 Mo. 480.

"Title to real estate" is generally defined to be "the means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property." Hefferman v. Scholder, 119 N. Y. Supp. 520, 524, 134 App. Div. 579.

Where real estate is held under and by virtue of some right in the property, so that the right of possession cannot be determined without adjusting the right in the property itself, then the "title to real estate" is "drawn in question," within the meaning of the statute, stating that "justice courts cannot try actions which involve title to real estate, or in which such title is drawn in question." Stone v. Blanchard, 126 N. W. 766, 768, 87 Neb. 1.

In cases of pure trespass on lands, "title to real estate" is not so involved as to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court under Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218), though it may be incidentally involved, and must be shown on trial. Hill v. Hopson, 120 S. W. 29, 31, 221 Mo. 103.

As by

"To the tenant," as used in Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3238, providing that a preference lien for unpaid rents on the goods of a tenant, given by article 3251, shall not attach to goods sold and delivered in good faith in the regular course of business to the tenant, should be construed to read "by the tenant," to carry out the evident intention of the Legislature. Freeman v. Collier Racket Co., 105 S. W. 1129, 1130, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 177 (citing Marsalls v. Pitman, 5 S. W. 404, 68 Tex. 627).

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3251, provides for a preference lien for unpaid rent on the goods of a tenant. Article 3238 provides that such lien shall not attach to goods sold and delivered in good faith in the regular course of business "to the tenant." Held, that the quoted words would be construed to read "by the tenant," to carry out the evident intention of the Legislature. Freeman v. Collier Racket Co., 105 S. W. 1129, 1130, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 177.

As exclusive or inclusive

The word "to," employed in an act fixing the boundaries of a right of way to Salt Lake City, is a word of exclusion, and excludes the terminus of the railroad, which was then located near the business portion and center of the city. Moon v. Salt Lake County, 76 Pac. 222, 224, 27 Utah, 435.

The description in a notice of sale for taxes of the property as lots "1 to 24," does not exclude lot 24 by reason of the use of the word "to," as such word is not necessarily a term of exclusion, but one whose meaning is to be ascertained by the reason and sense in which it is used. Stough v. Reeves, 95 Pac. 958, 959, 42 Colo. 432.

The expression in a grant, "to the head of the cove, thence around the western side of the cove," includes the cove and the flats. Whitmore v. Brown, 61 Atl. 985, 987, 100 Me. 410.

The description in a grant, "to the shore and then by the shore," unqualified, excludes the shore which is the flats between high and low water mark; the words "to the shore" being a phrase of exclusion. Whitmore v. Brown, 61 Atl. 985, 987, 100 Me. 410 (citing Dunton v. Parker, 54 Atl. 1115, 97 Me. 461; Proctor v. Maine Central R. R. Co., 52 Atl. 933, 96 Me. 458).

The word "to" has no one specific meaning in a legal sense though it is generally a word of exclusion. Thus, if a boundary of land extends to a field the field itself will not to be included in the boundary. Bloch Queensware Co. v. Smith, 80 S. W. 592, 593, 107 Mo. App. 13.

Same—Computation of time

"* * * The word 'until' (or 'to') will be treated as inclusive if a purpose to use it in that sense is manifest." The affidavits to the effect that, when an order was made extending a time, to settle the bill of exceptions until December 4th, the court had been adjourned to December 3d, that it was not certain that the judge would arrive at the county seat before the close of business hours on that day, and that it was understood that court would be in session on the 4th, afforded no ground for interpreting the order as including the 4th as a part of the time within which the bill might be settled. State v. Burton, 78 Pac. 413, 414, 70 Kan. 199 (citing and distinguishing State v. Bradbury, 74 Pac. 231, 67 Kan. 808; State v. Horine, 78 Pac. 411, 70 Kan. 256).

Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines the word "to" as a term of exclusion, unless by necessary implication it is manifestly used in a different sense. Webster recognizes the words "to," "till," and "until" as synonymous in the sense here used. The Century Dictionary gives like recognition as to the use of these words. Where on the 25th day of February plaintiff in error was allowed to the 15th day of March to make and serve a case for the Supreme Court, the time granted expired at 12 o'clock midnight March 14th. Maynes v. Gray, 76 Pac. 443, 69 Kan. 49, 105 Am. St. Rep. 146, 2 Ann. Cas. 518.

"To," used as a conjunction, being synonymous with "till" or "until," permission to file a brief, extended "to March 3d," expires March 2d, as affecting appellee's right to dismissal of the appeal. Myers v. Winona In- terurban Ry. Co., 98 N. E. 131, 132, 50 Ind. App. 258 (citing 8 Words & Phrases, p. 6985).

Act Aug. 31, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 305), provided that respondent's term as jury commissioner under appointment made by the Governor ran "till the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January, 1911," and that on the expiration of each term the Governor should appoint successors who should hold office for three years from the expiration of the term of their respective predecessors. Held, that the word "till" meant "up or down to; as far as; until," the words "to," "till," and "until" being synonymous, and, "until" being primarily a word of exclusion, respondent's term did not include any part of the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January, and hence, since the term of the existing Governor did include that day, there was a vacancy in the office of jury commissioner which the Governor had power to fill by appointment. Oberhaus v. State ex rel. McNamara, 55 South. 898, 902, 173 Ala. 483.

An entry of an appeal "to the January term" means to the first day of the term; no particular date being mentioned. Swain v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co., 38 South. 3, 49 Fla. 397.

The word "to" has no one specific meaning in a legal sense, though it is generally a word of exclusion. Its meaning is ascertained from the reason and sense in which it is used. Generally, if the time named as limiting an extension is designated by a word which includes an extended and indefinite number of days, as to a certain term of court, then the word "to" would limit the time to the first day of such period. "To the October term," where the time to file a bill of exceptions is extended to that time, means to the first of the term—that is, up to and including the first day; and if it is not filed until the second day of that term it is too late. Bloch Queensware Co. v. Smith, 80 S. W. 592, 593, 107 Mo. App. 13.

As into

The word "to" means "into"; as, where a corporation was authorized to construct a road to the city of Hudson, the word "to" meant "into." People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 601, 137 Mich. 399 (citing President, etc., of Farmers' Turnpike Road v. Coventry, 10 Johns [N. Y.] 389).

In a conveyance the words "to," "on," "by," "at," "along," a nontidal stream presumptively carry title as far into the stream as the grantor possesses. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

The incorporation of a railroad to run from one place "to" another place does not require it to stop at the corporate limits of the latter place; but it may fix its terminus at such location in that place as shall be agreed upon between it and the municipal authorities. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Union Springs & N. R. Co., 39 South. 473, 474, 144 Ala. 639, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 144 (citing Miles, Em. Dom. § 115; President, etc., of Farmers' Turnpike Road Co. v. Coventry [N. Y.] 10 Johns. 389; Rio Grande R. Co. v. City of Brownsville, 45 Tex. 88).

As of

Of construed as to, see Of.

Defendant employed plaintiff as a traveling salesman, agreeing to pay a salary of $1,800 per year, to allow $1,200 for traveling expenses, and to pay a commission of 5 per cent. in excess "to $40,000" sales made by plaintiff and shipped by defendant. Held, that the use of the word "to" was a mere grammatical error, the intention of the parties being that plaintiff was only to receive commissions on sales made by him in excess of $40,000, and that the preposition "to" should give place to "of" with which it was synonymous. Ettenson v. Mendelson, 133 N. Y. Supp. 283, 284, 75 Misc. Rep. 307.

As on or over

Where a bonus contract provided for payment when the electric railway line was put in operation from B. "to the strip of land above described," it did not require that the road should be operated "on or over" such strip. Boise Valley Const. Co. v. Kroeger, 105 Pac. 1070, 1072, 17 Idaho, 384, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968.

As within

The word "to" means within, not up to. A street railroad company was required to run its cars to a certain village. It was not a compliance to construct its road up to the boundary line of the village. Houghton County St. Ry. Co. v. Common Council of Village of Laurium, 98 N. W. 393, 395, 135 Mich. 614.

Where a resolution provides for a sewer from Seventy-First street "to" Seventy-Third street, and the ordinance provides for a sewer from Seventy-First street to the main sewer in Seventy-Third street, which street is 66 feet wide with the main sewer in the middle, there is no variance between the resolution and the ordinance, as the word "to" as used in the resolution may be properly held to mean to a point within Seventy-Third street. City of Chicago v. McChesney, 88 N. E. 560, 561, 240 Ill. 174 (citing And. Law Dict. 1037; President, etc., of Farmers' Turnpike Road v. Coventry [N. Y.] 10 Johns. 389; McCartney v. Chicago & Evanston Railroad Co., 112 Ill. 611).

TO AND ALONG

A deed conveying a lot, bounded on a highway, describing the lot by metes and bounds running "to and along the highway," carries the fee to the center of the highway. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Krueger, 74 N. E. 25, 26, 36 Ind. App. 348.

TO APPEAR OR ANSWER

See Held to Appear or Answer.

TO APPLY ON ACCOUNT

Where defendant's merchandise account with plaintiff included not only an original indebtedness for goods sold, which was partly secured by mortgage, also charges representing subsequent sales, remittances made by plaintiff "to apply on account" did not constitute a direction that the remittances be applied in payment of the subsequent charges, as distinguished from the items secured. "The import of the words 'to apply on account,' when referring to a remittance of a named sum, and not qualified by more definite terms, is simply that the payment made is a payment in part of a debt exceeding the amount then paid." Frutig v. Trafton, 83 Pac. 70, 71, 2 Cal. App. 47.

TO ARRIVE

See Selling to Arrive.

TO AUDIT

The meaning of the phrase "to audit," when applied to claims against towns, cities, or counties, is well understood. To audit is to hear, to examine an account, and in its broader sense it includes its adjustment or allowance, disallowance, or rejection. The verb "audit" as here used, means simply to examine, to adjust, and it clearly implies the exercise of judicial discretion. So whenever a board of auditors has the power to examine and adjust accounts against a town or city and acts within its jurisdiction, its decision, in the absence of fraud or collusion, is final. It cannot be attacked collaterally. Whether a claim is a proper charge, in a case where it is doubtful and rests upon disputed evidence, and what its amount shall be, are matters for the sole determination of the board. And, however mistaken it may be, so long as it keeps within its jurisdiction and acts in good faith, the audit of the board cannot be assailed. No court may question the exercise of its discretion or may re-examine the facts to determine whether it would have reached a different conclusion. City of Syracuse v. Roscoe, 123 N. Y. Supp. 403, 408, 66 Misc. Rep. 317 (citing People ex rel. Myers v. Barnes, 114 N. Y. 317, 20 N. E. 609, 21 N. E. 739; People ex rel. Hamilton v. Board of Sup'rs of Jefferson County, 35 App. Div. 242, 54 N. Y. Supp. 782; People ex rel. Brown v. Board of Apportionment and Audit, 52 N. Y. 224; People ex rel. Benedict v. Board of Sup'rs of Oneida County, 24 Hun, 413; People ex rel. Ryan v. Green, 5 Daly, 254).

TO BALANCE ACCOUNT

The words "to balance account," of which "to bal. acct." are well known abbreviations, when used by a debtor in connection with the payment of money to a creditor, mean the difference between the debits and credits of an existing unliquidated or disputed account, and are equivalent to the phrases "in full payment of account" and "in full of account." Lafrentz & Karstens Co. v. Cavanagh, 166 Ill. App. 306, 310.

TO BE

See Be—Being.

TO BE ADMINISTERED

The term "property to be administered," as used in a petition for the assessment of a transfer tax, is synonymous with "property subject to administration." In re Collins Estate, 93 N. Y. Supp. 342, 104 App. Div. 184.

TO BE BROUGHT WITHIN ONE YEAR

Revisal 1905, § 59, provides that where a person's death is caused by the wrongful act of another such as would have entitled the injured person, if living, to an action for damages therefor, the person or corporation causing the injury shall be liable to an action for damages, "to be brought within one year" after such death by decedent's administrator, etc. Held, that the words "to be brought within one year" constitute a condition annexed to the cause of action, and not a statute of limitation, which must be pleaded. Gulledge v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 60 S. E. 1134, 1135, 147 N. C. 234, 125 Am. St. Rep. 544.

TO BE DONE BY

Rev. Codes Mont. § 5653, provides that one who indemnifies another against an act to be done by the latter is liable jointly with the person indemnified, and separately to every person injured by such act. Held, that the phrase "to be done by" implies on the part of the indemnitee an agreement or obligation to commit the tort in question, as if the phrase were "an act required (or demanded or requested) to be done by" the indemnitee, and as so construed, the section is merely declaratory of the common law. Northam v. Casualty Co. of America, 177 Fed. 981, 984.

TO BE ELECTED

Under Civ. Code, § 305, providing that corporate powers must be exercised by a board of directors "to be elected" from among the holders of the stock of the corporation, a mortgage executed by a corporation's president and secretary, in pursuance of a resolution of its board of directors who were named in the articles of incorporation as its board of directors for the first year is valid. Middleton v. Arastraville Min. Co., 79 Pac. 889, 890, 146 Cal. 219.

TO BE PROSECUTED

Laws 1891, p. 109, § 3, providing that all questions relating to probate matters in the county court shall be determined by it, and from such decisions appeals or writs of certi-orari shall lie to the district court, "to be prosecuted" as in civil cases, is limited to the manner of perfecting the appeal or of completing the transfer by certiorari from the county court to the district court, and does not deal with the procedure in the district court, and does not repeal Mills' Ann. St. § 1034, for the words "to be prosecuted" cannot be construed as including the matters of procedure and the order of trial, or as applying to any of the other steps connected with the consideration and determination of the cause de novo in the district court. In re Shapter's Estate, 99 Pac. 35, 38, 44 Colo. 547.

TO BE USED

A provision in a deed that the premises conveyed to the trustees of a church and their successors forever are "to be used as a church location" does not operate as a condition or restriction limiting the use by the grantees to the purposes of a church location. Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N. E. 364, 365, 214 Ill. 342, 3 Ann. Cas. 36.

Where testator devised the remainder of his estate to his widow with full power to sell, exchange, invest, and reinvest the same, remainder to his children, the widow acquired no right to sell or dispose of the property during her life except as an incident to her life tenancy, and had no authority to encumber the property by lease or otherwise beyond the termination of her life estate; the words "to be used and disposed of during her life" meaning that she should have the control and management of the property as long as she lived. Powers v. Wells, 91 N. E. 717, 719, 244 Ill. 558.

By the phrase "to be used in common," as applied to an easement, it was intended that where the easement as such became appurtenant to the land conveyed, the right granted was not exclusive. O'Brien v. Murphy, 75 N. E. 700, 701, 189 Mass. 353.

The phrase "to be used or occupied," in Laws 1905, p. 131, providing that any person keeping any room and occupying the same with any book, instrument, or device to register bets on speed contests to take place within the state, or any person who registers such a bet, or, being the owner, lessee, occupant, or person in charge of any room, knowingly permits the same "to be used or occupied" for any such purpose, or therein keeps or employs any device for the purpose of recording such bets, or becomes the custodian for hire of any money for any purpose contrary to the provisions of the section, shall be guilty of a felony, implies that the building or booth is to be used or occupied by some person, and not used or occupied by a book, instrument, or device which could have no purpose of recording or registering a bet; and hence an indictment should charge who the person was whom accused permitted to use and occupy the room, but, if his name is unknown, should so charge and allege that such person used and occupied the room with a book, etc., for the purpose of registering bets. State v. Oldham, 98 S. W. 497, 502, 200 Mo. 538.

TO COME

As used in the Houston city charter of 1903 providing that all delinquent taxes due the city for the year 1875, up to and including the year 1896, and for all years to come, may be collected by suit, the words "to come" mean all coming after 1896. City of Houston v. Dooley, 89 S. W. 777, 778, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 371.

TO THE DAMAGE

The purpose of the conclusion in a declaration, "to the damage," is to give notice to defendant of the extent of plaintiff's claim, and where there is an entire absence of such conclusion it may be treated as notice to the defendant that nominal damages only will be insisted upon. Weber v. Morris & E. R. Co., 35 N. J. Law, 409, 414, 10 Am. Rep. 253.

TO EFFECT DEATH

See Effect Death.

TO EXCESS

The expression "to excess," in reference to the use of intoxicating liquors, is equivalent to "excessively" or "intemperately." Moore v. Prudential Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 368, 92 App. Div. 135.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD

While the deed in question contains the words that it "is not to take effect until the death of the grantors," it also contains the words "do hereby sell and convey," "to have and to hold," and "said party of the first part hereby covenants with the said party of the second part that he will warrant the title hereby conveyed." These words aptly convey a present estate, and it is not presumed that one part of the deed was intended to conflict with another. Its proper construction is that the grantee takes a present estate, vesting at the time of its delivery, but taking effect and possession of the father and mother (grantors). An instrument in the form of a deed, placed beyond recall in the hands of a third person and providing that it shall not take effect until the death of the grantor, in the absence of a controlling reason to the contrary, is to be construed to mean that the title is to vest at once; the enjoyment only being postponed until the death of the grantor. Nolan v. Otney, 89 Pac. 690, 691, 75 Kan. 311, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377 (quoting and adopting definition in Hunt v. Hunt, 82 S. W. 998, 119 Ky. 39, 68 L. R. A. 180, 7 Ann. Cas. 788).

The purpose of a habendum clause in a will, creating a trust and providing that each beneficiary, as he attains a specified age, may demand and receive a share of the trust property "to have and to hold" the same to him and his heirs forever, is to limit, define, and make clear the estate granted, and the clause shows testator's intention to give the beneficiaries a fee simple estate. In re Blake's Estate, 108 Pac. 287, 293, 157 Cal. 448.

Testator bequeathed all his property, real and personal, to his wife, to have, hold, use, and dispose of as she might see fit during her life, giving to her full power and authority to sell, convey, and transfer all or any part of the same, fully and absolutely, so as to pass complete title to purchasers or grantees from her, and that whatever of such property or its proceeds remained in her hands at her death should go to their daughters. Held, that though the words "to have and to hold," if standing alone, in connection with the words "during her life," would be effective to qualify the estate devised so as to vest the widow with a life estate only, yet when coupled with the words "use" and "dispose of" as she might see fit, they indicated that the whole title was intended for the widow's use and disposition, and hence the will conferred on her full authority to sell or mortgage the fee, under B. & C. Comp. §§ 5336, 5573, providing that a devise of real property shall be taken as a devise of all the testator's interest subject to his disposal, unless it clearly appeared from the will that he intended to devise a lesser estate. Bilger v. Nunan, 186 Fed. 665, 668.

TO ME KNOWN

A certificate of acknowledgment, reciting that the grantor was to the officer "personally known," imported merely an acquaintance with the person acknowledging the instrument, and was not the equivalent of a certificate that the individual acknowledging the instrument was "to me known," which was a certificate that the person acknowledging the instrument was known to the officer as the grantor of the deed on which the certificate was indorsed. Carolan v. Yoran, 93 N. Y. Supp. 935, 936, 104 App. Div. 488.

TO A MORAL CERTAINTY

It was not error to strike out the words quoted, in an instruction that the jury must be satisfied "to a moral certainty" beyond a reasonable doubt as to accused's guilt, since the words stricken were synonymous with the phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt." Stewart v. State, 115 S. W. 374, 375, 88 Ark. 602.

The expressions "beyond a reasonable doubt" and "to a moral certainty" are synonymous, and each simply means that the proof must be such as would satisfy the judgment and consciousness of the juror that the crime charged had been committed by the defendant and that no other reasonable conclusion was possible. People v. Bonifacio, 82 N. E. 1098, 1100, 190 N. Y. 150 (citing Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 439, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 706).

The phrases "to a moral and reasonable certainty" and "beyond a reasonable doubt," as applied to the quality of proof, are identical in meaning. Austin v. State, 64 S. E. 670, 6 Ga. App. 211.

TO SIXTY DAYS

The extension of time to make the case for this court "to sixty days" we construe to mean the same as if the word "to" had been omitted. Haas v. Tough, 72 Pac. 856, 857, 67 Kan. 253.

United States*, 21 Sup. Ct. 197, 200, 179 U. S. 470, 45 L. Ed. 277.

"Leaf tobacco consists of three classes, 'wrappers,' 'fillers,' and 'binders.' ## TOGETHER

See Live Together; Working Together.

The word "together," as used in Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 1343, defining fellow servants as all persons who are engaged in the service of such employer, and who, while so engaged, are in the same grade of service and working "together" at the same time and place to a common purpose, etc., means physical nearness at the time of the injury coupled with the common purpose of the labors of the two servants; the nearness required being only that which should arouse in the one a reasonable appreciation of probable danger from the neglect of the other. Lukic v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Fed. 135, 137.

TOGETHER WITH

Under a conveyance of upland adjoining a lake, "together with" certain rights and privileges to be exercised on the waters of the lake by the grantee, those rights and privileges were granted as appurtenant to the upland, and not in gross. Mitchell v. D'Olier, 53 Atl. 467, 68 N. J. Law, 375, 59 L. R. A. 949.

Under Comp. Laws, § 345, providing that, after the issuance of the patent on townsite land, the corporate authorities or judge to whom the patent shall issue shall execute to the persons entitled thereto, a deed in fee simple for such lots on payment of their due proportion of the purchase money, together with their proportion of such sum as may be necessary to pay for the streets, alleys, squares, and public grounds, not to exceed 50 cents for each lot, etc., the words "together with" show that the limitation of 50 cents was the maximum that could be apportioned to buy all the land within the townsite, inclusive of that within the streets, alleys, squares, and public grounds, and does not apply merely to the amount for the streets, alleys, squares, and public grounds. State ex rel. Jennett v. Stevens, 116 Pac. 601, 603, 34 Nev. 128.

Flats do not pass as appurtenant to the upland, when they are outside the express boundaries in the grant, even though the grant contains the words "together with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging." Smallidge v. Brown, 61 Atl. 985, 988, 100 Me. 410.

TOKEN

A passenger's ticket accepted as a fare is a mere token that the fare has been paid,

TOLERABLY

The word "tolerably," when used in law, is not necessarily synonymous with "reasonable." York v. City of Everton, 97 S. W. 604, 607, 121 Mo. App. 640.

TOLL

"To 'toll a title' does not mean to draw that title to another. Bouvier defines the term 'toll' as follows: 'To bar, defeat, or take away, as to toll an entry into lands is to deny or take away the right of entry.' 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 598. In its proper legal sense, the original title is tolled—that is, it is defeated and taken away; but it is not tolled in the sense of being kept alive and drawn to the adverse holder." Earnest v. Little River Land & Lumber Co., 75 S. W. 1122, 1126, 109 Tenn. 427.

Tax distinguished

A "toll" is different from a tax, as the former is payable at a locality where a passageway belonging to another has been used. State ex rel. Lacoste v. Vigneaux, 58 South. 135, 137, 130 La. 424.

A municipality sustains a dual relation to its streets and thoroughfares, that of sovereign and proprietor. In the latter capacity a municipality may under certain circumstances contract for the use of its streets. A municipal charge for the use of the streets for any lawful purpose is the exercise of the city's right of proprietorship, and is not the imposition of a privilege or license tax. "A tax is a demand of sovereignty. A 'toll' is a demand of proprietorship." But the grant of authority to a telegraph company to set its poles in the street for a fixed rental, when accepted and acted upon, became an irrevocable contract, and the city could not set it aside, or arbitrarily increase the rental above that obligated to be paid. City Council of Augusta v. Augusta & A. Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 992, 993, 130 Ga. 815, 124 Am. St. Rep. 197.

TOLL BRIDGE

As common carrier, see Common Carrier.
As highway, see Highway.

The fact that the upper portion of a bridge is used as a railroad bridge does not affect the character of the bridge as a "toll bridge," so as to require a toll bridge license. Southern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 37 South. 85, 89, 139 Ala. 629.

A bridge constituting an integral part of a railroad roadway is not a "toll bridge" because the railroad company illegally charges more for carrying persons over the bridge than for carrying them the same number of miles on either side of the bridge, and it is not taxable under Rev. St. 1899, § 9387 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4315), authorizing the taxation of toll bridges. State ex rel. Pearson v. Louisiana & M. R. R. Co., 114 S. W. 956, 959, 215 Mo. 479.

TOLL ROAD

As highway, see Highway.

"A 'toll road' is a public highway, differing from ordinary public highways chiefly in this: That the cost of its construction in the first instance is borne by individuals or by a corporation having authority from the state to build it, and, further, in the right of the public to use the road after its completion, subject only to the payment of toll. The acceptance by the corporation of the franchise to construct the road, and the operation thereof constitute a dedication of the same as a public highway." State ex rel. Hines v. Scott County Macadamized Road Co., 105 S. W. 752, 759, 207 Mo. 54, 13 Ann. Cas. 656 (citing Virginia Cañon Toll Road Co. v. People ex rel. Vivian, 45 Pac. 398, 22 Colo. 429, 37 L. R. A. 711).

TON

See Gross Ton; Long Ton; Per Ton.

Where a freight contract engaged steamship room between New York and Rio de Janeiro for "approximately 1500/2000 tons," electrical machinery and apparatus, and also contained the schedule fixing dead weight and space rates at the steamer's option, the word "ton" should be construed to mean a dead weight long ton, notwithstanding an option authorizing the ship to charge freight at space rates. Herr v. Tweedie Trading Co., 181 Fed. 483, 487, 104 C. C. A. 231.

STONE

See Overtones.

TONGS

See Skelping Tongs.

TONNAGE

See Registered Tonnage.

A contract with a proposed railroad, securing to it a percentage of all the "tonnage" moved by rail incident to the operation of salt works, and referring to the "tonnage" into and out of a city named, contemplates both the incoming and outgoing "tonnage" incident to the operation of the works. Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line Ry. Co. (Tex.) 86 S. W. 355, 362.

TONNAGE DUTIES

"Tonnage duties" are duties upon vessels in proportion to their capacities. Way v.

New Jersey Steamboat Co., 133 Fed. 188, 192 (citing Inman Steamship Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. Ed. 118).

"Duty of tonnage" is a charge for the purpose of entering, or trading, or lying in, a port or harbor, and can only be imposed by the government. Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. City of Parkersburg, 2 Sup. Ct. 732, 736, 107 U. S. 691, 696, 27 L. Ed. 584.

A city ordinance exacting from boats wharfage for each time of coming within the city harbor and landing at any public wharf, to be estimated upon the tonnage of the boats, and exempting boats from such wharfage when they land on portions of the wharf where no money has been expended by the city to facilitate the landing of vessels, does not exact a duty on tonnage within Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, cl. 3, prohibiting a state from laying any duty on tonnage without the consent of Congress, but provides merely for wharfage. City of St. Louis v. Eagle Packet Co., 114 S. W. 21, 26, 214 Mo. 638.

TONTINE INSURANCE

A "tontine contract" of insurance is a life policy, and, in addition an agreement by the insurer to hold all the premiums collected on the policies forming the class for a specified period called the "tontine period" or period of distribution, and after paying death losses, expenses, and other losses out of the fund so accumulated, to divide the remainder among those who are alive at the end of the tontine period, and who have maintained their policies in force. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Winn, 120 S. W. 153, 155, 137 Ky. 641, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558.

"Tontine insurance" is an agreement to divide the "surplus" to which all of a class had contributed, among those who outlived the term agreed upon, and who persisted as paying members. It is a species of hazard, in which the strong and the rich have the greater chance of winning, although they pay no more for it. The plan is forbidden altogether by the laws of some states. The "surplus" of a mutual life insurance company belongs equitably to the policy holders who contributed to it, in the proportion in which they contributed to it. Under section 88, c. 690, p. 1869, Laws 1892, of New York, the share of a policy lapsed for nonpayment of premium (after having been in force three years) must be applied to the purchase of extended insurance unless the policy holder has elected to take paid-up insurance therefor. The words "dividend additions" as used in the New York statute, refer to that part of the premiums charged which was "loaded" onto the premium in excess of its share of expenses and losses sustained. Such additions, and the earnings thereon, which constitute the "surplus," must be valued and applied in buying extended insurance for lapsed policies in force three years or longer, in the same way that the "reserve" of the policy is required to be valued and applied in purchasing such extended insurance. United States Life Ins. Co. in the City of New York v. Spinks (Ky.) 96 S. W. 889, 890, 894, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

A "tontine policy" is "a policy of insurance in which the policy holder agrees, in common with other policy holders under the same plan, that no dividend, return premium, or surrender value shall be received for a term of years, called the 'tontine period'; the entire surplus from all sources being allowed to accumulate to the end of that period, and then divided among all who have maintained their insurance in force." Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Waring, 44 S. E. 320, 332, 117 Ga. 599, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177 (quoting definition in Cent. Dict.).

TOO LOW

Farm Drainage Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 42, § 99) § 25, provides that, on appeal to the county court from the decision of the commissioners, the jury are authorized to find whether the land was marked too high or too low in the classification. Held, that the words "too low" refer to a case where a landowner has filed objections before the commissioners that the land of some owner other than himself has been classified too low and who is seeking to have the classification raised. People ex rel. Whitlock v. Green, 90 N. E. 248, 249, 242 Ill. 455.

TOO REMOTE

In an action for personal injuries, an objection to evidence as to what plaintiff's earning capacity was 20 years before as being "too remote" will be taken to mean that the time and place of such earning are too distant in time and space from where he was injured to have any relevancy to the issue as to impairment of earning capacity by reason of his injuries. El Paso Electric Ry. Co. v. Murphy, 109 S. W. 489, 490, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 586.

TOOK

In a slander action, there was a fatal variance between an allegation that defendant said that plaintiff "stole" a sheep from defendant's pasture, that defendant caught it and put it back, that there was wool on the fence where plaintiff took the sheep out, and that if defendant could make his child a witness he could make it "warm" for plaintiff, and proof that defendant said that plaintiff "took" the sheep, etc.; the word "stole" importing a crime, as the word "took" does not. Renaker v. Gregg, 144 S. W. 89, 90, 147 Ky. 368.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1916, providing that any person receiving stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen shall be punished, etc., it was not necessary that an information for such offense should allege that defendant "took" the goods into his possession for the purpose of aiding the thief, or with the fraudulent intent to deprive the owner thereof. State v. Richmond, 84 S. W. 880, 884, 186 Mo. 71.

The words "took, stole and carried away," in an instruction that defendant is guilty of grand larceny if she stole, took, and carried away the property, is bad in failing to state the nature of the taking, as the words are not as particular as the words used in a statute which requires that a taking must be wrongful and with a felonious intent in order to constitute a sufficient indictment. State v. Campbell, 18 S. W. 1109, 108 Mo. 611.

TOOLS—TOOLS OF TRADE

See Common Tool of Trade; Hand Tool; Simple Tool; Working Tools.

A bank burglar insurance policy, stipulating that insurer assumes responsibility for the felonious abstraction of money from the bank safe by any person who shall have made entry into the safe by means of tools or explosives directly thereon, and for money forcibly taken from the part of the bank partitioned off by guard rails for the use of its officers, but exempting the insurer from liability where there is an inner steel burglar-proof chest, unless the money is taken from the chest by an entry effected into it by the use of tools or explosives directly thereon, and for loss by robbery commonly known as hold-up, unless the working force is at work in the bank, does not make the insurer liable for a loss by hold-up at night, where after the money was put into the safe, and the force at the bank had left, an officer thereof was held up and required to open the bank and safe; the word "tool" referring to burglars' tools and explosives. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ballard County Bank (Ky.) 120 S. W. 301, 303.

Automobile

An automobile is not exempt from levy and attachment under 1 Civ. Code 1902, § 2631, as amended by the act approved February 20, 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 412), exempting from attachment "tools and implements of trade." Eastern Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, 64 S. E. 401, 82 S. C. 509.

As baggage

Bowling alley

A bowling alley is not exempt from execution under Gen. St. 1901, c. 38, § 3, subd. 8, as the necessary "tools and implements" of any person used in carrying on his trade or business. Williams v. Vincent, 79 Pac.

121, 122, 70 Kan. 595, 68 L. R. A. 634, 109 Am. St. Rep. 469.

Canoe

A bankrupt, who is a professional guide for hunters and fishermen, and as such registered under the laws of Maine, is entitled to the exemption of a canoe as a "tool" of his trade or occupation, under Rev. St. Me. c. 83, § 64, par. 6. In re Mullen, 140 Fed. 206, 207.

Coal

A "tool" is a mechanical implement—any implement used by a craftsman or laborer at his work. Where a contract for the excavation and refilling of a sewer trench provided that plaintiff should furnish all "labor and tools," and excavate the trench to the depth required, and that defendants should furnish all "suitable and proper material," coal used to generate power in plaintiff's engine, used in the work of excavation, was within the term "labor and tools," rather than the term "materials." Camardella v. Holmes, 89 N. Y. Supp. 616, 617, 97 App. Div. 120.

Cream separator

A cream separator is a "tool or instrument" of a farmer, within the meaning of Iowa Code, § 4008, and is exempt as such thereunder on his bankruptcy. In re Hemstreet, 139 Fed. 958, 960.

Hand car

A hand car used by a railroad company to transport its laborers cannot be held, as a matter of law, to be ipso facto a "tool" used by employes, in the sense that the company is relieved from inspecting it. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Tackett, 71 N. E. 524, 525, 33 Ind. App. 379.

Horse, harness, and buggy

The horse, harness, and buggy of an insurance agent, a resident of the state, and the head of a family, used and kept by him in carrying on the insurance business, and necessary to the successful prosecution of such business, are "tools and implements" used as such by the debtor for the purpose of carrying on his business, under a statute exempting the necessary tools and implements of any mechanic, miner, or other person, used and kept for the purpose of carrying on his trade or business. Wilhite v. Williams, 21 Pac. 256, 257, 41 Kan. 288, 13 Am. St. Rep. 281.

As merchandise

Paper cutter

A paper cutter, weighing 685 pounds, and a card cutter, weighing from 3 to 8 pounds, both being machines operated by hand, necessary in conducting the business of a printer, the head of a family residing in the state, are exempt, under Comp. Laws 1909, § 3346, subd. 5, providing that there shall be reserved to every family residing in the state, exempt from forced sale for payment of debts, all "tools," apparatus, etc., belonging to and used in a trade. Brummage v. Kenworthy, 112 Pac. 984, 985, 27 Okl. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 607.

Potato planter, sprayer, or digger

A potato planter, sprayer, or digger, mounted on wheels and drawn by animals, is not exempt from attachment, under Rev. St. c. 83, § 64, par. 6, as a "tool necessary for the debtor's trade or occupation"; the statute not being designed to protect an extensive trade. Martin v. Buswell, 80 Atl. 828, 829, 108 Me. 263.

Rifle

A bankrupt, who is a professional guide for hunters and fishermen, and as such registered under the laws of Maine, is not entitled to the exemption of a rifle as a "tool" of his trade or occupation under Rev. St. Me. c. 83, § 64, par. 6. In re Mullen, 140 Fed. 206.

Saw machinery

A traction engine and the appliances commonly used in connection with such an engine for sawing wood and making lumber are "tools and implements" exempt to an owner who is a resident of the state and the head of a family, under Gen. St. 1901, § 3018, subd. 8. Reeves & Co. v. Bascue, 91 Pac. 77, 76 Kan. 333, 123 Am. St. Rep. 137.

Tram railroad

A tram railroad was not a "tool" nor a "machine," nor an "appliance" of a manufacturing business, within Rev. St. 1899, § 8486, taxing manufacturers on tools, machinery, and appliances. State ex rel. Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Pulliam, 135 S. W. 443, 444, 283 Mo. 229.

Watch and chain

A watch and chain are not exempt as a timepiece constituting a part of the "tools of trade" of a barber, where among such tools there was also a clock. In re Everleth, 129 Fed. 620.

TOPMAN

In the construction of a bridge, a man employed to hook chains from a derrick to the stone on a freight car, so as to enable the derrick to lift the stones off of the cars, was called a "topman," and the term "booker," when used in connection with railroad work and dealing with the construction of bridges, is equivalent to the term "topman." Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Harrell (Ind.) 66 N. E. 1016, 1017.

TOPPING LIFT

The "topping lift," the breaking of which caused the injury sued for, was used to hold up a boom by which a heavy skid was to be raised from a lighter, so as to bring one end of it to the rail of a ship, to facilitate discharge of cargo into the lighter. It consisted of a wire cable, which extended from the end of the boom to a block on the mast, and thence to the deck. The King Gruffydd, 131 Fed. 189, 65 C. C. A. 495.

TORMENT

Revisal 1905, § 3299, relating to cruelty to animals, enumerates as subjects protected from cruelty any useful beast, fowl, or animal, and provides that the words "torture," "torment," or "cruelty" shall include every act, omission, or neglect whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is permitted. Held, that poisoning chickens is within the purview of the statute. State v. Bossee, 59 S. E. 879, 145 N. C. 579.

Liability for tort as debt, see Debt.

Pollock, in his treatise on Torts, defines a "tort" to be "an act or omission (not being merely a breach of duty arising out of a personal relation or undertaken by contract) which is related to harm suffered by a determinate person in the following ways: (1) It may be an act which, without lawful justification or excuse, is intended by the agent to cause harm, and does cause the harm complained of; (2) it may be an act in itself contrary to law, or omission of specific legal duty which causes harm not intended by the person so acting or omitting; (3) it may be an act or omission causing harm which the person so acting or omitting did not intend to cause, but might and should, with due diligence, have foreseen and prevented; (4) it may, in special cases, consist merely in not avoiding or preventing harm which the party was bound absolutely or within limits to avoid or prevent. A special duty of this kind may be (1) absolute; (2) limited to answering for harm which is assignable to negligence. In some positions a man becomes, so to speak, an insurer to the public against a certain risk; in others, he warrants only that all has been done for safety that reasonable care can do." Drum v. Miller, 47 S. E. 421, 423, 135 N. C. 204, 65 L. R. A. 890, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528.

"Tort" is an actionable wrong, and may result from an intentional or willful act or from negligence, and a tortious act consists of the commission or omission of an act by one without right, whereby another receives some injury in person, property, or reputation. Western-Union Telegraph Co. v. Ford, 70 S. E. 65, 67, 8 Ga. App. 514 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7007).

Conduct, though improper and causing a loss to another, is not a "tort," unless a legal, as distinguished from a moral, right is violated, and the damage conforms to the legal standard, except where it is presumed, as in the case of nominal damages. Hardison v. Reel, 70 S. E. 463, 464, 154 N. C. 273, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098.

One commits a "tort" and becomes liable therefor in damages, where he commits some act unauthorized by law, or omits something which by law he ought to do, and by such act or omission either infringes some absolute right of another or causes such other person some substantial loss of money, health, or material comfort, beyond that suffered by the rest of the public. Acker, Merrill & Condit Co. v. McGaw, 68 Atl. 17, 20, 106 Md. 536.

The word "torts" in legal phraseology does not include all wrongful acts done by one person to the injury of another, but only those for which individuals may demand legal redress, or those which give rise to an action for damages. Sims v. Sims, 72 Atl. 424, 425, 77 N. J. Law, 251.

As obligation

See Obligation.

As wrong independent of contract

"The word 'tort' means nearly the same thing as the expression 'civil wrong.' It denotes an injury inflicted otherwise than by mere breach of contract, or, to be more nicely accurate, a 'tort' is one's disturbance of another in rights which the law has created, either in the absence of contract, or in consequence of a relation which a contract had established between the parties." Welborn v. Dixon, 49 S. E. 232, 235, 70 S. C. 108, 3 Ann. Cas. 407 (quoting and adopting the definition in 26 Enc. of Law [1st Ed.] 72).

A "tort," in its legal sense, is a wrong independent of contract. Mere breach of a contract cannot be converted into a tort by showing that failure to perform upon the part of the one committing the breach had resulted in great inconvenience, trouble, annoyance, and hardship to the other party to the contract. Milledgeville Water Co. v. Fowler, 58 S. E. 643, 129 Ga. 111, Civ. Code 1895, § 3807.

An action in tort is not necessarily dependent on the existence of a contractual relation between the wrongdoer and the person injured; a "tort" being an injury inflicted otherwise than by breach of contract, and being a disturbance of another's legal rights for which the law gives redress. Peru Heating Co. v. Lenhart, 95 N. E. 680, 683, 48 Ind. App. 319.

"In Andrews' Stephen's Pleading, 107, this definition of a 'tort' is given: 'A tort in contemplation of English law, consists in a violation of a duty imposed by the general law upon all persons occupying the same relation which is involved in a given transaction or res gestæ.' Our Civil Code of 1895 (section 3807) declares a tort to be 'a legal wrong committed upon the person or property independent of contract'; and that such legal wrong may be 'the violation of some private obligation by which damage accrues to the individual.' The 'private obligation' here referred to evidently means a private duty arising either from the law or from a relation created by contract express or implied. Civ. Code 1895, § 3810. It is well recognized that a tort may result from the violation of a duty which is itself the consequence of a contract (see Civ. Code 1895, § 3812), or, as expressed in City & Suburban Railway of Savannah v. Brauss, 70 Ga. 368: 'If a contract imposes a legal duty upon a person, the neglect of that duty is a tort founded upon a contract. In such a case the liability arises out of a breach of duty incident to and created by the contract, but is only dependent upon the contract to the extent necessary to raise the duty. The tort consists in the breach of duty.'" Wolff v. Southern Ry. Co., 60 S. E. 569, 571, 130 Ga. 251 (citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Spinks, 30 S. E. 968, 104 Ga. 692; Milledgeville Water Co. v. Fowler, 58 S. E. 643, 129 Ga. 111).

The dividing line between "breaches of contract" and "torts" is often dim and uncertain. There is no definition of either class of defaults which is universally accurate or acceptable. In a general way, a "tort" is distinguished from a "breach of contract," in that the latter arises under an agreement of the parties, whereas the tort ordinarily is a violation of a duty fixed by law, independent of contract or the will of the parties, although it may sometimes have relation to obligations growing out of or coincident with the contract, and frequently the same facts will sustain either class of action. A complaint alleging that plaintiff became a passenger of defendant, to be carried on one of its cars, and, in consideration of five cents paid, defendant agreed "safely to carry" plaintiff, and "to treat him properly and carefully," and that, after he had passed onto a platform at a station to take a train, defendant through its employes, in violation "of the terms of said contract," assaulted him, states a cause of action for "breach of contract," and not in "tort." Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 80 N. E. 197, 198, 187 N. Y. 388, 10 Ann. Cas. 460 (citing Rich v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382, 390).

As a general proposition, torts are wrongs committed wholly irrespective of contract, but a tort may arise in connection with a breach of contract by a common carrier, where the law lays an obligation upon the carrier to perform his duty in the premises, and this obligation is breached, and in such case there is an obligation imposed both by contract and by law upon the carrier, and the breach of the contract operates as a "tort" through entailing as well a breach of the obligation imposed by law, and the tort though independent of, is in a measure dependent on, the contract. Trout v. Watkins Livery & Undertaking Co., 130 S. W. 136, 140, 148 Mo. App. 621.

"A 'tort' is a violation of legal duty, and may involve as one of its elements a breach of contract." Lindh v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 823, 824, 99 Minn. 408, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018.

The word "tort" denotes an injury inflicted otherwise than by a mere breach of contract, and in speaking of personal actions in form ex delicto the courts usually and ordinarily understand them to be actions for the redress of wrongs unconnected with contract. Wartman v. Empire Loan Co. (Tex.) 101 S. W. 499, 501.

Where defendant by blasting caused rock to fall into a stream where plaintiffs were to erect a pier for defendant, the injury was not a nuisance, since the term "nuisance" involves the idea of continuity or recurrence of the acts causing the injury, while a "tort," constituting an invasion of personal or contract right, expends its force in one act, though the injurious consequences may be of long duration. McCalla v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 50 South. 971, 972, 163 Ala. 107.

A "tort" is any civil wrong or injury, a wrongful act not involving a breach of contract, for which an action lies.—Jewett v. Ware, 60 S. E. 131, 132, 107 Va. 802.

There are authorities which, in a broad discussion of "torts" or in a general definition of them, say that "the violation of a legal right" or "breach of legal duty" is a tort, and to this effect is the definition quoted from Bouvier's Law Dictionary, tit. "Torts," p. 1125; and while this definition may be technically true in a certain sense, it is not accepted as a correct definition as applied to pleading and forms of action. To hold the rule as here insisted upon would be to abolish special pleading—that is, special counts in a declaration in any case for violation of contract or violation of legal duty growing out of contract; and practically, under such views, all actions ex contractu and sounding in damages would be brought under the common counts. No standard writer on the subject of torts lays down the rule, or discusses the breaches of contracts, or the breach of legal duty arising from contracts, under such head. "A tort is an act or omission giving rise, in virtue of the common-law jurisdiction of the court, to a civil remedy which is not an action of contract."

"A tort may be distinguished from a contract, in that a contract involves the agreement of at least two parties, whereas a tort as such involves no agreement." Where plaintiff claimed the right to recover from his brokers by reason of their failure to require margins of a lender of stock borrowed by defendants to cover a short sale for plaintiff, defendants' breach of duty, if any, was a breach of contract, and not a tort, which plaintiff could waive, and sue on the common counts in assumpsit. Morris v. Jamieson, 68 N. E. 742, 748, 205 Ill. 87 (quoting Cooley, Torts [2d Ed.] 2, and 1 Hill, Torts, 1).

Delivery of wheat by warehouseman

A warehouseman, who had received wheat for which he had issued receipts, shipped the wheat to the assignee of the receipts without any demand by the assignee. L. O. L. § 6038, provides that no person operating any warehouse shall ship, or in any manner remove from his custody, any grain for which a receipt is given, without written consent of the holder of the receipt; and succeeding sections make the receipts negotiable, and violations of the provisions of the act punishable by fine and imprisonment. Held, that the shipment in this case did not fall within the purview of the statute, because there was no conversion by the warehouseman; and the shipment, although possibly a breach of contract, was not a "tort," which is sometimes defined as a breach of duty established by municipal law for which a suit for damages may be maintained. Diamond Roller Mills v. Moody, 126 Pac. 984, 986, 63 Or. 90.

Failure to furnish water

Judgments against a water company in actions to recover the value of property alleged to have been destroyed by fire, as a result of the failure of the company to exercise reasonable care to furnish an adequate supply of water, are judgments for torts, within the meaning of Code N. C. 1883, § 1255, subordinating the lien of corporate mortgages to judgments for torts committed by the corporation. Guardian Trust & Deposit Co. v. Fisher, 26 Sup. Ct. 186, 188, 200 U. S. 57, 50 L. Ed. 367.

Taking usury

"An 'action in tort' strictly speaking, and as it is commonly understood, is one in which the complainant seeks to recover damages for defamation of character, the wrongful and forcible taking of his property or injury to it, or for unlawful violence reflected upon his person." Such an action has never been founded and sustained on a wrongful act committed, such as the taking of usury, by the consent of the injured party, or in which he actively participated, and an action under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3106, to recover a penalty for receiving usury is not an "action in tort." Wartman v. Empire Loan Co. (Tex.) 101 S. W. 499, 501.

TORTURE

Under Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 180, defining "torture" or cruelty to animals to include every act, omission, or neglect whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is caused or permitted, whether piercing of the fins of green turtles and tying them by means of thongs while they were being transported to New York caused unjustifiable physical pain, was for the jury. People ex rel. Freel v. Downs (Mag. Ct.) 136 N. Y. Supp. 440, 443.

Revisal 1905, § 3299, relating to cruelty to animals, enumerates as subjects protected from cruelty any useful beast, fowl, or animal, and provides that the words "torture," "torment," or "cruelty" shall include every act, omission, or neglect whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is permitted. Held, that poisoning chickens is within the purview of the statute. State v. Bossee, 59 S. E. 879, 145 N. C. 579.

TOTAL

TOTAL DESTRUCTION

See, also, Wholly Destroyed.

A lease of a wireless telegraph outfit provided that when once installed it should not be removed to any other vessel or place without the lessor's consent, and gave the lessor the right to resume possession; also gave the lessor, in case of the lessee's abandonment, or any use otherwise than as provided in the contract, special remedies by injunction, etc. The lease also provided for payment by the lessee of the reasonable value of any instrument, or parts, lost or destroyed, not exceeding $1,000 for total loss or destruction, otherwise than by unavoidable accident or detention, and $50 per month in case of the unauthorized removal or detention of any instrument, until their destruction or loss without the lessee's fault was satisfactorily proved. Held, that a sale of the vessel on which the wireless apparatus was installed, by a receiver, without special reference to such apparatus, did not constitute a "total destruction," thereof, so as to entitle the lessor to an allowance out of the proceeds of the steamer of the $1,000 and $50 per month under such provision in the lease. Massie Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Enterprise Transp. Co., 175 Fed. 6, 9, 10, 99 C. C. A. 146.

Provision in a lease that the "total destruction" of the building shall terminate the obligation of paying rent was not enforceable on a partial destruction, though it rendered the premises untenable for the purposes of the lease until repairs were made. Booraem v. Morris, 64 Atl. 953, 74 N. J. Law, 95.

TOTAL DISABILITY

See, also, Wholly Disabled.

"Total disability," as used in an accident policy, "does not mean absolute physical disability on the part of the insured to transact any kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Total disability exists, although the insured is able to perform a few occasional acts, if he is unable to do any substantial portion of the work connected with his occupation. It is sufficient to prove that the injury wholly disabled him from the doing of all substantial and material acts necessary to be done in the prosecution of his business, or that his injuries were of such a character and degree that common care and prudence required him to desist from his labors so long as was reasonably necessary to effect a speedy cure." Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Branham, 70 N. E. 174, 176, 34 Ind. App. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in Kerr, Ins. 386).

"Total disability," as used in an accident insurance policy, does not mean a state of absolute helplessness. Insured might have been able to walk, he might have been able to ride on the car to his physician's office, and still might have been entirely incapacitated for work or business, and one so incapacitated is totally disabled within the meaning of the policy. Unitel States Casualty Co. v. Hanson, 79 Pac. 176, 177, 20 Colo. App. 393 (quoting Mutual Benefit Association v. Nancarrow, 18 Colo. App. 274, 71 Pac. 423, 424).

A contract of insurance with a fraternal insurance company provided for the payment of a certain benefit whenever a member thereof, by reason of disease, accident, or otherwise, became totally and permanently disabled from following his usual or regular business, occupation, or profession. A member, who was a pharmacist and engaged in running a drug store, was accidentally shot in the left arm, and it was amputated at the shoulder joint, and no other injury was alleged to have been sustained. In an action upon the contract of insurance, it is held that the loss of the left arm alone does not constitute a "total disability," within the terms and meaning of the contract. Smith v. Supreme Lodge of Order of Select Friends, 61 Pac. 416, 62 Kan. 75.

"Total disability" is necessarily a relative matter, and must depend chiefly on the peculiar circumstances of each case, and on the occupation and employment and capabilities of the person injured. It does not mean absolute physical disability on the part of the insured to transact any kind of business pertaining to his occupation, and may exist although the insured is able to perform occasional acts, if he is unable to do any substantial portion of the work connected with his occupation. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen v. Aday, 134 S. W. 928, 930, 97 Ark. 425, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126.

A benefit certificate provided a payment for "total disability," defined as follows: "Suffering by means of a physical separation of the loss of four fingers of one hand at or above the third joint, * * * provided the above amputations occur" to one after he becomes a member of the beneficiary department. Held, that proof of loss by separation of three fingers of the hand above the third joint, and of an injury to the other finger which impaired to the extent of 50 per cent its usefulness, but did not warrant a physical separation of any part of such finger, did not entitle insured to payment as for a total disability. Mady v. Switchmen's Union of North America, 133 N. W. 472, 473, 116 Minn. 147.

Where a benefit certificate provided that in case of "total disability" of the member, which rendered him unable to carry on or conduct any vocation or calling, half the amount that would have been due in case of death should be paid to him, but there was nothing to indicate insured's vocation or calling, the words "total disability" should be construed to mean a total inability to follow the vocation or calling which insured was engaged in at the time he was injured. Foglesong v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 97 S. W. 240, 241, 121 Mo. App. 548.

TOTAL ESTATE

A will provided that legacies should be paid in full in case testator's total estate amounted to $300,000, but if less than that sum the legacies should abate in proportion. Held, that by "total estate" only such property as was left after the payment of debts and expenses was meant. In re Gans' Will, 114 N. Y. Supp. 975, 978, 130 App. Div. 454.

TOTAL EVICTION

A "total eviction" exists where the tenant is deprived of the whole of the premises leased, and it is "partial" when the tenant is deprived of a substantial part of the premises. Jackson v. Paterno, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, 1076, 58 Misc. Rep. 201.

TOTAL FAILURE OF PROOF

Where the petition on a fire insurance policy alleges a written settlement with the insured, evidence of a parol settlement was not a "total failure of proof" within Comp. Laws 1909, § 5673, providing that when the allegation of the claim or defense to which the proof is directed is unproven, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its general scope and meaning, it is a failure of proof, but such proof is a variance within sections 5673 and 5674, providing that no variance is to be deemed material unless it have actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice, and, when a variance is not material, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, and may order an immediate amendment without cost. Merchants' & Planters' Ins. Co. v. Crane, 128 Pac. 260, 261, 36 Okl. 160.

TOTAL INABILITY

See Continuous Total Inability.

A provision in an accident policy that it insured against "total inability to perform any part of the duties" of insured, who was a merchant, cannot be construed literally, but means inability to perform any substantial part of the business. James v. United States Casualty Co., 88 S. W. 125, 127, 113 Mo. App. 622.

TOTAL INCAPACITY

Under a benefit certificate payable in case insured should become totally incapacitated to perform manual labor, "total incapacity" means inability to perform sustained manual labor so as to enable one to earn or assist in earning a livelihood. A condition of absolute and complete incapacity to do any manual labor ought not to be regarded as the true construction of the language of the certificate. One who has power to use his hand or hands at labor for a brief effort only, and who is lacking in power to sustain the effort for a sufficient length of time to make the result thereof of any benefit to him in the way of assisting in his support, is for all practical purposes and in every actual sense totally incapacitated from performing manual labor. Grand Lodge, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, v. Orrell, 69 N. E. 68, 69, 206 Ill. 208.

TOTAL INSURANCE

The words "total insurance," as used in a fire policy for $4,500, which provided that it should be void if the insured should procure any other insurance on the same property, unless otherwise provided by agreement added to the policy, and which contained the clause: "$3,500 total insurance permitted, concurrent herewith, on buildings," etc. "Other insurance permitted, concurrent herewith, on stock"—contemplate the entire insurance on the property, and limit the insurance, taking into account the amount written in the policy, and the policy did not authorize $3,500 additional insurance, and it was forfeited by the insured taking a policy for additional insurance on the same property from another company. Senor v. Western Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 79 S. W. 687, 689, 181 Mo. 104.

TOTAL LOSS

See Constructive Total Loss; Technical Total Loss.

See, also, Wholly Destroyed.

A lease of a wireless telegraph outfit provided that when once installed it should not be removed to any other vessel or place without the lessor's consent, and gave the lessor the right to resume possession; also gave the lessor, in case of the lessee's abandonment, or any use otherwise than as provided in the contract, special remedies by injunction, etc. The lease also provided for payment by the lessee of the reasonable value of any instrument, or parts, lost or destroyed, not exceeding $1,000 for total loss or destruction, otherwise than by unavoidable accident or detention, and $50 per month in case of the unauthorized removal or detention of any instrument, until their destruction or loss without the lessee's fault was satisfactorily proved. Held, that a sale of the vessel on which the wireless apparatus was installed, by a receiver, without special reference to such apparatus, did not constitute a "total loss," thereof, so as to entitle the lessor to an allowance out of the proceeds of the steamer of the $1,000 and $50 per month under such provision in the lease. Massie Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Enterprise Transp. Co., 175 Fed. 6, 9, 10, 99 C. C. A. 146.

TOTAL LOSS (In Fire Insurance)

The definition of "total loss," as used in the statute concerning valued policies (Rev. St. 1909, §§ 7020, 7021), has no application to cases of insurance of personal property and the adjustment of loss thereunder. Sharp v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 147 S. W. 154, 159, 164 Mo. App. 475.

Loss of specific character

A building which in consequence of a fire has lost its identity and character as a building, and has become so far disintegrated that it cannot be properly designated as a building, though some part of it may remain standing, is a "total loss," within Rev. St. 1899, § 7969. Stevens v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Co., 96 S. W. 684, 688, 120 Mo. App. 88.

Property is to be regarded as having been "wholly destroyed" or a "total loss" within the meaning of an insurance contract, no matter how great a portion thereof may remain unconsumed, if it is so injured that it must be torn down, or that what remains cannot be utilized, in reconstructing the building without incurring a greater expense than if it were not so utilized. Insurance Co. v. Heckman, 67 Pac. 879, 64 Kan. 388, 395; Kinzer v. National Mut. Ins. Co., 127 Pac. 762, 763, 88 Kan. 93, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121.

In an action on a fire policy covering an electric power house and equipment, it was proper to instruct that "total loss" does not mean entire destruction of the property, but such destruction as would render it of no value for the purpose for which it was used, or intended to be used, when the policy issued and the fire occurred. Rogers v.

Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, 139 S. W. 265, 267, 157 Mo. App. 671.

A building insured against fire is a "total loss" where, though only partly burned, it is rendered unfit for the purpose for which it was constructed, and there is an ordinance or law prohibiting reconstruction. Calatine Ins. Co. v. Nunn, 55 South. 44, 45, 9 Miss. 493.

TOTAL LOSS (In Marine Insurance)

In the case of insurance on goods from one port to another and until safely landed, where, after a part of the goods are landed, the residue on board are lost, this is frequently denominated a "total loss," though it is really a "partial loss," because the goods landed were not, until all the goods were landed, withdrawn from all the risks against which they were insured, although they were withdrawn from the particular risk by which the loss occurred. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold (N. Y.) 14 Wend. 399, 38.

TOTAL LOSS OF HAND

It is for the jury to determine whether a total loss of three fingers and an injury to the remaining finger and thumb, which materially interferes with their use, and a cutting away of a part of the palm of the hand, constitute a "total loss of the hand," within the meaning of a by-law of a mutual benefit association, which provides indemnity for any member in good standing suffering, "by means of physical separation, the loss of a hand at or above the wrist joint." Beber v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 106 N. W. 168, 169, 75 Neb. 183, 11 Am. St. Rep. 782.

TOTAL RELINQUISHMENT

"Total relinquishment," required by a testator in order to constitute a loss of his homestead exemption, is not satisfied where the bankrupt owned a business homestead, and, the building being burned, pending reconstruction, the bankrupt leased it for a year with the purpose of renewing it for four years longer, reserving desk room therein, and thereafter used the desk in the building, with certain space for merchandise, in connection with his business as broker. Duncan v. Ferguson-McKinney & Goods Co., 150 Fed. 269, 272, 80 C. C. 157.

TALLY AND PERMANENTLY DISABLED

Defendant's beneficiary department, though its constitution and laws (article 8, 6), provided that "any member suffering means of physical separation the loss of two fingers of one hand at or above the second joint or three fingers and thumb of one hand at or above the second joint, or the loss of one foot at or above the instep, or who shall become totally blind or totally deaf, shall be considered totally and permanently disabled and shall receive the full amount of his beneficiary certificate, likewise any physical disability that may permanently disqualify a member from performing the duties of a switchman, provided that such permanent disability occurred after he became a member of this department or was not caused improperly or through negligence." Held, that the words "totally and permanently disabled" were not limited to a total and permanent disablement arising from the injury specified, but referred to any injury which produced a total and permanent disablement. Switchmen's Union of North America v. Colehouse, 131 Ill. App. 349, 353, affirmed 81 N. E. 696, 227 Ill. 561.

TOTALLY DISABLED

A beneficiary of an accident policy, disabled to do such work as, considering his ordinary employment, qualifications for affairs, and station in life, could have been expected of him, is "totally disabled" within the meaning of the policy. Wall v. Continental Casualty Co., 86 S. W. 491, 498, 111 Mo. App. 504 (citing McMahon v. Supreme Council, Order of Chosen Friends, 54 Mo. App. 468; Hutchinson v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World, 22 N. Y. Supp. 801, 68 Hun, 355; Wolcott v. United Life & Accident Ins. Ass'n, 8 N. Y. Supp. 263, 55 Hun, 98; Gordon v. United States Casualty Co. [Tenn.] 54 S. W. 98).

TOTALLY OR SUBSTANTIALLY DESTROYED

A lease provided that, if the building on the premises should be totally or substantially destroyed, the lease might be determined at the election of the lessors or their successors. Held, that the words "totally or substantially destroyed" imported an effective destruction of the building as such so as to render it entirely untenable and the restoration of it practically the construction of a new building; and, where a fire originated in the central portion of the building and the flames ate their way from the basement to the top, consuming all the floors and roof in that section, or causing them to fall into the basement, and in other sections where the floors had not fallen and partitions were left standing the woodwork was burned off or charred and discolored, and the outer walls were in places thrown "out of plumb," and were condemned by the city, the whole building being rendered untenable, so that the cost of restoring the old building using the unconsumed portion thereof would be from $27,000 to $47,000, there was a "total or substantial" destruction within the meaning of the lease. H. S. Chase & Co. v. Fleming, 121 N. W. 1055, 1056, 143 Iowa, 452.

TOUT

Where a publication entitled "Bucket Shop Sharks" spoke of plaintiff as a "tout," it would seem to mean a person who solicits customers, employment, or the like. New York Bureau of Information v. Ridgway-Thayer Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 202, 205, 119 App. Div. 339 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

TOUT TEMPS PRIST ET ENCORE PRIST

"Tout temps prist et encore prist" means that the pleader has always since been ready to pay and still is. T. Towles & Co. v. Carpenter, Wright & Co., 57 S. E. 365, 62 W. Va. 151.

TOW

TOWAGE

A provision in a bill of lading for a cargo of coal to be delivered at Portland, Me., which required the consignee "to tow vessel in and out of Back Bay free," is not a contract to pay for the "towage" merely, but to provide the same. Winslow v. Thompson, 134 Fed. 548, 548, 67 C. C. A. 470.

"A 'towage service' is aid rendered in the propulsion of a vessel. It is the employment of one vessel to expedite the voyage of another vessel." The owner and master of a steamer engaged in making regular trips between river ports contracted to transport from one of such ports to another, for a stated charge, a locomotive engine. The barge owned and used by him on such trips not being suitable, it was agreed that the owner of the engine should furnish a barge on which to load the same, which was to be returned by the steamer. The steamer issued a bill of lading in the usual form for the barge and engine, and lashed the barge to her side for the voyage. Held, that the contract was one of affreightment, and not of towage. The Nettie Quill, 124 Fed. 667, 670 (citing McConnochie v. Kerr, 9 Fed. 53).

Salvage distinguished

If a vessel is in a position which requires "towage" service only, the mere fact that she had previously suffered injury does not change the nature of the service to one of "salvage," unless there are some circumstances of peril, immediate, or to be reasonably apprehended, from which the vessel is relieved, or some hazard encountered or unusual work done by the relieving vessel. The Robert S. Besnard, 144 Fed. 992, 1004.

There is no generic difference between "towage" and "salvage." The same service may sometimes be called by either name; but when a court decides that the service calls for "liberality," and holds that a bonus should be given in order to encourage similar services, then such court should properly and strictly call the service a "salvage" service, for "liberality is salvage, and there is no place for liberality in an action of contract." It often becomes material to draw a distinct line between "salvage" and "towage," because a reward ought sometimes to be given to the crew of the salving vessel and other participants in salvage services, and such reward should not be given if the services were held to be merely "towage." The Rebecca Shepherd, 148 Fed. 727, 730, 733 (citing The J. C. Pfluger, 109 Fed. 93).

"Towage service" is often distinguished from "salvage service" by the fact that the former is aid rendered in the movement of vessels not in distress, while salvage service is confined to aid rendered to those in distress. It is immaterial to the liability of the insurer under a marine policy whether the loss or damage to which the tug was subjected arose out of a towage or a salvage service, where the policy insured the tug against loss and damage arising from or growing out of any accident caused by collision or stranding resulting from any cause whatever to any other vessel or vessels for which said steamer or its owners may be legally liable. Ferguson v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 125 Fed. 141, 142.

"A 'towage service' is one which is rendered for the mere purpose of expediting the voyage of a vessel without reference to any circumstances of danger." A steamer with two barges in tow attempted to seek refuge on a dark night with the wind blowing 75 miles an hour, and in attempting to enter the harbor a collision occurred between the two barges, and the rear one was cast adrift half a mile from a shore on which she was being driven by the wind. A tug, in response to signals from the steamer, came to her assistance and at her request went in search of the barge, and having found her, took a line and started with her from the harbor. After proceeding a short distance the line slipped from the tow posts and the barge again went adrift and was driven on shore; the tug being unable to render further assistance, owing to insufficient depth of water. The service performed by the tug was one of salvage, and not of towage. The S. C. Schenk, 158 Fed. 54, 59, 85 C. C. A. 384 (quoting McConnochie v. Kerr, 9 Fed. 50, 53).

The tug Dauntless, with a barge in tow, navigating Chesapeake Bay at night in a gale on the way from Baltimore to Norfolk, was signaled for assistance by another tug having five barges in tow. Anchoring her own barge in Hampton Roads, the Dauntless then found that four of the other tug's barges had gone adrift, and was asked to find them and take off their crews. She found three of them anchored in mid-channel a mile east of Thimble Light; the other having been sunk and her crew saved by the lightkeeper.

he three were in great peril, with the seaashing over them and their masters andews in fear of losing their lives. At theirquest the Dauntless undertook to tow them safety and did so, taking first one on whichere were a woman and a child, then theher two. The service commenced at 11:30, and continued until 9 in the morning, duringhich time weather conditions improved buttle, and was attended by considerable danr to the crew, who were obliged to go onard the barges. Held, that the service was t one of "towage," but of "salvage," and e of merit, and that the Dauntless was enled to an award from the one first rescuedual to 12½ per cent. of the value of thessel, cargo, and freight money, and anward of 7½ per cent. from each of the oth-s. The Carroll, 163 Fed. 425, 426.

Where the nature of a service rendered is in fact salvage, the burden rests on one to claim it to have been a "towage service" plead and prove a binding contract for e towage. A "salvage service" is a service ich is voluntarily rendered to a vessel eding assistance, and is designed to relieve r from some distress or danger, either prest or to be reasonably apprehended, while a owage service" is one which is rendered : the mere purpose of expediting her voye, without reference to any circumstances danger. Respondent steamship was ored to the pier of an oil company, exding from its yards in which there were a ge number of tanks, when one of the tanks ploded with great violence, the oil became ited, and created a large fire. The tank s about 1,400 feet from the vessel, but ere were other tanks between and 15,000 es of oil on the pier awaiting loading on : ship. It was dark, and the engines of : vessel were not connected with the steam. ld, that the services of a tug which towed : away to a safe place of anchorage were vage services, although the fire did not in t reach the pier, and that the crew were itled to recover salvage in the sum of 0; the owner having settled his claim. e Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604, 605.

TOWPATH

The Supreme Court judicially knows t a "towpath," as applied to land front- the Mississippi river, was an appurtece to navigation belonging to the general ollic; a path traveled by men or animals ing boats. City of St. Louis v. St. Louis ast Furnace Co., 138 S. W. 641, 647, 235 . 1.

TOW OF FLAX

"Flax noils" held dutiable as waste, un- the Tariff Act of 1897, and not as "tow flax" by similitude. G. B. Ritchie & Co. United States, 141 Fed. 664.

TOWARDS

Where a school district votes a certain sum "towards" purchasing land and erecting a schoolhouse, they can interpose no objection to a claim made against them under a contract with their committee that a larger sum was expended by the committee than that named in the vote, since the word "towards," instead of imposing a limitation, holds out an intimation that more might be required. Jenkins v. Doughty Falls Union School Dist., 39 Me. 220, 223.

TOWN

See Compact Part of Town; Incorporated City or Town; Incorporated Town; Organized Town.

Belong to town, see Belong—Belonging. Indebtedness of, see Indebted—Indebtedness.

A "town" is a corporation, as well as a political and governmental subdivision and agency. Street v. Varney Electrical Supply Co., 66 N. E. 895, 896, 160 Ind. 338, 61 L. R. A. 154, 98 Am. St. Rep. 325.

The word "towns," as used in Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, providing that the Legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws regulating the external affairs of "towns" and counties, embraces cities, boroughs, villages, and townships. Dickinson v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 60 Atl. 220, 221, 71 N. J. Law, 589.

The word "town," as used in statutes, has no fixed significance. The word, as used in the Constitution and in various statutes, is held to be of such uncertain meaning, standing alone, that the courts have uniformly applied its use according to the manifest intention of the legislation, as gathered from the occasion and necessity of the act. Millville Gaslight Co. v. Vineland Light & Power Co., 65 Atl. 504, 506, 72 N. J. Eq. 305.

Where the owner of farm lands platted it into lots, blocks, and streets, filing the plat with the county clerk, but there was no acceptance of dedication, no incorporation, and no buildings there but a post office, the land did not become a "town" or "village," within Sand. & H. Dig. § 3712, limiting the homestead therein to one acre. Clements v. Crawford County Bank, 40 S. W. 132, 133, 64 Ark. 7, 62 Am. St. Rep. 149.

There is nothing technical or obscure in the meaning of the words "city," "town," and "village." The word "town" is more comprehensive than either of the others. It is a generic word, applicable as well to a city as to a village. In England a city was distinguished from other towns by the fact that it had a cathedral, and was the residence of a bishop, but in this country the name "city" is used ordinarily to designate the larger class of towns. The name "village" always carries to the mind the idea of a small urban community. A city is a town, and a village is a town, but the word "city" or "village" indicates the size of the town. State ex rel. Scott v. Lichte, 126 S. W. 466, 470, 226 Mo. 273.

As any collection of houses

The situs of an unincorporated town is not controlled by the platted area thereof without reference to the collection of inhabited houses, which together with the area appurtenant to the same is in the ordinary signification of the word "town," the term carrying with it the idea of a considerable aggregation of people living in close proximity. Ralls v. Parrish, 147 S. W. 564, 566, 105 Tex. 253 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7020).

As a civil division of territory

"Cities" and "towns" are territorial subdivisions of the state, created as public corporations for convenience in administration of government, and they exercise only the powers which have been conferred expressly or by necessary implication, and they have a twofold character, the one governmental and the other private; and in the former they execute the functions and possess the attributes of sovereignty delegated by the Legislature, while in the latter they are clothed with the capacities of a private corporation, and may claim its rights and immunities, and are subject to its liabilities. Higginson v. Slattery, 99 N. E. 523, 524, 212 Mass. 583, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215.

As corporation

See Corporation.

As incorporated town

The word "town," as used in Gen. St. p. 2206 (P. L. 1884, p. 194, § 5), authorizing any city, town or township to make a contract with any city for public water supply does not include boroughs, the word "town" in its ordinary sense means a town corporate. Rehill v. Mayor, etc., of Borough of East Newark, 63 Atl. 81, 83, 73 N. J. Law, 220.

As a municipal corporation

Under General Corporation Law, §§ 2, 3, Town Law, § 2, and General Municipal Law, § 1, a "town" is a "municipal corporation." Town of Hempstead v. Lawrence, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 1039, 138 App. Div. 473.

The New York Town Law defines a "town" as a municipal corporation comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries, and formed for the purpose of exercising such powers and discharging such duties of local government and administration of public affairs as may be conferred or imposed upon it by law; and hence a town is a municipal corporation, which may enter into a lighting contract. Dunn v. Town of Whites-town, 185 Fed. 585, 588.

Code Civ. Proc. § 264, provides that no award shall be made on any claim against the state, except upon such legal evidence as would establish liability against an individual or corporation. Canal Law, § 47, provides that no judgment shall be awarded by the Court of Claims for damages from neglect or conduct of any state officer having charge of canals, or from any accident connected with the canals, unless the facts make out a case which would create a legal liability against the state, were they established in court against an individual or corporation. Held, that the phrase "individual or corporation" includes a town; Town Law, § 2, defining a "town" as a municipal corporation comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries. O'Bryan v. State, 125 N. Y. Supp. 490, 492, 68 Misc. Rep. 618.

Borough or village

A complaint in a prosecution for carrying concealed weapons was not defective because in the name of the "village of O.," instead of the "town of O.," though Rev. St. 1899, § 6004, declares that the inhabitants of a village shall be a body politic and corporate by the name and style of "the town of"; the entire statute (sections 6004-6066) using the words "town" and "village" interchangeably, and the complaint having also used them in like manner. Town of Orrick v. Akers, 83 S. W. 549, 109 Mo. App. 662.

At the time of the granting of a franchise to a gas company to lay pipes in streets of the "town of Millville and its vicinity" there was a village of Millville situated within the township of Millville. Held, that the words "town of Millville and its vicinity" referred, not to the entire township of Millville, but to the village of Millville and its vicinity. McCarter v. Millville Gaslight Co., 69 Atl. 248, 249, 73 N. J. Eq. 739.

City

The word "town," as used in Const. art. 6, § 6, providing that vacancies in town offices shall be filled in such manner as may be prescribed by law, is generic, and includes cities. State ex rel. Gleason v. Gerdink, 90 N. E. 70, 71, 173 Ind. 245.

The word "town" is often used to embrace cities as well as villages, and when the expression "incorporated town" is used in an act it may include cities, unless the contrary appears from the whole statute to have been the intent of the Legislature. City of Smithville v. Dispensary Com'rs of Lee County, 54 S. E. 539, 540, 125 Ga. 559 (citing Hermann v. Town of Guttenberg, 43 Atl. 703, 62 N. J. Law, 605; Odegaard v. City of Albert Lea, 23 N. W. 526, 33 Minn. 351; Flinn v. State, 24 Ind. 286; City of Indianapolis v. Higgins, 40 N. E. 671, 141 Ind. 1; 8 Words and Phrases, 7019).

The petition of a public weigher who sought to enjoin an unauthorized weigher from weighing produce which alleged that the plaintiff was the public weigher for the town of S. is not deficient for failing to allege that S. was a city; the word "town" being a generic word which includes cities, boroughs, and villages. Perry v. Carlisle (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1155, 1158.

The word "town" is often used as a generic term embracive of all such primary municipal corporations as incorporated cities and villages; and it has become a well-settled rule of construction that the term "town," when used in the general statute, may be applied to or include cities, unless the contrary appears from the whole statute to have been the intention of the Legislature. Tucker v. Board of Com'rs of Lincoln County, 97 N. W. 103, 104, 90 Minn. 406.

The word "town" is often used as a generic term, embracing cities as well as villages; and, when the expression "incorporated town" is used in an act of the Legislature, it may include "cities," unless the contrary appears from the whole statute to have been the intent of the legislative body. Lee v. Tucker, 60 S. E. 164, 167, 130 Ga. 43 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mayor & Council of Smithville v. Dispensary Com'rs of Lee County, 54 S. E. 539, 125 Ga. 559).

There is nothing technical or obscure in the meaning of the words "city," "town," and "village." The word "town" is more comprehensive than either of the others. It is a generic word, applicable as well to a city as to a village. In England a city was distinguished from other towns by the fact that it had a cathedral, and was the residence of a bishop, but in this country the name "city" is used ordinarily to designate the larger class of towns. The name "village" always carries to the mind the idea of a small urban community. A city is a town, and a village is a town, but the word "city" or "village" indicates the size of the town. State ex rel. Scott v. Lichte, 126 S. W. 466, 470, 226 Mo. 273.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 1528, granting the right of local option to "towns" and incorporated villages, does not apply to the cities of the state. Kleppe v. Gard, 123 N. W. 665, 109 Minn. 251.

Rev. Laws, c. 75, § 42, providing that, if a disease dangerous to public health breaks out in a "town," the board of health shall provide a hospital therefor, applies to cities as well as towns. Barry v. Smith, 77 N. E. 1099, 1104, 191 Mass. 78, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1028, 6 Ann. Cas. 817.

Rev. Laws, c. 8, § 5, cl. 23, provides that in construing statutes the word "town" includes "city." Chapter 75, § 42, provides that, if a disease dangerous to the public health, breaks out in a town, the board of health may cause any sick or infected person to be removed to a hospital, or may leave him in the house where he is. Section 56 provides that, in cases of smallpox, patients shall not be removed from their homes, except in cases in which, in the opinion of the board of health and the attending physician, the cases cannot be properly isolated in the houses where the patients reside. Section 40 provides that each city shall establish one or more isolation hospitals for the reception of persons having smallpox, and subjects towns refusing to comply to a penalty. Section 54 provides that expenses incurred by a town for the preservation of the public health may be recovered in an action of contract. Section 57 provides that reasonable expenses incurred by the board of health in providing for persons infected with smallpox shall be paid by such person, his parents or master, if able; otherwise by the town in which he has a legal settlement. Held, that the failure of a city to establish an isolation hospital, or its failure to remove persons infected with smallpox to a hospital, does not preclude it from recovering expenses incurred on behalf of such persons from the city where they have their legal residence. City of Haverhill v. City of Marlborough, 72 N. E. 943, 944, 187 Mass. 150.

Under Pub. Laws 1902, p. 67, c. 980, § 1, providing that the school committee of each town shall elect a superintendent of schools thereof at the first regular meeting of the committee succeeding the annual election thereof, and Gen. Laws 1896, c. 26, § 8, declaring that the word "town" shall include a city, the school committee of a city consisting of three members, one elected at the November election of each year for a term beginning in January following, cannot elect a superintendent to serve under the committee as it will be constituted after the election in November, though the committee from the time of the adoption of the charter, requiring an annual election of a superintendent, had elected a superintendent at any time during the year at its discretion. In re School Committee of Pawtucket, 65 Atl. 301, 27 R. I. 596.

District—School district

The title of Laws 1909, c. 23, entitled "An act in amendment of chapter 89 of the Public Statutes and defining the town school district," indicates the statutory definition therein of the word "town," as meaning "district" when referring to school affairs, was not intended to include special school districts; and the word "towns," as used in section 1 of chapter 158, providing that no appropriation of money for common schools provided for in sections 2 and 3 shall be held to apply to towns having an equalized valuation of more than $7,000 per pupil, etc., the population of which is to be determined by the last federal census and the wealth thereof by the equalized valuation, does not include special school districts which are carved out of the territory of rich or populous towns, and as to which districts there is no equalized valuation and no law for determining such valuation, and their population is not provable by the last federal census, and hence they are not entitled to share in the appropriation provided for in the sections referred to. In re Opinion of Justices, 75 Atl. 429, 430, 75 N. H. 622.

Priv. Laws 1907, p. 1267, c. 482, authorizes the creation of a school district in the town of Carthage. Section 50 (page 1277) provides that an election shall be held to determine whether taxes shall be levied "for the support of the schools in said town provided for in this act and the purchase of land and the erection of school buildings thereon," and that the money to pay for the land and school buildings "shall only be raised by issuing the bonds of the town, as hereinafter provided for." By subsequent sections, including section 61, the commissioners of the town are directed to issue the bonds for the school district, and it also appears by intentment that the taxes are to be levied only on property and polls within the district. The district as created did not include all the territory embraced within the corporate limits of the town. Held, that the word "town" in section 50 was used with reference to the election required to be held as provided in the act, which election is required to be held, not in the town, but within the district, and that the act did not authorize the levy of a tax for the payment of the bonds on residents of the town outside of the school district who would not be benefited by the maintenance of the school, and hence was not unconstitutional. McLeod v. Board of Com'rs of Town of Carthage, 61 S. E. 605, 608, 148 N. C. 77.

Parish

Subsequent to 1700 the commons of Kaskaskia were granted to the parish of the Immaculate Conception of Kaskaskia by the French government, which grant was confirmed by a patent of the Governor of Louisiana in August, 1743. In 1763 the territory was ceded by France to Great Britain, and in 1765 taken possession of by the English, and in 1778 acquired by Virginia by conquest. It was ceded to the United States by Virginia in 1784, and by Act Cong. May 1, 1810, c. 40, 2 Stat. 607, and Act Feb. 20, 1812, c. 22, 2 Stat. 677, title to the commons was confirmed to all rightful claimants. By State Const. 1818, art. 8, § 8, all lands granted as a common to the inhabitants of any "town," hamlet, village, or corporation, was guaranteed to remain forever common to the inhabitants of such town, etc. Held, that the word "town" as so used in this and in the subsequent Constitution of 1848 (article 11), and in the Acts of 1851 (Priv. Laws 1851, p. 5), providing for the lease and disposition of such common lands, should be construed as synonymous with "parish" as used in the French patent of 1743, and hence that the title to the common lands was in the inhabitants of the parish and their successors in trust for their common benefit, and not in the inhabitants of the village of Kaskaskia. Stead v. President, etc., of Commons of Kaskaskia, 90 N. E. 654, 659, 243 Ill. 239.

The word "town," in the supplement to the act to authorize the formation of gaslight corporations, and regulate the same, approved March 14, 1879 (P. L. 1879, p. 316; Gen. St. p. 1613, § 30), is used in its generic sense, and includes townships. Since the word is used with such different meanings, its signification in a particular statute must be determined in view of the object of the statute and the context. Millville Imp. Co. v. Pitman, Glassboro & Clayton Gas Co., 67 Atl. 1005, 75 N. J. Law, 410 (citing Pell v. Mayor, etc., of City of Newark, 40 N. J. Law, 550; Stout v. Borough of Glen Ridge, 35 Atl. 913, 59 N. J. Law, 201; Hermann v. Town of Guttenberg, 44 Atl. 753, 63 N. J. Law, 610).

The word "town" in Act March 14, 1879, amending the gas company act of 1876, authorizing gas companies to lay pipes in certain towns, includes townships. Millville Imp. Co. v. Pitman, Glassboro & Clayton Gas Co., 67 Atl. 1005, 75 N. J. Law, 410.

2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 2199, authorizing the incorporation of companies for the construction, maintenance and operation of waterworks for the purposes of supplying "cities, towns, and villages" with water, includes townships. Gloucester Turnpike Co. v. American Pipe Co., 78 Atl. 708, 710, 77 N. J. Eq. 471.

"The words 'town' and 'township' may be and frequently are used as meaning the same thing," and they were so used in Laws 1901, p. 272, § 2, as amended by Laws 1909, p. 323, requiring the county clerk to ascertain the rates per cent. required as to the property in the respective "towns, townships, districts, incorporated cities and villages" in his county, and providing that where the aggregate of all the taxes, exclusive of state, village, and levee taxes, certified to be extended against any property in any part of any taxing district or municipality, shall exceed 3 per cent. of the assessed valuation, the rate of tax levy shall be reduced in a specified way, and the law requires the clerk to exclude town taxes of an incorporated town before figuring the reduction of the rate referred to, and he cannot reduce such taxes. Town of Cicero v. Haas, 91 N. E. 574, 576, 244 Ill. 551 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7028).

TOWN AND VILLAGE LOTS

The term "town and village lots" was used by the inhabitants of Missouri, under each dominion, in the same sense as it was used in that state. City of St. Louis v. St. Louis Blast Furnace Co., 138 S. W. 641, 235 Mo. 1.

TOWN BOARD

A "town board" is a tribunal authorized to investigate, examine, and pass upon, according to its own mode of procedure, the accounts against the town presented to it. Its final jurisdiction over claims against the town is plenary, and its determination is conclusive until reviewed by another competent tribunal, and even the board of supervisors cannot review or reverse the action of the town board," but must direct the sums specified in the certificate of audit to be levied on the property of the town. Under Town Laws 1890, p. 1211, c. 589) § 162, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 610, c. 481, authorizing the town board to audit accounts and allow claims against the town, the decision of a town board in allowing a claim for losses in excavating earth, though erroneous because based on an error in the amount of earth excavated, has the verity of a judgment, unless reversed in a proper proceeding, and a supervisor having funds in his hands for the payment of the claim cannot refuse to pay on the ground that the amount allowed is in excess of the sum to which the claimant is entitled. In re Mefford, 99 N. Y. Supp. 400-402, 113 App. Div. 529 (citing Throuth v. Rigney, 98 N. Y. 222-234; People ex rel. Myers v. Barnes, 20 N. E. 609, 21 Ill. 739, 114 N. Y. 317; People ex rel. Abe v. Matthies, 72 N. Supp. 615, 43 App. Div. 25).

TOWN BRIDGE

Generally speaking, a "town bridge" is wholly within a town, and a village street is wholly within a village; but the legislature having seen fit to provide that a town road, which is intersected by a village plat and crossed by a navigable stream, requiring to be bridged to make a road complete, shall be deemed to be a town road, the bridge a "town bridge" to the same extent that it is a village street and village road as regards the maintenance of the bridge, the meaning of the statute on the subject is perfectly plain. Village of Bloomington v. Town of Bloomer, 107 N. W. 974, 979, Wis. 297.

TOWN CLERK

Under Rev. St. 1878, § 4971, subd. 17, providing that the word "town" may be construed to include cities, wards, or districts, unless such construction would be repugnant to the provisions of any act specially relating to the same, and section 433 providing that where a vacancy in a school district office is not filled by the school board, it shall be filled in the case of a joint school district, by the clerk of the town in which the schoolhouse is situated, where the schoolhouse of a joint school district is situated in a city, such a vacancy should be filled by the city clerk. State ex rel. Ackerman v. Dahl, 27 N. W. 343, 346, 65 Wis. 510.

The words "town clerk" include under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 26, § 8, a city clerk and the void provision of Gen. Laws 1896, c. 102, § 4, requiring city and town clerks on petition of the electors to insert a proposition for taking a vote on the question whether liquor licenses shall be granted in the warrant calling the town, ward, or district meetings, is not unseverable from the remainder of the section, which requires the petition to be submitted at each general election on the theory that no provision remains for notifying the electors of the vote to be taken, since notice must be given under chapter 37, § 8, requiring notice to the electors of a town meeting prescribed by law to be given by the "town clerk," and since, the Legislature having directed a vote on the question, the town and city clerks must give the notice in their warrants. Ruhland v. Waterman (R. I.) 71 Atl. 1, 3.

TOWN DATUM

A "town datum" is a certain monument or object, of a permanent character, which has been adopted by the municipality as a base or starting point for the grades and levels of the municipality. Chicago Consol. Traction Co. v. Village of Oak Park, 80 N. E. 42, 44, 225 Ill. 9.

TOWN ELECTION

The phrase "town election," in Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 112) § 16, providing that each officer of a town charged by the election law, or by any special act relating to elections in any town, with the duty of preparing official ballots, shall have prepared, "at the time fixed by law for preparing the ballots for a town election occurring next after the passage of this act," ballots for voting on local option, refers to the annual town meeting at which officers are elected, in view of Town Law (Laws 1892, c. 680) § 86, as amended by Laws 1895, c. 810, providing for the preparation of official ballots for the election of town officers but not requiring official ballots for any other elections, and section 12, providing for the election of town officers at the annual town meeting, and section 25, providing for special town meetings, at which specified propositions may be voted on. People ex rel. Thomas v. Sackett, 44 N. Y. Supp. 593, 595, 15 App. Div. 290.

TOWN HALL

The "town hall" having been burned down, a by-law of a town, requiring notice of the town meeting to be posted at the town hall (St. 1893, c. 417, § 280), was sufficiently complied with by posting the notice at the place where the meeting was to be held. Commonwealth v. Sullivan, 42 N. E. 566, 165 Mass. 183.

TOWN HOUSE

In the act of 1861, providing that whenever the new town of Skowhegen should vote to build a "town house," which should be located on Skowhegen Island, the Legislature did not intend to limit the action of the people to a particular kind of structure which might be called a "town house," so much as to secure the location of some central place for the assembly of the town meeting, and probably intended no distinction between the terms "town house" and "town hall." Anderson v. Parker, 64 Atl. 771, 773, 101 Me. 416.

TOWN LOT

As land, see Land.

One town or city lot, see One Lot.

TOWN MEETING

TOWN OFFICER

As state officer, see State Officer.

Justices of the peace of towns are "town officers," under Const. art. 6, § 17, providing for their election at town meetings, or as directed by the Legislature. Reid v. Stevens, 126 N. Y. Supp. 379, 382, 70 Misc. Rep. 177.

TOWN ROAD

Generally speaking, a town bridge is one wholly within a town, and a village bridge one wholly within a village; but, the Legislature having seen fit to provide that a "town road" which is intersected by a village plat and crossed by a navigable stream, requiring to be bridged to make a road usable, shall be deemed to be a "town road" and the bridge a town bridge to the same extent that it is a village street and village bridge as regards the maintenance of the bridge, the meaning of the statute on the subject is perfectly plain. Village of Bloomer v. Town of Bloomer, 107 N. W. 974, 979, 128 Wis. 297.

TOWN SCHOOL DISTRICT

A "town school district" under the statute is a corporate body by necessary implication, separate and distinct from the town, since it has creation by name, in effect, perpetuity of existence, unity of person, and governing boards elected at "town school district" meetings. North Troy Graded School Dist. v. Town of Troy, 68 Atl. 1033, 1038, 80 Vt. 16.

TOWN SUPERINTENDENT

The terms "town superintendent" and "town superintendent of highways" are used interchangeably under the highway law (Laws 1909, c. 30 [Consol. Laws, c. 25]). Maxson v. Gale, 126 N. Y. Supp. 967, 968, 142 App. Div. 335.

TOWN TREASURER

A "town treasurer" is not the financial agent of the town. His duty is simply to receive and safely keep the public money and disburse it upon lawful warrant. Baldwin v. Inhabitants of Prentiss, 74 Atl. 1038, 105 Me. 469.

TOWNSHIP

See Any Township; School Township.

A "township" is a part of the state government. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 211, 18 Okl. 561.

A "township" is clearly to be classed with quasi corporations, and not with municipal corporations. Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 1112, 132 Iowa, 533.

A "township" is not a body corporate, and it cannot sue or be sued. Davis v. Laughlin, 124 N. W. 876, 877, 147 Iowa, 478 (citing Hanson v. Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 132 Iowa, 540).

"Townships" are not corporate bodies, and under Revisal 1905, § 1318, subd. 30, can exercise only such corporate powers as are authorized by the general assembly; and while they and other taxing districts are sometimes referred to as quasi municipal corporations, they are but territorial sections of counties, upon which for appropriate purposes power is conferred to perform local governmental functions. "Townships" are constituent parts of the county organization. Wittkowsky v. Board of Com'rs of Jackson County, 63 S. E. 275, 277, 150 N. C. 90.

"Townships" are the lowest grade of municipal corporations, being created for specific purposes, and endowed with limited powers and liabilities, acting through officers duly authorized by the law for that purpose. Posey Tp., Franklin County, v. Senour, 86 N. E. 440, 441, 42 Ind. App. 580.

A "township" is but an auxiliary part of the sovereignty of the state. It is a subordinate division of the body politic of the state, and in the absence of an express statute imposing a liability a "township" is not liable for injuries sustained from defects in highways. James v. Trustees of Wellston Tp., 90 Pac. 100, 101, 18 Okl. 56, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1219, 11 Ann. Cas. 938.

A township is a subdivision of a county. To constitute an entire county a single township can scarcely be said to be a division of the county into townships. In the absence of anything to indicate a contrary intention, it must be assumed that the framers of the Constitution and members of the Legislature in speaking of municipal townships used the word "township" in the ordinary popular sense of the term according to the context and approved usage of the language of Rev. Codes, § 8070, expressly providing for such construction. State ex rel. Gillett v. Cronin, 109 Pac. 144, 145, 41 Mont. 293 (citing And. Law Dict.; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Town of Oconto, 50 Wis. 189, 6 N. W. 607, 36 Am. Rep. 840; Abbott's Law Dict.; 8 Words and Phrases, 7032).

"Townships" are quasi corporations formed to exercise purely governmental powers, and, in the absence of an express statute to that effect, are not liable for damages either for the nonexercise of their powers, or for their improper exercise by those charged with their execution. Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 309, 247 Mo. 197.

"Townships" are merely quasi corporations, not endowed with the full and plenary powers usually conferred either by charter or by general law upon municipal corporations proper, but only resembling the same in organization and functions. Wilson v. Ulysses Township, Butler County, 101 N. W. 986, 988, 72 Neb. 807, 9 Ann. Cas. 1153.

In a suit to quiet title, a stipulation provided that all the surveyed lands in the vicinity were in September, 1850, swamps and overflowed lands, and passed to the state, and that the "townships," including Walker's Lake as meandered on the map, were included by the Secretary of the Interior in the list of lands granted to the state under the swamp land act (Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, c. 84). Held, that the word "townships" as used in such stipulation was limited to the townships as surveyed and platted by the government surveyors, and meant the townships according to the surveys and plats, and did not include unsurveyed lands erroneously included within the meandered line of the lake. Little v. Williams, 113 S. W. 340, 345, 38 Ark. 37.

Cities

"The cities of the state of Kansas are 'townships,' within the meaning of the Constitution and statutes, for the purposes of the election of justices of the peace, and such officers, although elected within a city, are not strictly city officers. Fee v. Richardson, 107 Pac. 789, 790, 82 Kan. 190 (quoting State v. Parry, 33 Pac. 956, 52 Kan. 1, 21 L. R. A. 660).

Laws 1901, p. 272, § 2, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 323, requiring the county clerk to ascertain the rates per cent. required as to the property in the respective "towns, townships, districts, incorporated cities, and villages" in his county, and providing that where the aggregate of all the taxes, exclusive of state, village, and levee taxes, certified to be extended against any property in any part of any taxing district or municipality, shall exceed 3 per cent. of the assessed valuation, the rate of tax levy shall be reduced in a specified way, requires the clerk to exclude town taxes of an incorporated town before figuring the reduction of the rate referred to, and he cannot reduce such town taxes, for the words "incorporated villages," as used in the act, include incorporated towns, and the words "town" and "township" as used in the act are synonymous. Town of Cicero v. Haas, 91 N. E. 574, 576, 244 Ill. 551 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7028).

TOWNSHIP AFFAIRS

Act May 10, 1901 (Sess. Laws 1901, pp. 253-256), authorizes corporate authorities of certain towns, on the request of the board of park commissioners, to issue bonds; provides that, when issued, they shall be delivered to the board of park commissioners, to be by them sold, and the proceeds used for the purchase and improvement of land selected as sites for small parks or pleasure grounds; limits the indebtedness of the town, to include such bonds; and makes it incumbent on the town authorities to levy a tax to meet the principal and interest. The property to be levied on for the collection of the tax is town property. Held, that the issuance of the bonds and levying of the tax are regulations of "township affairs," and hence the act is within the purview of Const. 1870, art. 4, § 22, providing that no local or special law regulating township affairs shall be passed. Pettibone v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 74 N. E. 387-397, 215 Ill. 304.

TOWNSHIP COMMITTEE

"Act April 16, 1896, after providing the method by which a division and apportionment of the assets and liabilities of the township shall be made, declares that 'no such division and apportionment shall be valid unless the same shall be approved by a majority either of the said township or of the said mayor and council' (of the borough). P. L. 1896, p. 270. It appears that in the present case the division and apportionment of assets and liabilities were approved, not by a majority either of the township or of the mayor and council of the borough, but by a majority of the 'township committee' of the township of Orvil. * * * Although it seems probable, from an examination of the other parts of this act, that the Legislature intended to confer the power of approval upon the governing body of the township rather than on the township itself, we cannot say that such intent appears beyond doubt. Not to be able to do this is fatal to the claim of the plaintiff, for the injection of the word 'committee' into the statute, under such circumstances, would be an act of the Legislature rather than of construction." Inhabitants of Orvil Tp. v. Borough of Woodcliff, 45 Atl. 686, 64 N. J. Law, 286.

TOWNSHIP OFFICE

Under Acts 1905, p. 463, providing that each political township in the county shall be a road district for which a township road overseer shall be elected, the office of road overseer in a certain district in a county is a "township office," within Kirby's Dig. § 2860, providing that a contest of the election of any county or township officer shall be before the county court where not otherwise provided for, so that that court would have jurisdiction of an election contest for the office of road overseer for a certain district. Condren v. Gibbs, 127 S. W. 731, 732, 94 Ark. 478.

TOWNSHIP OFFICER

Under the statutes of Oklahoma (section 3, art. 1, c. 81 [section 6664], Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903), justices of the peace are "township officers," and are required to reside and hold their office within the township where elected (section 4, art. 1, c. 81 [section 6665], Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903), and jurisdiction to try and determine causes outside of the township, not being granted, cannot be conferred by agreement of parties. Leiber v. Argabright, 105 Pac. 341, 342, 25 Okl. 177.

Act Jan. 20, 1839 (P. L. 337), provides for the election of a board of managers for the relief and employment of the poor in a certain township and makes them a body politic and corporate in law, with all powers of such body. Held, that they are officers of a distinct and separate corporation created by statute, having special powers and duties, and are not "township officers." Hence Act March 10, 1875 (P. L. 6), providing dates on which the "township officers" shall be elected, does not affect the act of 1839. Commonwealth v. Bowditch, 66 Atl. 867, 868, 217 Pa. 527.

"The cities of the state of Kansas are 'townships,' within the meaning of the Constitution and statutes, for the purposes of the election of justices of the peace, and such officers, although elected within a city, are not strictly city officers. Their official duties are not limited to the boundaries of the cities in which they are elected, nor by the provisions of the charters or ordinances of the city in which they reside. Their civil and criminal jurisdiction are coextensive with their counties, except as otherwise provided by law. Chapter 230, Laws 1887, does not confer upon women the right to vote for justices of the peace in the cities of the state. In one sense such officers are 'township of-icers,' rather than city officers." Fee v. Richardson, 107 Pac. 789, 790, 82 Kan. 190 (quoting State v. Parry, 33 Pac. 956, 52 Kan. 1, 21 L. R. A. 669).

TOWNSHIP ROAD

Drainage Act May 29, 1879, § 55, authorizing the assessment of benefits for drains against "any public or corporate road or railroad," and apportioning to "the county, state or free turnpike road, to the township, if a township road, to the company, if a corporate road or railroad, such portions of the cost" thereof as to individuals, and providing that, in case such assessment is made in any "township," the commissioners of highways shall cause the same to be levied in the manner provided by Act June 23, 1883, §§ 13-16, does not confer on a drainage district the power to assess benefits to public streets without the consent of the city. City of Joliet v. Spring Creek Drainage Dist., 78 N. E. 836, 843, 222 Ill. 441.

TOWNSHIP WARRANT

A "township warrant" is an anomalous kind of a contract. It is not a promissory note in any sense of the word. Standing alone, it creates no liability against the township, and in order to sustain an action based upon it the complaint must show by proper averment what it was given for, and, if for goods of any character, that they were suitable, useful, and necessary for the township, and that the township received and used them. Mitchelltree School Tp. of Martin County v. Carnahan, 84 N. E. 520, 522, 42 Ind. App. 473.

TOYS

A "toy" is "an article constructed for the amusement of children; a plaything, as a doll or Noah's ark; hence, any trifling or amusing object; any bauble or knickknack; trinket; trifle." Ping-pong balls are not "toys," as provided for in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 191, par. 418, but are dutiable under paragraph 17 of said act, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 152, as articles of collusion. United States v. Strauss Bros. & Co., 136 Fed. 185, 187, 69 C. C. A. 201 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict.).

Ping-pong balls, which were sometimes sold as toys before the game of ping-pong was invented, and which have been occasionally sold for the same purpose since the game went out of vogue, but which, when imported, were not intended to be used chiefly as toys, but in the game of ping-pong, are not dutiable as "toys," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418. United States v. Wanamaker, 136 Fed. 266, 267 (distinguishing United States v. Strauss Bros. &

Co., 136 Fed. 185, 69 C. C. A. 201, and citing Cadwalader v. Wanamaker, 149 U. S. 539, 13 Sup. Ct. 979, 983, 37 L. Ed. 837).

"Toys" are playthings for the amusement of children. Imitation roses of celluloid and metal, which are worn as boutonnieres, chiefly by children on occasions of frolic and fun, and are also used as gifts in prize packages, are not "toys," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, but are dutiable as "artificial * * * flowers," under paragraph 425. Hamburger & Co. v. United States, 180 Fed. 632, 633 (citing U. S. v. Cattus, 167 Fed. 532, 93 C. C. A. 64).

The real test of whether an article is a "toy" is its use by children as a plaything; and diminutive penknives with odd-shaped handles, which though they cannot be effectively used for most of the purposes for which an ordinary pocketknife is used, are not in fact used as playthings, are less properly classed as "toys," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, than as "penknives" under Schedule C, par. 153. A. Kastor & Bros. v. United States, 167 Fed. 993, 994.

Artificial shamrocks are not "toys," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, but are dutiable as "artificial leaves, under paragraph 425, 30 Stat. 191. United States v. Cattus, 167 Fed. 532, 533, 93 C. C. A. 64.

The provision for "toys" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, does not include small silk flags mounted on slender wooden staffs about 4½ inches long. Tuska v. United States, 162 Fed. 814.

Where there was evidence that a 22-caliber Stevens rifle was used for hunting and killing game, and was capable of killing a human being, it was not within Rev. St. 1898, § 49a, prohibiting the use or possession of "any toy pistol, toy revolver, or toy firearm." Taylor v. Sell, 97 N. W. 498, 120 Wis. 32.

The provision for "toys" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, does not include figures of animals, single or groups, which are known in trade as metal novelties, and are generally used as mantel or cabinet ornaments, but are dutiable under paragraph 193. Samstag & Hilder Bros Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 756, 757.

In regard to stuffed skins of domestic chicks and ducklings, used by confectioners and dealers in Easter goods and novelties, held, that they are not "toys" within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, but "birds, stuffed," under paragraph 493, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 196. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 141 Fed. 383.

"Toys" made of celluloid, a compound of pyroxylin, are dutiable under the provision in the Tariff Act relating to a number of toys specified "and all other toys not composed of rubber, china, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen or stone ware and not specially provided for in this act," rather than under a provision relating to "compounds of pyroxylin whether known as celluloid or by any other name." United States v. Schwarz, 140 Fed. 302, 304.

The provision for "toys" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, held not to include fragile, flimsy articles of tinsel, in the shape of rings, stars, etc., which, while they may amuse or entertain children when hung on a Christmas tree, are not suitable to be played with, and, besides being used as Christmas tree ornaments, are employed in shop decorations. Thanhauser v. United States, 159 Fed. 228, 232.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 427, 30 Stat. 191, for "fans of all kinds," was, notwithstanding its broad language, not intended to include everything which might be called a fan, and to an exceedingly limited extent used as a fan; and so-called cigar fans and firecracker fans, consisting of small folding fans closing into cases representing cigars, etc., are not dutiable under said provision, but under paragraph 418, 30 Stat. 191, as "toys." Morimura Bros. v. United States, 175 Fed. 887, 889.

TOY PISTOL

TR

The abbreviation "Tr.," in a description of property in an assessment as being "in Los Angeles county in Pellissier Tr.," stood for "tract." Baird v. Monroe, 89 Pac. 352, 356, 150 Cal. 560.

TRACK DELIVERY

Code 1907, § 5604, providing that railroad companies shall deliver freight at their depots or warehouses, or, in case of "track delivery," shall place loaded cars at an accessible place for unloading within 24 hours after arrival, by the words "track delivery," means tracks maintained by the railroad companies at an accessible place for unloading, for the purpose of delivering freight in car load lots. Greek-American Produce Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 58 South. 994, 995, 4 Ala. App. 377.

TRACKMAN

In an action against a railroad for injuries to a passenger in a wreck, where the only issue presented was the unsafe condition of the track, owing to a failure to properly spike and tamp the ties and fill in between them where old ties had been replaced by new ones, and defendant sought to show that skillful trackmen had cared for the track in a careful manner the day before the wreck, the court charged that defendant was bound to exercise "that very high degree of care which a very highly skillful, experienced, and very careful person would exercise under similar circumstances in the conduct of the business." A special charge was also given that the care required was such as a very highly experienced and skillful, and very highly prudent, railroad trackman would have exercised under the circumstances. Held, that the special charge did not limit the degree of care required by the main charge, since "trackmen" were the only men working on the tracks "under similar circumstances," and the term included the roadmaster and section foreman as well as the common section hand. Norton v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 108 S. W. 1044, 1046.

TRACKS AND RUNNING PARTS

In an injury action against a carrier by a passenger, an allegation that defendant so carelessly repaired and maintained the tracks and the running parts of the passenger car, and so carelessly allowed them to become unsafe, and defective, etc., is too general in respect to how the tracks and running parts of the car were unsafe; the phrase "the tracks and running parts" not being restricted in meaning to wheels and axles, but being broad enough to embrace as much as the phrase "defective brakes and other appliances." Braunstein v. People's Ry. Co. (Del.) 77 Atl. 738, 740, 1 Boyce, 310.

TRACT

See Lots, Blocks, Tracts, and Parcels of Land.

See, also, Tr.

See, also, Parcel.

"A 'tract' is defined as a 'lot, piece, or parcel of land of greater or less size, the term not importing in itself any precise dimensions.' * * * Under the word 'tract' in Anderson's Law Dictionary it is said: 'Does not imply anything as to the size of the tract of land.' " The failure to enter for taxation a lot lying in an unincorporated village in a separate table under the head of "Town Lots," and the listing of such lot in the land book under "Tracts of Land," do not vitiate the assessment. Fleming v. Char-nock, 66 S. E. 8, 9, 66 W. Va. 55, 18 Ann. Cas. 711 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Law Dict. and And. Law Dict.).

"The terms 'tract or lot' and 'piece or parcel of real property,' or 'piece or parcel of land,' means any contiguous quantity of land in the possession of, owned by, or recorded as the property of the same claimant, person or company." In this connection the word "contiguous" means land which touches on the sides. Hence two quarters of the same section which only touch at the corner do not constitute, for the purpose of taxation, one tract or parcel of land. Griffin v. Denison Land Co., 119 N. W. 1041, 1043, 18 N. D. 246 (quoting from Rev. Codes, 1905, § 1480 [Rev. Codes 1899, § 1176]).

The usual signification of the word "tract," as applied to land, is contiguity of the parcels of property. Const. § 111, provides that all lands comprising a single tract, sold in pursuance of decree of court or on execution, shall be first offered in subdivisions not exceeding 160 acres, and then offered as an entirety, and the price bid for the latter shall control only when it shall exceed the aggregate of the bids for the land in subdivisions. Code 1892, § 2443, provides that all lands comprising a single tract and wholly described by the subdivisions of the governmental surveys, sold under mortgages and trust deeds, shall be sold as provided in Const. § 111. Land sold under a trust deed had been held for many years as a home place, all as part of one plantation, though 80 acres of it was about half a mile from the balance, but connected with it by a public road. Held, that the lands as a whole comprised only a single tract, and should have been sold as if they lay contiguously. Provine v. Thornton, 46 South. 950, 951, 92 Miss. 395.

Laws 1890, p. 376, c. 132, § 32, provides that the assessor shall actually view when practicable and determine the true and full value of each lot of real property listed for taxation and shall enter the value thereof in one column, etc., and the statutes further provide that the term "tract" or "lot" and "piece," or "parcel of real property," and "piece" or "parcel of land," whenever used in the act relating to revenue and taxation, shall be held to mean any contiguous quantity of land in the possession, owned by, or recorded as the property of, the same claimant, person, or company. Held, that under the statutes smaller tracts or subdivisions composing a larger tract could not be assessed as one tract, where the land was owned by different persons under recorded titles or in joint ownership, and assessments in one tract of different ownerships or estates in different tracts seem to be inhibited, where the different titles are of record. State Finance Co. v. Myers, 112 N. W. 76, 78, 16 N. D. 193.

As vehicle, see Vehicle.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2044, providing that any person using a "traction or road engine" on a public street in an incorporated town or city shall send a person in advance not less than 50 yards to warn approaching teams, does not apply to a "steam roller" used in making or repairing city streets. City of New Albany v. Stier, 72 N. E. 273, 277, 34 Ind. App. 615.

TRADE

Any trade, manufacture, or business, see Any.

Kind of trade, see Kind.

The words "trade or manufacture" are not technical words, but have common, ordinary meanings. Sharpe v. Hasey, 114 N. W. 1118, 1119, 134 Wis. 618.

A "trade" is synonymous with an "exchange," which signifies a transfer of one or more pieces of property for other property. Colgan v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 114 Pac. 460, 464, 59 Or. 469 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2546).

To say that a match manufacturing company receives letters from "the trade" means that it receives letters from dealers in matches. Mulholland v. Washington Match Co., 77 Pac. 497, 498, 35 Wash. 315.

A two-family house is not in violation of a covenant against the erection of any building to be used or occupied "for any trade, manufacture, etc., or in any objectionable manner whatever." McDonald v. Spang, 105 N. Y. Supp. 617, 620, 55 Misc. Rep. 332.

A contract for the sale of asphalt and cement, requiring the seller to furnish to the buyer the materials designated for the latter's exclusive use in his own "trade," did not permit the buyer to make contracts with third parties and require the seller to fill them. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Refining Co., 119 Fed. 134, 137, 55 C. C. A. 566.

Where defendant, holding a horse under a conditional sale from S., by which title was reserved in S. until payment of the purchase money and note, made an agreement with

S., on maturity of the note, when part only of it had been paid, that S. should sell to him a mule, and in payment therefor defendant should turn back the horse to S. and pay him an additional sum, and this was done, defendant under his contract of purchase of the horse, having an interest in it which he could sell, and S., on default of payment for it, having a right to affirm the sale and waive reservation of title, which he in effect did, it was held that this amounted to a "trade" of the horse, within a contract by which services furnished by plaintiff were to be paid for on the trading of the horse by defendant. Snyder v. Slatton, 123 S. W. 649, 650, 92 Ark. 530.

The owning, controlling, and leasing of theaters, and the producing of plays and entertainments, and the booking of contracts for the production of plays, is not "trade or commerce," within Pen. Code, § 168, subs. 5, 6, prohibiting a conspiracy to commit any act injurious to "trade or commerce." People v. Klaw, 106 N. Y. Supp. 341, 350, 55 Misc. Rep. 72 (citing Webst. Dict.; Stand. Dict.; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 1127; Jac. Law Dict.; United States v. Cassidy, 67 Fed. 698; United States v. Coal Dealers' Ass'n, 85 Fed. 252; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 405, 24 L. Ed. 527).

The word "trade" in its broadest significance includes, not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling for money or commerce and traffic generally. A corporation chartered for the purpose of erecting a dam and the cutting, storing, and selling of ice, is a "trading corporation" within the statute authorizing trading corporations to wind up their affairs after the expiration of their charter. Pocono Spring Water Ice Co. v. American Ice Co., 64 Atl. 398, 400, 214 Pa. 640 (quoting and adopting definition in May v. Sloan, 101 U. S. 231, 25 L. Ed. 797).

Rev. St. § 2078, provides that no person employed in Indian affairs shall have any interest or concern in any trade with the Indians, except for and on account of the United States, and any person offending shall be liable to a penalty of $5,000 and shall be removed from office. Indian Appropriation Act July 4, 1884, c. 180, 23 Stat. 94, declares that where Indians are in possession or control of cattle or their increase, which have been purchased by the government, such cattle shall not be sold to any person not a member of the tribe to which the owners of the cattle belong, or to any citizen of the United States whether intermarried with the Indians or not, except with the consent in writing of the agent of the tribe to which the owner or possessor of the cattle belongs. Held, that the word "trade" was used in section 2078 in its ordinary sense, to mean the act or business of exchanging commodities either by barter or by buying and selling for money; commerce; traffic; barter; and hence such section prohibited a female industrial school teacher, while employed by the government, from purchasing from Indians cattle furnished by the United States and issued to them. United States v. Douglas, 190 Fed. 482, 484, 111 C. C. A. 314, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1075.

As any business for profit

The charter of the town of Lenoir (Priv. Laws 1909, c. 37, § 1) provides that, in addition to the powers hereinbefore specially conferred, the town shall have all the power incident to corporations of like character under the general laws of the state. Revisal 1905, § 2924, confers on cities and towns the power of annually levying the tax on all trades, professions, etc., carried on within the city. Held, that the town was empowered to impose a license tax of $5 on every soda fountain maintained in the town; the business of keeping a soda fountain being a "trade" as that term is used in the act, which means any employment or business embarked in for gain or profit. Lenoir Drug Co. v. Town of Lenoir, 76 S. E. 480, 481, 160 N. C. 571.

As buying and selling

"Trade" is the business of exchanging commodities by buying and selling for money. Interstate trade is the business of buying, selling, and exchanging commodities between the states, and parties may be so engaged, even though they act through the agency of carriers. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700, 708.

"Trade," within the Bankruptcy Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547), is the buying and selling of merchandise or any class of goods, deriving a profit therefrom. In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 947.

To "trade" is to engage in the purchase or sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, and a firm engaging in the business of buying standing lumber in large quantities, and cutting and sawing the same, and selling the lumber, is engaged in a trading business, within Gen. St. 1902, § 2342, providing for the assessment for taxation of the property of any trading business. Jackson v. Town of Union, 73 Atl. 773, 774, 82 Conn. 266 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Exchange synonymous

See Exchange.

As occupation or profession

The word "trade" embraces within its meaning commercial traffic, and it also has a restricted significance, which applies to mechanical pursuits; but in its broad and general sense it covers and embraces all occupations and business, with the possible exception of the learned professions and those that pertain to liberal arts and the pursuit of agriculture. Gelse v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. (Tex.) 107 S. W. 555.

Sale distinguished

A sale, in the ordinary sense of the word, is a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent; but if the purchase price is paid by the transfer of other property, the transaction is more properly denominated an exchange or "trade." Where, to acquire means of irrigating for lands so as to make them salable, they were transferred to a land and irrigation company, the owners taking stock and bonds therefor, the transaction was a consolidation of interests, and not a sale of the lands, within a contract entitling plaintiff to commissions for services in effecting sales of the lands; and though plaintiff could not recover under a contract entitling him to commissions for effecting sales of lands, where they were conveyed to a corporation, the owners taking stock and bonds therefor, he could recover the reasonable value of his services in bringing about the transaction. Close v. Browne, 82 N. E. 629, 632, 230 Ill. 228, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 63.

TRADE AND BUSINESS

The words "trade and business" in Laws 1897, c. 79, by the provisions of which combinations to prevent competition in insurance, or to settle the price thereof, are declared to be a trust and an unlawful conspiracy against trade and business, are intended as a generic term embracing all the transactions and practices mentioned in the act; and the term "trust" is properly made to include combinations or contracts in restraint of competition in insurance. State v. American Surety Co., 135 N. W. 365, 366, 91 Neb. 22, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 973.

TRADE DISCOUNT

A "trade discount" is a percentage deduction from the regular list or catalogue price of goods. Smith Table Co. v. Madsen, 84 Pac. 885, 30 Utah, 297.

TRADE FIXTURES

As Fixtures, see Fixture.

"Trade fixtures" are articles erected or annexed to the realty by the tenant for the purpose of carrying on a trade, and are removable by him during his term, provided the removal does not affect the essential characteristics of the article removed or reduce it to mass of crude materials. Field v. Morris, 129 S. W. 543, 545, 95 Ark. 268.

"Trade fixtures" are personal property placed upon or annexed to the realty by a tenant for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business during the term of the lease, and he has a right to remove them before the expiration of the lease, providing it can be done without destruction and will not materially injure the premises. Cohen v. Wittemann,

Y. Supp. 493, 497, 100 App. Div. 338; Orabony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 234; Talbot v. Apple, 96 Mass. [14 Allen] 177.

The term "trade fixtures" includes such as coal tipples, mine tracks, incline s, and other appliances or machines are fixed to the realty, which must be ed to the lessee on the land books for ses of taxation. State ex rel. Dillon v. 56 S. E. 390, 393, 60 W. Va. 483.

A dummy elevator and sludge table, could be removed from a mining plant out injury to the real estate, were "trade es." Weeks-Betts Hardware Co. v. Welt Lead & Zinc Co., 134 S. W. 85, 37, 10 App. 387.

Fences, windmills, lightning rods, and ring around the house are not such e fixtures" within Comp. Laws 1909, § as may be removed by a tenant who has ad them, unless there is some agreement at effect. Kilgore v. Lyle, 120 Pac. 626, 10 Okl. 596.

Heavy plate glass windows and marble lled by a tenant as the front of a store ing cannot be regarded as "trade fix-" which he was entitled to remove, e removal exposed the interior of the ing, though it was accomplished without ching nails, breaking beams, or weaken-he building. Alden v. Mayfield, 127 Pac. 5, 163 Cal. 793, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1022, Cas. 1914A, 258.

In the absence of agreement, a lessee remove his trade fixtures while the lease force, and such fixtures include not onlyinery, but buildings erected for trade oses. Under a lease for a long term of ; for manufacturing purposes, a building ed for a plant is a removable "trade fix-" regardless of its size or the materials hich it is made. In re Montello Brick ks, 163 Fed. 624, 632; Montello Brick Co. exler, 167 Fed. 482, 93 C. C. A. 118.

"Trade fixtures" is a term usually used scribe property which a tenant has plac-n rented real estate to advance the bust-for which the realty is leased, and may, gainst the lessor and those claiming un-him, he removed at the end of the ten-term. Trade fixtures substituted for es-ial parts of the leased premises, and not ions thereto, are not removable and are ured to be permanent additions. John P. re & Co. v. City of Portland, 76 Atl. 679, 106 Me. 234, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576, 20 . Cas. 603 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, 142).

As between landlord and tenant, articles ed by the tenant to the premises for the ose of carrying on the business for which premises were leased are denominated de fixtures," and are removable by the nt. Machinery, which a lessee of mining premises placed thereon for the operation of the mine, though firmly attached to the realty, is a trade fixture, which he is entitled to remove within a reasonable time after the forfeiture of the lease. Updegraff v. Lesem, 62 Pac. 342, 345, 15 Colo. App. 297.

"Trade fixtures" are property placed by a tenant on rented realty to advance the business for which the realty was leased, and which may, as against the lessor and those claiming under him, be removed at the end of the lessee's term. A bar, back bar, mirrors, a hand and foot rail, screens, summer doors, an ice box, radiators, partition doors, chandeliers, and chairs, placed by a tenant in a building leased to him for saloon purposes, were "trade fixtures," which the tenant was entitled to remove; it not appearing that any of the articles were so affixed to the realty that they could not be readily removed. Webber v. Franklin Brewing Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 251, 252, 123 App. Div. 465.

When a bank, in possession of a building as a tenant, constructed at its own expense a brick vault, on which was placed a steel safe which was necessary in the conduct of its business, and the safe could be removed, and the pieces reassembled and used again for the same purpose, without injury to the safe or to the freehold, it was held that the safe was a "trade fixture," within Civ. Code, § 1019, authorizing a tenant to remove a trade fixture, and the bank, before the termination of the tenancy, could remove it. Woods v. Bank of Haywards, 106 Pac. 780, 781, 10 Cal. App. 93.

In New York the rule is that if the article be attached for temporary use, with the intention of removing it and in such a manner that its removal can be effected without substantial injury to the freehold, it will be regarded as a chattel and may be removed by the tenant; but if annexation be permanent in character, or the article be specially adapted for use in the place where it is annexed, it becomes a fixture and cannot be removed. Articles annexed to the realty for the purpose of carrying on a trade are known as "trade fixtures," and are removable by the tenant during his term, if the removal will not materially injure the premises. Where certain rented property was used as a factory, boilers, engines, shafting, hangers, pulleys, etc., placed on the premises by the tenant for use in its business, and removable without material injury to the building, were "trade fixtures," which the tenant was entitled to remove on termination of the lease. Bergh v. Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co., 136 Fed. 368, 370, 69 C. C. A. 212, 70 L. R. A. 756 (citing N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Allison, 107 Fed. 179, 46 C. C. A. 229; Livingston v. Sulzer [N. Y.] 19 Hun, 375; Smith v. Whitney, 18 N. E. 229, 147 Mass. 479; Holbrook v. Chamberlin, 116 Mass. 155, 17 Am. Rep. 146; Globe Marble Mills Co. v.

TRADE-MARK

Infringement of, see Infringement.

A "trade-mark" is a form, symbol, or name appropriated by one who produces or deals in a particular thing or conducts a particular business to designate the origin or ownership thereof. Italian Swiss Colony v. Italian Vineyard Co., 110 Pac. 913, 914, 158 Cal. 252, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439.

A "trade-mark" is an arbitrary distinctive name, symbol, or device to indicate the origin of the product to which it is attached, and, when adopted, becomes the exclusive property of its proprietor. Sartor v. Schaden, 101 N. W. 511, 513, 125 Iowa, 696.

A "trade-mark" is a guaranty that the goods to which it is attached are made by its owner. American Tobacco Co. v. Polacsek, 170 Fed. 117, 120.

A "trade-mark" or "trade-name" is some symbol by which one man's manufacture is differentiated from another's, and all that is needed for a valid trade-name is that it indicate the manufacture of the owner, whether there are other manufacturers or not. R. Guastavino Co. v. Comerma, 180 Fed. 920, 921.

A "trade-mark" is a distinctive name, word, mark, emblem, design, symbol, or device used in lawful commerce to indicate or authenticate the source from which has come, or through which has passed, the chattel on or to which it is affixed. Western Grocer Co. v. Caffarelli Bros. (Tex.) 108 S. W. 413, 414.

A "trade-mark" is a name, sign, or symbol which indicates or certifies that a given article or commodity is in reality what it claims or purports to be, and, while in a qualified sense it is property in the hands of its owner, it has no intrinsic value, being merely a certificate of the truth. Commonwealth v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 116 S. W. 766, 768, 132 Ky. 521, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30, 136 Am. St. Rep. 186, 18 Ann. Cas. 1156.

A "trade-mark" is a distinctive mark of authenticity through which the products of particular manufacturers or the vendible commodities of particular merchants may be distinguished from those of others; consequently, where a patent expires upon an article, the name of the patented article cannot be registered as a trade-mark, its use being free to the public. Bristol Co. v. Graham, 109 Fed. 412, 414, 117 C. C. A. 644; De Nobili v. Scanda, 198 Fed. 341 (citing Standard Paint Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 456, 220 U. S. 446, 55 L. Ed. 536).

A valid "trade-mark" may consist of some novel device, arbitrary character, or fancy word applied without special meaning, which by use comes to serve the same purpose, and such words and devices indicate sufficiently the true source of the article without particular addition of the name of the manufacturer or dealer. Avenarius v. Kornely, 121 N. W. 336, 342, 139 Wis. 247.

A "trade-mark" is any sign, mark, symbol, word, or words which indicate the origin or ownership of an article as distinguished from its quality, and which others have not the equal right to employ for the same purposes. In its strictest sense, it is applicable only to a vendible article of merchandise to which it is affixed. Ball v. Broadway Bazaar, 87 N. E. 674, 675, 194 N. Y. 429.

"A 'trade-mark' may consist of a name, or a device, or a peculiar arrangement of words, lines, or figures in the form of a label, which has been adopted and used by a person in his business to designate goods of a particular kind manufactured by him, and which no other person has an equal right to use." As against the commonwealth, no person can claim the right to use the seal of the commonwealth for advertising or commercial purposes. Commonwealth v. R. I. Sherman Mfg. Co., 75 N. E. 71, 189 Mass. 76, 4 Ann. Cas. 268 (citing Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139, 147).

A "trade-mark" is an arbitrary distinctive name, symbol, or device to indicate or authenticate the origin of the product to which it is attached. A word may be purely generic or descriptive, and so not capable of becoming an arbitrary trade-mark. Thus a proper or geographical name is not the subject of a trade-mark. The right to the use of an arbitrary name or device as indicia of origin is protected upon the ground of a legal right to its use by the person appropriating it. G. W. Cole Co. v. American Cement & Oil Co., 130 Fed. 703, 705, 65 C. C. A. 105.

A device or symbol, not adopted for the purpose of indicating origin, manufacture, or ownership, but placed upon an article to denote class, grade, style, or quality, cannot be upheld as technically a "trade-mark." Dennison Mfg. Co. v. Scharf Tag, Label & Box Co., 135 Fed. 625, 632, 68 C. C. A. 263 (citing Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 400, 34 L. Ed. 997, 138 U. S. 537, 547).

The primary purpose of a trade-mark is to indicate the producer of the article or commodity on which it is used and to distinguish it from like articles produced by others. A representation of a star cannot by its own meaning indicate the origin or ownership of such an article as lubricating oil, nor, in view of its general use as a symbol, can it be appropriated as a trade-mark, except in connection with other devices or words such as to render the whole character-ic. Galena-Signal Oil Co. v. W. P. Fuller Co., 142 Fed. 1002, 1007.

The function of a "trade-mark" is to distinguish the products of a manufacturer the objects of commerce, or to point out distinctly the origin or ownership of the article to which it is affixed; that is to say, must of itself or by association indicate the origin or ownership of the article. A trade-mark or trade-name is of no virtue in itself. It becomes of value only through use, and because by use it is an assistance to purchasers of the excellence of the article to which it is affixed as manufactured by the one whose name appears the producer. Bulte v. Igleheart Bros., 17 Fed. 492, 498, 70 C. C. A. 76.

"A 'trade-mark' designates an article of commerce, and is affixed thereto. It is either general or universal, accompanying the article, while a 'trade-name' applies to a business, and is as a rule local. A 'trade-mark' may be infringed anywhere; but not with a 'trade-name.' For instance, that has a hotel called the Irving Hotel or the Metropolitan Hotel in a place does not prevent others from having hotels of the same name in other places; he has an exclusive right to the name in his locality only. Though simple, this illustration is of general application." Ball v. Broadway Bazaar, 106 N. Y. Supp. 249, 250, 121 App. Div. 546 (citing Paul, Trade-Marks, § 177; Brown, Trade-Marks, § 91).

A union label authorized by Labor Law, §§ 15, 16, authorizing labor unions to adopt a label, and prohibiting the wrongful use thereof by others is not a "trade-mark" within Penal Law, §§ 2350, 2354, defining a trade-mark as a mark used to indicate the maker, owner, or seller of an article of merchandise, and punishing the unlawful affixing to an article of the genuine trade-mark of another, and one wrongfully using a union label does not thereby violate the sections of penal law. People v. Streep (Sp. Sess.) N. Y. Supp. 172, 174.

A "trade-mark" is a distinctive mark of authenticity, through which the products of particular manufacturers or the vendible commodities of particular merchants may be distinguished from those of others. It may consist in any symbol, or in any form of words; but, as its office is to point out distinctly the origin or ownership of the articles to which it is affixed, no sign or combination of words can be appropriated as a valid trade-mark which, from the nature of the sign conveyed by its primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth and with equal right for the same purpose. The word "Rubber" is not a subject of exclusive appropriation as a trade-mark for a flexible waterproof roofing, since, though the roofing contains no rubber, the word is descriptive, and not indicative of origin or ownership.

The term "trade-mark" means a distinctive mark of authenticity, through which the products of particular manufacturers or the vendible commodities of particular merchants may be distinguished from those of others. As its office is to point out distinctly the origin or ownership of the articles to which it is affixed, no sign or form of words can be appropriated as a valid trade-mark, which, from the fact conveyed by its primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth and with equal right for the same purpose. It follows, that the word "Davids" alone is not the subject of a valid trade-mark. Thaddeus Davids Co. v. Davids, 165 Fed. 792, 795 (quoting and adopting definition in Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Illinois Watch Case Co., 179 U. S. 665, 672, 677, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365).

"A 'trade-mark' is an arbitrary, distinctive name, symbol, or device to indicate or authenticate the origin of the product to which it is attached. An infringement of such trade-mark consists in the use of the genuine upon substituted goods, or of an exact copy and reproduction of the genuine, or in the use of an imitation in which the difference is colorable only, and the resemblance avails to mislead, so that the goods to which the spurious trade-mark is affixed are likely to be mistaken for the genuine product. Unfair competition is distinguishable from the infringement of a trade-mark in this: That it does not involve the exclusive right of another to the use of the name, symbol, or device." American Brewing Co. v. Bienville Brewery, 153 Fed. 615, 616.

What makes a mark affixed by a seller to goods produced or selected by him, a technical "trade-mark" (i. e., one whose exclusive use by him, in marking goods of the same like character, will be protected) is that, when it is affixed to goods of that character, it amounts to a representation that they are the goods of the person who has adopted it as his "trade-mark." The office of a trade-mark is to point out distinctly the origin or ownership of the article to which it is affixed, or, in other words, to give notice who is the producer. Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co., 121 Fed. 357, 364, 366 (citing Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. [13 Wall.] 311, 20 L. Ed. 581).

The term "trade-mark" has been in use from a very early date, and, generally speaking, means a distinctive mark of authenticity, through which the commodities of particular merchants may be distinguished from those of others. It may consist in any symbol, or in any form of words; but, as its office is to point out distinctively the origin or ownership of the articles to which it is affixed, it follows that no sign or form of words can be appropriated as a valid trade-mark which, from the nature of the fact conveyed by its primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth and with equal right for the same purpose. W. R. Lynn Shoe Co. v. Auburn-Lynn Shoe Co., 62 Atl. 499, 503, 100 Me. 461, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960 (quoting and adopting definition in Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Illinois Watch Case Co., 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 179 U. S. 665, 45 L. Ed. 365)

Name of periodical

The name of a newspaper is in the nature of a "trade-mark," and passes by assignment with the business in which it is used; but, apart from the business, it confers no right of ownership, and so, in a controversy to determine the ownership of a newspaper plant according to the provisions of a will, plaintiffs can have no right in the name of the paper as an element of value, unless the material property itself is held to pass to them under the will. Seabrook v. Grimes, 68 Atl. 883, 886, 107 Md. 410, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 126 Am. St. Rep. 400.

Trade-name distinguished

A "trade-mark" has reference to the thing sold, while a "trade-name" embraces both the thing sold and the individuality of the seller. Eastern Outfitting Co. v. Mannheim, 110 Pac. 23, 25, 59 Wash. 428, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251.

The difference between the right to the use of a trade-name and a technical trade-mark, is that, while the "trade-name," like a "trade-mark," is attached to the manufactured article, and accompanies it in the market, it may be of such a kind as not to make the right exclusive. George G. Fox Co. v. Glynn, 78 N. E. 89, 92, 191 Mass. 344, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1096, 114 Am. St. Rep. 619.

A "trade-mark" is protected by equity on the theory of an absolute property right in the holder, and without reference to questions of fraud or damage, while fraud or damage, express or implied, is essential to entitle the holder to protection in the use of a "trade-name." Northwestern Knitting Co. v. Garon, 128 N. W. 288, 290, 112 Minn. 321.

"A 'trade-mark' designates an article of commerce, and is affixed thereto. It is thus general or universal, accompanying the article, while a 'trade-name' applies to a business and is as a rule local. A 'trade-mark' may be infringed anywhere; but not so with a 'trade-name.' For instance, that A. has a hotel called the Irving Hotel or the Cosmopolitan Hotel in a place does not prevent others from having hotels of the same name in other places; he has an exclusive right to the name in his locality only. Though simple, this illustration is of general application." Ball v. Broadway Bazaar, 106 N. Y.

TRADE-NAME

As property, see Property.

Trade-mark distinguished, see Trade-Mark.

A "trade-name" relates to a business and its good will, rather than to a vendible commodity. Ball v. Broadway Bazaar, 87 N. E. 674, 675, 194 N. Y. 429.

A "trade-mark" or "trade-name" is some symbol by which one man's manufacture is differentiated from another's, and all that is needed for a valid trade-name is that it indicate the manufacture of the owner, whether there are other manufacturers or not. R. Guastavino Co. v. Comerma, 180 Fed. 920, 921.

A "trade-name" is a word or phrase by which a business enterprise, or specific article of merchandise from a specific source, is known to the public, and when applied to merchandise is generic or descriptive, and hence not susceptible of appropriation as a trade-mark. Northwestern Knitting Co. v. Garon, 128 N. W. 288, 290, 112 Minn. 321.

It is a matter of common observation that persons do business frequently under what is known as a "trade-name," a name adopted for the purpose of giving them an apparent standing in the business community. There is no law preventing the use of a trade-name by an individual. The use by an individual of his name, followed by the term "& Co.," used as a trade-name did not necessarily create a presumption that he had a partner or partners, or that such title included more than one person. Wiley v. Crocker-Woolworth Nat. Bank, 75 Pac. 106, 108, 141 Cal. 508.

TRADE PHRASE

If specifications require a cellar to be a certain depth, it is not a "trade phrase" which fixes the depth of the foundation walls; but it is the duty of the builder to place the walls deep enough to get a sufficient foundation. Superintendent, etc., of Public School of City of Trenton v. Bennett, 27 N. J. Law, 513, 520, 72 Am. Dec. 373.

TRADE PURPOSE

Defendant, without plaintiff's written consent, used plaintiff's name in circulars issued for the purpose of putting on the market a photographic film representing plaintiff in the uniform of a wireless telegraph operator, which film purported to represent the wreck of a vessel, of which plaintiff was wireless operator. The films were leased by defendant for a stipulated price to moving picture exchanges for reproduction and exhibition to the public. Held, that plaintiff could enjoin such use of his name and picture, and recover damages therefor, under Civil Rights Law, § 61, prohibiting the use for purposes of trade of the name, portrait, or picture of any living person without having first obtained the written consent of such person; such use being for the purpose of "trade" within the statute. Binns v. Vitagraph Co. of America, 124 N. Y. Supp. 515, 516, 67 Misc. Rep. 327

TRADE SECRET

As property, see Property.

The term "trade secret," as usually understood, means a secret formula or process, not patented, known only to certain individuals using it in compounding some article of trade having a commercial value, and does not denote the mere privacy with which an ordinary commercial business is carried on. In re Bolster, 110 Pac. 547, 548, 59 Wash. 655, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 716.

TRADE UNION

Receiving protection of trade union, see Receive.

A "trade union" or "labor organization" is a combination of workmen usually, but not necessarily, of the same trade or allied trades, for the purpose of securing by united action the most favorable conditions as regards wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members. Stone v. Textile Examiners & Shrinkers Employers' Ass'n, 122 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462, 137 App. Div. 655.

A "trade union" in Wisconsin is merely an assemblage of persons. It is in no manner recognized by the law as an entity, separate from its members, except to the extent that a partnership is so recognized. No statute has permitted it to sue or be sued in its common name. Its members may sue or be sued, either by joining all of them, or one or more for all, where the members are so numerous that it is impracticable to bring them all in; but it is the suit of the members, and not of the union, though an injunction may properly go against a trade union by name and operate to restrain all of its members who have knowledge of it, but this is a different thing from fining the union or rendering a judgment for damages against it. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 Fed. 155, 182.

TRADE USAGE

A "trade usage," by which words are given an unusual or arbitrary significance in a particular line of business generally or in the locality where the parties reside, must be shown to be of such definite character and such general acceptance that knowledge thereof by both parties may be reasonably inferred. Citizens' State Bank of Perry v. Chambers, 105 N. W. 692, 695, 129 Iowa, 414.

TRADES SCHOOL

TRADER—TRADESMAN

See Itinerant Trader.

The word "tradesman" has a meaning frequently applied as the opposite of living upon an income or salary. In re Kingston Realty Co., 157 Fed. 299, 302.

A "dealer" is one whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise, goods, and chattels, as a merchant, storekeeper, or broker; the term being synonymous with "trader." State v. Rosenbaum, 68 Atl. 250, 251, 80 Conn. 327, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 125 Am. St. Rep. 121.

A "trader" originally meant a shopkeeper; a tradesman; but it now in this connection means merely a business man. In the Bankruptcy Act it is given a more restricted meaning. Peabody v. Citizens' State Bank of St. Charles, 108 N. W. 272, 276, 98 Minn. 302.

A "trader" is one who makes it his business to buy merchandise, goods, or chattels to sell again for gain; consequently, a corporation engaged principally in the business of renting films or moving pictures is not a trader within the purview of the Bankruptcy Act. In re Imperial Film Exchange, 198 Fed. 80, 81, 117 C. C. A. 188.

A "trader" is one who is engaged in trade or commerce, or, more strictly speaking, one who buys and sells goods or merchandise for profit. First Nat. Bank of Wilkes Barre v. Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 136 Fed. 466, 467 (citing Collier, Bankr. [5th Ed.] 63; Brandenburg, Bankr. [3d Ed.] § 115; Loveland, Bankr. [2d Ed.] 148; In re New York & W. Water Co., 98 Fed. 711; In re Tontine Surety Co. of New Jersey, 116 Fed. 401).

In the ordinary meaning of the term, a "trader" is one who makes it his business to buy merchandise or goods or chattels and to sell same for the purpose of making a profit. A trader is also said to be one whose business is to buy and sell merchandise or any class of goods deriving a profit from his dealings. United States Hotel Co. v. Niles, 134 Fed. 225, 226, 67 C. C. A. 153, 68 L. R. A. 588 (citing Black, Law Dict.; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 741).

A single sale is not sufficient to make one a "trader," within the meaning of Code 1906, § 4784, providing that if any person shall transact business as a trader or otherwise, with the addition of the words "agent," "factor," etc., and fail to disclose his principal or partner by a sign upon the place of business, or if any person shall transact business in his own name without such addition, all the property, stock, money, etc., used or required in such business shall be liable to the creditors of such person. Durham v. Sildell Liqueur Co., 49 South. 739, 94 Miss. 140.

Insurance agent

Code 1892, § 4234, requiring an agent transacting business as a "trader or otherwise" to disclose the name of his principal under penalty of rendering the property used in the business liable for the agent's debts, does not apply to a person transacting business solely as an insurance agent. I. L. Lyons & Co. v. Solomon S. Steele & Co., 38 South. 371, 372, 86 Miss. 261.

estaurateur

Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, cl. "b," 30 Stat. 547, providing that such corporations may become bankrupt. Gallagher v. De Lancey Stables Co., 158 Fed. 381, 382.

Brokerage company

Where a corporation was organized to carry on a general stock, bond, grain, and brokerage business, and was authorized to trade on its own behalf in stocks, bonds, grains, etc., and lease and dispose of real and personal property, it was subject to adjudication as a bankrupt corporation engaged in "trading or mercantile business." In re H. R. Leighton & Co., 147 Fed. 311, 314 (citing Collier, Bankr. [5th Ed.] p. 64; In re Surety Guarantee & Trust Co., 121 Fed. 73, 56 C. C. A. 654; In re Pacific Coast Ware-

Building and loan association

The phrase "engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining or mercantile pursuits," as used in Bankr. Act 1898, limiting corporations which may be forced into bankruptcy to such as are engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits, is to be taken in its natural and usual meaning, and any corporation which does not come within such meaning cannot be put into bankruptcy. A building and loan association, organized to accumulate a fund from contributions of its members, from which loans were to be made to assist members in purchase of real estate, the profits of which business were divided among its members, is not a corporation engaged principally in trading or mercantile pursuits, within the act. In re New York Building-Loan Banking Co., 127 Fed. 471, 472.

Hotel company

A hotel company engaged in furnishing rooms and meals to guests is not a corporation principally engaged in "trading or mercantile pursuits," and therefore cannot be adjudged a bankrupt, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, 30 Stat. 547. In re United States Hotel Co., 134 Fed. 225, 67 C. C. A. 153, 68 L. R. A. 588.

A corporation organized to procure land for hotel purposes, and to erect, maintain, and manage a hotel, is not a "trading or manufacturing corporation," and its secretary has no authority to execute in its name a note, for accommodation or otherwise, especially where the by-laws require both its president and secretary to sign its obligations. First Nat. Bank v. Abilene Hotel Co. (Tex.) 103 S. W. 1120.

A corporation engaged in conducting hotels at various points is not engaged principally in "trading or mercantile pursuits," so as to be liable to an involuntary adjudication in bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as amended although it also maintains two country stores, largely as an incident to the location of its hotels in a thinly settled, mountainous region. Toxaway Hotel Co. v. J. L. Smathers & Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 263, 264, 216 U. S. 439, 54 L. Ed. 558.

Ice company

A corporation chartered for the purpose of carrying on a wholesale and retail ice business, and which in fact sold not only ice of its own harvesting, but also large quantities which it purchased from third parties, is engaged chiefly in "trading and mercantile pursuits," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, and may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. First Nat. Bank v. Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 136 Fed. 466, 467.

The word "trade," in its broadest significance, includes not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling for money or commerce and traffic generally. A corporation chartered for the purpose of erecting a dam and the cutting, storing, and selling of ice, is a "trading corporation," within the statute authorizing trading corporations to wind up their affairs after the expiration of their charter. Pocono Spring Water Ice Co. v. American Ice Co., 64 Atl. 398, 400, 214 Pa. 640 (quoting and adopting definition in May v. Sloan, 101 U. S. 231, 25 L. Ed. 797).

Insurance agency business

Light and power company

Electricity generated for the purpose of furnishing light, heat, and power is a product of "manufacture" and a commercial commodity, and a corporation whose business it is to buy electricity and resell it to consumers for such purposes at a profit is engaged principally in "trading," within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, and may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 163; C. B. Nash Co. v. City of Council Bluffs, 184 Fed. 986, 106 C. C. A. 664.

Realty company

A corporation engaged in buying and selling improved and unimproved real estate is neither engaged in "trading," nor "mercantile pursuits," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 797, authorizing adjudication in bankruptcy against a corporation so engaged, the term "trading" being used to indicate the business of buying merchandise or goods or chattels to sell again for profit, and the words "mercantile pursuits" as having to do with trade or commerce of or pertaining to merchants or the traffic carried on by merchants in commercial transactions, the buying and selling of goods or merchandise or dealing in the purchase and sale of commodities habitually as a business, neither term being sufficient to include a dealer in land. In re Kingston Realty Co., 160 Fed. 445, 447, 87 C. C. A. 406.

Renting films for moving pictures

A corporation engaged principally in the business of renting films for moving pictures is not engaged in "trading or a mercantile pursuit," which renders it subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended. In re Imperial Film Exchange, 198 Fed. 80, 81, 117 C. C. A. 188.

Restaurant

A corporation engaged in operating a restaurant is not a "trader," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, authorizing an adjudication against a corporation engaged in trading; a "trader," within such section, being a person who buys goods to sell again without change of form or condition by combination and cooking, as in the case of a restaurateur. In re Wentworth Lunch Co., 159 Fed. 413, 415, 86 C. C. A. 393.

Water company

An irrigation corporation, organized to furnish water for the irrigation of rice fields, is not a corporation engaged in "trading or in manufacturing or mercantile pursuits," within the Bankruptcy Act. In re Bay City Irr. Co., 135 Fed. 850, 853.

TRADING PARTNERSHIP

A "trading partnership" is one requiring capital and credit. Hatchett & Large v. Sunset Brick & Tile Co. (Tex.) 99 S. W. 174, 175.

Partners whose business is to buy and sell cotton seed are a "trading partnership." Cotton Plant Oil Mill Co. v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 122 S. W. 658, 659, 92 Ark. 271.

A firm, engaged in the real estate, loan, and insurance business, which, likewise, buys and sells real estate on its own account, is prima facie a "trading partnership." Adams v. Long, 114 Ill. App. 277, 282.

A firm engaged in buying standing timber in large quantities, and cutting and sawing the same, and selling the lumber, is engaged in a "trading or mercantile business," within Gen. St. 1902, § 2342, providing for the assessment of the property of any trading or mercantile business; "to trade" being to engage in the purchase or sale of merchandise, and the word "mercantile" being defined as of or pertaining to merchants, or the traffic carried on by them. Jackson v. Town of Union, 73 Atl. 773, 774, 82 Conn. 266.

A "trading partnership" is one that buys and sells, but buying and selling need not be its sole purpose, nor even its most characteristic feature. A partnership for the conduct of manufacturing or mechanical business is none the less a trading one, for the reason that buying and selling in the market is only one of its accidents. George on Partnership, 92. In Klimbro v. Bullitt, 63 U. S. (22 How.) 256, 16 L. Ed. 313, the rule is stated as follows: "Wherever the business, according to the usual mode of conducting it, imports, in its nature, the necessity of buying and selling, the firm is then properly regarded as a trading partnership." Another statement of the principle is found in several authorities, to wit: If the partnership contemplates the periodical or continuous or frequent purchasing, not as incidental to an occupation, but for the purpose of selling again the thing purchased, either in its original or manufactured shape, it is a "trading or commercial partnership." Marsh, Merwin & Lemmon v. Wheeler, 59 Atl. 410, 411, 77 Conn. 449, 107 Am. St. Rep. 40.

Mining partnership distinguished

The principal distinctions between a "trading partnership" and a "mining partnership" are that a member of the latter may assign his interest without the consent of his copartner, and neither the assignment of a partner's interest nor the death of a partner works a dissolution of the partnership; that the assignee of an interest in the partnership becomes a partner without the assent of the other partners, and a member of a mining partnership has not the power to bind his associates by engagements with third persons to the same extent as a member of a trading partnership. Bentley v. Brossard, 94 Pac. 736, 743, 33 Utah, 396.

TRADING STAMP

As commodity, see Commodity.

As lottery, see Lottery.

As property, see Property.

Issue of, see Issuance—Issue.

Use of trading stamps as business, see Business.

A "trading stamp" is not ordinarily property. It is sui generis. It represents a somewhat complicated transaction, and from its nature there are necessary limitations upon the modes in which it may be transferred. A stamp is not merely a token of the company's obligation to redeem it, and of the right of the holder to redemption, but it is also a token or an instrument of another transaction in which the trading stamp company has an interest, and from which it derives its entire profit and its recompense for its outlay in establishing the business. The trading stamp company, having created a demand, in effect, sells to the merchant the right to supply this demand, and to issue to his customers stamps which are at the time of the issue the property of the trading stamp company. The merchant, in a certain sense, is the agent of the company in issuing the stamps to the public. The merchant gets such trade advantage as results from his distribution of the stamps. He pays the trading stamp company for this in proportion to the use that he makes of the trading stamps, paying so much a hundred for the use of the stamps. In the transaction between the company and the merchant, the stamp, once issued, represents so much advertising furnished and paid for. Once issued by the merchant, it is functus officio as a token of the sale and use of so much advertising. The trading stamp, when issued, represents a closed transaction between the merchant and the company, as well as an outstanding obligation to redeem the stamp. As a token of voucher of the sale and use of so much advertising, the trading stamp is necessarily a consumable article, an article designed for a single use in an advertising scheme. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833-835.

TRADING STAMP BUSINESS

The "trading stamp business" consists of the sale of checks or stamps to merchants, who give the same to their customers on purchases of goods, the number of stamps given being determined by the amount of the purchase, which stamps on presentation at the trading stamp store entitle the holders to select any article from an assortment of articles; each article being plainly marked with its value in stamps, and such value not being greater than the market value of the article. State v. Shugart, 35 South. 28, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Where complainant issued to merchants coupons in the form of adhesive stamps, which were given by the merchants to customers as a special discount or inducement for payment of cash, complainant agreeing to advertise the merchants' business and distribute books descriptive of the "trading stamp business" and to maintain a store where the stamps could be redeemed by exchanging them for merchandise, etc., it was engaged in the trading stamp business. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 128 Fed. 800.

TRADING STAMP COMPANY

A company conducting a general mercantile business, which gives to purchasers of its goods, paying cash, a check representing 4 per cent. of the purchase, which check may be exchanged for articles in the store or for cash, is not a "trading stamp company," within Ky. St. 1903, § 3224, defining a "trading stamp company" to be one that gives premiums or valuable personal property in exchange for stamps or checks furnished to purchasers of merchandise. Commonwealth v. Gibson Co., 101 S. W. 385, 125 Ky. 440.

TRADITION

TRADITIONAL EVIDENCE

The party offering in evidence reputation to prove ancient boundaries must confine his proof to the declarations of persons having competent knowledge of the matter in controversy, and who are since deceased. This species of evidence is very properly denominated "traditional evidence." Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545, 554 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 130, 145, and notes; 1 Phil. Ev. [Cow. & H. & Edw. Notes] 218, and note 87).

TRAFFIC—TRAFFICKING

See Moving Traffic; Public Traffic.

The word "traffic" comprehends every species of dealing in the exchange or passing of goods or merchandise from hand to hand for an equivalent. One engaged in the traffic of whisky is guilty of selling whisky within an ordinance regulating the sale of liquor. State v. Small, 63 S. E. 4, 5, 82 S. C. 93, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454.

Laws 1911, c. 106, comprehensively regulating the liquor traffic, repealed by implication all municipal ordinances relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors existing on May 9, 1911, when it went into effect, regardless whether the municipality was "wet" or "dry" territory; the word "traffic" as used in the statute applying to illegal as well as legal sales. Pleasant Grove City v. Lindsay (Utah) 125 Pac. 389, 390.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8351 (Acts 1907, c. 293), relating to liquor licenses, provides that the act shall not apply to wholesale dealers, and defines "wholesale dealers" as those whose "sole business in connection with the liquor traffic is to sell to licensed retail liquor dealers, or to wholesale dealers, druggists," etc. Held, that the word "traffic" means trade, commerce, exchange, or sale of commodities, and hence a wholesale liquor dealer under this section may traffic in the liquor of his own manufacture, as well as those produced by others. Skelton v. State, 90 N. E. 897, 173 Ind. 462.

One who personally or by an agent in a local option county sells, furnishes, or gives away intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage is guilty of "trafficking in intoxicating liquors," in violation of Act March 5, 1908 (99 Ohio Laws, 35), prohibiting the trafficking in intoxicating liquors in local option territory, except as permitted by section 3, and the prohibition under the act extends to the sale, furnishing, or giving away of intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory at the manufactory by the manufacturer or his agent to be used as a beverage, though the sale be in quantities of one gallon or more at any one time. Scheu v. State, 93 N. E. 969, 970, 83 Ohio St. 146.

Deal synonymous

See Deal—Dealing.

TRAFFIC EARNINGS

A policy insuring against loss incurred by a ferry owner through injuries to passengers, for a specified premium, and providing: "This premium is based on the 'traffic earnings' during the period of the policy. * * * If the traffic earnings actually exceed the sums stated above, the assured shall pay the actual premium; if less than the sum stated, the company shall return to assured the unearned premium pro rata"—is not ambiguous as to what earnings were intended, the words meaning naturally all traffic earnings from whatever source; and parol evidence to show that it was intended that the traffic earnings should be confined to the earnings from the carriage of passengers alone was inadmissible. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Thames Ferry Co., 74 Atl. 780, 781, 82 Conn. 475.

TRAIL

"We understand that by the use in the finding of the word 'trail,' in connection with the balance of the finding, is meant a way, road, or path suitable for the purpose of driving cattle over or along on their way to a market." United States v. Andrews, 21 Sup. Ct. 46, 47, 179 U. S. 99, 45 L. Ed. 105.

TRAILER

A car attached to a motor car and pulled by it is called a "trailer." Denison & S. Ry. Co. v. Randell, 69 S. W. 1013, 1014, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 460.

TRAIN

See Accommodation Train; Elevated Train; Freight Train; Mixed Train; Passenger Train; Railroad Train; Regular Passenger Train; Single Train; Wildcat Train; Wild Train.

Operating train, see Operate.

A "train," within the safety appliance act, is one aggregation of cars drawn by the same engine; but, if the engine is changed, then there is a different train. United States v. Boston & M. R. Co., 168 Fed. 148, 149, 153.

A motor car for passengers operated by a railroad company is a "train," within Acts 1911, p. 275, requiring persons running trains to keep a constant lookout for persons and property on the track. Central Ry. Co. of Arkansas v. Lindley, 151 S. W. 246, 247, 105 Ark. 294.

A switch engine drawing six cars of logs from one part of a switching yard to another part thereof is not a "train," within rules laid down by a railroad company for employees in "freight train" service. Lynch v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 457, 458, 112 Minn. 382.

Code 1896, § 5368, making it an offense for any conductor to run a "train" without a sufficiency of good drinking water thereon, does not apply to a street railroad. Dean v. State, 43 South. 24, 25, 149 Ala. 34 (citing Birmingham M. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 92 Ala. 187, 9 South. 320, 12 L. R. A. 830).

A bulletin directing all trains to use the right-hand track applied to a light engine; the word "train" being defined in the book of rules as an engine or more than one engine coupled, with or without cars. Jones v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 133 N. W. 993, 996, 168 Mich. 1.

Where a railroad rule relating to yard limits provided that all trains will move under perfect control so as to make an accident impossible, the word "train" did not include a switch engine and two freight cars en route from one end of the yard to the other, but did include a regular freight train moving into the yard from a point outside. Clary v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 123 N. W. 649, 650, 141 Wis. 411.

The word "train," as used in reference to railroad traffic, means all kinds of trains, freight trains, passenger train, mail train, construction train, etc., and the character of the train is designated by another word. In the term "passenger train" the word "passenger" is used as an adjective to qualify the noun "train." The two words "passenger train" combine to form the name of the thing to which it is applied. Neither word used alone would designate the object intended, but together they constitute the name. The word "regular" is designated to express the character of the train to which it is attributed. It signifies that it is a regular train, whether freight or passenger. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 117 S. W. 1173, 1176, 219 Mo. 156 (citing 6 Words & Phrases, p. 5227).

Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 1, 27 Stat. 531, provides that, after January 1, 1898, it should be unlawful for any interstate carrier, by rail, to use any locomotive engine in moving interstate traffic not equipped with a power driving wheel brake and appliances for operating the train brake system, or to run any train in such traffic, after that date, that had not a sufficient number of cars in it so equipped with power or train brakes that the engineer of the locomotive drawing such train could control its speed without requiring the brakeman to use the common hand brake for that purpose; and Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, § 2, 32 Stat. 943, required that 50 per cent. of the cars should be equipped with air brakes. Held, that such section was not limited to "road trains," but applied to interstate trains, destined to a particular railroad yard, which, before reaching their destination, were operated by a switching crew. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. United States, 198 Fed. 637, 638, 117 C. C. A. 341.

Moving cars detached from engine

Acts 1893, p. 129 (Rev. St. 1908, § 2060), provides that where a personal injury is caused to an employé who is himself exercising due care by the negligence of any person in the service of the employer who has the charge or control of any switch, locomotive, engine, or train upon any railroad, the employé, or, upon his death, the persons entitled to sue, shall have the same right to compensation against the employer as though the employé had not been an employé. Decedent was employed in the track department, and was struck and killed by runaway cars which got loose about a mile and a half from where decedent was struck by the negligence of a brakeman in not setting the brakes where the cars stood detached at a certain station. The train at the station constituted four cars and a caboose, which were detached from the engine and left on the main track in charge of the brakeman without setting the brakes. Held, that the runaway cars constituted a "train" within the statute, so as to make the company responsible for the brakeman's negligence. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Vitello, 121 Pac. 112, 118, 21 Colo. App. 51.

Single engine

An engine and tender, operated over a crossing at night, is a "train," within Kirby's Dig. § 6607, requiring that all persons running trains on any railroad shall keep a constant lookout for persons and property on the track, etc. Ft. Smith & W. R. Co. v. Messek, 131 S. W. 966, 967, 96 Ark. 243.

TRAIN CREW

A "train crew" consists of the conductor, the engineer, the fireman, and the brakeman. Forge v. Houston & T. C. R. Co., 90 S. W. 1118, 1119, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 81.

TRAIN DISPATCHER

"The object of train dispatching is to place in the hands of conductors, who manage the trains of a railroad, proper and safe orders for their guidance. The source of such orders is the office of the 'train dispatcher' from which they emanate, and their destination is the hand of the conductor of the train whose movements they are intended to direct and control. The order is in transitu from the time it leaves the one until it reaches the other, and every agent of the company through whose hands the order passes is necessarily engaged in its transmission until it reaches its ultimate destination." Virginia & S. Ry. Co. v. Clowers' Adm'r, 47 S. E. 1003, 1004, 102 Va. 867.

A "telegraph operator" is different from a "train dispatcher," in that the operator ordinarily is not invested with any control over the running of trains, and he does not occupy the position of a train dispatcher merely because he transmits or delivers orders for the movement of trains, so that his negligence cannot be said to be the negligence of the company. Strotzman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 109 S. W. 769, 779, 211 Mo. 227 (citing McKaig v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 42 Fed. 288; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Clark, 57 Fed. 125, 6 C. C. A. 281; Baltimore & O. Ry. Co. v. Camp, 65 Fed. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233; Oregon Short Line & U. N. Ry. Co. v. Frost, 74 Fed. 965, 21 C. C. A. 186; Price v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 986, 145 U. S. 651, 36 L. Ed. 843; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 62, 39 Am. Rep. 627; Dana v. New York

Cent. & H. R. R. Co. [N. Y.] 23 Hun, 473; Monaghan v. New York Cent. Ry. Co. [N. Y.] 45 Hun, 113; Reiser v. Pennsylvania Co., 25 Atl. 175, 152 Pa. 38, 34 Am. St. Rep. 620).

TRAIN FOR BOTH PASSENGERS AND FREIGHT

An ordinary local freight train carrying a caboose is not a "train for both passengers and freight," within Code 1906, § 4054, limiting the liability of carriers for injuries to passengers on freight trains not so intended. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. White, 52 South. 449, 55 South. 593, 97 Miss. 91.

A regular local freight train, to which is attached a way car, with compartments for passengers, baggage, trainmen, tools, etc., is not a "train for both passengers and freight," within Code 1906, § 4054, limiting the liability of carriers for injuries to passengers on freight trains not so intended. "Trains intended for both passengers and freight" and "mixed or accommodation trains" are synonymous. White v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 55 South. 593, 595, 99 Miss. 651.

TRAINED NURSE

See Nurse.

TRAINING SCHOOL

As common school, see Common School.

TRAM RAILROAD

As appliance, see Appliance.

As machine, see Machine.

As tool, see Tools—Tools of Trade.

A tram railroad was not a "tool," nor a "machine," nor an "appliance" of a manufacturing business, within Rev. St. 1899, § 8486, taxing manufacturers on tools, machinery, and appliances. According to the dictionaries, the term "tram railroad" has no settled, well-defined meaning, but is a term often applied to a street railroad carrying passengers. In some places it is commonly used as the equivalent for the term "street railroad." It is also applied to a roadbed and cars for transporting coal and other freight. There are also overhead tramways. State ex rel. Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Pulliam, 135 S. W. 443, 444, 233 Mo. 229.

TRAMMEL NET

A hoop or barrel net is not a "trammel net," within Kirby's Dig. § 3600, prohibiting fishing with a trammel net, and an indictment charging that accused fished with a trammel net is not sustained by proof that he fished with a hoop or barrel net. Rhoades v. State, 131 S. W. 48, 49, 96 Ark. 63.

A "seine" is a kind of net, but a "trammel net" is not a "seine." Kirby's Dig. § 3600, forbids any person to place in the waters of the state any seine net, gill net, trammel net, etc., or by any such means to catch fish, and provides, further, that it shall not be unlawful to use a seine with meshes not less than four inches square, and that any person using a seine with meshes less than four inches in width, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $50. Held, that an indictment, charging that defendant unlawfully caught fish with a net and seine, was void for duplicity. Under Kirby's Dig. § 3600, forbidding any person to place in the waters of the state any seine net, gill net, trammel net, etc., or to catch fish by any such means, and providing, further, that it shall be unlawful to use a seine with meshes not less than four inches square, it is unlawful to use a trammel net, though its meshes are not less than four inches in width; the exception applying only to seines. Rowe v. State, 103 S. W. 613, 614, 83 Ark. 244.

TRAMWAY

As railway, see Railroad—Railway.

Where a deed conveying mineral rights gave to the grantee free access to the land from any direction, by roads and other passways or means of exit and entrance, the grantee was authorized to construct a "tramway"; such way being within the words "roads and passways." Duncan v. American Standard Asphalt Co. (Ky.) 97 S. W. 392, 393.

"Doing business," as used in statutes prohibiting a foreign corporation from doing business until it has filed a certificate, etc., is equivalent to the words "transacting business," and in most jurisdictions it is held that such statutes have reference to a continuation in some form of business, and do not apply where a foreign corporation does a single act of business within the state. General Conference of Free Baptists v. Berkeley, 105 Pac. 411, 412, 156 Cal. 466.

The phrase "transacting business" in Rev. St. 1895, arts. 745, 746, requiring foreign corporations desiring to transact business in the state to secure a permit, is not necessarily synonymous with doing business, as to do business in the state imports a carrying on of business of the corporation for the purpose of its organization, while the transaction of business rather imports the idea of isolated transactions. To "do business" is to carry on any particular occupation or employment for a livelihood or gain, as agriculture, trade, mechanic arts, or profession. S. R. Smythe Co. v. Ft. Worth Glass & Sand Co., 142 S. W. 1157, 1159, 1160, 105 Tex. 8.

The words "transaction of business," in Stock Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 59) § 33, providing that a foreign stock corporation, "having an office for transaction of business in this state," shall keep therein a stockbook, which shall be open for inspection by certain persons, and declaring a penalty for refusal of such an inspection, do not necessarily mean that the corporation's main business must be carried on in the state, or something in the nature of that business, or that capital must be employed in the state; but all that is necessary to bring the corporation within the statute is that something related to its business, or part of it, be carried on in the office in the state. Hovey v. De Long Hook & Eye Co. (Sup.) 126 N. Y. Supp. 1, 3.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1024-1027, relating to foreign corporations, provides that every corporation for pecuniary profit formed in any other state, before it shall be authorized or permitted to transact business in this state, shall have and maintain a public office or place for the transaction of business, etc. In the use of the term "transact business in this state" reference plainly is had to business operations of the corporation carried on within this state through the medium of agents established therein, and which are continuous, or of some duration, and not to the operations of traveling salesmen, nor to isolated or casual business transactions. The right of corporations created under the laws of other states to send itinerant salesmen into this state to solicit and transact business without complying with the provisions of the laws under consideration is expressly recognized in section 1025, and this exception indicates a legislative purpose not to interfere with the free conduct of interstate commerce, but only to require those foreign corporations which seek to establish and maintain some part of their enterprise within the state, and which therefore expect to avail themselves of the benefit and protection of its laws and the use of its courts, to submit themselves to the burdens imposed by its laws on domestic corporations of like character. Wilson-Moline Buggy Co. v. Priebe, 100 S. W. 558, 559, 123 Mo. App. 521.

The fact that foreign corporations proposing to do business here are required to establish a place of business within the state makes it clear that the term "doing business" does not mean a single isolated transaction. It is not reasonable to suppose that the Constitution or the statute intended that a foreign corporation, without intending a continuance of its business in the state, could not collect a debt or make any contract or demand that its property rights should be respected, unless it had previously acquired a situs or domicile within our borders. The object of laws of this character is to require foreign corporations which undertake to carry on their business generally in this state to establish a domicile or situs here, so that they shall, like domestic corporations, be within reach of the process of our courts. The term "transacting or doing business," as used in laws of this character, implies continuity, and does not mean a single isolated transaction within the borders of the state, without any purpose of engaging generally in the carrying on of its business here. State, to use of Hart-Parr Co., v. Robb-Lawrence Co., 106 N. W. 406, 408, 15 N. D. 55.

Bringing suit

Under a statute authorizing actions against a corporation in any county in which it transacts business or transacted business at the time the cause of action arose, where a corporation instituted suit by attachment in a county and executed and filed an attachment bond in such suit, it thereby "transacted business" in that county, so as to authorize action against it on the bond therein. Hayworth v. McDonald, 121 Pac. 984, 986, 67 Wash. 496.

By passively continuing to hold a previously existing and valid lien or title, a foreign corporation is not "transacting business" within the state, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 1770b, providing that no foreign corporation which has not complied with certain requirements shall transact business in the state. The mere commencement and prosecution of a suit by a foreign corporation to enforce a lien on lands in the state acquired by it through the execution, in the state of its domicile, of bonds and trust deeds, prior to the enactment of Rev. St. 1898, § 1770b, providing that no foreign corporation which has not complied with certain requirements shall transact business in the state, is not a "transaction of business" forbidden by the statute. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Bashford, 97 N. W. 940, 941, 120 Wis. 281.

Act May 18, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 124), is entitled "An act to regulate the admission of foreign corporations for profit, to do business in the state," and section 1 provides that, before such corporations shall be permitted to transact any business or exercise any of its corporate powers in the state, they shall comply with the provisions of the act and be subject to all regulations prescribed for domestic corporations. Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, provide the steps for admission of such corporations to the state, and section 6 imposes a penalty for neglect to comply with the act, and in addition thereto forbids any foreign corporation, failing to comply with the to sue upon any claim, legal or equitable. And, that the terms "doing business" and "transacting business" meant only the transaction of the ordinary business in which the corporation was engaged, and did not include prosecution of actions; and, in view of the title of the act, the inhibition against the exercise of any "corporate powers" did not change its meaning, "corporate powers" referred to those powers or franchises conferred upon the corporation to enable it to prosecute business in which it was engaged, together with those implied powers necessary thereto, so that merely bringing a suit in this way by a foreign corporation was not "transacting business" so as to require compliance with the act before bringing such suit. Albion Portland Cement Co. v. Jenkins & Reynolds Co., 91 N. E. 480, 481, 244 Ill. 354.

Constructing factory

The construction of a glass factory, including the furnishing of material and labor, constituted the "transaction of business," under Rev. St. 1895, art. 745, requiring foreign corporations to obtain a permit to transact business in the state, though the contract was made outside the state. Ft. Worth Glass and Co. v. S. R. Smythe Co. (Tex.) 128 S. 36, 1137.

Rev. St. 1895, arts. 745, 746, provide that a foreign corporation desiring to transact business in the state or to solicit business therein, or to establish a general or special agent, shall obtain a permit to transact business and that no foreign corporation not so permitted, shall maintain any action in this state. Held, that the construction of a factory for a glass factory, including the furnishing of material and labor, constituted the "transaction of business" within the statute, although the contract was made outside of the state. S. R. Smythe Co. v. Ft. Glass & Sand Co., 142 S. W. 1157, 1159, 108 S. 8.

Transacting to furnish amusement in theater

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1024, 1025, provide that foreign corporations for pecuniary profit shall not engage in certain acts before being authorized to transact business in Missouri, and section 1026 provides that every such corporation doing business within the state, failing to comply with such conditions, shall be subject to a writ of injunction, and, in addition, shall not be authorized to maintain any suit or action in any of the courts of the state on any demand, whether arising out of contract or tort, etc. Held, where a foreign corporation entered into a contract in Missouri for the furnishing of amusement in a theater without complying with such sections, the contract itself was not a "transaction of business," and the corporation could not maintain an action for breach thereof, though prior to suit brought it assumed the conditions required to entertain the right to do business within the state. Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co., 90 S. W. 1020, 1023, 192 Mo. 404, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 688, 111 Am. St. Rep. 511, 4 Ann. Cas. 808.

Investigating claim

An agent of a foreign corporation sent to the state to investigate plaintiff's claim for damages for personal injuries is not "transacting business" for the corporation within Rev. St. 1899, § 570, subd. 4 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 597), authorizing the service of process upon an agent transacting business in the state for a corporation, where it has no office or place of business in the state. Painter v. Colorado Springs & Cripple Creek Dist. Ry. Co., 104 S. W. 1139, 1141, 127 Mo. App. 248.

Joint traffic arrangement

Where a foreign railway company does not own or operate a railway within the state, but its cars are brought into the state by another railway company under some joint traffic arrangement, the foreign company is not "transacting business" within the state. Slaughter v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 119 N. W. 398, 400, 106 Minn. 263.

Contracts were made in Maryland, through the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company, a domestic corporation, for the Central of Georgia Railway Company, a foreign corporation, which the foreign company recognized as binding. The domestic corporation sold tickets and issued bills of lading good over its own line and also over the lines of the foreign corporation, collecting the whole fare in the case of a passenger, and collecting the entire charge for the carriage in the case of freight. An agent within the state was appointed jointly by the two companies to solicit traffic over both lines, which were advertised under the name of the "Central Savannah Line." In the window of the building occupied by the domestic company there was a sign "Central Savannah Line via Central of Georgia Railway & Merchants' and Miners' Transportation Company." In this building the joint agent had his office, and solicited freight for transportation over parts of the entire line. The advertising folders of the Central of Georgia Railway stated that tickets over that line could be purchased at any of the Merchants' & Miners' ticket offices. Held, that the Central of Georgia Railway Company was "transacting business" in Maryland within the meaning of Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 23, § 409, providing that any corporation not chartered by the state which shall transact business therein shall be deemed to hold and exercise its franchises within the state, and shall be liable to suit in any of the courts of the state on any dealings or transactions therein. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Eichberg, 68 Atl. 690, 694, 107 Md. 363, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

Making contract or sale outside of state

Under an Indiana statute forbidding the transaction of business in the state by foreign corporations which have not complied with the terms of the act, an order for goods taken by a travelling salesman in Indiana, the goods to be delivered and paid for at Canton, Ohio, is not an Indiana contract, and does not constitute "transacting business" in that state. Mutual Mfg. Co. v. Alpaugh, 91 N. E. 504, 506, 174 Ind. 381.

Taking applications for advertising that do not become contracts until accepted by a Pennsylvania corporation in that state, and are performed by insertion of the advertisement in a book published in Pennsylvania, is not a "transaction of business" within the state, in violation of Corporation Act April 21, 1896 (P. L. p. 307) § 97. Bell Telephone Co. of Philadelphia v. Galen Hall Co., 72 Atl. 47, 77 N. J. Law, 253.

The agent of a foreign corporation, which had not obtained from the secretary of state a certificate that it was authorized to do business in this state, negotiated for it a sale of goods to the defendant. The negotiations were carried on in this state and resulted in a written agreement signed in this state by the defendant and the agent, which contained an express stipulation that it was subject to the approval of the home office of the vendor in another state. Held, that the writing did not become a contract, binding the parties thereto, until it was approved by the foreign corporation, and, such sale not being completed until such approval, it was not "transacting business in this state," requiring the obtaining of the aforesaid certificate of the secretary of state before any action could be brought upon any contract made by it, as prescribed in section 98 of "An act concerning corporations," and the supplements thereto (P. L. 1896, c. 185, p. 277). Low v. Davy, 83 Atl. 869, 83 N. J. Law, 540.

Making single loan

The doing of a single act of business by a foreign corporation, as, the taking of a mortgage to secure a loan, does not bring it within Laws 1905, c. 79, § 102, providing that every foreign corporation, except banking, insurance, and railroad corporations, before "transacting business" in the territory, shall file in the office of the secretary of the territory a copy of its charter. Goode v. Colorado Inv. Loan Co., 117 Pac. 856, 16 N. M. 461.

Making single sale

Under Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 440, prohibiting the "transaction of business" under an assumed name without filing the required certificate, a single sale of trees does not constitute a violation of the statute. People ex rel. Allen v. Whiting, 123 N. Y. Supp. 769, 770, 68 Misc. Rep. 306.

Rev. Laws Minn. 1905, § 2888, requiring a foreign corporation to maintain a place in the state for "transacting its business," etc., before it may transact domestic business or sue in domestic courts or hold or dispose of property within the state, does not apply to a single contract to deliver coal to a firm located in that state. Hunter W. Finch & Co. v. Zenith Furnace Co., 92 N. E. 521, 523, 245 Ill. 586; Id., 146 Ill. App. 257-281.

The sale by a foreign corporation of five car loads of cement to one in this state was not "transacting business" in the state in violation of a statute providing that foreign corporations which have not complied with its terms shall not be permitted to transact business in the state; being only a single transaction. Alpena Portland Cement Co. v. Jenkins & Reynolds Co., 91 N. E. 480, 481, 244 Ill. 354.

Subscription to stock

New York General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 23) § 15, provides that no foreign stock corporation other than a moneyed corporation can do business within the state without first having procured a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law. Held, that a subscription to the stock of a foreign corporation and the issuance of the stock subscribed for to a resident of New York do not constitute a "transaction of business within the state" by the corporation. Southworth v. Morgan, 128 N. Y. Supp. 598, 600, 71 Misc. Rep. 214.

TRANSACTION

A "transaction" may include a series of occurrences extending over a great length of time. Fraley v. Fraley, 64 S. E. 381, 383, 150 N. C. 501.

The word "transaction" is not synonymous with "occurrence." Excelsior Clay Works v. De Camp, 80 N. E. 981, 983, 40 Ind. App. 26 (citing Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Van Auken, 1 Ind. App. 492, 27 N. E. 119).

A judgment denying probate of a will on the ground of undue influence exerted by an individual is not res judicata in an action to set aside a deed executed by testator to such individual at the same time, though the two papers were executed as a part of the same transaction; the word "transaction" meaning the doing or performing of any affair, management of any matter, as the transaction of business; that which is done or in the process of being done. Courtney v. Courtney, 129 N. W. 52, 53, 149 Iowa, 645.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4656 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2536), authorizes a wife to testify for her husband, in a suit against him concerning business transactions directed or conducted by her as his agent. Held, that "transactions" referred to were those had between her acting as his agent and some other person, and did not include a case where he consummated an agreement himself, and only called on her to sign his name to a note because of his illiteracy. Fishback v. Harrison, 119 S. W. 465, 466, 137 Mo. App. 664.

Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, prohibits any person or corporation from receiving any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect to the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce, etc., and declares that every person or corporation who shall accept or receive any such rebates or concession shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction be fined, etc. Held, that the gist of the offense was the receipt of a concession, irrespective of whether the property involved was train loads, car loads, or pounds, and consisted of the "transaction," which was not completed until the shipper received a rate different from the established rate, without reference to the size of the shipment. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 386, 90 C. C. A. 364.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, providing that, whenever a defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party to the action relating to or depending upon the contract or transaction on which it is brought, the term "transaction" means some commercial or business negotiation, and not a wrong of violence or fraud, and so, in an action on notes, defendant cannot set up a cross-action for damages because of the improper issuance and levy of an attachment in a former action on such notes. Clark v. Kelley, 124 Pac. 846, 847, 163 Cal. 207.

Where, in a suit to compel a defendant to leave complainant's house, he alleged that she had been employed as his servant at $20 per month, and, though she had been discharged and paid, she refused to leave the house and claimed the right to remain there, a cross-complaint, in which defendant alleged that she had been fraudulently induced to believe that she was complainant's lawful wife, and that her services were reasonably worth $50 per month, and demanding judgment for the difference, was properly filed as relating to the "transaction" which was the subject of the action. Mixer v. Mixer, 83 Pac. 273, 274, 2 Cal. App. 227.

A person sued for broker's commissions cannot have another broker, claiming commissions on the same sale under a different contract, brought in, and his rights, determined in that action under St. 1893, § 2656a, providing that a defendant may have affirmative relief against a person not a party upon his being brought in, but that such relief must involve or affect the contract, transaction, or property which is the subject-matter of the action, the relief sought not affecting the contract or transaction involved, since "transaction" means whatever may be done by one person which affects another's rights and out of which a cause of action may arise, and in this case means the making of the contract sued on, but, if held to include its performance, it would not be affected by the relief sought, since defendant can show without the presence of the other broker that the purchaser was procured by him. Schenck v. Sterling Engineering & Const. Co. (Wis.) 138 N. W. 637, 639.

Defendant's assignor, to assist a clothing house to settle with its creditors, including defendant, took a mortgage on its stock for $1,700, specified in a note, and as a part of the same "transaction," upon execution and delivery of the note and mortgage, delivered to the mortgagor's attorney his signed personal checks, payable to the creditors, part of which were filled out and mailed the same day and the rest within a few days as soon as the proper amounts were ascertained and paid by him on presentment; the amount so paid being $1,650, which, with a previous debt due the mortgagee, exceeded the sum for which the mortgage note was given. The affidavit accompanying the mortgage was that it was made to secure the debt specified in the condition thereof, and for no other purpose, and that the same was a just debt, honestly due and owing from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Held, in a suit by an attaching creditor of the mortgagor to enjoin foreclosure of the mortgage, that a "transaction" meant a group of facts so connected as to be referred to by a single legal name, that it need not be confined to what was done in one day, nor at one time, nor at one place, and that its immediateness was tested by a logical connection and not by closeness of time, and that the word "immediately" implied such convenient time as was reasonably requisite for completing the thing done; and hence that the affidavit conformed to the purpose of the mortgage and verified the justice and validity of the debt sought to be secured thereby. Herald & Globe Ass'n v. Clere Clothing Co., 84 Atl. 23, 25, 86 Vt. 141.

In reference to counterclaim

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 1, permitting a counterclaim, if it be a cause of action arising out of the "contract or transaction" set forth in the complaint, the word "transaction" is broader than the word "contract"; so, if the defendant's cause of action arises out of the same transaction out of which plaintiff's arises, it may be pleaded as a counterclaim. Kneeland v. Pennell, 96 N. Y. Supp. 403, 405, 49 Misc. Rep. 94 (citing Ter Kulle v. Marsland, 31 N. Y. Supp. 5, 81 Hun, 420).

The word "transaction," as used in Rev. Code 1899, § 5274, relating to counterclaims, and authorizing the setting up as a counterclaim of a claim arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, is broader in meaning than the word "contract," and includes torts. One slander cannot be set up as a counterclaim against another slander, although both are uttered at the same time and place and in the same conversation. Wrege v. Jones, 100 N. W. 705, 706, 13 N. D. 267, 112 Am. St. Rep. 679, 3 Ann. Cas. 482.

2 Abb. Law Dict. p. 590, declares that the term "transaction," in a statute limiting counterclaims to demands arising out of the same transaction, intends some commercial or business negotiation, and not a wrong of violence or fraud. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 442, authorizing a counterclaim or cross-complaint where the cause of action arises out of the transaction set forth in the complaint, does not authorize a counterclaim for a trespass on land and injuries to defendant's crops by plaintiff in an action of claim and delivery by plaintiff to recover possession of the cattle. Glide v. Kayser, 76 Pac. 50, 142 Cal. 419.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 1, authorizing a cause of action to be pleaded as a counterclaim, which arises out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action, a cause of action for fraud in inducing a marriage promise is a proper subject of counterclaim in an action for breach of marriage promise, the word "transaction" in the statute not being limited to causes of action arising on the contract, but being broad enough to permit causes of action arising from tort to be subject of counterclaim, and the "transaction" not necessarily being identical in its particular facts and details with that set up in the complaint. Gross v. Hochstim, 130 N. Y. Supp. 315, 319, 72 Misc. Rep. 343.

Courts and text-writers have expended much time and learning in attempting to define the meaning of the word "transaction" and of the phrase "subject of the action," as used in the statute relating to counterclaim, which is common to many states, and, it must be confessed, without marked success. Bliss, in referring to this provision, says: "Three classes of counterclaims are here provided for: First, a demand existing in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, which arises out of the contract upon which the plaintiff has based his action; second, a demand so existing, which arises out of the transaction—a broader term than contract—upon which the plaintiff has based his action; and, third, a demand so existing which need not necessarily arise out of either the contract or the transaction involved in the action, but is sufficient if it is connected with the subject of the action." Under such a statute (Rev. Codes 1899, § 5274, subd. 1), a mortgagor of chattels may counterclaim for their conversion by the mortgagee when sued on the note secured by the mortgage. Hanson v. Skogman, 105 N. W. 90, 91, 14 N. D. 445.

The word "transaction," as used in the statutes relating to counterclaims is intended to signify something different from and additional to "contract." A contract is a transaction, but a transaction is not necessarily a contract. The word "transaction" is not synonymous with "accident" or "occurrence." A transaction is also defined as "the management or settlement of an affair;" "that which is done;" "transacting or conducting any business; negotiation; management; a proceeding;" and, as ordinarily employed, is understood to mean the doing or performing of some matter of business between two or more persons. It is from the Latin "trans" and "ago" (to carry on). It is not confined to what is done in one day, or at a single time or place. The logical relation of facts determine whether they together constitute a single transaction. In an action, by the assignee of a lessee entitled to remove coal in a tract of land, for coal inadvertently removed therefrom by the adjacent owner, the latter may, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 353, 354, providing that a claim arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint may be set up as a counterclaim, set up as a counterclaim a claim arising from plaintiff's assignor inadvertently removing coal from his land. Excelsior Clay Works v. De Camp, 80 N. E. 981, 982, 40 Ind. App. 26 (citing Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 769; Cent. Dict.; Webst. Dict.; Worcest. Dict.; Pelton v. Powell, 71 N. W. 887, 96 Wis. 473; Deagan v. Weeks, 73 N. Y. Supp. 641, 67 App. Div. 410; Cunningham, Adm'r. v. Speagle, 50 S. W. 244, 106 Ky. 278; Roberts v. Donovan, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599, 70 Cal. 113; Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Van Auker, 27 N. E. 119, 1 Ind. App. 492, 496; First Nat. Bank v. Wisdom's Ex'r, 63 S. W. 461, 111 Ky. 135).

The term "transaction," as used in the statute relating to counterclaims, and providing that a counterclaim must arise out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, is obviously broader than the term "contract," and authorizes matters to be set up as counterclaim which could not be pleaded as arising on the contract relied on by plaintiff. The cause of action arises from the transaction set forth in the complaint when the combination of acts and events, circumstances and defaults, upon which the rights of the parties are based, when viewed in one aspect, result in plaintiff's right of action, and, when viewed in another aspect, result favorably to defendant. The transaction is not necessarily confined by the facts stated in the complaint, but the defendant may set up new facts and show the entire transaction, and counterclaim on that state of facts as the transaction on which plaintiff's claim is founded. In an action to recover damages for the alleged fraudulent acts of defendant, a corporation engaged in the business of buying, selling, and dealing in grain, provisions, etc., for future delivery, defendant may set up as a counterclaim a claim based on the fact that it made investments for plaintiff in the purchase of grain for future delivery as outlined in the complaint, and by reason of fluctuation in the market it was necessary, from time to time, to advance money on such purchases to protect the same, and that defendant made a series of such advances, for which judgment was asked. King v. Coe Commission Co., 100 N. W. 667, 668, 93 Minn. 52.

In an action on a contract or tort, a counterclaim may be interposed based on either contract or tort, provided it answers the other requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 501, 502, viz., that it arises out of the contract or transaction pleaded in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or is connected with the subject of the action, or, if the action be on contract, is a cause of action arising on contract, and existing when the action was commenced. Code Civ. Proc. § 500, authorizes defendant to interpose an answer stating any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, and section 501 provides that a counterclaim in an action for tort must be a cause of action in favor of defendant and against plaintiff, arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or as the subject of the action. Plaintiff sued defendant for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution arising out of his arrest by a policeman without a warrant for alleged disorderly conduct, constituting or calculated to provoke a breach of the peace by annoying defendant by posting theatrical posters or bills upon a billboard attached to the premises leased to defendant in the city of New York without the consent of the owner and over defendant's protest, and for defendant's alleged malicious prosecution therefor. Held, that the "transaction" pleaded as the foundation of plaintiff's claim was in the one case the arrest, and in the other the acts constituting the malicious prosecution and not the posting of the advertisements; and hence defendant was not entitled to counterclaim for damages resulting from the trespass consisting of the unlawful invasion of the premises. Adams v. Schwartz, 122 N. Y. Supp. 41, 44-50, 137 App. Div. 230.

In reference to joinder of actions

The word "transaction," as used in the statute, authorizing joinder of actions arising out of the same transaction, means whatever may be done by one person which affects another person's right, and out of which a cause of action may arise. McArthur v. Moffett, 128 N. W. 445, 448, 143 Wis. 564, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

"Transaction," in Code Civ. Proc. § 484, relating to the uniting of actions on claims arising out of transactions connected with the same subject of action, means the doing or performance of any business; the management of any affair; the act of transacting or conducting any business; negotiation; management; a proceeding. Rogers v. Wheeler, 85 N. Y. Supp. 981, 985, 89 App. Div. 435 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Pom. Code Rem. § 473).

The term "transactions connected with the same subject of action" refers to a different situation than "causes of action arising out of the same transaction." The former applies generally, if not exclusively, to matters which might constitute a source of independent causes of action, yet is so germane to the primary matter, the suit being in equity, as to be regarded really a part thereof. Emerson v. Nash, 102 N. W. 921, 922, 926, 928, 124 Wis. 369, 70 L. R. A. 326, 109 Ann. St. Rep. 944.

The word "transaction," as used in Rev. Laws 1905, § 4154, providing for the uniting of causes of action arising out of same transaction or transactions, embraces something more than contractual relations. It includes any occurrences or affairs the result of which vests in a party the right to maintain an action, whether the occurrences be in the nature of tort or otherwise. Mayberry v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 356, 358, 100 Minn. 79, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675, 10 Ann. Cas. 754.

In section 5623 of the statute (Comp. Laws 1909), which provides that several causes of action may be united in the same petition, where they arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, the term "cause of action" means a redressible wrong. Its elements being the wrong and the relief provided. The "subject of action" is a primary right and its infringement. The term "transaction" is used in the first clause with reference to, and expressive of, all the acts, or groups of related acts, which go to make up one entire project, system, or deal, referred to as a "transaction," and in the latter clause it is used to include and encompass only such acts, or groups of acts, as in themselves constitute separate, redressible wrongs; and such wrongs (transactions) are connected with the same "subject of action" whenever they affect, grow out of, or constitute separate infringements of, the same primary right. Stone v. Case, 124 Pac. 960, 963, 34 Okl. 5, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168.

Transactions with decedents

"Transaction," within Gen. St. 1901, § 4770, prohibiting a witness to testify in his own behalf as to any transaction had with a decedent, means an action participated in by the witness and the decedent. Clifton v. Meuser, 100 Pac. 645, 647, 79 Kan. 655 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5365, 5366; 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7061, 7062).

Notwithstanding an instrument sued on was a "transaction with decedent" within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302, yet defendant having been called by plaintiff, the administrator, to testify to a part of the transaction, should have been permitted to testify to the whole of it. Watson v. Dodson, 121 S. W. 209, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 32.

The test as to what is a "transaction with" the deceased so as to come within the statutory prohibition has been defined by this court in Van Wagenen v. Bonnot et al., Administrators, 74 N. J. Eq. 843, 70 Atl. 143, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400, and, measured by that test, certain testimony given by the plaintiff in this action was erroneously admitted. Campbell v. Akarman, 83 Atl. 881, 83 N. J. Law, 567.

The word "transaction," as used in Civ. Code, § 329, providing that no interested person shall testify to any "transaction" had between the deceased person, etc., embraces every variety of affairs, the subject of negotiations, actions, or contracts. Wilson v. Wilson, 120 N. W. 147, 148, 83 Neb. 562; Fitch v. Martin, 104 N. W. 1072, 1075, 74 Neb. 538 (citing Smith v. Perry, 73 N. W. 282, 52 Neb. 738).

The performance of services for a person since deceased, and the determination of their value, does not involve a "transaction personally with the deceased," within St. 1898, § 4069, providing that no party shall testify as to any transaction with a deceased person in a proceeding in which the opposite party sustains his liability under the deceased person. Boss's Estate v. Baehr, 113 N. W. 483, 434, 133 Wis. 119.

Under 16 Del. Laws, c. 537, providing that in actions against administrators, in which judgment may be rendered against them, neither party may testify as to any "transaction" with the intestate, a judgment creditor, seeking to enforce a judgment obtained against a decedent, may not testify as to the payment or nonpayment of the judgment by decedent, because payment or nonpayment is a transaction within the statute. Knowles v. Waller, 78 Atl. 611, 612, 7 Pennewill, 220.

Code 1904, § 3346, which provides that, where one of the original parties to a "transaction" is incapable of testifying by reason of death, etc., the adverse party shall not testify thereto, prevents a wife, in suing her husband's estate for her distributive share in the estate of her brother, of which her husband was administrator, from testifying whether her husband paid her such distributive share. McIntyre v. Wright, 74 S. E. 172, 173, 113 Va. 299 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7062).

On the issue as to whether a will was the result of an insane delusion, conceived by testator towards his wife about the time of his mother's death, testimony of the wife that, while traveling to the mother's funeral on a train, the testator sat several seats behind his wife, and that every time she looked back at him he was "gazing" at her, was not inadmissible as being a "transaction" or "communication" with the testator. Lanham v. Lanham (Tex.) 146 S. W. 635, 637.

The testimony of a grantee, when sued by an heir of the deceased grantor to set aside the deed on the ground of nondelivery, that he had the deed in his possession very soon after the date thereof, and that he thereafter kept it among his private effects, does not relate to any "transactions with nor statements made by decedent," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1211, and is competent on the issue of delivery. Bardsley v. Truax, 116 Pac. 1075, 1076, 64 Wash. 400.

Under Code 1907, § 4007, relating to evidence of transactions with a decedent, a grantor, suing the heirs of the deceased grantee to cancel the deed and expunge it from the record, on the ground that he never executed or acknowledged the deed, may testify that he did not sign or acknowledge the deed, unless it is conclusively shown or conceded that he was a party; a "transaction" between two persons implying action, consent, knowledge, or acquiescence on the part of both. Blount v. Blount, 48 South. 581, 582, 158 Ala. 242, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 755, 17 Ann. Cas. 392.

In a suit on a note by the administrator of the deceased person, the defendant pleaded usury. A statement, part of which was in the handwriting of the deceased person, was offered in evidence, and the defendant was permitted to testify that this statement was given by the deceased person, and that the various items shown on the statement were intended to represent the usurious transaction, and that he paid a usurious rate of interest for the money. Held, that this testimony related to a "transaction" with the deceased person, and that it was error to admit it. Wadleigh v. Parker, 124 Pac. 957, 959, 34 Okl. 213.

"The word 'transaction,' as used in a statute relating to the admissibility of evidence of transactions or communications with deceased persons, has often received judicial interpretation." It is said to mean every variety of affairs which forms the subject of negotiations or actions between the parties. Whitney v. Brown, 90 Pac. 277, 278, 75 Kan. 678, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 468, 12 Ann. Cas. 768 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, 7062, and quoting from opinion in Holliday v. McKinne, 22 Fla. 153).

In an action against the administrator of plaintiff's sister for services rendered during her last illness, evidence that, after going to the sister's home, plaintiff had a conversation or understanding with her concern-the compensation plaintiff was to receive, is incompetent, as it related to a "transaction" with decedent; a "transaction," within statute, including anything said or done between witness and decedent, or any act or communication in which they both had a part and concerning which decedent, if living, could corroborate or deny witness' statements. Sheldon v. Thornburg, 133 N. 1076, 1077, 153 Iowa, 622.

"Transactions and communications," within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting evidence of personal transactions and communications between interested persons and a decedent, embrace every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiation, interviews, or actions between persons, and include every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. Holland v. Holland, 90 N. Y. Supp. 8, 211, 98 App. Div. 366 (citing Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316).

Revisal 1905, § 1631, prohibiting one interested in the event of an action adversely affecting the decedent's personal representative from testifying to a "transaction with decedent," did not prevent a witness, in an action to determine whether an instrument found in decedent's safe was his will, from testifying that witness has papers in the safe himself, on the ground that witness was interested as a member of an advisory committee named in the purported will, and as yet unaccepted trust without compensation; the testimony merely serving to show, from the witness' own conduct, that the safe was a proper depository for a will. Harper v. Harper, 62 S. E. 553, 54, 148 N. C. 453.

Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 400, excludes testimony of a party in interest as to any transaction between such witness and a person deceased against a party prosecuting or defending as assignee or heir of the decedent. Defendant in partition, who claimed as an assignee of a decedent as against heirs of the decedent, offered as a witness to prove the execution of a deed by the decedent to one of the defendants a party who had purchased from that defendant and conveyed to himself. Held, that while a witness was not disqualified under the section because of interest from testifying as to transactions with a deceased person, at which he was present without being a participant, the term "transaction" was very comprehensive, meaning the carrying on or through of any matter or affair, and that as the witness had witnessed the deed and given its validity this was a transaction between him and the deceased grantor in which the witness had participated; and hence he was incompetent to testify to the execution of the deed. Merck v. Merck, 71 S. E. 969, 970, 89 S. C. 347, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 937.

The terms "transactions" and "communications," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which provides that upon the trial of an action a party or person interested in the event shall not be examined as a witness in his behalf or interest, against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person, concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the decedent, embrace every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiations, interviews, or actions between two persons, and include every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. Wilber v. Gillespie, 112 N. Y. Supp. 20, 25, 127 App. Div. 604 (quoting and adopting definition in Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316).

"The test laid down in our decisions in ascertaining what is 'a transaction with' the deceased, about which the other party to it cannot testify, is to inquire whether, in case the witness testified falsely, the deceased, if living, could contradict it of his own knowledge." The proviso in the evidence act (P. L. 1900, p. 363, § 4) relating to testimony as to any transaction with a decedent represented in an action, renders the surviving party to a donatio causa mortis incompetent to testify that a closed parcel then delivered remained in statu quo until after donor's death, and as to its contents when opened, since such testimony would establish by necessary inference its contents at the time of delivery, on which point the deceased, if living, could contradict the survivor. Van Wagenen v. Bonnot, 70 Atl. 143, 144, 74 N. J. Eq. 843, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400 (citing and adopting Smith v. Burnet, 35 N. J. Eq. 314, 322; Woolverton v. Van Syckel, 81 Atl. 603, 57 N. J. Law, 393; Provost v. Robinson, 33 Atl. 204, 58 N. J. Law, 222; Dickerson v. Payne, 48 Atl. 528, 66 N. J. Law, 35).

"Webster defines 'transaction' as follows: '(1) The doing or performing of any business; the management of any affairs; performance. (2) That which is done; an affair; as the transaction of the exchange.' It is defined in Anderson's Dictionary of Law to be 'whatever may be done by one person which affects another's rights and out of which a cause of action may arise.' Under Code 1896, § 1794, providing that a person having a pecuniary interest in the result of a suit or proceeding shall not testify against the party to whom the interest is opposed as to any 'transaction' with a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result or proceeding, a physician is incompetent to testify in his own behalf, in an action for services against a decedent's estate, as to the number of visits he made to deceased, what he did for him, and how he relieved his suffering." Duggar v. Pitts, 39 South. 905, 906, 145 Ala. 358, 8 Ann. Cas. 146.

The court did not err in permitting Mrs. Hilley, the plaintiff, to testify, over objections made, as follows: "Captain Hall [the husband and agent of Mrs. Hall, the defendant] came to my house while Mr. Shindlebower was living; was there while Mr. Shindlebower was there on one occasion before Shindlebower left only a few days. With Captain Hall was his son, Dr. Hall. Heard no conversation between my husband and Captain Hall, or Mr. Shindlebower and Captain Hall, on that occasion in regard to the property, except Captain mentioned something about the cistern. Captain Hall inquired of me the dimensions of the house. I gave them to him—how many rooms there were, and the sizes of them. Nothing said on that occasion by me and Mr. Hilley to Captain Hall with reference to the improvements, only what was said concerning the back porch and the cistern. My husband spoke to Mr. Hall's son; said we had one of the best cisterns in Polk county, as well as I recollect; said he put a good substantial porch there. Mr. Hilley just spoke up in this way—says: 'I have built one of the best cisterns in Polk county, and I have built a porch.'" This testimony was objected to on the grounds: (a) "That it occurred in the presence of W. M. Shindlebower. (b) That said testimony about improvements tended to set up the alleged title of the plaintiff, and to affect adversely the defendant's title; it appearing that W. M. Shindlebower was dead." Such conversation was neither a "transaction" nor a "communication" between the plaintiff and the deceased, or between the deceased and any one else. Hall v. Hilley, 76 S. E. 566, 139 Ga. 13 (citing Ray v. Camp, 36 S. E. 242, 110 Ga. 818 (2); Reid v. Sewell, 36 S. E. 937, 111 Ga. 880 (1)).

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302, provides that, in an action by a personal representative, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, decedent, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party. In an action on an instrument, certifying that defendant had received specified sums of money to loan for plaintiff's intestate, and that he had advanced to her specified sums, leaving a balance due her, the administrator asked defendant whether the instrument was in his handwriting, to which he answered it was. Thereupon defendant's counsel offered to prove that defendant had made a mistake in the instrument, and that he should have credited himself with a certain additional sum, which evidence was excluded as relating to a transaction between decedent and defendant. Held that, notwithstanding the instrument was a "transaction with decedent," within article 2302, yet defendant, having been called by the administrator to testify to a part of the transaction, should have been permitted to testify to the whole of it. Watson v. Dodson, 121 S. W. 209, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 32.

In an action in the husband's name against an executor to recover for services rendered testator, in which plaintiff's wife was in effect a party, the recovery being for the community estate, the wife testified that she rendered services for testator by milking, cooking, and performing other housework, and that her husband would take testator every place he wanted to go, and waited on him all over the place in tending to the stock, etc., and plaintiff testified that he cut wood, fed the cattle, put up the hay, etc., harnessed the buggy, and carried testator almost every place there was anything to see to, and that when he moved to testator's farm he took with him corn and pork and other provisions and the corn was fed to his and testator's horses, and the other supplies, as well as groceries bought by plaintiff, were eaten by him and testator. 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302, provides that in actions against executors as such neither party can testify to transactions with testator unless called by the opposite party. Held, that the witness' testimony that her husband took testator every place he wanted to go, and waited on him all over the place in feeding, etc., and carried him almost every place there was anything to see to, as well as plaintiff's testimony that groceries purchased by him were used by testator, was as to "transactions" with testator, and not admissible, but the other testimony was admissible. Wells v. Hobbs, 122 S. W. 451, 453, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 375.

TRANSCRIBE

As spread, see Spread.

Technically the word "transcribe" means to write across or over. As generally used, it means to reduce to writing, and, as applied to notes of a stenographer as he is required to translate his notes before he can transcribe them, his translation can be as accurately expressed in words as in writing, and such translation would be as binding on his conscience as his certificate to the notes transcribed. Wilmoth v. Wheaton, 105 Pac. 39, 40, 81 Kan. 29.

TRANSCRIPT

See Stenographic Transcript.

"A 'transcript,' according to its derivation and as generally used and understood, is in effect a copy; * * * a copy of an original writing or deed." The filing of an abstract of a judgment of a justice in the clerk's office of the circuit court is not a compliance with a statute requiring a transcript of such judgment to be filed. Steringer v. John Mackie & Co., 49 S. E. 942, 943, 57 W. Va. 63 (citing and adopting Bouv. Law Dict.).

The clerk of the district court is entitled fees for "copying" the papers provided in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 623, on fee of venue, as well as for making the transcript" mentioned in article 622; a "y" being equivalent to a "transcript." Availle v. Stephens, 119 S. W. 842, 843, Tex. 514.

Under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 5273, which provides that each city council shall cause to be provided for its clerk's office a seal, such seal shall be affixed to all "transcripts," etc., which it may be necessary to authenticate under the provisions of this act, a writ of habeas corpus is not a "transcript." Con- v. City of Eureka Springs, 135 Fed. 566,

Under a statute providing that a justice grants an appeal shall send to the clerk the common pleas a transcript of the proceedings, the phrase "transcript of proceedings" does not include notice of appeal. According to the usual practice, a transcript consists of a copy of the docket which the justice is required by statute to keep and the papers as are necessary for the trial in the cause on appeal. Lazarus v. Martling, 188, 189, 73 N. J. Law, 84.

By "transcript of the evidence," as used in Acts 1905, p. 219, c. 112, providing for the preservation by court stenographers of the record of trials for the information of the court, jury, and parties, and requiring the stenographer to furnish transcripts to parties on payment therefor, and providing that on appeals such transcript shall be used as a record of the case, is meant the document, consisting of the evidence or other proceedings, made up at the request of either party upon payment therefor. Middlehurst Collins-Gunther Co. (Tex.) 99 S. W. 1027, 8.

TRANSFER

See Certificate of Order of Transfer; Fraudulent Transfer; Voluntary Transfer.

See, also, Attorn.

Civ. Code, § 1039, declares a "transfer" to be an act of the parties, or of the law, by which the title to property is conveyed from one living person to another. Curtin v. Kolsky, 78 Pac. 962, 963, 145 Cal. 431.

The expression "to sell" and the expression "to transfer property for a price in money" are convertible; and, as a consequence, it is no more possible to sell without transferring ownership than it is possible to sell without selling, or to transfer ownership without transferring ownership, or to do any other thing without doing it. When a sale is made under a suspensive condition, there is no sale until the condition is fulfilled. There is merely a contract that there shall be a sale when the condition is fulfilled.

Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. St. Louis Cypress Co., 46 South. 193, 197, 121 La. 152.

Where a contract for abstracts of title provided for payment at so much per "transfer," and there was evidence of a custom among abstractors that each of the successive steps leading to a conveyance was treated as a "transfer," and not all the transactions taken together, the abstractor was authorized to make up his account on such theory. McVeigh v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 132 S. W. 638, 642, 96 Ark. 480.

The word "transfer" means "the act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person, with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter." Bouvier's Law Dict. (Rawle's Rev.) 1133. One of the definitions given the term by Webster is "to make over the possession or control of; to pass; to convey as a right from one person to another." A bill of sale, reciting the transfer of "all my goods, license, good will, etc., to my saloon," given at the conclusion of negotiations in which the license was considered, and in which it was agreed and understood that the saloon should be run by the buyers under the seller's name and license until the expiration of the license, and in pursuance of which it was so conducted, constitutes a "transfer" of the license, within the prohibition of Rev. St. 1899, § 2992. Sawyer v. Sanderson, 88 S. W. 151, 153, 113 Mo. App. 233.

In speaking of the "transfer" of an instrument, it conveys the idea of a delivery. Crawford v. Hord, 89 S. W. 1097, 1098, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 352.

The word "convey" or "transfer," as an operative word in a deed, is of equivalent signification and effect as "grant." State v. Kellther, 88 Pac. 867, 868, 49 Or. 77 (quoting and adopting definition in Lambert v. Smith, 9 Or. 193, citing Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawy. 527, 9 Fed. Cas. 12).

The word "transfer," as used in an agreement by which the proprietors of a hotel sold the business and property used therein to a corporation, and as consideration the corporation issued stock to the former proprietors, and agreed to pay a claim against them for goods sold to them and used in the business, and thereafter the seller, in consideration of a sum of money, executed and delivered to the former proprietors a writing, reciting that the sellers agreed to "transfer" the account to the corporation, does not include the extinguishment or satisfaction of a chose in action, either by payment in full or by part payment, which is taken in full satisfaction. There is no meaning of the word "transfer" which carries the idea of an act of extinguishment, or any other idea than that of a passing over of a right or title or property in a thing from one to another. Miles v. Bowers, 90 Pac. 905, 907, 49 Or. 429 (quoting and adopting def-initiation by Justice Folger in Sands v. Hill, 55 N. Y. 18).

The words "sell, transfer or assign," as used in section 83, added to chapter 54 of the Code of 1899 by chapter 35, p. 93, of the Acts of 1901, authorizing a corporation to sell, transfer, or assign corporate property, do not authorize the corporation to trade or barter away for any thing other than money. The word "sell" usually applies to tangible property. It is a technical term applicable to the alienation of that kind of property, and especially to personal property. "Transfer or assign" are applicable to choses in action, rights, and privileges, rather than tangible property, and are almost, if not quite, identical in meaning. None of these terms, except the word "sell," indicates what the nature of the consideration shall be. Neither "assign" nor "transfer" is broad enough to cover the consideration. They in no sense define the contract under which they pass title, but simply define the nature of the act by which the title passes. They are more limited than the word "sell," which necessarily involves a price or consideration; but they stop short of indicating whether the property may be disposed of by sale or barter, and hence do not confer a power to trade. Germer v. Triple-State Natural Gas & Oil Co., 54 S. E. 509, 519, 60 W. Va. 143.

A "transfer" is the act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter, and a chattel mortgage is not within the meaning of such term. Noble v. Ft. Smith Wholesale Grocery Co., 127 Pac. 14, 17, 34 Okl. 662, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455.

"The word 'transfer' in its literal meaning is broader than 'assignment,' and all the authorities agree in a definition which in effect covers any act by which the owner of any thing delivers or conveys it to another, with the intent to pass his right therein. In like general terms a transferee is one to whom a transfer is made." Within Civ. Code, § 5269, par. 1, providing that in any suit instituted or defended by an assignee, transferee, etc., of a deceased person, the opposite party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor against such deceased person as to transactions or communications with such deceased person, the opposite party in an action of ejectment by the grantee of a deed from a deceased person is incompetent, as being an assignee or transferee. Hendrick v. Daniel, 46 S. E. 438, 439, 119 Ga. 358 (citing and distinguishing Elliott v. Shaw, 32 Ohio St. 431).

Assignment of mortgage

Civ. Code 1901, par. 735, provides that no instrument affecting real estate is valid against subsequent purchasers for value without notice unless recorded. Paragraph 1135 requires the record of "deeds, grants, transfers, and mortgages * * * which have been acknowledged," and paragraph 1136 requires every recorder to "keep * * * an index of assignments of mortgages, * * * assignors, * * * when and where recorded," and "an index of mortgages, * * * assignees, * * * when and where recorded." An assignor of a purchase-money mortgage fraudulently released it of record upon a reconveyance of the property and later made a new mortgage to a mortgagee without notice of the assignment, which was promptly recorded. The assignment of the original mortgage was not recorded until later. Held that, as the word "transfer" in paragraph 1135 is broad enough to include assignments of mortgages, the lien of the assigned mortgage was junior to that of the prior recorded instrument. Newman v. Fidelity Savings & Loan Ass'n, 128 Pac. 53, 55, 14 Ariz. 354.

An assignment of a mortgage lien is not a "conveyance" or a "transfer" of "any interest" in land covered by the mortgage within the meaning of section 2480, Gen. St. 1906, relating to recording of conveyances and transfers of lands or interests therein. Garratt v. Fernald (Fla.) 57 South. 671, 672.

As subject of taxation

The original issuance of stock by a corporation is not within Laws 1905, p. 474, c. 241, as amended by Laws 1906, p. 1008, c. 414, imposing a tax on all "sales or transfers" of corporate stock, whether made on or shown by the books of the corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery of any paper or other evidence of transfer or sale. People v. Duffy-McInerney Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 878, 879, 122 App. Div. 336.

Distinguished from abandon

The term "transfer" is distinguishable from the term "abandon," in that the latter implies surrender of something deemed useless, while the former implies a thing of value. Where a deed provided that, in case the grantees should abandon the property, it should revert to the grantors, a resale of the property by the grantees did not constitute an abandonment, so as to work a forfeiture. St. Peter's Church v. Bragaw, 56 S. E. 638, 690, 144 N. C. 126, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 4, 5, 11).

In bankruptcy law

Transfer as preference, see Preference.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 1, cl. 25, provides that the word "transfer" shall include the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. In re Pfaffinger, 154 Fed. 523, 524; Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Vanstony, 171 Fed. 375, 382, 96 C. C. A. 331.

To constitute a preference voidable under the Bankrupt Act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. 545, c. 541, § 60, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, 32 Stat. 799, c. 487), it is not necessary that the "transfer" of the insolvent's property be made directly to the creditor. It may be made to another, for his benefit. National Bank of Newport v. National Herkimer County Bank, 32 Sup. Ct. 633, 635, 225 U. S. 178, 56 L. Ed. 1042.

It is a necessary condition precedent to a preference that there shall have been a "transfer" of property by the bankrupt whereby a creditor is enabled to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of the same class, as provided by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3445), so that, if a conveyance attacked as a preference was originally and remained a nullity as against creditors and the bankrupt's trustee, there was no "transfer" within such definition. Rosenbluth v. De Forest & Hotchkiss Co., 81 Atl. 955, 957, 85 Conn. 40.

In an action by an assignee in insolvency, a sale of goods by the insolvents in the name of their broker's clerk, falsely stating that they belonged to such clerk, was not a "transfer" made in the usual course of insolvent's business. Jaquith v. Davenport, 84 N. E. 125, 197 Mass. 397.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 25, 30 Stat. 545, amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 797, provides that the term "transfers" shall include the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. Section 3, subd. "a," declares that acts of bankruptcy shall consist of a person having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed any part of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors, with intent to prefer such creditors over other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings as not having at least five days before the sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged the same. Held, that where a person, while insolvent, voluntarily confessed judgment in favor of certain creditors, and permitted them to levy executions on and sell his property thereunder without having vacated such sale, such proceedings constituted a "transfer" within clauses 1 and 2 of section 3, independent of clause 3, and therefore limitations against the creditor's right to file a bankruptcy petition ran from the day of the sale, and not from a period five days prior thereto. In re Nusbaum, 152 Fed. 835, 836.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, 30 Stat. 562, defining a "preference," and section 1, subd. 25, 30 Stat. 545, defining a "transfer," and section 3, subd. 3, 30 Stat. 5406, declaring what shall constitute an act of bankruptcy, the act of a debtor, while insolvent, in permitting certain creditors to recover and docket a judgment against her so as to acquire a lien on real estate, and in permitting such judgment to remain a lien until one day before the expiration of four months from the date it was so docketed, constituted a preference and an available act of bankruptcy. In re Tupper, 163 Fed. 766, 768-770.

A "transfer" is within Ky. St. § 1910, making every transfer by a debtor in contemplation of insolvency and with a design to prefer a creditor an assignment for the benefit of creditors, when the transferor should know, as a reasonable man, that he was insolvent when the transfer was made, and that its effect would be to prefer one creditor to another; his actual knowledge of insolvency not necessarily being the criterion. Union Trust & Savings Co. of Maysville v. Taylor, 134 S. W. 196, 197, 142 Ky. 183.

Under the definition of the term "transfer," as given in the Bankruptcy Act, that it shall include a sale and every other mode of disposing of or parting with property or the possession thereof as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security, an agreement to transfer property may be construed as an agreement to deliver. Godwin v. Murchison Nat. Bank, 59 S. E. 154, 156, 145 N. C. 320, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7066).

Though the fact that an alleged bankrupt parted with the possession of property levied on under an attachment to the attaching officer conditionally and as security be held to constitute a "transfer" of the property attached, as defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1a (25), 30 Stat. 545, it was essential, in order that such transfer should constitute an act of bankruptcy, that it so operate as to constitute a "preference," as defined by section 60a, to wit, that the enforcement of the transfer will enable one of the bankrupt's creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class. In re Crafts-Rlordon Shoe Co., 185 Fed. 931, 933.

Where a bankrupt while solvent assigned a land contract to a bank in consideration of present and future advances to improve buildings on the land, and neither the contract nor the assignment were witnessed or acknowledged so as to be entitled to record, the "transfer" was made when the assignment was delivered to the bank and an advancement made on the faith thereof, and not when a new assignment to the bank's successor was executed and recorded. In re Sayed, 185 Fed. 962, 964.

A debtor, who transfers his property to a creditor by voluntarily confessing judgment in favor of the creditor and allowing him to issue execution and make a levy and a sale resulting in the creditor becoming the purchaser, transfers his property within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 25, 30 Stat. 545, providing that a "transfer" includes a sale and every other mode of disposing of property as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. Grant v. National Bank of Auburn, 197 Fed. 581, 586.

Bankr. Act, § 1, defines "transfer" as including the sale and every other mode of disposing of or parting with property or the possession thereof absolutely or conditionally. In re Thomas, 199 Fed. 214, 232.

Where a creditor procures a judgment against an insolvent debtor, and thereafter procures execution thereon to be issued and levied on personal property of the debtor, and at the execution sale such property is sold and the proceeds of the sale paid to the creditor in satisfaction of the debt, it is held that such execution sale and payment of the proceeds thereof constitutes a "transfer" of his property by the debtor, within the meaning of those words as used in the act. Galbraith v. Whitaker, 138 N. W. 772, 774, 119 Minn. 447, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427.

Set-off by a bank of a deposit account due a bankrupt against his liability to the bank on a note is not a "transfer of property" by the bankrupt within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 25, 30 Stat. 545, declaring that a transfer shall include the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property or the possession thereof absolutely or conditionally as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. Booth v. Prete, 71 Atl. 938, 939, 81 Conn. 636, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 863, 15 Ann. Cas. 306.

Same—Deposit in bank

A "transfer" is defined in the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 to include the sale and every other and different method of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. Insolvents, by depositing money in a bank on an open account, subject to check, do not thereby make a "transfer of property," within the meaning of the act. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 201, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. Ed. 380.

The deposit of money in bank by an insolvent within four months prior to his bankruptcy, on open account, subject to check, does not constitute a "transfer" of property amounting to a preference under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, though the bank may be at the time a creditor, and under section 68a, 30 Stat. 565, the bank has the right to set off so much of its claims as equals the balance in such account.

Same—Mortgage

By section 1 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 545, the word "transfer" is defined to include the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. "The word is used in its most comprehensive sense, and is intended to include every means and manner by which property can pass from the ownership and possession of another, * * * and by which the result forbidden by the statute may be accomplished; 'a preference enabling a creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditors of the same class.'" The giving of a chattel mortgage is a "transfer" of property, as defined by the bankruptcy act, it being a settled law of the state of New York that a chattel mortgage is a sale of the thing mortgaged, and operates as a transfer of the whole legal title to the mortgagee, subject only to be defeated by the full performance of the condition. In re Riggs Restaurant Co., 130 Fed. 691, 693, 66 C. C. A. 48 (quoting Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 45 L. Ed. 1171).

Within the meaning of Bankr. Act 1898, § 1, providing that a "transfer" includes the sale and every other different mode of disposing of or parting with the property or the possession of property absolutely or conditionally as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security, a mortgage given for the security of a debt is a "transfer." Dissenting opinion of Justice Day in Keppel v. Tiffin Sav. Bank, 25 Sup. Ct. 443, 450, 197 U. S. 356, 49 L. Ed. 790.

A conditional transfer of property as a pledge, mortgage, or security is within Bankr. Act, § 3a (2), by the express definition of the word "transfer" given in section 1 (25), and a mortgage made by an insolvent and recorded within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, if given with intent to prefer a creditor, constitutes an act of bankruptcy. In re Edelman, 130 Fed. 700, 701, 65 C. C. A. 665.

The word "transfer," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, includes "the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. A "mortgage" is a security and a transfer, and subject to the provisions of section 60a, and also of section 60b, providing that if a bankrupt shall have given a preference within four months before the filing of a petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudicaand the person receiving it or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, have had reasonable cause to believe it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee; a mortgage creating a preference, under § 60a, is nevertheless not voidable under section 60b, unless the creditor who received it, or is benefited thereby, or his agent, had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended to give a preference by it. Coder v. Russell, 152 Fed. 943, 949, 82 C. C. A. 91, R. A. (N. S.) 372.

Transfer—Payment

Payment of money is a "transfer" of property within the Bankrupt Act. Wright v. Metropolitan, 52 S. E. 141, 142, 140 N. C. 1 (citing Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 Ill. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 45 L. Ed. 1171; Fixen, 102 Fed. 295, 42 C. C. A. 354, R. A. 605; Sherman v. Luckhardt, 70 Mo. App. 320; Tomlinson v. City of Lexington, 145 Fed. 824, 826, 76 C. C. A. 400; Dickenson v. Stults, 48 S. E. 173, 120 Ga. 632 (citing Collier, Bankr. [3d Ed.] 421); John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Manshaw, 75 Pac. 1027, 68 Kan. 734; Ansley v. Kellogg, 92 Pac. 222, 224, 41 Colo. 117; Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. Ed. 1171); Bank of Oklahoma v. Bank of Oklahoma, 85 Pac. 469, 470, 101 Okla. 328.

Transfer—Fraud of creditors

The taking of a negotiable promissory note by the debtor in settlement of a debt from him on account, even if done to prevent attachment upon trustee process, is not a "transfer," within the meaning of a statute relating to transfers in fraud of creditors. Whegan Bank v. Cutler, 49 Me. 315, 316.

Transfer—Inheritance tax law

The tax variously called an "inheritance tax," a "legacy tax," a "transfer tax," and a "cession tax," is a "burden imposed by testament on all gifts, legacies, and successions, whether of real or personal property, or of any interest therein, passing to certain persons (other than those specially excepted) by will, by intestate law, or by assignment made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the donor. In re Morris' Estate, 50 S. E. 682, 110 N. C. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Dos Passos [2d Ed.] § 2).

The title of P. L. 1906, p. 432, c. 228, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to tax intestates' estates, gifts, legacies, and collateral inheritance in certain cases,'" is sufficiently comprehensive to include the subject-matter of section 1, subd. 2, thereof, providing that a tax may be imposed on the transfer if by will of property within the state and decedent was a nonresident at death; the word "transfer" being used synonymously with "passing," "change of title," or "change of possession." Dixon v. Russell, 73 Atl. 51, 53, 78 N. J. Law, 296.

The word "transfer," as applied to transfer tax laws, means the passing of property, or of any interest therein, in possession or enjoyment, present or future, without regard to whether the actual possession and enjoyment follows immediately or comes at some future time. Where a vested, though defeasible, interest in remainder passes under a will to the remainderman on the testator's death, though the possession does not pass until the death of the life tenant, the transfer or succession is referred to the time of the death of the testator, and, if that occurred prior to the enactment of the act taxing transfers of property, the remainder is not taxable. In re Hitchins' Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 472, 477, 43 Misc. Rep. 485.

Laws 1905, c. 368, § 220, subd. 1, provides for a tax upon the transfer of any property or interest therein when the transfer is by will or the intestate laws of the state, from any person dying seised or possessed of property; the term "intestate laws" referring to the statutes governing the descent and distribution of a decedent's property. Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547) § 280, in force when chapter 368 was enacted, provided that the article (relating to descent) did not affect tenancy by curtesy or dower. Held, that an estate by curtesy, not being derived from the wife's estate nor acquired by inheritance, is not taxable under section 220; there being no "transfer" thereof within the section. In re Starbuck's Estate, 122 N. Y. Supp. 584, 585, 586, 137 App. Div. 866.

A "transfer tax" must be regarded as a tax, not upon the money which is the subject of the legacy, but upon the passing of that money under the will, in possession or enjoyment. In re Wolfe's Estate, 85 N. Y. Supp. 949, 950, 89 App. Div. 349.

The word "transfer," as used in the Transfer Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908), is defined in section 242 as including the passing of property or any interest therein in possession or enjoyment, present or future, by inheritance, descent, devise, bequest, grant, deed, bargain, sale, or gift in the manner prescribed in the act. A husband and wife deposited moneys with two trust companies either of them, or the survivor, having power to draw such deposits. In the earlier account the husband's name came first, and in the later one the wife's name came first. The moneys deposited in both accounts previously belonged to the wife, and the checks drawn on the early account were generally signed by the husband to pay household expenses, and the later account was drawn upon by checks signed by the husband with the names on the later account and deposited in the first account and disbursed for family expenses. The husband contributed his whole salary to the household expenses. On the death of the wife, the balances in the joint accounts were not subject to the transfer tax. In re Stebbins' Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 563, 565, 52 Misc. Rep. 438.

In will

The word "transfer," in a provision of a will providing that the income of a trust estate should be paid to testator's daughter, and at her death one-fifth of the principal of the estate shall be transferred as she may by will direct, would not necessarily mean a passing of a title to land by trustees' conveyance, and it would not have that meaning, even if there had been a direction to the trustees to transfer. In re Dunphy's Estate, 81 Pac. 315, 317, 147 Cal. 95.

"Transfer," as used in a will in which testatrix bequeathed to her husband the use and benefit of all her property, with full power to use and transfer the same as if it belonged to him in fee, is broad enough to cover a devise of the land, as a devise is a purchase, and if power to will be necessary it is here found. Pool v. Napier, 124 N. W. 755, 756, 145 Iowa, 699 (citing In re Barrett's Will, 82 N. W. 998, 111 Iowa, 570; Bulfer v. Willigrod, 71 Iowa, 620, 33 N. W. 136; Bills v. Bills, 80 Iowa, 269, 45 N. W. 748, 8 L. R. A. 696, 20 Am. St. Rep. 418; Halladay v. Stickler, 43 N. W. 228, 78 Iowa, 388; Hambel v. Hambel, 80 N. W. 528, 109 Iowa, 459; Channell v. Aldinger, 96 N. W. 781, 121 Iowa, 297; Talbot v. Snodgrass, 100 N. W. 500, 124 Iowa, 681; Rona v. Meier, 47 Iowa, 610, 29 Am. Rep. 493; Steff v. Seibert, 105 N. W. 328, 128 Iowa, 748, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1186; Tarbell v. Smith, 125 Iowa, 388, 101 N. W. 118; Law v. Douglass, 107 Iowa, 606, 78 N. W. 212).

Of insured property

A mortgage or deed of trust for security of a debt is not a "transfer or change of title" to the property, within a policy of insurance, which would render the policy void if made without the consent of the company. Bushnell v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 85 S. W. 103, 104, 110 Mo. App. 223.

Of negotiable paper

Where a customer of a bank hands the receiving teller a check drawn by another person on the same bank, at the same time handing him her passbook, and the teller stamps the check paid and enters a credit in the passbook, there is no "transfer" of title to the check, and the bank may, if nothing further is done, charge back the amount of the check to the depositor, if there are not sufficient funds to meet it. Ocean Park Bank v. Rogers, 92 Pac. 879, 880, 6 Cal. App. 678.

Civ. Code, § 1039, defines "transfer" as an "act of the parties, or of the law, by which the title to property is conveyed from one living person to another." Notes from a decedent do not come within this definition. Transfer rests upon acts of parties to a contract, as does assignment, which is but a written transfer. Enscoe v. Fletcher, 82 Pac. 1075, 1077, 1 Cal. App. 659.

TRANSFER IN CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH

A "transfer" of securities in trust for the transferror's relatives with life estate reserved to him and power to control the property and to revoke the trust during his life was a transfer "in contemplation of death" within the inheritance tax law (Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1087—1). In re Bullen's Estate, 128 N. W. 109, 112, 143 Wis. 512, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1114.

TRANSFER IN TRANSIT

Elevator allowances or payments, limited by carriers' schedules to grain unloaded out of cars from the west and loaded into cars for points east, north, and south, is "elevation" and "transfer in transit," within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, declaring that all services in connection with the elevation of the property transported are transportation, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, to provide that transportation shall include all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, "elevation," and "transfer in transit." F. H. Peavey & Co. v. Union Pacific R. Co., 176 Fed. 409, 421, 423.

TRANSFER OF HOMESTEAD

Permission to cross a homesteader's land with an irrigation ditch, in consideration of the use of water therefrom, was not an alienation of the land within Rev. St. § 2288 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1385), permitting any settler on public lands, by pre-emption or homestead laws to "transfer any part of his homestead" for the purposes named; the grant being merely of a right of way. Methow Cattle Co. v. Williams, 117 Pac. 239, 241, 64 Wash. 457.

TRANSFER OF MORTGAGE DEBT

A "transfer of the mortgage debt," whether by writing or parol, is in equity the assignment of the mortgage. Buckheit v. Decatur Land Co., 37 South. 75, 76, 140 Ala. 216 (quoting Denby v. Mellgrew, 58 Ala. 149).

TRANSFER TAX

See Inheritance Tax.

TRANSFEREE OF A BUSINESS

A purchaser of shares of stock in a corporation from another holder was a "transferee of a business," within Pub. Acts Mich. 1905, p. 507, No. 329, § 1, which renders illegal contracts in restraint of trade, and section 6, which declares that the act shall not apply to any contract where the only object of the restraint imposed is to protect the vendee or transferee of a trade, pursuit, vocation, profession, or business, or the good will thereof.

sold and transferred for a valuable consideration, etc., as the transferor was the owner of the corporate business and good will in proportion to his shares. Buckhout v. Witter, 122 N. W. 184, 185, 157 Mich. 406.

TRANSFERRED

The word "transferred," added to a blank indorsement of a note, and followed by the word "to," followed by the name of the indorsee, does not add to nor detract from the legal effect of the indorsement, and the indorser is liable as indorser, and to relieve himself from liability the words "without recourse," or their equivalent, are necessary. Mayes Mercantile Co. v. Handley, 98 S. W. 125, 126, 6 Ind. T. 357; Id., 103 S. W. 599, 7 Ind. T. 13.

The word "transferred," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 740, providing that, when property has paid its full proportion for general sewers in one district, it shall not be transferred to any other and made liable for sewers and drains therein, implies the taking of property out of one district, in which it has paid assessments for such purposes, and putting it into another district, and prohibits the doubling up of assessments against one piece of property in this way. Shepherd v. Kansas City, 105 Pac. 531, 532, 81 Kan. 369.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a (5), 30 Stat. 565, which provides that a trustee in bankruptcy shall be vested with the title of the bankrupt to all property which he could "by any means have transferred," provided that, when any bankrupt shall have any insurance policy which has a cash surrender value payable to himself or his estate, he may pay such surrender value and retain the policy, the proviso does not define and limit what insurance policies shall pass to the trustee, but only excepts from property which would otherwise pass insurance policies which have a surrender value, on payment to the trustee of such value. A policy which authorized the bankrupt to nominate or change the beneficiary at will is property which he might have "transferred," and as such passes under such section to his trustee, unless brought within the exception made by the proviso, although it is in terms payable to a designated beneficiary. In re Orear, 178 Fed. 632, 634, 102 C. C. A. 78, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 990.

A will drawn entirely by the testatrix, who was an aged woman of education, but unused to technical legal terms, stated her purpose to devote her entire estate to founding and maintaining a temporary resting place for missionary workers, to be called "The House of Rest," and contained the following provisions: "Secondly, I do now give, devise and bequeath all my real estate [describing both real and personal property] to my executors, to be transferred by them to the Woman's Occidental Board of Missions * * * with the executive committee of the Woman's Presbyterian Mission Society of the Los Angeles Presbytery as trustees and managers thereof. * * * Ninthly, all the residue of my property * * * together with real estate which may be sold at any time, it is my wish to have invested as a permanent fund, allowing the income only to be used in aiding to meet the expenses of the House of Rest." Held that, construed in accordance with the statutory rules governing such wills, it was not the intention of the testatrix by the use of the word "transferred" to create an estate in the executors to be by them conveyed to the trustees, but that the executors should take possession and control of the property for administration under the laws of the estate, and in due course of administration should transfer it on final distribution to the trustees and that, as so construed, the disposition was valid to the extent of one-third of the estate as limited by Civ. Code, § 1313, forbidding charitable devises to the extent of more than one-third of the estate of one leaving heirs. In re Peabody's Estate, 97 Pac. 184, 186, 154 Cal. 173.

TRANSFERRED AND ASSIGNED

A declaration on a note, alleging that it was by indorsement "transferred and assigned" to plaintiff, imported a delivery. Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. v. Smith, 42 South. 345, 346, 89 Miss. 298.

TRANSFERRED TO PROPER COURT OF APPEALS

Acts 1909, pp. 396, 397, increasing the jurisdiction of the Courts of Appeals, provides (page 397) that all unsubmitted cases pending in the Supreme Court, which under the act fall under the jurisdiction of a Court of Appeals, "shall be transferred to the proper Courts of Appeals, to be heard and determined by them." Held, that the words quoted meant that the case should be transferred to the proper Court of Appeals, to be heard and determined in the same manner as if the case had gone there originally; and hence where, pursuant thereto, a case was transferred by the Supreme Court to one of the Courts of Appeals, a subsequent transfer thereof to another Court of Appeals, under provisions of the statute authorizing it, was proper. Houts v. Jackson, 128 S. W. 231, 143 Mo. App. 584.

TRANSFORMER

In electricity, in order to reduce the voltage carried by the main conductor, a mechanism is used which is called a "transformer." This transformer consisted of a primary and secondary coil of wire, separated by micranized cloth, all inclosed in a sheet-iron case filled with oil, the oil serving as additional insulation, the primary coil being connected through the transformer with the main conductor, and the secondary connected with the service wires inside the shop through the transformer and what is called a main cut-out. Bice v. Wheeling Electrical Co., 59 S. E. 626, 62 W. Va. 685.

TRANSIENT

A citizen of New York who came to Texas, and had been engaged in business there for 14 months next preceding the filing of a suit, and had been continuously there except for three trips to visit his family in New York, where he also maintained a residence, was not a "transient person," but a resident of the state, entitled to be sued in the county of his residence. Taylor v. Wilson (Tex.) 93 S. W. 108, 109.

TRANSIENT MERCHANT

"Permanent merchants" are those who have a permanent place of business, and "transient merchants" are transitory or temporary traders, who have no intention of locating permanently. State ex rel. Mudeking v. Parr, 123 N. W. 408, 409, 109 Minn. 147, 134 Am. St. Rep. 759.

A town ordinance provided that transient merchants, all persons transiently remaining in the town and selling or offering for sale merchandise at retail in temporary places of business, should pay a certain license fee. Held, that the term "transient merchant" relates rather to the business carried on than to the residence of the merchant, and whether a merchant shall be deemed transient depends upon the kind of business transacted, the place where it is conducted, and the duration or intended duration thereof. Town of Scranton v. Henson, 130 N. W. 1079, 1081, 151 Iowa, 221.

"Transient merchant" did not include a traveling solicitor for a corporation engaged in selling tea, who took orders for goods similar to samples carried by him, and delivered the orders to the corporation, and who afterwards delivered the goods for the corporation in case the orders were accepted; the corporation keeping the accounts with customers. State v. Bristow, 109 N. W. 199, 200, 131 Iowa, 664.

One employed as a traveling salesman, receiving a stated salary and expenses, exposing samples and soliciting orders from consumers, which he sent to his employers, who shipped the goods to the purchasers, was not a merchant, within a city ordinance requiring a "transient merchant" to take out a license. State v. Nelson, 105 N. W. 327, 328, 128 Iowa, 740.

Act March 11, 1901, Acts 1901, p. 466, c. 208, § 1 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7231a), makes it unlawful for any transient merchant to engage in business as such without a license, and section 9, p. 469 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7231b), confers on cities and towns authority to license and regulate transient merchants engaging in business therein. Section 8 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7231h) exempts from the operation of the act, among others, commercial travelers, sales by sample for future delivery, and hawkers and peddlers. Section 6 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7231f), declares that the words "transient merchant" shall include all persons who engage in any temporary and transient business, either in one locality or in traveling from place to place, selling goods, and who, to carry on such business lease or occupy any building for the exhibition and sale of such goods. A manufacturer of cooking ranges shipped ranges to itself, in care of its agents, to be sold by them, and the ranges were stored in a business room of a city. The manufacturer provided teams and wagons for its agents in hauling the ranges about, and for exhibiting them for sale and selling them, and delivering them when sold. The ranges were not sold or offered for sale while in the storeroom, and none were exhibited for sale in any manner except from the wagons. The doors of the storeroom were frequently left open, and persons went in unmolested and examined the ranges. Held, that the manufacturer was not a transient merchant within the meaning of the act, and not liable to pay a license fee as such. Clay v. Wrought Iron Range Co., 85 N. E. 119, 120, 42 Ind. App. 145.

The word "transient" is a relative term, which, in the absence of any inflexible statutory or legislative definition, may be the source of much vexation and uncertainty. The abuse sought to be avoided by Code, § 700, giving cities power to define by ordinance who shall be considered "transient merchants," to regulate, license, and tax their sales, to regulate, license, and tax itinerant doctors, etc., is the practice of that class of dealers who, with large or small stocks of goods, establish themselves for a few days, weeks, or months in a place, and then move on into other fields, staying nowhere long enough to have acquired a permanent residence, and, while claiming the benefit and protection of the laws of the state, contribute nothing to the local or general public revenue. The provision does not in express terms or by necessary implication give cities the power to exact a license from opticians who fit and adjust spectacles. City of Waukon v. Fisk, 100 N. W. 475, 477, 124 Iowa, 464.

TRANSIT CAR

The term "transit car," used in a contract for the sale of flour by railroad, meant a car already loaded with flour and on its way from the mill to the buyer. Stock v. Towle, 54 Atl. 918, 919, 97 Me. 408.

TRANSITORY ACTION

Actions are deemed "transitory" where the transactions upon which they are founded might have taken place anywhere, but are local when their cause is in its nature, essentially local. An action to recover only the value of ore or timber severed from land is "transitory," and may be maintained wherever the trespasser can be served with summons, although plaintiff therein may be compelled to allege and prove ownership of the land from which the timber is cut, or the ore extracted; but, where the whole or any part of the damages claimed is for injury to freehold, the action is local, and must, if the land is located in this state, be tried, by the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 392, in the county where the land is situated, or, if the land is located in another state, it must be tried in the courts of that state. Ophir Silver Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 82 Pac. 70, 73, 147 Cal. 467, 3 Ann. Cas. 340 (quoting and adopting definition in Livingston v. Jefferson, 1 Brock. 209, 15 Fed. Cas. 660).

"Originally the pleader was required to state truly the place where each fact asserted by him occurred, and if issue was joined thereon, the fact was tried by a jury summoned from that neighborhood or venue. Afterwards, when jurors were no longer expected to decide issues of fact upon their own knowledge, a fictitious venue was, in some actions, permitted, and the pleader assigned to his facts, under a videlicet, the place in which he desired the trial to be held. These actions were then styled 'transitory.' But this fiction was not allowed when the cause of action was so related to a certain piece of land that it must have arisen on or near the land. Actions for such causes were styled 'local,' and triable only in the vicinity where the land lay." Defiance Fruit Co. v. Fox, 70 Atl. 460, 461, 76 N. J. Law, 482 (quoting Hill v. Nelson, 57 Atl. 411, 70 N. J. Law, 376, 378).

An action on an injunction bond is "transitory," within Civ. Code Prac. §§ 62-82, defining the venue of actions, and the circuit court of a county in which none of the defendants reside is without jurisdiction. Smith's Adm'r v. Miller, 131 S. W. 5, 6, 140 Ky. 308.

An action by a lessor against his lessee for damages for breaches of covenants contained in the lease is a "transitory action," in which the venue may be laid by plaintiff as in other transitory actions. Clemens Stanger, 68 Atl. 97, 98, 75 N. J. Law, 287.

Since the Missouri statutes provide for every contingency as to the bringing of actions, the rule of the common law which regarded an action for breach of covenants of seisin and warranty as "local," and not "transitory," was completely altered, and as to such actions such rule of the common law no longer obtains in Missouri; the title to real estate being only incidentally involved in such action. Coleman v. Lucksinger, 123 S. W. 441, 443, 224 Mo. 1, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934.

TRANSITORY FRENZY

"Transitory frenzy" is in the eye of the law nothing but vindictive and reckless temper, and is no defense to murder. Commonwealth v. Renzo, 65 Atl. 30, 31, 216 Pa. 147.

TRANSMIT—TRANSMISSION

See Erroneous Transmission.

Of bill of exceptions

The word "transmit," in a statute requiring the transmission of a bill of exceptions by the clerk to the trial judge for signature, did not mean a personal carrying of the bill and delivery to the judge by the clerk, but was satisfied by any means selected by the clerk which would secure the safe transfer of the bill from his office to the hands of the trial judge without its being tampered with by any one. Davies v. New Castle & L. Ry. Co., 73 N. E. 213, 216, 71 Ohio St. 325.

Of telegram

To "transmit" is to communicate, to send from one person to another; while the term "delivery," as applied to a telegram, means "transmit" and deliver. Kirby v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 S. E. 10, 11, 77 S. C. 404, 122 Am. St. Rep. 580.

Act April 8, 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 151, c. 48), requiring telegraph companies to "transmit" messages with impartiality and in good faith in the order of time in which they are received, and providing a penalty for failure to do so, includes prompt delivery as well as transmission. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Braxtan, 74 N. E. 985, 987, 165 Ind. 165.

Of telephone message

There are authorities which hold that in the construction of statutes the word "telegraph" embraces "telephone," and that statutes concerning telegraph companies include telephone companies as well. But the Arkansas statute declaring that "telegraph" companies shall be liable for mental anguish or suffering on account of negligence "in receiving, transmitting, or delivering messages," does not include "telephone" companies. A telephone company does not "receive," "transmit," and "deliver" a message in the ordinary acceptance of those words. It merely furnishes to the patron facilities for carrying on a conversation at long distance. Southern Telephone Co. v. King, 146 S. W. 489, 490, 491, 103 Ark. 160, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.)

402 (citing Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 315, 76 Minn. 334).

TRANSMISSION COMPANY

As defined by the Oklahoma Constitution, the term "transmission company" includes any company, receiver, or other person owning, leasing, or operating, for hire any telegraph or telephone line. Shawnee Gas & Electric Co. v. State ex rel. Shawnee City Waterworks, 122 Pac. 222, 223, 31 Okl. 505.

Under Const. art. 9, § 18, giving the Corporation Commission power to regulate all transmission companies doing business in the state in all matters relating to the performance of their public duties and their charges therefor, and section 34, providing that the term "transmission company" shall include any company or other person holding or operating for hire any telegraph or telephone line, and that the term "person" shall include individuals, partnerships, and corporations, the Corporation Commission has supervision of a telephone company owned solely by an individual and operated for hire in all matters relating to the performance of its public duties and charges. Hine v. Wadlington, 109 Pac. 301, 126 Okl. 389.

TRANSMISSION OF ESTATES

The right of "transmitting estates," under a statute making children capable of transmitting estates, and giving them the right to distributive shares of the personal estates of any of their kindred on the part of their mother, contemplates transmission through the mother. Berry v. Powell, 105 S. W. 345, 347, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 599 (citing Ford v. Boone, 75 S. W. 353, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 550).

TRANSMITTE

See Microphone Transmitter.

TRANSPORT (As Emotion)

An instruction that if accused killed decedent in a sudden "transport" of passion on adequate cause, etc., he was guilty of manslaughter, was not prejudicially erroneous as imposing by using the word "transport" a more onerous test than imposed by law; a "sudden transport of passion" being synonymous with that condition where the mind is rendered incapable of cool reflection, and meaning that one is transported beyond the realm of reason. Waters v. State, 114 S. W. 628, 630, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 322.

"If a railroad company carries freight beyond its terminal station, when this service is performed either voluntarily or as the result of a contract or custom, it is no less engaged in the 'transportation' of freight than it was when the freight was being carried between the initial point of carriage and the terminal point of carriage; and the words 'transporting' and 'transportation,' which occur in the rule under consideration in the Dixon Case, are there used in this very sense. * * * There is nothing in that decision, when taken in the light of the question then under consideration, which can be construed into a ruling that the word 'transportation,' as used in the clause of the act now under consideration, included only service rendered between the initial point of carriage and the terminal station of the railway company." Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 48 S. E. 714, 716, 121 Ga. 48 (citing and explaining Dixon v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 35 S. E. 369, 110 Ga. 173, and State v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co., 30 S. The Carmack amendment to the act for the regulation of interstate commerce (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, par. 11, 34 Stat. 595 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1307]) provides that any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation shall be liable to the consignor for any loss, damage, or injury caused by it, or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company over whose lines such property may pass, and that no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability imposed. The act of Congress referred to defines "transportation" as including cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration, or icing, storage and handling of property transported. Held, in view of the definition and the broad language of the amendment, the latter must be presumed to have been intended by Congress to go as far as Congress had power to regulate the subject, and to make the initial carrier liable for any loss of property until its interstate shipment was completed, so that an initial carrier would be liable for goods destroyed while still in interstate commerce, but in the hands of a connecting carrier. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Dreyfuss-Well Co., 150 S. W. 321, 322, 150 Ky. 333.

Where alcoholic liquors imported from a foreign country were stored in New York, transmission to New Orleans was not transportation," but a "transportation," the Wilson Act (Act Cong. Aug. 8, 1878, 26 Stat. 313), though the storing in New York was only temporary and the goods were originally intended for New Orleans. State v. Frederick De Bary & Co., 100 La. 892, 894, 130 La. 1090.

the word "transportation" may be used as something more than a free rate; it may also be construed as something other than regular fare, and may be applied to an excursion rate. Salinger v. Northern Union Tel. Co., 126 N. W. 362, 365, 170 Minn. 484.

shipment distinguished

In Black's Law Dictionary "banishment" is defined as a punishment inflicted on criminals by compelling them to quit a place, or country for a specified period of time, or for life. It is inflicted principally on political offenders; "transportation" being the word used to express a similar punishment of ordinary criminals." United States v. Ju Toy, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 649, 198 U. S. 253, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

related synonyms

The term "transported," as used in an act with a common carrier for the carrying of a shipment of horses, is equivalent to the term "carried," and quite distinct from the idea of forwarding. Smeltzer v. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 158 Fed. 649, 664.

continuous transportation

A transportation from one point to another remains continuous, so long as the intent remains unchanged, no matter what stopovers or transshipments intervene." The Hudson, 3 Wall. 514, 553, 18 L. Ed. 200.

act of transportation

It is obvious on a little reflection that the cost of moving local freight is greater than that of moving through freight, and it is only obvious that it is almost if not quite impossible to determine the difference with mathematical accuracy." Chicago, M. & St. P. Co. v. Tompkins, 20 Sup. Ct. 336, 340, 157 U. S. 178, 44 L. Ed. 417.

delay in transportation

The word "transport" means, not only to convey from one place to another, or to remove an object, and Acts 1903, p. c. 590, providing that any railroad failing to "transport" goods received for shipment and billed to any place within the state for a longer period than ten days after receipt of the same, unless otherwise agreed between the parties, shall incur a penalty, etc., refers to a delay in beginning the transportation or starting the goods from the station of their receipt, and does not require a delivery at their destination within the time specified. Walker Bros. v. Southern Ry. Co., 49 S. E. 84-86, 137 N. C. 163.

According to Webster's International Dict., Century Dict. (vol. 2), and Black's Law Dict. 1184, there is a distinction between the words "transport" and "deliver"; the words being of entirely different origin and signification. To transport an article it must be received and retained by the person charged with the duty, while to deliver an article the person intrusted with the possession must part with it. The word "deliver" is compounded of "de" and "liverare," "to set free; to set at liberty; to give over." Revisal 1905 provides that any railroad, failing to transport within a reasonable time goods received, shall pay a penalty, and declares that it shall be considered that a railroad has transported freight within a reasonable time if it has done so within the ordinary time required. It is evident that the Legislature had in mind the distinction between duty to "transport" and to "deliver," since to transport is the act of the carrier without the intervention or aid of the consignee, while delivery cannot be accomplished without the concurrence of the consignee, and the effect of the statute is to impose the penalty on a railroad for failing to reasonably "transport" goods, as distinguished from a failure to transport and deliver goods to the consignee, and for a failure to perform the first the penalty is imposed, while for a failure to perform the second the consignee may sue for damages. Alexandre v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 697, 698, 144 N. C. 93 (citing Bellows v. Folsom, 27 N. Y. Super. Ct. 43; United States v. McCready, 11 Fed. 225; Walker Bros. v. Southern R. Co., 49 S. E. 84, 127 N. C. 163; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203, 5 Sup. Ct. 828, 29 L. Ed. 158; Moore v. Collins, 15 N. C. 388; Hilliard v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 51 N. C. 343; Chalk v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co., 85 N. C. 423; Coble v. Shoffner, 75 N. C. 42).

Act 1904 (Laws 1904, p. 671), entitled "An act to prevent delays in the transportation of freight by railroads in this state," providing, by section 1, that railroads doing business in the state shall transport freight, received for "transportation within the state," without greater delay than specified, and declaring a penalty for noncompliance, does not apply to interstate commerce, and so does not cover a case of transportation partly out of the state; the delay occurring wholly out of the state. Hunter v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 13, 14, 81 S. C. 169; Frasier v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 14, 81 S. C. 162 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7503, 7504).

Nature and elements of transportation

Under Act Cong. June 29, 1906, § 1, the term "transportation" includes cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Beatty, 126 Pac. 736, 737, 34 Okl. 321, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988.

As defined by Railroad Rate Act, § 1, the term "transportation" includes, among other things, all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration, or icing, storage, and handling of property transported. State ex rel. Railroad Commission of Indiana v. Adams Express Co., 85 N. E. 337, 338, 171 Ind. 138.

"Transportation," within Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, includes all facilities of shipment, irrespective of ownership, and all services in connection with the elevation, transfer in transit, and handling of property transported; and a carrier, required to furnish such transportation on reasonable request, cannot refuse the allowance for elevator service on through grain in car loads at terminal points to elevator owners, who, through ownership of the grain, derive an incidental advantage by using the opportunity during the process of elevation to weigh, store, inspect, clean, mix, or otherwise treat the grain. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Updike Grain Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 39, 41, 222 U. S. 215, 56 L. Ed. 171.

The word "transportation," as used in Immigration Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 20, 32 Stat. 1218, provides that any alien, who shall be found a public charge in the United States from causes existing prior to landing, shall be deported at any time within two years after arrival, at the expense, including one-half of the cost of inland transportation to the port of deportation, of the person bringing the alien into the United States, should be given its ordinary meaning, viz., carriage from one place to another. United States v. Hamburg-American Line, 159 Fed. 104, 105, 86 C. C. A. 294.

Immigration Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 20, 32 Stat. 1218, provides that any alien who shall be found a public charge in the United States from causes existing prior to landing shall be deported at any time within two years after arrival, at the expense, including one-half of the cost of inland transportation to the port of deportation, of the person bringing the alien into the United States. Held, that the term "transportation," as so used, should be given its ordinary meaning, viz., carriage from one place to another, and that the phrase "cost of inland transportation" therefore only included the cost of carrying the alien from the inland place where he was found to the port of deportation, and that the government was therefore not entitled to recover under such section from the steamship company bringing the deported alien into the United States any part of the travelling expenses of an officer sent to bring the alien to the port of deportation. United States v. Hamburg-American Line, 159 Fed. 104, 105, 86 C. C. A. 294.

Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 15, 24 Stat. 384, as amended by Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 12, 36 Stat. 551, provides that if the owner of property transported under the act directly or indirectly renders any service connected with the transportation, or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the charge and allowance therefor shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the Commission may, after hearing on a complaint, or on its initiative, determine what is a reasonable charge, etc. Held, that cartage of sugar from refinery to cars did not constitute "transportation," nor a "service connected with transportation," within such act, for which the carrier was justified in making an allowance under section 15; and that such allowance constituted an illegal rebate. American Sugar Refining Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. Ry. Co., 200 Fed. 652, 655.

Demurrage charged for the detention of cars in loading or unloading is a terminal charge, required to be shown by the schedules of rates filed and published by an interstate railroad company by the terms of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, §§ 1, 6, 24 Stat. 379, 380, as subsequently amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, §§ 1, 2, 34 Stat. 584, 586, which define transportation as including all the instrumentalities and facilities of shipment and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, and handling of property transported, and require the filing and publishing of schedules showing all the rates, fares, and charges for transportation, stating separately all terminal charges. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. United States, 188 Fed. 879, 884, 110 C. C. A. 513.

The word "transportation," as used in Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, amending Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 3, 24 Stat. 380, includes all kinds of instrumentalities of shipment and carriage. United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 165 Fed. 113, 121, 91 C. C. A. 147.

In violation of law

A carrier does not "transport" live stock from a quarantined portion of a state into another state, in violation of Act March 3, 1905, c. 1496, § 2, where it is a connecting carrier and receives the stock from the preceding carrier at a point in the state other than the quarantined state for delivery to a point in the same state. United States v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 6, 7, 222 U. S. 1, 56 L. Ed. 68.

Under the provision of Forest, Fish, and Game Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 19) § 103, that birds or fish for which there is a close season shall not be transported at any time, the kind and number are plainly marked on the outside of the package, with the name of the consignor, consignee, initial of the person making the package, and the destination, a person sending a package to a carrier for transportation, not marked as required, is not liable to a penalty; the word "transport" means to carry or convey from one place to another, and applying only to a carrier, and not to a shipper. People v. Suydam, 97 N. Y. 558, 859, 204 N. Y. 419.

Under Cr. Code 1902, § 589, providing that no person shall bring into the state or territory "from place to place within the state by wagon, cart, or other vehicle, or by any other means or mode of carriage, any liquors or liquids containing alcohol," "transportation" means to carry or convey from one place to another, and carrying liquor on the highway is a means or mode of carriage. State v. Henson, 60 S. E. 234, 235, 79 S. C. 87.

Rest, Fish, and Game Law (Laws 1908, § 103, regulating the "transportation" and game for which there is a close connection includes a shipment or delivery to a carrier. People v. Montena, 123 N. Y. Supp. 775, 139 App. Div. 421.

Where sugar alleged to have been adulterated and misbranded was not seized while in transportation, it was not subject to forfeiture under the clause of Pure Food and Drug Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 10, 34 Stat. 771, declaring that any article of food or drug, when adulterated or misbranded, which is being transported from one state, territory, district or insular possession to another for sale, is liable to seizure, condemnation, etc. Under the Pure Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 10, 34 Stat. 771, provides, in the alternative, that any article of food adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the act, having been transported, remains in the hands of the owner, unsold, or in original packages, and is liable to be proceeded against by condemnation. Held, that the words "transported" contemplate a transportation in interstate commerce, and not a transportation from one point in a given state, territory, or insular possession to another point in the same state, territory, district or insular possession. United States v. Forty-Six Packages of Sugar, 183 Fed. 642, 644.

1 Stat. 187, c. 553, providing that bodies of wild game animals transported into any state or territory shall be subject to the laws of such state or territory, "transported" is used in the sense of "conveyed" from one state to another; and necessary implication excludes from control those game birds, etc., the importation of which is not prohibited. People v. Silz v. Hesterberg, 96 N. Y. Supp. 109, 109 App. Div. 295.

TRANSPORTATION COMPANY

A belt line railway company having 5 engines and 12 or 15 miles of track, whose business is to intercept cattle traffic some distance from stockyards and transport it over its own line to the yards, for which it is paid by the railroad company employing it to do so, is a "transportation company," within Laws 1905, c. 25, relating to the venue of suits against railroad corporations and assignees, etc., operating any railroad over whose transportation lines freight is carried, so as to prescribe the venue of suits against railroads, express or transportation companies, where any damage arises out of the transportation of freight, and for damages caused by the negligent handling of live stock on its own line. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Henson, 132 S. W. 118, 103 Tex. 598.

An express company, being by Va. Code 1904, § 1294a(2), declared a "transportation company," is within the terms of Va. Code 1904, § 1294c(24), providing that no contract shall exempt any common carrier from liability which would exist had no contract been entered into. Southern Express Co. v. Keeler, 64 S. E. 38, 41, 109 Va. 459.

A company engaged in the business of producing and buying natural gas, which it conveys by means of pipes to a city, where it distributes and sells the same to consumers, is not a "transporting company," within War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, Schedule B, 30 Stat. 464, imposing on persons, firms, corporations, or companies owning or controlling any pipe line for transporting oil or other products, whose gross actual receipts exceed $250,000, a special tax on the excess of receipts above such amount. United States v. Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Co., 141 Fed. 198, 201.

TRAP

The word "trap," although derived from the Swedish word "trappa," meaning a step or stair, has been known and used as a common English name for igneous rock for more than 100 years. And the words "trappoid," "trappous," "trappose," "trappean," are adjectives related to trap. But the word "trappe" is not and never has been in this country a descriptive name for trap rock. The designation "trappe rock" is unknown to the English language, and if the word "trappe" be known to that language it bears no relationship whatever to rock. The word "trappe" appears to be an obsolete Anglo-Saxon word signifying, not rock, but artifice or stratagem. John T. Dyer Quarry Co. v. Schuylkill Stone Co., 185 Fed. 557, 558, 573.

TRAPPE ROCK

See Trap.

TRAPPER

In mining, a "trapper" is a doorkeeper in the entry of a mine. Bare v. Crane Creek Coal & Coke Co., 55 S. E. 907, 61 W. Va. 28, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 284, 123 Am. St. Rep. 966.

A "trapper" in a mine is one whose duty is to open certain doors in an entry in the mine for cars drawn by mules to pass through, and to immediately close the doors after the cars have passed, and to keep them closed except when cars are passing, to prevent the escape of air which has been forced into the mine, and when cars are stalled in the vicinity of his doors to assist the driver in starting the cars. Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielle, 70 N. E. 17, 19, 208 Ill. 116.

A person employed in a coal mine in opening and closing doors, and giving signals to approaching trains of coal cars by waving his lamp, is engaged in "trapping." Ewing v. Lanark Fuel Co., 65 S. E. 200, 206, 65 W. Va. 726, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487.

TRASH

Wrecking contractors offered to wreck and remove "all the buildings, lumber and material of every nature whatsoever. * * * We agree to measure and pay for said lumber now in buildings, structures or sections before tearing down or wrecking the same and to measure and pay for such lumber as is already down measuring not less than six feet in length before removing the same from the premises." Their offer was accepted, and before buildings should be touched all remaining lumber less than six feet in length and trash were to be removed from the premises by the wrecking company. At a conference of the parties before the making of the contract, nothing was said as to the removal of a spur track which extended onto the grounds on which the buildings were located; and there was no understanding that anything should be taken but the lumber from the wrecked buildings. Held, the ties and rails of such track were not intended to be removed, and, as they were not "trash" within the contract, their removal by the wrecking company could be restrained. Woodruff v. Bourbon Stock Yards Co., 149 S. W. 960, 962, 149 Ky. 576.

TRAUMATIC NEURASTHENIA

"Traumatic neurasthenia" means that the nervous system, as the result of a wound or injury, has become weakened, and that there is a lack of power in the nerve centers to perform their functions properly. Colorado Springs & I. Ry. Co. v. Nichols, 92 Pac. 691, 694, 41 Colo. 272, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215.

TRAUMATIC NEURITIS

As disease, see Disease.

TRAUMATIC NEUROSIS

"Medical science treats of a condition currently denominated 'railway spine,' or, in a more technical sense, 'traumatic neurosis.' It is latterly denied by strong authority that any such malady exists as a concussion of the spine or spinal cord, which term is also often used as a synonym for 'railway spine,' but that the symptoms which were supposed to indicate a concussion of the spine are but indications of a concussion of the brain, which may involve a psychic as well as a physical injury, one or both. Such a condition as traumatic neurosis may, it is said, result from actual lesion of the vertebral column, accompanied by immediate and definite signs of such lesion; but it may also result, according to medical science, from a nervous shock or sudden fright, involving a psychical condition, as well as a nervous derangement and impairment, where there are no outward physical or objective signs or indications of physical lesion of any character. * * * Unlike the question first discussed, railway spine, or traumatic neurosis, is not a sequence or result that follows as of course, or may within reasonable inference, from a bruise on the leg, a wrench or sprain of the back, or contusion of the muscles and nerves. Such an affliction or malady may or may not result or spring from injuries of that nature, dependent upon the seriousness or severity of the injuries, and it is not, therefore, necessarily consequent. But it may arise from another and entirely distinct source—that is, from a concussion, followed by a shock of such proportions as vitally to affect and impair the nervous system, or a sudden fright, producing psychic or mental traumatism ('trauma' meaning a wound, and is generally used as synonymous with 'injury'), which may lead to a multitude of derangements and suffering, and this without lesion of the nerves or contusion apparent objectively." Maynard v. Oregon R. Co., 72 Pac. 590, 592, 593, 43 Or. 63.

TRAUMATIC PNEUMONIA

"Traumatic pneumonia" is pneumonia resulting from a violent injury. Johnson v. Continental Casualty Co., 99 S. W. 473, 474, 122 Mo. App. 369.

TRAVEL—TRAVELER—TRAVELING

See Commercial Traveler; Ordinary Travel.

"To 'travel' is to pass or make a journey from place to place, whether on foot, on horseback, or in any conveyance." "Traveling" is "the act of making a journey; change of place; passage." Hendry v. Town of North Hampton, 56 Atl. 922, 924, 72 N. H. 351, 64 L. R. A. 70, 101 Am. St. Rep. 681.

One charged with carrying a pistol at a political meeting in his own county is not to be within the provision of the statute prohibiting carrying a pistol shall not apply to "travelers" by evidence that three or four days before he borrowed a pistol to carry with him on a visit to his brother in an adjoining county, it not being that he was en route to or from his brother. Brownlee v. State (Tex.) 32 S. W. 444.

a prosecution for carrying a pistol, where the defendant lived in an adjoining county to the one in which the town was located in which he was arrested, and that on the point of returning home, having taken his pistol from the place where he was accustomed to deposit it while in the city, sufficient, in the absence of evidence as to the distance of the town from his home, to show that he was a "traveler." Blackwell v. State, 31 S. W. 380, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 476.

Deflected by temporary stop

where the defendant, while driving home from a business trip to another county, stopped in the city for a few minutes at a creditor's office to discuss the debt, did not deprive his character as a "traveler," within the meaning of the statute excepting travelers from the prohibition against carrying pistols. Hunt v. State, 107 S. W. 842, 843, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 477.

a passenger in the waiting room of a depot before the arrival of a train which was to take is a "traveler" within the meaning of the law, and has a legal right to remain there. Texas Midland R. Co. v. General, 17 S. W. 1004, 1009, 54 Tex. Civ. App.

a prosecution for violating the statute prohibiting carrying a pistol where it appeared that the accused had returned from his place of residence to Kent where he was error to refuse to charge that he had started on a journey, and on his way to the train discovered that he had lost or left his pocketbook, and returned to get it, and had not made any unnecessary delay in pursuing his journey, he was seen with a pistol at the place where he had returned for his pocketbook, he could not be a "traveler," and not guilty. State v. Campbell, 115 S. W. 1184, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 131, 131 Am. St. Rep. 811.

who, on a trip, after spending the night at a hotel, went to a saloon, carrying a pistol, was not, at such time, a "traveler," within the exception of the statute as to carrying pistols. Colson v. State, 105 S. W. 138, 138 Tex. Cr. R. 138.

where the law authorizing a traveler to carry a pistol, one who goes about some other business not connected with his business ceases to be a "traveler"; but a man who, while on a journey, was merely deflected from his journey to send a doctor to see one of his children, to get some medicine, this did not render him liable to the law. A man who is a traveler is not required to go in a hurry to his point of destination, and some delay incident to his journey does not deprive him of his defense that he was a traveler. Irvin v. State, 100 S. W. 779, 780, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 52.

As determined by purpose

The primary object of Sunday legislation has been to secure to private citizens the quiet enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest, and to encourage the observance of moral duties on that day, but not to authorize any arbitrary or vexatious interference with the private habits and comfort of individuals. It is not every act of walking or riding on Sunday that constitutes "traveling," within the meaning of the statute. Walking or riding in the open air in a quiet and civil manner, with no object of business or pleasure, except the enjoyment of open air and gentle exercise, and the consequent promotion of the health, is not in violation of the Sunday law. Cleveland v. City of Bangor, 32 Atl. 892, 895, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326 (citing O'Connell v. Lewiston, 65 Me. 34, 20 Am. Rep. 673; Davidson v. City of Portland, 69 Me. 116, 31 Am. Rep. 253; Sullivan v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 82 Me. 196, 19 Atl. 169, 8 L. R. A. 427; Barker v. City of Worcester, 29 N. E. 474, 139 Mass. 74).

While riding on a locomotive was a mode of travel covered by an accident policy insuring one as "contractor, office and traveling," a provision that the policy did not cover death while riding on a locomotive was an inconsistency, and did not preclude a recovery, though insured at the time he was killed was riding on a locomotive. The "traveling" referred to as one of the duties of insured's occupation was travel by the modes and conveyances ordinarily incident to the occupation as a contractor and builder, while not himself participating in the actual work of building or construction. Ward's Adm'r v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 821, 823, 80 Vt. 321.

A person going from one county to another, or contemplating a journey, about to board a train, is a person "traveling." Campbell v. State, 125 S. W. 893, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 349, 21 Ann. Cas. 447.

TRAVEL AND USE

To constitute "travel and use," within the meaning of a charter provision that every street that shall not have been traveled or used as a street for six years, shall cease to be a street, there must have been substantial travel or substantial use thereof as a street, but what constitutes substantial use depends largely upon the location of the street in question, and largely on the surroundings and necessities of the case. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Syracuse, 157 Fed. 700, 709.

TRAVELED PART

By a "traveled portion of highway" is meant the part that customary travel occupies and takes on the public highway. A telephone company, which places its poles so near the traveled portion of a highway that a person seated on a wagon, with his feet extending about one foot from the side of the wagon, is injured by coming in contact with the poles, is liable for such injury. Little v. Central District & Printing Telegraph Co., 62 Atl. 848, 849, 213 Pa. 238.

Where plaintiff was injured by a defective wagon scale constructed in a street outside of the traveled portion, which scale was being used at the time by the city in connection with plaintiff's employment, plaintiff, in departing from the traveled part of the highway onto the scale, ceased to be a traveler, and was not entitled to recover against the city on a count only charging defendant's failure to perform the duty it owed plaintiff as a traveler. O'Neil v. City of New Haven, 67 Atl. 487, 488, 80 Conn. 154.

TRAVELED PLACE

In an action against a railway company for injury to a pedestrian who fell into an excavation on defendant's right of way, along a pathway, it was not error to instruct that, for a pathway or a "traveled place" to be characterized as such, it must be used by the public generally and not particular individuals, must be such as is common to all, etc. Craft v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 75 S. E. 501, 502, 92 S. C. 291.

TRAVELED PUBLIC ROAD

That a railroad company permits the public to use a crossing with a switchyard does not make it a public road or street crossing, within a statute requiring signals to be given. A way provided by a railroad company over its own grounds to its depot has been held not to be a "traveled public road," within the meaning of the same statute; but this seems untenable. On the other hand, evidence that a public road has been worked and traveled for 10 or 15 years has been held sufficient to show that it is a traveled public road within the meaning of the same statute. A street in a town, crossing a railroad, dedicated to public use, and used for 25 years by the general public, on which the railroad company has for years itself maintained a crossing for vehicles and foot passengers, and erected a whistling post calling for warning signals, and a warning board at the crossing, having on it the words: "Look out for locomotive. Railroad crossing"—and sometimes worked for repair by town labor, is a public street within the meaning of Code W. Va. 1899, c. 51, § 61, though no order of the town council can be produced showing acceptance by the town or such dedication, or the establishment or recognition of the street by the council.

Ray v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 50 S. E. 413, 415. 57 W. Va. 333 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomp. Neg. § 1566).

An alley, if it is a public traveled road, is within Rev. St. 1900, § 3140, requiring the bell of a locomotive to be rung at a distance of 80 rods from the place where the railroad shall cross any "traveled road or street." Irving v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 137 S. W. 1009, 1010, 156 Mo. App. 667.

TRAVELER ON HIGHWAY

"A 'traveler' is one who travels in any way." A person riding on a bicycle is a "traveler," within Laws 1893, p. 47, c. 59, § 1, making towns liable for damages to any person traveling on a highway, because of dangerous embankments and defective railings which render it unsuitable for travel. Hendry v. Town of North Hampton, 56 Atl. 922, 924, 72 N. H. 351, 64 L. R. A. 70, 101 Am. St. Rep. 681.

The word "travelers," as used in a city ordinance providing that no person shall construct an area into the street in front of any building extending more than five feet, or not provided with a sufficient railing to protect travelers from falling therein, means people who are lawfully using the highway. Devine v. National Wall Paper Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 704, 707, 95 App. Div. 194.

The primary meaning of the word "traveling" is passing from place to place. Whether an animal which came out of a pasture and walked off a defective bridge on the highway was a "traveler" on the bridge, within the meaning of a statute, or an estray, depends on whether the owner was guilty of contributory negligence. Howrigan v. Town of Bakersfield, 64 Atl. 1130, 1131, 79 Vt. 249, 9 Ann. Cas. 282.

A passenger on a street car is a "traveler on a public street," within Gen. St. 1902, § 2039, as amended by Pub. St. 1903, p. 5, c. 4, providing a penalty for obstructing a crossing, to be recovered by any traveler on a public street, etc. Tracy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 72 Atl. 156, 159, 82 Conn. 1.

As determined by purpose

A boy playing games in a street is a "traveler," within Comp. Laws Mich. § 3441, authorizing a recovery by any one sustaining bodily injury on a street because of neglect to keep it in reasonable repair and reasonably fit for travel. Beaudin v. Bay City, 99 N. W. 285, 287, 136 Mich. 333, 4 Ann. Cas. 248.

A fireman in the employ of a city, whose duties require him to ride at great speed through the streets on a fire truck, is a "traveler" on the street, within the meaning of a rule that the city is required to keep its streets in a safe condition for the use of travelers thereon. City of Valparaiso v. Chester, 96 N. E. 765, 768, 176 Ind. 636.

TRAVELERS' INSURANCE

The term "travelers' insurance" may properly be applied to that class of insurance business which specializes in the insurance of the lives of travelers, though the insurance company also has other branches of insurance. It is a generic term, the exclusive use of which as a part of the name of an insurance company cannot be acquired. Travelers' Ins. Mach. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 134 S. W. 877, 879, 142 Ky. 23.

TRAVELING CRANE

A huge crane, spanning the entire structure of a bridge, on which work was being done, from side to side, movable lengthwise of the bridge upon rails on either side, erected for the purpose of attaching a block and tackle with which to lift and adjust the iron beams as they were removed from their places, was spoken of as a "traveler." Needs v. American Bridge Co., 75 Pac. 480, 481, 68 Kan. 522.

TRAVELING EXPENSES

See Actual Traveling Expenses; Necessary Traveling Expense.

TRAVELING PACE

See Common Traveling Pace.

TRAVELING PHYSICIAN

A physician maintaining four offices in different towns, and keeping an assistant at each place, and treating patients at the places at stated intervals, but having his headquarters at one of the places, where he lives with his family and receives his mail, is not a "traveling physician," within the meaning of a statute imposing an occupation tax on physicians, surgeons, etc., traveling from place to place in practicing their profession. Adams v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 935.

TRAVELING SALESMAN

The words "traveling salesman," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1899, §§ 1024-1026, requiring foreign corporations for pecuniary profit, doing business in the state, to file articles of incorporation and be subject to local visitation, and the payment of taxes on its business, and expressly excepting from the operation of the statute "drummers or traveling salesmen soliciting business in this state for foreign corporations which are entirely non-resident," mean employes of such corporations employed to go into other states and communities to drum up and solicit business for the houses they represent. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co., 126 Fed. 831, 835.

Plaintiff was employed by the bankrupts as a bond salesman at the rate of $3,000 per year, payable monthly. His contract provided that he should devote his entire time to the bankrupts' business in the territory over which he was to work, which would be principally in the state of Maine; the bankrupts agreeing to pay all traveling expenses while traveling in the bankrupts' business. The bankrupts maintained a branch office at Portland, of which complainant had charge. He also went from place to place in Maine to sell bonds, and conducted correspondence from such branch office on the bankrupts' letter heads and in their name. He had a junior salesman under him, and received bulletins issued by the bankrupts sent to managers of branch offices. Held, that everything done by plaintiff as the manager of the Portland office, was subordinate to the work he did as traveling salesman, and that he was therefore entitled to priority as a "traveling salesman," within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (4), 30 Stat. 563, for the amount due for his services earned within three months prior to the date of bankruptcy proceedings. In re Gay, 188 Fed. 392, 394.

Commissions paid to a traveling salesman for his services are "wages," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (4), 30 Stat. 563, as amended Act June 15, 1906, c. 3333, 34 Stat. 267. In re Dexter, 158 Fed. 788, 791, 89 C. C. A. 285.

TRAVELING WAY

The place in which plaintiff and another were working in a coal mine when plaintiff was injured by falling rock, while designed for a passageway when completed, but which was then completed only a part of the way, held not to have been a "traveling way," within the meaning of the Colorado statute requiring mining companies to timber traveling ways, but in the nature of a room, for which the company was required to furnish the timbers, to be placed by the workmen. Baldi v. Cedar Hill Coal & Coke Co., 173 Fed. 781, 782, 97 C. C. A. 505.

TRAVERSE

See Special Traverse.

The word "traverse," when used as a verb, primarily means to lay in a cross direction, to cross, while the participle "traversing" implies adjustable laterally, having a lateral or swinging motion. National Candy Co. v. Miller, 160 Fed. 51, 56, 87 C. C. A. 207.

"To 'traverse' is merely to deny." Hence a traverse that merely denies the truth of the answer of a garnishee is sufficient under the statute providing for a traverse in such cases. Turner v. Rosseau, 21 Ga. 240, 241 (citing 1 Chitty, Pl. 576, and note).

The plea of non est factum by one alleged to have executed the note sued on should deny in express terms, but if the plea is by the personal representative of the signer of the instrument, or a third person entitled to make the defense, a denial of sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief is sufficient, so that an answer by an executor sued, on a note which "denies that he has sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief, and he therefore denies the allegations of the plaintiff's petition," and that his testator executed or delivered to the plaintiff a promissory note, as alleged, and that he "denies that he has sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief, and therefore denies that said note is due and no part of it has been paid," except as stated, etc., was sufficient denial under Civ. Code Prac. § 113, providing that a "traverse" is a denial of facts alleged in an adverse pleading or a denial that the pleader has sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief concerning them, though the executor had papers in his possession containing testatrix' signature, so that he could have familiarized himself therewith. Walsh v. Pearce, 147 S. W. 739, 741, 148 Ky. 760.

A "traverse," as defined by Civ. Code Prac., § 113, subsec. 7, is a denial by a party of facts alleged in an adverse pleading, if they be presumptively within his knowledge, or a denial of them, or a denial that he has sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief concerning them, if they be not presumptively within his knowledge. Where plaintiffs, in an action for conversion of logs, alleged that they had a recorded deed to the timber in which defendant cut the logs, defendant may not aver want of knowledge or information sufficient to constitute a belief as to matters which would have been disclosed by an inspection of the record. Johnson v. Asher (Ky.) 105 S. W. 943, 944.

TRAVERSING PARTS OF A MACHINE

Rev. St. 1899, § 6434 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3217), provides that no minor or woman shall be required to clean any part of the mill, gearing, or machinery in any such establishment while the same is in motion, or to work between the fixed or traversing parts of any machine. Plaintiff, a minor, was injured while operating a sausage machine fixed to a table and alongside of which he worked. Held, that he was not "working between the fixed or traversing parts of a machine," as contemplated by the statute; the "traversing parts of a machine," as used therein, meaning the moving parts thereof. Stegmann v. Gerber, 123 S. W. 1041, 1045, 146 Mo. App. 104.

TREASON

"Treason" is a breach of allegiance to a government committed by a person owing allegiance to it, and is the greatest crime known to the law. The offense includes a felony and more. State v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 533, 80 Vt. 249.

TREASON, FELONY, AND BREACH OF THE PEACE

All criminal offenses are comprehended by the terms "treason, felony, and breach of the peace," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 6, cl. 1, excepting these cases from the operation of the privilege from arrest therein conferred upon Senators and Representatives during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same. Williamson v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 163, 166, 207 U. S. 425, 52 L. Ed. 278.

TREASURE TROVE

Lost property distinguished, see Lost Property.

"Treasure trove," and its legal status, according to Blackstone, is where any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion is found hidden in the earth, or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown, in which case the treasure belongs to the king. But if he that hid it be known, or afterwards found out, the owner, and not the king, is entitled to it. Ferguson v. Ray, 77 Pac. 600, 601, 44 Or. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1.

Coin, gold and silver plate, and similar articles hidden for safe-keeping and forgotten, or remaining undiscovered by reason of the death of the person who hid them, are technically known as "treasure trove." Kuykendall v. Fisher, 56 S. E. 48, 53, 61 W. Va. 87, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 11 Ann. Cas. 700.

"Treasure trove" is a name given by the early common law to any gold or silver in coin, plate, or bullion found concealed in the earth or in a house or other private place, but not lying on the ground; the owner of the discovered treasure being unknown. Weeks v. Hackett, 71 Atl. 858, 859, 104 Me. 264, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 129 Am. St. Rep. 390, 15 Ann. Cas. 1156.

TREASURER

See County Treasurer; Town Treasurer.

The county "treasurer" is the custodian of the funds of the county after they are collected, as distinguished from the office of a tax collector, whose duty it is to collect taxes. Hubbell v. Board of Com'rs of Bernallillo County, 86 Pac. 430, 13 N. M. 546.

One who received the money of a foreign insurance company and handled all its cash in its office in the state was a "cashier" or "treasurer," as used in a statute providing for the service on such an officer of process against the corporation. Russell v. Pittsburgh Life Ins. & Trust Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 950, 954, 62 Misc. Rep. 403.

A "treasurer" of a city of the second class is an officer whose duties are especially defined by Laws 1898, p. 383, c. 182, § 83, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1272, c. 581, which do not include the collection of assessments for the construction of a sewer, partly within and partly without such city, nor is such duty incidental to his official functions. People ex rel. Williams v. Monroe County Court, 93 N. Y. Supp. 452, 456, 105 App. Div. 1.

The "treasurer" of a corporation is its fiscal officer, and prima facie checks, drafts, and notes issued in the business of the corporation, signed by him as such officer, are the obligations of the corporation, for they are acts which such an officer would ordinarily perform. Miners' & Merchants' Bank of London v. Ardsley Hall Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 98, 103, 113 App. Div. 194.

The "treasurer" of a corporation is a mere ministerial agent or employé, and does not possess, by virtue of his office, any implied or ex officio powers of which the courts will take judicial notice. Taylor v. Sutherland-Meade Tobacco Co., 60 S. E. 132, 134, 107 Va. 787.

The "treasurer" of a city is a public officer, who has the custody of the moneys of the city and gives a bond with sureties for their security, and is an independent accounting officer by statute made a depository of the moneys of the city. City of Newburyport v. Spear, 90 N. E. 522, 524, 204 Mass. 146, 134 Am. St. Rep. 652.

Crimes Act 1905 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2285) § 392, denounces as embezzlement the purloining, secreting, etc., of money deposited with or held by a person, firm, corporation, or association, by its officer, agent or employé, who has access to or possession of the money converted. An affidavit purporting to present a charge of embezzlement alleged that a certain person was treasurer of an Odd Fellows Lodge, "and as such treasurer * * * had control and possession" of a sum of money, "the property of the said * * * order of Odd Fellows," and while such treasurer and so possessed of the money converted it. Held that, although the affidavit does not allege that the money was in possession of such defendant "by virtue of his employment," a "treasurer" is one who is intrusted with money, and "as such" means "in that particular character," so that the allegation that the defendant was a treasurer, and as such had control of the funds which he converted, means that the character of his possession was in his trust relationship, and renders the affidavit sufficient to charge the offense denounced. Frost v. State, 99 N. E. 419, 422, 178 Ind. 305.

TREASURY

See City Treasury; Claim Upon Treasury; Payment into Treasury of State. Expenses of municipal treasury, see Expenses.

TREASURY STOCK

What is known as "treasury stock" is the regular ordinary stock of a corporation, upon which certificates in regular form are duly issued and sold. Williams v. Ashurst Oil, Land & Development Co., 78 Pac. 28, 29, 144 Cal. 619.

As used in Act March 5, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 56), regulating the issuance by mining corporations of treasury and promotion stock, and requiring the stamping of certificates therefor, the words "treasury stock" mean stock set aside for the actual development of the property, while "promotion stock" is that issued to those who may originally own the mining ground or valuable rights connected therewith in consideration of their deeding the same to the mining company, or such stock as is issued to promoters for incorporating the company. State ex rel. Moore v. Manhattan Verde Co., 109 Pac. 442, 443, 32 Nev. 474.

TREATMENT

See Inhuman Treatment.

"Treatment," as used in 94 Ohio Laws, 200, providing that any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine who shall prescribe or recommend for a fee any drug or medicine, appliance, or treatment of whatever nature for the cure or relief of any wound, fracture, bodily injury, or disease, is not limited to an application of remedies, to the curing of disease, nor to the operation of any particular process, but included prayer and absent treatment applied by a Christian Science healer. State v. Marble, 73 N. E. 1063, 1065, 72 Ohio St. 21, 70 L. R. A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 2 Ann. Cas. 898.

"Treatment" is defined in the Century Dictionary as the act or the manner of treating in any sense. Rev. St. § 3893, which prohibited the mailing of any letter giving information concerning articles or things designed or intended to procure abortion, is not limited to physical substances capable of transmission through the mail, but includes treatments and operations, etc. United States v. Somers, 164 Fed. 259, 262.

Where, in an action on an accident benefit certificate stipulating that insurer should not be liable for death resulting from surgical treatment, the evidence showed that insured died while chloroform was being administered preparatory to an operation, and an attending physician testified that the proximate cause of death was acute dilatation of the heart immediately caused by the chloroform, and that insured's diseased condition did not contribute to his death, the jury could find that surgical treatment did not include the administering of chloroform; "surgery" being defined as the branch of the healing art that relates to external injuries, deformities, and other morbid conditions to be remedied directly by manual operations, "surgical" being defined as being of or pertaining to surgery, "treatment" meaning the act or manner of treating, "remedy" being defined as something used for the cure or relief of bodily disease, and "surgical treatment" meaning treating a disease by means of surgery. Beile v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 135 S. W. 497, 502, 155 Mo. App. 629.

As ground for divorce

Any behavior of one party which affects the other physically or mentally is "treatment," within Rev. St. c. 148, § 3, authorizing divorce when either party has so treated the other as seriously to injure health. Robinson v. Robinson, 23 Atl. 362, 365, 66 N. H. 600, 15 L. R. A. 121, 49 Am. St. Rep. 632.

TREATED

A person does not "consult" a physician and is not "treated" for an "ailment" within the meaning of a question in an insurance application, by merely stating to a physician that he has a headache and receiving medicine therefor, without asking or receiving any professional advice. Modern Woodmen of America v. Miles, 97 N. E. 1009, 1010, 178 Ind. 105.

TREATY

Involving treaty, see Involve.

A "treaty" is a written contract between sovereigns. Its terms are agreed upon and it is signed by plenipotentiaries or commissioners, who are the authorized agents of the contracting powers; but after such agreement and signature it must be ratified by the governments, and the exchange of ratifications constitutes the delivery. Up to that time it is inchoate and may never take effect. The treaty with Spain, by which Porto Rico was ceded to the United States, did not become effective for the purposes of the tariff laws until the exchange of ratifications, April 11, 1899, and importations of merchandise from Porto Rico prior to that date were subject to duty. Armstrong v. Bidwell, 124 Fed. 690, 694.

The commercial reciprocal agreement with France, negotiated under the authority contained in section 3 of the tariff act of 1897 (30 Stat. 151, c. 11), to make reciprocal agreements with reference to certain specified articles, is a treaty within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, § 5, giving a direct appeal from a federal Circuit Court to the Supreme Court in cases where the validity or construction of any treaty made under the authority of the United States is drawn in question. B. Altman & Co. v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 593, 596, 224 U. S. 583, 56 L. Ed. 894.

As equivalent to a legislative act

The Indians have not been regarded by the United States as independent nations, and "treaties," which are solemn agreements between nations, when made with Indians, have no greater significance than an act of Congress. Seneca Nation of Indians v. Appleby, 112 N. Y. Supp. 177, 189, 127 App. Div. 770.

A "treaty" is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends for the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and the honor of the governments which are parties to it. If these fail, its infraction becomes the subject of international negotiations and reformations, so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual war. It is obvious that with all this the judicial courts have nothing to do and can give no redress. But a treaty may also contain provisions which confer certain rights upon the citizens or subjects of one of the nations residing in the territorial limits of the other, which partake of the nature of municipal law, and which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country. An illustration of this character is found in treaties, which regulate the mutual rights of citizens and subjects of the contracting nations in regard to rights of property by descent or inheritance, when the individuals concerned are aliens. The Constitution of the United States places such provisions as these in the same category as other laws of Congress by its declaration that this "Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." A treaty, then, is the law of the land, as an act of Congress is, whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined; and when such rights are of a nature to be enforced in a court of justice, that court resorts to the treaty for a rule of decision for the case before it as it would to a statute. United Shoe Mach. Co. v. Duplessis Shoe Mach. Co., 148 Fed. 31, 36 (quoting and adopting the definition in Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, 598, 5 Sup. Ct. 247, 254, 28 L. Ed. 798); Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Pratt, 112 N. W. 395, 407, 101 Minn. 197, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105 (quoting and adopting the definition of Justice Miller in Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 598, 599, 5 Sup. Ct. 254, 28 L. Ed. 798).

TREBLE DAMAGES

Damages as including, see Damage—Damages.

TREE

See Line Trees; Shade Trees.

The word "log," as used in a logging contract, does not mean "tree." Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 340, 117 La. 1.

The words "trees" and "wood" are not synonymous. The latter refers to the substance of the former when cut for use. The old maxim is "lignum cum crescere nescit;" (a tree while it grows; wood when it cannot grow). Hence an agreement for the sale of wood on a certain lot of land is an executory sale of goods. Graham v. West, 55 S. E. 931, 932, 126 Ga. 624.

TREMBLANS

The "tremblans" is described as a floating or trembling prairie, an unusual formation, consisting of vegetation, part of it decayed, interwoven, and in some places quite consistent. Cattle will browse on its surface in places, and feed on its feuille succulente, or green, nutritious leaves and twigs, which the water keeps fresh. In appearance the prairie tremblante is a verdant meadow, consisting of a large body of water covered with vegetation. It is shaky in many places, yet it does not, as a body, float around over the waters, as has sometimes been said. It is stationary, but not always a safe surface. A heavy step will cause a vibrating motion of the surface extending a number of feet around. Caillouet & Maginnis v. Coguenhem, 35 South. 385, 386, 111 La. 60.

TRESPASS

See Constructive Trespass; Continuing Trespass; Forcible Trespass; Injury and Malicious Trespass to Property; Malicious Trespass.

Element of larceny, see Larceny.

Willful trespass, see Willful—Willfully.

A disturbance of one's peace is not a "trespass" against him, within a statute providing that in a prosecution before a justice of the peace, at the injured party's instance, for any trespass against the person or property of another, not amounting to a felony, except larceny, the costs shall be awarded against him on defendant's acquittal; such provision relating to cases where there is a physical invasion of one's rights. State v. Wood, 107 S. W. 431, 432, 128 Mo. App. 642.

While it is true that "trespass" in one sense means an injury or wrong, and in that meaning would include every cause of action, at least in tort, "trespass" has in law a well-ascertained and fixed meaning. It refers to injuries which are immediate, and not consequential. It would be a perversion of language to denominate an act which produced a consequential injury to real or personal property a trespass. One of the best tests by which to distinguish trespass is found in the answer to the question, When was the damage done? If the damage does not come directly from the act, but is simply an after result from it, it is essentially consequential, and no trespass. The Legislature, in providing a three-year limitation for actions for "trespass upon real property," meant to include only such recovery as could have been had through action of trespass at common law. An action for the negligent construction and maintenance of an irrigation canal lawfully built, the water from which overflowed plaintiff's land was not within the purview of that statute; the damages being consequential, and "case" being a proper remedy. Suter v. Wenatchee Water Power Co., 76 Pac. 298, 300, 35 Wash. 1, 102 Am. St. Rep. 881.

The word "trespass," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3354, § 1, declaring that an action for trespass to property must be brought within two years, includes all tortious acts amounting to a transgression of the rights of another as to his property, but there must be some act done; and a mere failure to perform an act which one owes to another is insufficient, and the failure of a carrier to deliver freight received for transportation is not a trespass. Davies v. Texas Cent. R. Co. (Tex.) 133 S. W. 295, 297.

Trespass lies for wrong to the possession of real property, and possession of the plaintiff, wrongful entry by the defendant, and damage therefrom are the necessary elements. The intent of the person entering is immaterial in an action of trespass, if the entry be made without justifiable cause or purpose, or license or title. Phillips v. Brittingham (Del.) 77 Atl. 964, 965, 2 Boyce, 173.

It is not a "trespass" for the servant of an innkeeper to go into a room assigned to a guest, though the guest objects thereto. De Wolf v. Ford, 104 N. Y. Supp. 876, 878, 119 App. Div. 808.

The word "trespass," in Rev. St. art. 1198, providing that, when the foundation of a suit is some crime, offense, or trespass for which a civil action for damages will lie, the suit may be brought either in the county where the act was committed or that of the defendant's domicile, means any intentional wrong or injury done directly or indirectly to the person or property of another. Cahn Bros. & Co. v. Bonnett, 62 Tex. 674, 676.

The taking and carrying away by defendants' servants of timber growing on plaintiff's land constitutes "trespass" at common law, even though done by mistake, and though not done at defendants' instance or direction, or by their consent. Mishler Lumber Co. v. Craig, 87 S. W. 41, 42, 112 Mo. App. 454.

As requiring force

"Trespass" implies force. "For a tort committed with force and intentionally, the immediate consequence of which is injury, 'trespass' is the appropriate remedy." Plott v. Robertson (Ala.) 39 South. 771 (citing Bell's Adm'r v. Troy, 35 Ala. 184; Pruitt v. Ellington, 59 Ala. 454).

Civ. Code 1895, § 5872, provides that suits against joint trespassers residing in different counties may be tried in either. Section 3888 declares that any abuse of, or damage done to, the personal property of another unlawfully, is a "trespass," for which damages may be recovered. Held, that the word "trespass" generally involves the idea of force; but, as used in the Code sections above cited, it is employed in a broader sense, and comprehends any misfeasance, transgression, or offense which damages another person's health, reputation, or property. Williams v. Inman, 57 S. E. 1009, 1010, 1 Ga. App. 321.

No justification being shown, defendant is liable in "trespass" where he forcibly entered plaintiff's store, changed the lock, and refused admission to plaintiff, whose property was in the store. Charron v. Thivierge (R. I.) 67 Atl. 585.

"Trespass" at the common law was the breaking of a close by force, and it was presumed that damages would accrue from the breaking into or penetrating such close, even if it was no more than the trampling of the herbage therein. Welch v. Seattle & M. R. Co., 105 Pac. 166, 167, 56 Wash. 97, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1047.

Conversion distinguished

See Conversion.

Entry of building or on land

Any unlawful entry on another's land constitutes a "trespass." Cochran v. City of Wilmington (Del.) 77 Atl. 963, 7 Pennewill, 315.

Every unauthorized and unlawful entry into the close of another is a "trespass," and from every such entry against the will of the possessor the law infers some damage. Brame v. Clark, 62 S. E. 418, 148 N. C. 364, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033, 16 Ann. Cas. 73.

An entry by one man on the land of another, when not made under claim or cover of right, is a mere "trespass." Swope v. Ward, 84 S. W. 895, 897, 185 Mo. 316.

Defendants' having unlawfully entered plaintiff's dwelling house while plaintiff was under arrest therein and removed the window sashes, in consequence of which and by defendants' neglect to restore the sashes to their proper place plaintiff and his children were exposed to cold, was a "trespass." Niles v. Brown, 56 Atl. 1030, 1031, 25 R. I. 537.

Members of the public usually allowed to enter a public business house will not be considered as naked trespassers, when they are, without objection, peaceably in a public business house, though having no immediate business with the proprietor. Rollestone v. Cassirer & Co., 59 S. E. 442, 444, 3 Ga. App. 161.

Where a contract employing a contractor to repair a dwelling was terminated by the owner in the manner specified by the terms of the contract, and the owner, after terminating it, warned the contractor not to go on the premises, and the contractor disregarded the warning and entered on the premises, he was guilty of a criminal "trespass." Davis v. State, 41 South. 681, 682, 146 Ala. 120.

A "trespass" is any act whereby another is injured or any unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, to the property of another; any unauthorized entry on another's realty, to its damage. Collar v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 56, 59, 72 Misc. Rep. 274.

"Trespass on real property," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4800, subd. 1, limiting actions for waste or trespass on real property to three years, contemplates a direct physical invasion of the real estate itself, and does not apply to an action involving mere consequential injuries resulting from the raising of a street grade. Denney v. City of Everett, 89 Pac. 934, 935, 46 Wash. 342, 123 Am. St. Rep. 934.

Libel

The word "trespass" frequently—even generally—conveys the idea of force; but it also includes in its largest sense any transgression or offense against the law of nature, of society, or of the county in which we live, whether it relates to a man's person or property. A libel is a trespass. Cox v. Strickland, 47 S. E. 912, 913, 120 Ga. 104, 1 Ann. Cas. 870.

Nuisance distinguished

The distinction between "trespass" and "nuisance" consists in the former being a direct infringement of one's right of property while in the latter the infringement is the result of an act which is not wrongful in itself, but only in the consequences. In the one case the injury is immediate, in the other it is consequential, and generally results from the commission of an act beyond the limits of the property affected. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Americus Const. Co., 65 S. E. 855, 857, 133 Ga. 392.

Possession by person injured

Though the gist of an action of "trespass" is the injury done to plaintiff's possession, plaintiff need only show a constructive possession, especially where the action is against a tort-feasor setting up no claim of title in himself. Carter v. Maryland & P. R. Co., 77 Atl. 301, 305, 112 Md. 599.

"Trespass" is an injury to the possession of another. To entitle plaintiff to recover, he must show that he was in lawful possession of the land on which the trespass was committed, and that the trespass was committed by defendant, or its servants or employes. Cochran v. City of Wilmington, 77 Atl. 963, 7 Pennewill, 315.

"Trespass" is an offense against the possession, and an action therefor can be maintained by one not holding the fee. Roper Lumber Co. v. Elizabeth City Lumber Co., 47 S. E. 757, 759, 135 N. C. 744.

To make the action of another in removing a house a "trespass," plaintiff must show possession, actual or constructive, of the house at the time, and, where he relies on constructive possession under title to the land he must show that the house was on his land. Marbury Lumber Co. v. Lamont, 53 South. 773, 776, 169 Ala. 33.

One in the actual and exclusive possession of real estate, or chattels real, at the time of a "trespass" thereon by a wrongdoer, or by one having no title or authority from the real owner, may sue therefor, though his occupancy is limited and temporary, and though he has no title. One suing for a trespass to real estate need not show that he had the exclusive possession or use of the premises. Stanton v. Lapp, 77 Atl. 672, 675, 677, 113 Md. 324.

"Trespass" is any injury to the possession only, and as larceny at common law consists of a "trespass" committed in the taking of the personal goods or chattels of another with intent to convert them to the taker's use, without the consent of the owner, larceny cannot be committed by one in the lawful possession of goods. State v. Browning, 82 Pac. 955, 956, 47 Or. 470 (citing Johnson v. People, 113 Ill. 99).

In actions for "trespass to personal property," the gist of the action is the disturbance of plaintiff's possession. Swank v. Elwert, 105 Pac. 901, 902, 905, 55 Or. 487.

Riot distinguished

See Riot.

Waste distinguished

"Technically there is a difference between 'waste' and 'trespass.' 'Waste' is some unauthorized act which goes to the injury or destruction of an estate, committed by one in the rightful possession thereof, while 'trespass' is the act of a mere intruder. But there is no substantial distinction, so far as the remedy is concerned." Where a complaint, in a suit to restrain the cutting of timber, is framed on the theory of restraining a trespass on land, and plaintiff's evidence showed, not an unlawful trespass, but a rightful entry and the commission of waste, a motion to dismiss the complaint was properly denied, since the relief sought was substantially the same. Roots v. Boring Junction Lumber Co., 92 Pac. 811, 818, 50 Or. 298.

TRESPASS (Action of)

"Trespass" is an action sounding in damages, and the compensation for damage recoverable therein is, as the words imply, to be measured by the plaintiff's damage or loss, arising from the defendant's trespass or wrongful act set out in the plaintiff's declaration. This is true alike of all forms of the action of trespass, from assault to the latest development of the action of trespass on the case. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. International Paper Co., 132 Fed. 92, 93.

"Trespass" is a personal action based on possession, and, if neither party be in actual possession at the time of the alleged trespass, the possession will be presumed to be in the one with the superior title. Waters v. Dennis Simmons Lumber Co., 70 S. E. 284, 154 N. C. 232.

A count alleging damages "for a trespass . . . upon the following property: A dwelling house in the possession of plaintiff [describing it] on or about the 14th day of April, 1904, and for taking out of said house the following personal property: One iron bedstead," etc., so far as it alleged a trespass to realty, was sufficient, being according to the recognized form of allegations in such cases as well as following the form prescribed by the Code. A count claiming damages "for a trespass on the following goods and chattels in the possession of the plaintiff: One iron bedstead," etc., was not demurrable for failure to allege a wrongful taking; the word "trespass" ordinarily signifying the unauthorized use of force against the person or property of another. Hardeman v. Williams, 53 South. 794, 795, 796, 169 Ala. 50.

TRESPASS NOTICE

A written notice warning trespassers may, in a prosecution for maliciously destroying the same be designated in the indictment as a "trespass notice," although the owner of the land had not registered in the registry for posting lands. Moody v. State, 56 S. E. 993, 994, 127 Ga. 821.

TRESPASS ON THE CASE

"Trespass" implies wantonness, malice, and willfulness, while "trespass on the case" implies only negligence. Hence the owner of an irrigation ditch is not liable for injuries caused by seepage, in the absence of negligence. Fleming v. Lockwood, 92 Pac.

962, 964, 36 Mont. 384, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628, 122 Am. St. Rep. 375, 13 Ann. Cas. 263 (citing Dodson v. Mock, 20 N. C. 282, 32 Am. Dec. 677).

Comp. Laws 1907, § 2877, subd. 2, providing that actions for trespass on real property shall be commenced within three years, refers to the common-law action of "trespass," which was the remedy for a wrongful entry on lands, and not to "trespass on the case," and hence does not include an action against a railroad company for injuries to the house of one living near the road by the jar of the trains and the emission of smoke and cinders; the limitation applicable to such actions being four years under section 2883, as an action not otherwise provided for. O'Neill v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 114 Pac. 127, 128, 38 Utah, 475 (citing 8 Words & Phrases p. 7089).

"Trespass on the case" was a common form of action for the recovery of damages for injuries to such property as growing crops and hay. Wilkins v. Lee, 85 Pac. 140, 141, 73 Kan. 321.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM

In an action of trespass quare clausum fregit the object is to recover damages for the trespass, and mere possession will support the action. Warren v. Wilson, 71 S. E. 818, 819, 89 S. C. 420.

The gist of an action of "trespass quare clausum" is the injury to the possessory right, and the action will not lie unless plaintiff was in possession at the time of the alleged trespass. Linn Woolen Co. v. Brown, 85 Atl. 404, 405, 110 Me. 88. Inhabitants of Millinocket v. Mullen, 78 Atl. 1120, 1121, 108 Me. 29; Munsey v. Hanly, 67 Atl. 217, 102 Me. 423, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209 (citing Brown v. Manter, 22 N. H. 468; 4 Kent, Comm. 120; Cooley, Torts, 379).

"Trespass quare clausum fregit" is the proper remedy for a wrongful invasion of another's possession of realty. It lies for injury to the possession, and to sustain the action the plaintiff must establish that he was in the actual or constructive possession of the property at the time the wrong was committed. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co., 56 S. E. 695, 696, 144 N. C. 110 (citing State v. Reynolds, 95 N. C. 616; Patterson v. Bodenhammer, 33 N. C. 4; Smith v. Wilson, 18 N. C. 40).

"The gist of the action of 'trespass quare clausum fregit' is the disturbance of the possession." The wrong complained of is the trespass, and all else that follows is incidental, and is included in the main offense. Kentucky Stave Co. v. Page (Ky.) 125 S. W. 170, 173 (quoting and adopting language of Foote v. Merrill, 54 N. H. 490, 20 Am. Rep. 151).

"Trespass quare clausum fregit" is a possessory action, brought because of a disturbance of the peaceable possession of plaintiff. The gist of the action is the wrongful entry, the breaking in upon, and the interruption of the quietude of the plaintiff's possession, and whatever follows in the nature of damages to buildings, fences, crops, or other property is mere aggravation. Possession by plaintiff is indispensable to the action. Wilkins v. Lee, 85 Pac. 140, 73 Kan. 321.

"Trespass quare clausum fregit" is an action for breaking the close of another and forcibly and unlawfully entering on another's land. Morris v. Hazel (Del.) 77 Atl. 766, 768, 1 Boyce, 324.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE

The purpose of the action of "trespass to try title" being to establish the plaintiff's title to land, the plaintiff must show title in himself and recover upon the strength of his own and not the weakness of his adversary's title; and hence a complaint which seeks to recover damages for trespass upon stating title in plaintiff and ouster by defendant, and praying damages for the ouster and the possession of the land alleged to be wrongfully withheld, states a cause of action of trespass to try title. Warren v. Wilson, 71 S. E. 818, 819, 89 S. C. 420.

TRESPASSER

See Joint and Several Trespassers; Joint Trespassers; Willful Trespasser.

One about the premises of another without consent, permission, or license is a "trespasser." Hern v. Southern Pac. Co., 81 Pac. 902, 907, 29 Utah, 127.

If a person is on the land of others without their consent and against their will, he is a "trespasser." If he is a trespasser, he is in fault for being there, and cannot recover if he counts on their negligently injuring him, unless he shows his wrongful entry was the occasion, not the cause, of his injury. Brown v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 Atl. 194, 199, 73 N. H. 568.

A judge who renders an order for commitment and issues a warrant of commitment on it is not necessarily a "trespasser." He is such only when he has assumed a jurisdiction which did not belong to him, and so the whole proceeding is coram non iudice. McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 703, 77 Conn. 136.

One who was present while a constable was making an arrest, but only went to his aid when he considered the officer was in danger, was not a "trespasser" until ordered off the premises by the owner. State v. Williams, 56 S. E. 783, 785, 76 S. C. 135.

A child who climbs into a milk wagon while the driver is absent, and on his return is permitted to ride a short distance, and is injured while the driver is attempting to help her alight by the horse starting, is a "trespasser" in getting into the wagon, and permitting her to ride then and at previous times does not constitute an implied invitation to her to ride. West v. Poor, 81 N. E. 960, 196 Mass. 183, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 936, 124 Am. St. Rep. 541 (citing Daniels v. New York & New England Railroad, 28 N. E. 283, 154 Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 248, 26 Am. St. Rep. 253).

Destruction of the common property by a cotenant constitutes him a "trespasser." Davis v. Poland, 66 Atl. 380, 382, 102 Me. 192, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212, 120 Am. St. Rep. 480.

Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 201, 2349, requiring an attachment to be levied as an execution on similar property is levied, and providing that a levy on personalty is made by taking possession thereof, an officer in attaching wood stacked on land must perform such possessory acts or take such undoubted control as to constitute a trespass; a "trespasser" being one who unlawfully enters on or intrudes on another's land, or who unlawfully and forcibly takes another's personalty. Jones & Nixon v. First State Bank of Hamlin (Tex.) 140 S. W. 116, 118.

If a marshal, in executing a dispossess warrant, does not act in his official capacity, he is a "trespasser." Grayrock Land Co. v. Wolff, 121 N. Y. Supp. 953, 955, 67 Misc. Rep. 153.

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 996, declares that, when any property alleged to have been stolen comes into the custody of an officer, he must hold it subject to the order of the proper court or magistrate, and by article 997, on the trial of a prosecution for theft, the court shall order the property restored to the person appearing to be the true owner. Held that, where an officer making an arrest for theft finds the stolen property with the accused, it is his duty to take charge of it and hold it subject to the order of the magistrate at the examining trial or of the court trying he accused on the charge of theft, and in so doing the officer is not a "trespasser," within the rule that a mere trespasser cannot defend on the ground that title is in a third person. Murray v. Lyons (Tex.) 95 S. W. 621, 622.

On railroad property

A person on a railroad track a distance from a path used by the public with the acquiescence of the company, and who was not going toward the opening in the railroad fence where the path entered the right of way, is a "trespasser." Le Duc v. New York & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 364, 367, App. Div. 107.

This suit having been brought for the recovery of damages alleged to have been sued in consequence of the homicide of the plaintiff's husband, and it appearing that at time of the infliction of the injuries by running of the defendant company's locomotive, which resulted in his death, the deceased, at night, was a "trespasser" on the track of the company, not at a public crossing, nor at a point which those in charge of the locomotive had reason to apprehend the presence of any person on the track, and there being no allegation showing that the injuries were, by the defendant's servants, willfully or wantonly inflicted, and it appearing from the entire petition that the deceased was killed in consequence of his own gross negligence, no cause of action was set forth, and a general demurrer to the petition should have been sustained. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riley, 56 Tex. 635, 636.

A person walking across or along a railroad track is not necessarily a "trespasser." Davis v. Arkansas Southern R. Co., 41 South. 587, 591, 117 La. 320.

One who had been walking on a railroad's right of way, and stepped off on a public highway, intending to pursue his journey on the highway as soon as a train passed, is not a "trespasser," and the railroad owed him the same duty as any one else on the highway. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Troutman (Tex.) 138 S. W. 427, 428.

One who, intending to become a passenger, takes a diagonal course from a street to a depot across a switch track, a way which for years to the knowledge of the company's local station agents, without objection or protest, had been used by passengers, is not a "trespasser," but is impliedly invited to take that course, so that the company owes to her the duty of reasonable care in the operation of its cars there, and not merely of not wantonly running her down. Allenza v. Erie R. Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 1024, 1026, 78 Misc. Rep. 659.

One killed while crossing a railway track along a footpath which had been used by the public and the defendant's employes for many years was not a "trespasser." Minot v. Boston & M. R. R., 66 Atl. 825, 829, 74 N. H. 230.

Where a decedent, killed by a railroad train, was walking lengthwise of the main track on the ties, and was not using the track for crossing purposes, for whatever use in crossing the track had been acquiesced in by the company would not give him the right to travel along the track, he was a "trespasser." Limb v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 84 Pac. 136, 73 Kan. 220.

A person accompanying passengers to assist them in entering a train, though not a passenger, is not a "trespasser," as he has at least a tacit invitation by virtue of the relation between it and the passenger, and the carrier must exercise at least ordinary care to avoid injuring him by defective station facilities or approaches thereto. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Parls' Adm'r, 59 S. E. 398, 399, 107 Va. 408.

A pedestrian who leaves the limits of the highway and attempts to go around a train which has obstructed a crossing for a greater length of time than is permitted by Pen. Code, § 421, and by municipal ordinance, is not a "trespasser," within the meaning of Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1101, c. 565) § 53, providing that no person other than those connected with or employed upon the railroad shall walk upon or along its track except where the same shall be laid across a highway, in which case he shall not walk upon the track unless necessary to cross the same. Kurt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 859, 862, 127 App. Div. 838.

A person walking on a railroad track is a "trespasser," unless it is where the track runs along a highway or public street, which the public have an equal right to use. Birmingham S. R. Co. v. Fox, 52 South. 889, 890, 167 Ala. 281.

One who entered a train, having a ticket which he believed to be good and to entitle him to ride on the train, was not a "trespasser," and was entitled to be treated as a passenger, until he was notified that his ticket was not good and he refused to pay his fare. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Bunn, 95 S. W. 640, 641, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 503.

Where a car was left on a siding to have a safe unloaded therefrom, a person, who went on the car to help unload it and was injured, was not a "trespasser." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Farris (Ky.) 100 S. W. 870, 871.

One on the track of a railroad in the country, not upon a public highway, is a "trespasser." Hulsey's Adm'r v. Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 87 S. W. 302, 303.

A person who accompanies a passenger onto a train to render her assistance in conformity with the custom acquiesced in by the carrier is not a "trespasser"; and if the carrier has notice of his intention to disembark, it must hold the train a reasonable time to allow him to leave it. Cooper v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 59 S. E. 704, 706, 78 S. C. 562.

One who enters and takes passage in a street car with the consent of the company, and does not refuse to pay fare, is not a "trespasser." Gabbert v. Hackett, 115 N. W. 345, 347, 135 Wis. 86, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1070.

Plaintiff, a boy seven years old, was invited by certain of the sectionmen to get on a hand car for a ride. The foreman ordered the men to help the boy on the car, and told him to "hold on tight." He held on until the car had gone 300 or 400 feet when he got dizzy, fell off, and was injured. Held, that he was not a passenger, but was either a licensee or a "trespasser." Daugherty v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 114 N. W. 902, 903, 137 Iowa, 257.

TRESTLE

"Trestle," according to the lexicographers, is a support consisting of three or four legs secured to a top piece. The fact that a patentee described and claimed "a trestle consisting of two pairs of legs" pivoted as shown, whereas by the accepted definition a top piece is essential to constitute a trestle, does not render the claim invalid, where the meaning is plain, and the legs as shown are adapted to be used with any kind of a top piece to complete the trestle, as intended. Chicago Wooden Ware Co. v. Miller Ladder Co., 133 Fed. 541, 546, 66 C. C. A. 517.

TRIWEEKLY

The term "daily newspaper," in a statute requiring notice of foreclosure sales to be published in daily newspapers, is employed in contradistinction to the term "weekly," "semi-weekly," or "triweekly" newspaper. Wilson v. Petzold, 76 S. W. 1093, 116 Ky. 873.

TRIBLE

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3228, subd. 5, relating to the recovery of costs in actions in the Supreme Court "tribable" in Kings county, the venue determines the place of trial, and, where the action was triable in Queens county, costs were recoverable, though the amount recovered was under $500. Burgdorf v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 718, 719, 130 App. Div. 253.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3228, as amended by Laws 1904, c. 557, providing that in all actions hereafter brought in the Supreme Court, triable in the county of New York, which could have been brought, except for the amount claimed, in the City Court, and in which the defendant is personally served in the county of New York, the plaintiff shall recover no costs unless he recover $500 or more, where such an action against a resident of New York county was commenced by service of summons on defendant in New York county, the summons naming Westchester county as the place of trial, and at defendant's insistence the place of trial was changed to New York county, but upon plaintiff's motion changed back to Westchester county for convenience of witnesses, and plaintiff recovered only $125, he was not deprived of his right to costs under the statute, since it was passed to relieve the congested calendars of the Supreme Court of New York county, and the words "tribable in the county of New York," in the statute, refer to the conditions at the time of trial rather than those at the commencement of the action. Seymour v. Wheeler, 122 N. Y. Supp. 183, 184, 137 App. Div. 52.

The meaning of the word "trial" is an examination by a test. People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 298, 310.

A "trial" means an investigation into the facts according to the forms of law; it means that, in character, the evidence brought forward in proof of the charge made must be competent and relevant to the issue, and this according to the established rule relating to the admissibility of evidence. Hunter v. District Court of Polk County, 102 N. W. 156, 157, 126 Iowa, 357.

"A 'trial' is the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts or law put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue. When a court hears and determines any issue of fact or of law for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties, it may be considered a trial." State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis and Clark County, 82 Pac. 789, 791, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 752 (quoting and adopting the definition in Finn v. Spagnoli, 67 Cal. 330, 7 Pac. 748; Tregambo v. Comanche Mill & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501).

By general acceptance or use of the word, "trial" includes all the steps taken in the case, from submission to the jury to the rendition of the judgment. Lindley v. Kemp, 76 N. E. 798, 800, 38 Ind. App. 355 (citing And. Law Dict. 1054; Bruce v. State, 87 Ind. 450, 453; Jenks v. State, 39 Ind. 1, 9).

The word "trial," as used in Comp. Laws 1887, § 7401, providing for calling a new juror or impanelling a new jury when a juror becomes sick during the trial, is restricted in its significance to the investigation of the facts, commencing after the jury is sworn and ending with the charge of the court. The word is used in a restricted sense, and the trial mentioned in such section terminates with the termination of the investigation of the facts. State v. Johnson, 124 N. W. 847, 851, 24 S. D. 590 (quoting State v. Hazledahl, 52 N. W. 315, 2 N. D. 521, 16 L. R. A. 150).

A "trial," by Code, § 2130, is defined to be "the judicial examination of the issues between the parties whether of law or fact." Webster defines "trial" as "the formal examination of the matter in issue in a case before a competent tribunal." Bouvier adopts the definition of the court in United States v. Curtis, 4 Mason, 232, 25 Fed. Cas. 726: "The examination before a competent tribunal, according to the laws of the land, of the facts put in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue." Breed v. Hobart, 86 S. W. 108, 109, 187 Mo. 140.

A "trial" is a judicial examination of the issues of law or fact in an action, as defined by Civ. Code Prac. § 311. Davis v. Ferguson (Ky.) 92 S. W. 968, 970.

The word "trial" in a limited sense relates only to the examination and determination of issues of fact, but in a broader sense includes hearing and determining of issues, whether of law or of fact. Davis v. Smith, 66 S. E. 401, 403, 7 Ga. App. 192 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7095).

Where a witness in proceedings before a referee dies, and before the evidence is finally submitted the referee also dies, on a subsequent hearing before another referee such testimony is not inadmissible on the ground that the former hearing was not a "trial," within Code Civ. Proc. § 830, allowing evidence of a deceased witness taken at a former trial to be interposed, where the parties against whom the testimony was offered had the opportunity to cross-examine such witness. Taft v. Little, 70 N. E. 211, 212, 178 N. Y. 127.

"Trial," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 656, declaring that a new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by jury or court, refers to an investigation of the issues of fact raised by the pleadings. Stockton Iron Works v. Walters, 123 Pac. 240, 242, 18 Cal. App. 373.

Where defendant in a suit in a district court does not appear, and the court determines the case in his absence and renders judgment under District Court Act (P. L. 1898, p. 611) § 146, such hearing and determination is a "trial," within section 17 of said act, limiting the time for new trial to 30 days after judgment. Rosner v. Cohn, 79 Atl. 1056, 81 N. J. Law, 343.

A "trial" is an examination of matters of fact in issue. It is a common-law term ordinarily used to denote a step in an action by which issues of questions of fact, are decided. Hence, under Rev. St. U. S. § 724, providing that in the trial of actions at law courts may on motion require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, parties cannot be compelled to produce such evidence in advance of the trial. Carpenter v. Winn, 31 Sup. Ct. 683, 684, 221 U. S. 533, 55 L. Ed. 842 (citing 3 Blackstone's Comm. 350; Bouv. Law Dict.; Miller v. Tobin, 18 Fed. 609, 9 Sawy. 410).

An order vacating a default decree of divorce and allowing defendant to answer in accordance with L. O. L. § 59, is not an appealable order within section 548, providing that appeals will lie from final judgment and decrees, in effect determining the action and orders setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial, for the order is not a final one determining the suit, and neither is it an order granting a new trial which is defined by section 173 as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after judgment, for this order only vacates a default, and there has been no "trial," which is defined by section 113 as the judicial examination of the issues between the parties. Taylor v. Taylor, 121 Pac. 431, 432, 61 Or. 257.

Where defendant and his attorneys, by reason of accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, were deprived of a fair trial, the remedy is by motion, filed within three days after decision, as provided by Code, § 3756; the term "trial," as used therein, meaning one in which the parties have participated. Acheson v. Inglis Bros. (Iowa) 135 N. W. 632, 634.

Code 1906, § 163, extends the provisions of law relating to third persons claiming property levied on by virtue of fieri facias to claimants of property levied upon by attachment, and provides that the trial of the right of property shall not be had until after judgment for plaintiff in the attachment suit. Section 4992 requires plaintiff in execution, where there is a claimant's affidavit, to move for an issue to try the right of property at the same term, and section 4993 provides that, if by plaintiff's default an issue is not made up at the return term, claimant shall be discharged, and, if he fails to join issue at the first term when tendered, the court shall order a writ of inquiry as to the value of the property. Held, that claimant in attachment was not bound to join issue on plaintiff's tender at the return term of the attachment; the word "trial," in section 163, including the making up of the issue of ownership, and contemplating that such issue shall not be made up until final judgment in the principal case. White v. Roach, 53 South. 622, 623, 98 Miss. 309.

A motion for judgment in an equity action to reform a deed constitutes a part of the "trial," and the provisions of the Code requiring that actions relating to realty be tried in the county of the venue apply to all parts of the trial, and such motion cannot be made, except at a term of court in the county of the venue. Tefft v. Greenwich & G. R. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 205, 206, 47 Misc. Rep. 26.

The "trial" of an action at common law is to be had before a court and jury, and questions as to the admissibility or inadmissibility of individual items of evidence can be ruled on intelligently and fairly only by the judge who is presiding at the trial and is fully informed as to all the circumstances which prior evidence has disclosed. In a proper case a party may be required to produce books and writings, under Rev. St. U. S. § 724, in advance of trial, but such a direction should only be made when the situation is clearly such that in no other way can the ends of justice be properly subserved. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 153 Fed. 943.

A motion to quash a summons is not a part of the "trial," within Code Civ. Proc. § 4493, authorizing the granting of a new trial for error of law occurring at the trial, since the "trial" does not commence until an issue of fact is joined. Buxton v. Alton-Dawson Mercantile Co., 90 Pac. 19, 21, 18 Okl. 287.

As defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 265 (Gen. St. 1905, § 5160), a "trial" is a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or fact, in an action; and a new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 306; Gen. St. 1905, § 5202) is a re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact after a verdict by a jury, report of a referee, or a decision of a court. The same section provides that the former verdict, report, or decision shall be vacated, and a new trial granted, on the application of the party aggrieved (which section 309 [section 5205] provides must be by motion on written grounds), for certain causes specified affecting materially the substantial rights of such party. Some of the causes specified are any order of the court by which the party is prevented from having a fair trial; that the decision is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or is contrary to law; error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time. Code Civ. Proc. § 306 (Gen. St. 1905, § 5202). Strictly construed, then, as defined by the Code, a "trial" involves the judicial examination of all the issues of law and fact in an action, while a new trial involves only the re-examination of an issue of fact. That this strict construction is not applicable to new trials of ordinary actions, in which the law applicable varies to the varying facts pleaded or proven, is apparent, when we consider the grounds for which new trial "shall be granted" as prescribed, some of which involve only a question of law. These must be re-examined, both on the hearing of the motion for the new trial and upon the new trial, if granted. Issues of law are not ordinarily framed in an action by the petition and answer, or by the answer and reply, in the sense that a proposition of law is asserted in one pleading and denied in another; but such issues may arise in many ways at almost every stage of the action, and are sometimes determinative of the action and sometimes not. Sometimes they arise in the course of the trial, and sometimes before the trial is commenced. It goes without saying that there can be no new trial until there has been a trial; and by a fair construction of the Code it must be such a trial as results or should result in a verdict, a report of a referee, or a decision by the court which involves and determines the facts in issue. Otherwise there could be no new trial "of the issue of fact." It follows, therefore, that whenever a trial has been had upon issues of fact, which trial results in a verdict, report of a referee, or a decision which determines such facts, either party who feels himself aggrieved may file his motion for a new trial on the grounds and within the time prescribed, and until such motion is disposed of the action is still pending, and the statutory time for preparing a case-made for an appeal does not begin to run. Darling v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 612, 613, 76 Kan. 893.

Where a final judgment is rendered as upon default for failure to answer in compliance with a rule, no relief can be obtained by an ordinary motion for a new trial, for the demand is taken as confessed, and there is no "trial" in the true acceptance of that term. Rooker v. Bruce, 171 Ind. 86, 85 N. E. 351, 353.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2545, in relation to Surrogate's Courts, provides that an exception may be taken to a ruling by a surrogate upon the trial by him of an issue of fact, including a finding or refusal to find on a question of fact in a case, where such an exception may be taken to a ruling of the court upon a trial without a jury of an issue of fact; and section 2576 provides that an appeal from a surrogate from a decree rendered on the trial of an issue of fact must be heard upon a case to be made and settled by the surrogate, as in making and settling of a case upon an appeal in an action. "When we find these two sections of the Code both referring specifically to 'a trial by the surrogate of an issue of fact,' it is but fair to assume that the framers of the Code used the word 'trial' in the ordinary sense in which it is employed by lawyers and courts, viz., where there was an issue of fact and testimony taken thereon, and that it was not intended to cover every hearing in the surrogate's court, the basis of which may consist solely of affidavits, records, or certified copies of documents; in other words, it is apparent that these provisions of the Code were designed with the intention of making the practice in the Surrogate's Court substantially the same as the practice in the Supreme Court." In re Schmid, 98 N. Y. Supp. 921, 922, 50 Misc. Rep. 109.

The term "after the trial," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1379, providing that "after the trial" of any cause either party may make out a written statement of the facts in evidence on the trial and submit the same to the opposite party or his attorney for inspection, etc., is sufficiently broad to embrace the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc as a part of the trial, justifying the court in making and certifying to the statement of facts if judgment was actually entered. Palmo v. S. W. Slayden & Co., 92 S. W. 796, 797, 100 Tex. 13.

Condemnation proceedings

"In a proceeding for the condemnation of real property, if a defendant interpose an answer to the petition (Code Civ. Proc. § 3365), a 'trial' of the issues thus raised must be had. If judgment be given the answering defendant thereon, he is entitled to costs against the plaintiff; i. e., costs before and after notice of 'trial' and a trial fee. Section 3369. If judgment of condemnation be given, the plaintiff is entitled to like costs against the answering defendant. Section 3372, last clause. The foregoing provisions relate to the 'trial' only; i. e., the 'trial' of the issue raised by an answer to the petition. That is the only 'trial' that is had in a condemnation proceeding. The word does not relate to or designate the hearing before the commissioners at all." New York, O. & W. R. Co. v. McBride, 92 N. Y. Supp. 31, 45 Misc. Rep. 516.

In criminal law

The "trial" of a criminal case does not begin, strictly speaking, until the jury is impaneled and sworn, in view of Comp. Laws, § 4320, stating the order of proceedings of trial. State v. Jackman, 104 Pac. 13, 15, 31 Nev. 511 (citing U. S. v. Curtis, 4 Mason, 232, 25 Fed. Cas. 726; Commonwealth v. Soderquest, 66 N. E. 801, 183 Mass. 199; Hunnell v. State, 86 Ind. 431; Alexander v. Commonwealth, 105 Pa. 1; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7099 et seq.).

The word "trial," as used in constitutional and statutory provisions that an accused person upon a trial shall be confronted with witnesses against him, except in certain cases provided for, means a trial by jury. Pratt v. State, 100 S. W. 138, 143, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 281.

Conviction upon a plea of guilty is as much a "trial" as is a conviction upon evidence taken. People ex rel. Burke v. Fox, 134 N. Y. Supp. 642, 643, 150 App. Div. 114.

The word "trial," as used in Code Cr. Proc. § 308, awarding an allowance to counsel appointed to defend a criminal, authorizes an allowance on a trial resulting in a disagreement. People ex rel. McAvoy v. Prendergast, 124 N. Y. Supp. 713, 715, 67 Misc. Rep. 541.

The word "trial," as used in Const. art. 1, § 7, guaranteeing right of trial by jury, meaning an issue of fact presented by a plea of the accused, where the accused, with full knowledge of his constitutional rights, enters a plea of guilty, and presents no issue of fact for trial, there can be no trial, and the conviction is the accused's admission, and takes the place of a verdict of a jury. Ex parte Dawson, 117 Pac. 696, 699, 20 Idaho, 178, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1146.

A criminal "trial" begins when the jury are called to be examined as to their qualifications. Simmons v. State, 114 Pac. 752, 753, 4 Okl. Cr. 490.

The word "trial," as used in Acts 1896, p. 162, No. 113, requiring the court to order the clerk at the time and without delay to take down the facts upon which bills of exceptions were predicated, is not used in criminal matters in that technical sense which restricts its application to a proceeding had after the impaneling of the jury, but applies to all proceedings which take place after the state and accused announce that they are ready, or after they are ordered by the court to proceed with the trial. State v. Butler, 38 South. 466, 467, 114 La. 596.

Under the statute providing that whenever the constitutionality of an act is questioned in the trial of a criminal cause the decision of the question shall be reserved and the trial proceed in other respects as if the statute was constitutional, the word "trial" is used in its technical sense, namely, "the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts or law put in issue, for the purpose of determining such issue." State v. Collins, 62 Atl. 1010, 1012, 27 R. I. 419 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict., and citing State v. Bergman, 34 N. W. 737, 37 Minn. 407).

Cr. Proc. Act 1898, § 53 (P. L. p. 885), provides that every indictment shall be tried at the term in which issue is joined, or at the term after, unless the court for just cause allows further time for trial, and, if the indictment be not so tried, defendant shall be discharged on his own recognizance. Two indictments were found against petitioner for arson in the April term, 1907, and he was arraigned five days afterwards, and tried on one of the indictments in June, 1907, the jury disagreeing, and no trial was had on the other indictment that term, or on either of them in the September term, but at that term a third indictment was found on which he was tried, the jury also disagreeing on this trial. Petitioner was then remanded until the December term, when he was tried and acquitted on the third indictment, and was discharged on his own recognizance under the statute on the second indictment, but his motion for discharge on the first indictment was denied. Held, while in strictness the word "trial" implies a verdict, the trial required by the statute did not contemplate a verdict, and hence the statute was satisfied by the trial and disagreement in the April term, after which it became inoperative. State v. Dilts, 69 Atl. 255, 76 N. J. Law, 410.

As to whether or not a view by a jury in a criminal case constitutes a part of the "trial" of the case there is a diversity of conclusions, which appears to be due largely to a restriction of the term the "trial" to the permanent proceedings in the courtroom, and an effort of the courts to evade the apparently inevitable result of that construction of the case under consideration. Every step taken in a criminal case, by or in the court wherein the case is pending, from issue joined to verdict rendered, is a step or proceeding "arising during the course of the trial." In this extensive sense the "trial" would include many occasions when the judge need not be personally present, exercising control or conducting the trial. This is the case where the jury are kept together during the entire trial. Between the sessions of the court they are under the control of the sheriff, and if they make an unauthorized visit in a body to the place where the crime was committed, while in charge of that officer, the error may be waived, and the court can consider whether or not the view influenced the minds of the jurors, in ruling on a motion for a new trial. People v. White, 90 Pac. 471, 477, 5 Cal. App. 329 (citing People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370; Warner v. State, 29 Atl. 505, 56 N. J. Law, 686, 44 Am. St. Rep. 415).

"A man cannot be legally charged with crime where there is no jurisdiction to try him. The fact that he is so legally charged means that he is charged by an authority having a right to try him. A 'right to try' means jurisdiction over the place where the crime has been committed and over the person who commits it. Ex parte Cheatham, 95 S. W. 1077, 1081, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 51 (quoting Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 308).

"The word 'trial' is not the equivalent of the word 'procedure,' and is less comprehensive. It does not include those acts by which the defendant is brought into court and the issues of law and fact are presented, but relates solely to the examination before the tribunal of the facts or the law put in issue and the determination thereof." Where a municipal ordinance of a city of the third class, with the violation of which defendant was charged, provided that he should be entitled to a trial by jury as in prosecutions before justices of the peace, "and all trials before the recorder shall be conducted in like manner as cases before the justice of the peace," it did not render applicable to such proceedings the practice regulating the procedure in misdemeanor cases before justices of the peace, requiring the filing of an information, signed and verified by the prosecuting attorney, in the police court of the city, but defendant could be properly proceeded against under the statute applicable to cities of the third class on the filing of a sworn complaint by any person. City of Kirksville v. Munyon, 91 S. W. 57, 58, 114 Mo. App. 567.

Same—Presence of accused

The words "during the trial" mean every substantive step taken by the court in the cause after the indictment is presented by the grand jury to the court, up to and including the final judgment. Every step taken in the cause, however, does not constitute a separate and distinct trial, but is only a step in or part of the prosecution, which, together with the final adjudication of the case upon its merits, constitute the trial. An order authorizing a sheriff to summon a jury to be present at a subsequent date fixed for the trial of accused was a mere administrative function of the court, and was not a part of the "trial" of the cause at which the presence of accused was required by Rev. St. § 2610, declaring that no person indicted for felony can be tried unless he is personally present during the trial. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 257, 198 Mo. 23 (citing Osborn v. State, 24 Ark. 629; State v. Montgomery, 63 Mo. loc. cit. 299).

An application for a continuance of a criminal case is not a part of the "trial," within Rev. St. 1899, § 2610, providing that no person indicted for felony can be tried unless personally present during the "trial"; and hence the failure of the record to affirmatively disclose defendant's presence when his application for a continuance was heard and overruled was not ground for reversal. State v. Hall, 87 S. W. 1181, 189 Mo. 262.

Hearing and deciding demurrers or motions on pleadings

The argument and submission to the court of a motion for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that defendant's answer containing allegations of new matter which were admitted by plaintiff's failure to reply is a "trial" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1004, subd. 1, providing that an action may be dismissed or judgment of nonsuit entered by plaintiff "at any time before trial." State ex rel. Montana Cent. R. Co. v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist., 79 Pac. 546, 547, 32 Mont. 37.

A "trial" is the examination before a competent tribunal, according to law, of the facts or law in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue. The argument and submission to the court of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, on the ground that defendant's answer contained allegations of new matter which were admitted by plaintiff's failure to reply, is a "trial," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1004, subd. 1, providing that an action may be dismissed or judgment of nonsuit entered by plaintiff at any time before trial. State ex rel. Montana Cent. R. Co. v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist., 79 Pac. 546, 547, 32 Mont. 37.

The overruling or sustaining of a demurrer to a pleading is not included in "errors of law occurring at the trial," within St. 1893, § 4196 (Comp. Laws 1909, § 5825), since a "trial" does not commence until an issue of fact is joined, so that no error can be assigned thereon that can be reviewed on a transcript. Haynes v. Smith, 119 Pac. 246, 247, 29 Okl. 703.

Where an action is appealed to the Supreme Court, and is remanded for retrial, the circuit court must proceed in the retrial in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court, but is not restricted to a trial of the matters adjudicated by the Supreme Court, and the sustaining of a demurrer to an amended petition filed in the circuit court after remand is a "trial" within Rev. St. 1909, § 1967, defining a trial as a judicial examination of issues between parties, whether of law or fact. McMurray v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 142 S. W. 479, 481, 161 Mo. App. 133.

Under Rev. Codes 1890, § 5419, declaring that a trial is the judicial examination of the issue between the parties, whether they are issues of law or of fact. The hearing and determination of the issue of law raised by a demurrer to the complaint in the justice court is a "trial." Walker v. Maronda, 106 N. W. 296, 297, 15 N. D. 63.

"A demurrer to a complaint interposes an 'issue of law,' the determination of which constitutes a 'trial by court.'" State v. Richardson, 85 Pac. 225, 228, 48 Or. 309, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362.

A "trial," as defined by Code Iowa, § 3649, is a judicial examination of the issues of either law or fact in an action, and includes the judicial examination of an issue of law raised by demurrer or plea. Columbus Junction Tel. Co. v. Overholt, 102 N. W. 498, 126 Iowa, 579 (quoting and adopting definition in Code Iowa, § 3649, citing Mathews v. Clayton County, 44 N. W. 722, 79 Iowa, 510).

In statutes relating to costs

Code Civ. Proc. § 3301, provides that each clerk of a court of record is entitled, for his services in an action or special proceeding brought in or transferred to the court of which he is clerk, to receive on the trial of the action or the hearing on the merits of the special proceeding, from the party bringing it on, $1. Held, that since the word "trial" means examination before a competent tribunal, according to the laws of the land, of facts put in issue in a cause to determine such issue, or a judicial examination of the issue between the parties, whether of fact or law, such term, as used in section 3301, did not include a review on appeal, where the record only is examined for the correction of errors, and hence the clerk is not entitled to fees of $1 for the filing of appellant's brief on appeal to that court. Rogowski v. Brill, 132 N. Y. Supp. 370, 371, 74 Misc. Rep. 472.

Rev. St. 1899, § 10116 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4608), provides that "in every case tried, * * * where an official stenographer is appointed, the clerk of said court shall tax up the sum of three dollars." Section 690 (page 700) provides that "a trial is the judicial examination of the issues between the parties, whether they be issues of law or fact." Held, that the hearing and granting of a motion for judgment on a stipulation to abide the final result of another case, and the examination of the stipulation and the pleadings in order to render judgment, was not a "trial," and that the stenographer's fee was improperly charged. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Field, 112 S. W. 3, 4, 132 Mo. App. 488.

Plaintiff sued on an account stated, and after a trial it was held that there was no account stated, and the court directed a reference. The case proceeded before the referee, who found the account for plaintiff, and judgment was entered on his findings. Held, that the reference was interlocutory, and not a "trial," within Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, authorizing taxation of $30 costs for the trial of an issue of fact, and hence plaintiff was entitled to but one trial fee. Boissevain v. Pope, 118 N. Y. Supp. 577, 578, 64 Misc. Rep. 292.

Time spent in the settlement of an executor's account, in preparing pleadings, making briefs, ascertaining facts, appearing on an adjournment, or to settle the decree, is no part of the "trial," within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to costs. In re Kredler, 124 N. Y. Supp. 628, 633, 68 Misc. Rep. 412.

Rev. St. § 823, provides that only the following compensation shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys in the courts of the United States, and section 824 declares that "on a trial before a jury" a docket fee of $20 shall be allowed. Held, that "trial by jury" contemplated, not only hearing of evidence before a jury, but a determination of the issue, or a final submission for such determination, so that, on a case on trial being settled pursuant to a stipulation before submission, no docket fee was allowable. Howler v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 166 Fed. 828, 830.

In statutes relating to new trial

A judgment of the Supreme Court, directing vacation of an order granting a new trial and the entry of a judgment on the verdict, is not a "trial," within Rev. St. 1899, § 803, providing that all motions for new trial and in arrest shall be made within four days after the trial, etc. Scullin v. Wabash R. Co., 90 S. W. 1026, 1027, 192 Mo. 1.

TRIAL ANEW

See Hearing Anew.

TRIAL AT LAW

The examinations by boards of immigration inspectors of incoming aliens, touching their qualifications, are not "trials at law," so as to entitle Italian immigrants to be represented by counsel within article 23 of the treaty with Italy, ratified April 29, 1871 (17 Stat. 856). United States ex rel. Buccino v. Williams (C. C.) 190 Fed. 897, 900.

TRIAL BY JURY

See, also, Try Without Jury.

The word "trial," in Const. art. 3, § 16, providing that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to a trial by jury, is used in its broadest and most comprehensive sense, and includes all proceedings in the progress of the case, after the issues are made up, down to and including a rendition of the verdict, and forbids a charge that accused cannot be found not guilty, even where the facts are not in dispute. State v. Koch, 85 Pac. 272, 274, 33 Mont. 490 (citing State v. Spotted Hawk, 55 Pac. 1026, 22 Mont. 33).

The word "trial," as used in Const. art. 1, § 7, guaranteeing right of trial by jury, means an issue of fact presented by a plea of the accused, and the court is without jurisdiction to try such issue of fact, if the charge be a felony, and there can be no conviction except upon trial by jury. Ex parte Dawson, 117 Pac. 696, 699, 20 Idaho, 178, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1146.

The constitutional provision that the "right of trial by jury" shall remain inviolate "refers to 'the right of trial by jury' as a right well known and commonly understood at the time of its adoption, and it is the right so understood which is secured by it. * * * It is entirely clear, therefore, that the right of trial by jury, which is secured by the Constitution, is the right of trial by jury with which the people who adopted it were familiar, and that was the right which had obtained a fixed meaning in the criminal jurisprudence of the territory, as defined by the statutes which existed prior to and at the time of the adoption of the Constitution." Smith v. Kunert, 115 N. W. 76, 77, 17 N. D. 120 (quoting and adopting the definition in Barry v. Truax, 99 N. W. 769, 13 N. D. 131, 65 L. R. A. 762, 112 Am. St. Rep. 662).

The "right to jury trial" is the right to the submission to a jury of all the issues of fact in the case on the law given by the court, and the jury determines the rights of the litigants under the law; and the fact that a party entitled to a jury trial is given a jury trial of the most important part of his case, transferred to the equity docket, does not satisfy the law guaranteeing the right of "trial by jury," since the jury in such a case only advises the judge as to certain submitted facts. John King Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 114 S. W. 308, 310, 131 Ky. 46.

Where a jury is impaneled and evidence taken before it on the trial of the cause, it is a "jury trial," though the jury renders its verdict by direction of the court. Western College of New Mexico v. Turknett, 125 Pac. 1085, 1086, 17 N. M. 275.

The right of "trial by jury" secured by Const. Bill of Rights, § 7, providing that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate, includes the elements of a trial by jury as they were known to and understood by the framers of the Constitution and the people who adopted it. The system of trial by jury in criminal cases, which existed in the state for several years prior to the adoption of the Constitution, gave the state, as well as the defendant on trial for crime, a right to have the place of trial changed when necessary to secure a fair and impartial trial, and the Constitution secured the right thus known and understood. Hence Rev. Codes 1899, § 8122, providing for a change of venue on the application of the state's attorney, when a fair and impartial trial of a criminal case cannot be had in the original county, does not violate the constitutional provision. Barry v. Truax, 99 N. W. 769, 771, 13 N. D. 131, 65 L. R. A. 762, 112 Am. St. Rep. 662, 3 Ann. Cas. 191.

A "jury trial" is a public proceeding, as well in respect to the production of proof as to the instruction of the jury by the judge. The parties have a right to be heard in respect to everything transacted, and to bring in review all the proceedings at the trial. Buffalo Structural Steel Co. v. Dickinson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 268, 270, 98 App. Div. 355.

"Trial by jury," within the Constitution, is the right which every citizen has to demand that all offenses charged against him shall be submitted to a tribunal composed of honest and unprejudiced men, who will do equal and exact justice between the government and himself, and in order to do so weigh impartially every fact disclosed by the evidence. Such a guaranty would be entirely worthless, if persons were admitted in the jury box who were influenced by passion or prejudice, or who by reason of having formed an opinion as to the merits of the case would be incapable of deciding with perfect impartiality. State v. Mott, 74 Pac. 728, 730, 29 Mont. 292 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 299).

"The word 'jury' and the words 'trial by jury' were placed in the Constitution of the United States with reference to the meaning affixed to them in the law as it was in this country and in England at the time of the adoption of that instrument." State v. McCarthy, 69 Atl. 1075, 1076, 76 N. J. Law, 295.

A person who is put on his trial in a court presided over by a judge and before a jury of 12 men who agree on a verdict has a "trial by jury" as guaranteed by Const. § 7, and he may not complain because the qualifications of the jurors or the manner of their selection differ from what it was at common law or is changed from time to time to make the system more efficient. Wendling v. Commonwealth, 137 S. W. 205, 207, 143 Ky. 587.

The phrase "trial by jury" meant at common law trial by 12 men impartially selected from the county in which the alleged crime was committed, who must unanimously concur as to the guilt of the accused before he could be legally convicted. State v. Hamsey, 67 S. W. 620, 623, 168 Mo. 167, 57 L. R. A. 846.

Const. art. 1, § 2, in providing that "trial by jury" in "all cases where it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever," meant that questions of fact shall be determined by juries, and not by the court. Perlman v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 917, 918, 78 Misc. Rep. 168.

Jury of 12

In the statute respecting proceedings for removal of officers, which provides that the trial must be by jury and conducted in all respects in the same manner as the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanor, the phrase "trial must be by jury" was evidently used by the legislators as contemplating that the trial should be by such a jury as may be impaneled in the district court where the venue of this action was placed at that time, which jury consisted of 12 men. Maben v. Rosser, 103 Pac. 674, 678, 679, 24 Okl. 588.

Lunacy proceedings

Gen. St. 1909, § 8470, providing for a jury in lunacy inquests of four persons, one of whom must be a physician, does not violate the right to a "jury trial" guaranteed by the Constitution. State v. Linderholm, 114 Pac. 857, 84 Kan. 603, 892.

A statute providing that, when any person indicted for an offense is acquitted by reason of insanity, the jury shall so state in the verdict, and if the discharge of the insane person is deemed dangerous to the community, he may be committed to prison, does not violate the article of the federal Constitution guaranteeing the "right to trial by jury." Ex parte Brown, 81 Pac. 552, 554, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 4 Ann. Cas. 488.

Presence and superintendence of a judge

"Trial by jury," in the primary and usual sense of the term at the common law and in the American Constitution, is not merely a trial by a jury of 12 men before an officer vested with authority to cause them to be summoned and impaneled, to administer oaths to them and to the constable in charge, and to enter judgment and issue execution on their verdict, but it is a trial by a jury of 12 men in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and, except on acquittal of a criminal charge, to set aside their verdict if in his opinion it is against the law or the evidence. Archer v. Board of Levee Inspectors of Chi- cot County, 128 Fed. 125, 128 (citing Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 585, 43 L. Ed. 873).

A "jury trial" is not a trial by 12 men, nor by an appellate court, but by 12 men presided over by a judge, who makes his rulings in the course of the trial, while witnesses and parties are present and ready to act. Aetna Indemnity Co. v. J. R. Crowe Coal & Mining Co., 154 Fed. 545, 565, 566, 83 C. C. A. 431.

The trial by jury secured by Const. art. 2, § 19, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, is a trial according to the courts of common law as it existed, and the same in substance as that which was in use when the Constitution was adopted, except as specifically modified by the Constitution, and one of the elements of a jury trial as it existed before admission of the state was power of the trial judge to instruct the jury upon the law. Baker v. Newton, 112 Pac. 1034, 1038, 27 Okl. 436.

When the provision of section 31 of the state Constitution was adopted, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, the words "trial by jury" meant in court under the forms of law, with a judge presiding to direct the proceedings in conformity with it. Twelve men in the woods, or on a street corner, were not imagined. Hence Code 1906, § 4910, providing that the circuit court shall not in any case cause plaintiff to enter a remittitur on pain of a new trial, but that if there is no other error committed, except that the verdict is in the opinion of the court excessive, the court shall overrule the motion for new trial, but that the Supreme Court may, where it thinks the verdict excessive, reverse the case, unless remittitur is entered, is unconstitutional and void, as preventing defendants from having a complete disposition of their rights in a forum provided by the organic law for all, and as giving the Supreme Court original jurisdiction. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Wallace, 43 South. 469, 470, 90 Miss. 609, 122 Am. St. Rep. 321.

"The very definition of 'trial' carries with it the idea of the superintendence of a judge." The judge's absence from the courtroom for a part of the time during trial, in a case where the evidence demanded the verdict as rendered, will not be a sufficient reason to reverse the judgment, when such absence was known to counsel, and there was no request to suspend the trial, no objection to the absence, and no motion for a mistrial upon the judge's return. Horne v. Rogers, 35 S. E. 715, 719, 110 Ga. 362, 49 L. R. A. 176 (citing Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 13, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873; Smith v. Sherwood [Wis.] 70 N. W. 682, 95 Wis. 558; Thompson v. People, 32 N. E. 968, 144 Ill. 378; O'Brien v. People, 31 Pac. 230, 17 Colo. 561; and citing and disapproving O'Shields v. State, 6 S. E. 426, 81 Ga. 301; Pritchett v. State, 18 S. E. 536, 92 Ga. 65).

"Trial by jury," in the primary and usual sense of the term, is not merely a trial by a jury of 12 men before an officer vested with authority to cause them to be summoned and impaneled, to administer oaths to them and to the constable in charge, and to enter judgment and issue execution on their verdict; but it is a trial by a jury of 12 men in the presence and under the superintendence of the judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and, except on acquittal of a criminal charge, to set aside their verdict if contrary to the law or evidence." A statute authorizing the Supreme Court to direct a judgment in civil cases, without any further trial by jury, does not violate the guaranty in the state Constitution that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate. Gunn v. Union R. Co., 62 Atl. 118, 120, 27 R. I. 320, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362 (quoting and adopting definition in Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 19 Sup. Ct. 585, 174 U. S. 13, 43 L. Ed. 873).

"Trial by jury," in the primary and usual sense of the term at common law and in the American Constitutions, is not merely a trial by jury of 12 men before an officer vested with authority to cause them to be summoned and impaneled, to administer oaths to them and to the constable in charge, and to enter judgment and issue execution on their verdict; but it is a trial by jury of 12 men in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and, except on acquittal of a criminal charge, to set aside their verdict, if in his opinion it is against the law or the evidence." The verdict of a jury is without effect until it has been approved by the trial judge, except that a verdict of acquittal cannot be set aside to any purpose, in view of Bill of Rights, § 10, providing that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, and Gen. St. 1900, § 2798, providing that, when accused has been acquitted upon a trial, he may, with certain exceptions, plead such acquittal in bar to any subsequent accusation for the same offense. State v. Lyon, 109 Pac. 990, 991, 83 Kan. 168 (quoting and adopting definition in Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 174 U. S. 1, 43 L. Ed. 873).

TRIAL CAUSE

The term "trial cause," as used in Code, § 3659, authorizing the court to make an assignment of trial causes for trial, means a cause in which there is an issue presented to be tried, and does not authorize the assignment of causes for trial before issue joined. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1029, 1030.

TRIAL COURT

In judicial proceedings it is difficult to have a "trial court" without a trial judge. Where a case is heard in the court of common pleas, the judge who presides at the trial is as much the trial court as he is the trial judge. The person is the same, and the functions and duties are much the same. Where the record shows that the party excepting filed his bill of exceptions with the clerk on the 15th day of August, 1903, that being within the time prescribed for that duty, and that on the 10th of September, 1903, the clerk transmitted the same to the "court," and that the bill was received by the "court," as shown by his indorsement, on the 17th day of September, 1903, signed, "T. I. Gilmer, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas," and where the record further shows that on the 18th day of September, 1903, the bill was signed and returned to the clerk of the court, under the indorsement, "T. I. Gilmer, Judge," and that on the same day the bill was received and filed by the clerk, there has been a substantial compliance with the statute, and it is not error to overrule a motion to strike such bill from the files. Davies v. New Castle & L. Ry. Co., 73 N. E. 213, 215, 216, 71 Ohio St. 325.

TRIAL DE NOVO

See, also, Hearing de Novo.

While "trial de novo" on appeal means a trial anew, it only requires a new trial as to the questions in issue, and not a re-examination of matters concerning which there was no dispute. In re Littlefield, 112 Pac. 234, 235, 61 Wash. 150.

"Trial de novo," as used in Laws 1903, p. 372, providing for such trials in the district court on appeal from the probate court in probate matters, means "to try anew" or a second time; that is, to retry the case on the original papers and the same issues as the case was tried in the probate court. In re McVay's Estate, 93 Pac. 28, 32, 14 Idaho, 56.

Under Const. art. 7, § 3, as amended November 8, 1910 (L. O. L. p. xxiv), requiring the Supreme Court on appeal, where either party has attached to the bill of exceptions the whole testimony, to direct the proper judgment, provided it can determine what judgment should be entered, the Supreme Court on appeal, where the whole testimony is attached to the bill of exceptions, must examine the evidence and affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment as is required in appeals in suits in equity, except that in an action at law the court will only consider errors properly assigned, but such review is not a "trial de novo" which implies a re-examination of the original evidence as if no previous hearing had occurred. Taffe v. Smyth, 125 Pac. 308, 311, 62 Or. 227.

TRIAL JUDGE

Judge as meaning, see Judge.

TRIAL TERM

Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, subd. 4, provides that on appeal to the Supreme Court from an inferior court, excepting certain appeals from the City Court of New York taken from an interlocutory or final judgment rendered or made at a Trial Term, the successful party shall be entitled to $20 before argument and $40 for argument. Held, that the words "trial term" in such section were intended as the equivalent of the former language "in the same court or in a circuit court" in the section prior to the consolidation of the judicial system in 1896, declaring that on an appeal to the Supreme Court from an inferior court, or to the General Term, or from a Superior City Court, or of the New York Marine Court, taken from an interlocutory or final judgment, or from an order granting or refusing a new trial, rendered or made "in the same court or in a Circuit Court," or on appeal, etc., the successful party should be entitled, etc., so that the application of the section was not limited to appeals from interlocutory judgments in actions at law. Campbell v. Hallihan, 92 N. Y. Supp. 413, 416, 46 Misc. Rep. 409.

The word "tribord" is a French marine term, meaning starboard. The Charles Tiberghien, 143 Fed. 676.

TRIBUNAL

Court-martial

A court-martial is not a "court" within the meaning of sections 85 and 86, Const., nor within the meaning of section 7810, Rev. Codes 1905; but it is a "tribunal," within the meaning of section 7810, Rev. Codes 1905, and its acts may be inquired into by certiorari. State v. Peake, 135 N. W. 197, 199, 22 N. D. 457, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

TRIBUTARY

Where one has appropriated water from a river, a "tributary" thereof, the waters of which he is entitled to prevent another from diverting, need not be a running natural surface stream which empties into the river. Ogilvy Irrigating & Land Co. v. Insinger, 75 Pac. 598-600, 19 Colo. App. 380.

TRICK

"Trick" means "to deceive by cunning, or to impose on; to defraud; to cheat."

"Trick" is also defined as a "sly, dextrous, ingenious procedure, fitted to puzzle or amuse, and is synonymous with strategy, wile, fraud, cheat, deception, or delusion. Meriwether v. Publishers, George Knapp & Co., 97 S. W. 257, 268, 120 Mo. App. 354 (quoting Webst. Dict. and State v. Smith, 85 N. W. 12, 82 Minn. 342).

A complaint stating that defendant threatened to bring ejectment against plaintiff claiming to own under a pretended deed land which belonged to plaintiff's decedent, that the deed was a forgery and "trick" on defendant's part to secure title and possession of the property, and thereby cheat and defraud decedent's estate, etc., is sufficient to warrant relief either on the theory that the deed was forged or obtained by some fraudulent device; the word "trick" as a noun meaning an artifice or stratagem; a crafty or deceitful contrivance or procedure, and meaning as a verb to deceive by cunning or artifice; to impose on; to defraud; cheat; to effect by deceit or trickery. Butts v. Purdy, 125 Pac. 313, 319, 63 Or. 150.

The "trick, device, subterfuge, or pretense" referred to in Ky. St. § 2570, providing that no trick, device, subterfuge, or pretense shall be allowed to evade the operation of the liquor law, is not confined to a mechanical device, such as is frequently used in blind tigers; but where the examination, prescription, and compounding testified to by a witness was a device or trick on the part of accused to evade the law, he was guilty. Rowe v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 70 S. W. 407, 409.

TRIMMERS

Men who, at stated times, lower arc lamps, clean the globes, renew the carbons, and replace the lamps, are called "trimmers." Lutolf v. United Electric Light Co., 67 N. E. 1025, 1026, 184 Mass. 53.

TRIMMING

The process known as "trimming," in connection with discharging coal from bins, consists in the shoveling of the coal closer to the place of discharge when it ceases to flow freely from the chute. Burns v. Palmer, 95 N. Y. Supp. 161, 107 App. Div. 321.

TRIMMINGS

See Silk Trimmings.

Woven cotton articles from an inch to 2½ inches wide, chiefly used as hat bands for trimming men's hats, held dutiable as "trimmings" of cotton, under the Tariff Act of 1894. United States v. Walter H. Graef & Co., 127 Fed. 688, 689, 62 C. C. A. 414, reversing Walter H. Graef & Co. v. United States, 120 Fed. 1015.

So-called "crochet yokes," made by knitting or crocheting, and used in the yoke of women's vests, are not "trimmings" or lace within the meaning of Tariff Act 1897, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181. Julius Loewenthal & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 774 (citing Garrison, Wright & Co. v. United States, 121 Fed. 149).

While ribbons that must be made up into bows, rosettes, and the like before being used for purposes of trimming or ornamentation are not dutiable as "trimmings," under Tariff Act 1897, par. 390, 30 Stat. 187, goods are so dutiable which are manufactured with ornamentation and characteristic design to be used as a trimming, and intended to be so used without anything further being done to them. Naday & Fleischer v. United States, 155 Fed. 303, 304.

In the Tariff Act the term "trimmings" is used in a commercial, rather than a descriptive sense. Naday & Fleischer v. United States, 164 Fed. 44, 90 C. C. A. 462.

Ornaments, loops, etc., manufactured separately, but temporarily stitched together in six-yard lengths for convenience and economy in handling and carding, and used singly in decorating garments, are not "trimmings or galoons," within the meaning of the Tariff Act of 1897. United States v. Hilbert, 171 Fed. 69, 70, 96 C. C. A. 173.

TRIP

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1114, c. 565) § 104, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1406, c. 676, § 104, requiring every street railroad company to carry between any two points on the roads over which it has the right to run cars any passenger desiring to make "one continuous trip" between such points for a single fare, and to give the passenger a transfer entitling him to "a continuous trip" to any point on the road, for the promotion of public convenience by the operation of railroads "as a single railroad with a single rate of fare," does not prevent a street railway company authorized by section 4, subd. 8, to regulate the time and manner in which passengers shall be transported, and the compensation to be paid, from adopting regulations requiring passengers making use of transfers to use the same only in the same general direction of their initial trip; "trip" conveying the idea of transportation in one direction, and a continuous trip, like a continuous line, extending in the same general direction. Kelly v. New York City Ry. Co., 84 N. E. 569, 570, 192 N. Y. 97.

The term "dispatch" is a technical one in the postal service, and means a mass of matter to be sent to a certain place at a certain time. The term "trip" is also technical, and refers to the wagon which will carry the whole or a part of the dispatch. Utah, N. & C. Stage Co. v. United States, 39 Ct. Cl. 420, 438.

"Triturate" is to pulverize; to grind in to small particles. Lewis German & Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 467, 468 (quoting Standard Dict.).

TRIVIAL IMPERFECTION

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that a "trivial imperfection" in a building will not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien, refers to imperfect or defective performance of the work claimed to be done therein, and not to work admittedly uncompleted. It is not determined by its relative cost. Bianchi v. Hughes, 56 Pac. 610, 611, 124 Cal. 24.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, in relation to mechanics' liens, provides that any "trivial imperfection" in the work shall not prevent a lien. The contract for the making of an addition to a house contained no plans or specifications where windows were to be placed, and the contractor placed two windows in the basement, so that they were not directly under windows in the first story of the house, and the contractor testified, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, that he placed the windows in such a manner in order to give the largest amount of furniture room in the basement, and that no request was made to him to have the windows changed until after the plastering had been put on around them, when he refused unless he should be "paid additional for it, whereupon defendant made the change. The cost of placing the windows in alignment was $7.50. Held, that the facts warranted a finding that the contractor acted in good faith, and that the failure to place the windows in alignment was a "trivial imperfection." "Trivial imperfections," as used in the Code, relates to the question whether or not there has been a completion of the building, and what constitutes a "trivial imperfection," is a question of fact in each instance. The term refers to imperfect or defective performance of the work upon a building which is claimed to have been completed, and not to a case in which the building is admittedly incomplete and workmen are still engaged in constructing substantial portions of it. Schindler v. Green, 87 Pac. 627, 628, 149 Cal. 752 (citing Bianchi v. Hughes, 56 Pac. 610, 124 Cal. 27; Marble Lime Co. v. Lordsburg Hotel Co., 31 Pac. 164, 96 Cal. 332; Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering & Manufg Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 29 Pac. 629, 94 Cal. 229; *Harlan v. ### TROLLEY STAND

A "trolley stand" is the means by which the trailing arm carried above a trolley car "is hinged and pivoted to the car, with a capacity for lateral and vertical movement, and is pressed upward by some suitable spring." Morrin v. Robert White Engineering Works, 138 Fed. 68, 71 (citing Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Kelsey Electric Ry. Specialty Co., 75 Fed. 1005, 22 C. C. A. 1).

TROVE

See Treasure Trove.

TROVER

See, also, Conversion.

The gist of an action of "trover" is the conversion by defendant of goods to which the plaintiff has the right of possession. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. International Paper Co., 132 Fed. 92, 95; Wiggs

Bros. v. Ringemann, 45 South. 153, 155 Ala. 189; Layman v. F. F. Slocumb & Co. (Del.) 76 Atl. 1094, 1095, 7 Pennewill, 403.

"Trover" is an action to recover damages sufficient to cover the value of personal property wrongfully held by another, while replevin or detinue is primarily an action to recover the property, and a judgment is given only in the absence of ability to secure the specific articles claimed. Leeper Graves & Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Hobart, 110 Pac. 655, 660, 26 Okl. 707, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 302.

"Trover" and "detinue" are concurrent remedies, either of which the plaintiff may pursue at his election; trover being an action for damages for the conversion of the property, and detinue being an action for the recovery of the property in specie, or for damages for its unlawful detention. Brocking v. O'Bryan, 112 S. W. 631, 632, 129 Ky. 543 (citing 21 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1025).

"When the common-law system of pleading prevailed, the remedy for different kinds of conversion was the special form of action called 'trover,' established to meet the single case of a loss of goods by the plaintiff, a finding by the defendant and his refusal to deliver the goods so found to the true owner upon specific demand, and applied through operation of a legal fiction to different kinds of conversion." Semon v. Adams, 63 Atl. 661, 662, 79 Conn. 81.

The word "true," within the statute requiring an affidavit for a judgment on a bond to state the "true" consideration of the bond, "means that which is frank and actual, rather than that which is precise and technical." Smith v. Weaver, 66 Atl. 941, 942, 75 N. J. Law, 31 (quoting and adopting the definition in Strong v. Gaskill, 25 Atl. 19, 53 N. J. Law, 665); Strong v. Caskill (N. J.) 59 Atl. 339, 341.

As correct

Where the statute requires that claims filed with an assignee for the benefit of creditors shall be verified by an affidavit that the statement is "true," that the debt is "just," and that there are no credits or offsets, etc., the statute must at least be substantially complied with by a creditor before he is entitled to benefits; and where the affidavit to a creditor's claim omits to say that the statement is "true" and that it is "just," the statement in the affidavit that the account is "correct" is not equivalent to saying that it is "true" and that the debt is "just." An account might be correct, and yet the debt not be just. The Legislature evidently believed, in enacting the statute, that it was more important that the creditor should state that his debt was "true," and that it was "just," than that he should merely make affidavit that it was "correct." Hughes v. Potts, 87 S. W. 708, 709, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 179.

As honest or sincere

In one sense that only is "true" which is conformable to the actual state of things, and in that sense that is untrue which does not express things exactly as they are; but in another and broader sense the word "true" is often used as a synonym of "honest," "sincere," "not fraudulent." *Logan v. ### TRUE BILL

A "true bill" was a term indorsed on an indictment under the common law to show that a majority of the grand jurors (amounting to twelve, at least) found the evidence made out a sufficient case to warrant a prosecution. State v. Graham, 33 South. 826, 827, 136 Ala. 134.

An indorsement of "true bill" is not necessary to the finding of an indictment, and since a "special presentment" is treated as an indictment in this state, the indorsement "special presentment" on the finding of the grand jury is sufficient as a finding of an indictment. Barlow v. State, 56 S. E. 131, 132, 133, 127 Ga. 58 (citing Groves v. State,

TRUE CASH VALUE

Fair cash value synonymous, see Fair Cash Value.

TRUE COPY

Copy as meaning true copy, see Copy.

A certified copy of a deed sought to be introduced in evidence contained a certificate, following the certificate of acknowledgment and preceding the certificate of the clerk as to the copy, reciting that "the above * * * is a true and correct copy of the original deed, * * * that the same was presented for registration" on a certain day and hour, and duly registered on a certain hour six days later. Such certificate was signed by the clerk, by his deputy. Held, that such certificate meant only that the record was "true," and not that the instrument recorded was a copy, so as to render the copy sought to be introduced in evidence a certified copy, and hence not admissible under the statute as a recorded instrument. Williams v. Cessna, 95 S. W. 1106, 1107, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 315.

TRUE LINE

The term "a true line," used in a surveyor's field notes in describing the line between two sections, means a straight line. Lillis v. Urrutia, 99 Pac. 992, 993, 9 Cal. App. 558.

TRUE OWNER

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2801, prior to Act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 33), providing that a mechanic's lien must be asserted, if at all, against the true owner of the premises, who is entitled to the statutory notice of such lien, the wife, who furnished all the consideration for the purchase of property, is the "true owner" thereof, though by mistake title was taken in the name of her husband. Reaves v. Meredith, 51 S. E. 391, 393, 123 Ga. 444.

TRUE VALUE

See Full and True Value.

The term "true cash value," as used in the lease, when not modified by other provisions therein, means the fair cash market value. Sebree v. Board of Education, 98 N. E. 931, 939, 254 Ill. 438.

"True cash value of property" is defined by the tax law as that value at which it would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor. Great Northern R.

Co. v. Snohomish County, 93 Pac. 924, 926, 48 Wash. 478.

The "true value" of national bank shares for taxation is under ordinary conditions their exchangeable value; that is, their market value; but this rule is not an invariable test of true value under all circumstances. City of Newark v. Tunis, 81 Atl. 722, 723, 82 N. J. Law, 461.

Tax Act 1903, § 2, provides that property not expressly exempted or excluded from the act shall be subject to annual taxation at its true value thereunder. Section 12 requires assessors to ascertain the true value of personal property. Held, that, in taxing the shares of a national bank, the "true value" as the basis of the assessment is under ordinary conditions their exchangeable value in the market, and not their book or liquidation value. City of Newark v. Tunis, 78 Atl. 1066, 81 N. J. Law, 45.

Allegations as to the "cash value," "fair value," or "true value" of the property, do not come within Sess. Laws 1902, p. 238, § 10, requiring all taxable property to be assessed at its "full cash value." Humbird Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 83 Pac. 941, 945, 11 Idaho, 614.

TRUFFLES

Not dutiable as vegetables, see Vegetable.

TRUNK

The words "trunk" and "chest" are not synonymous, and therefore an indictment charging theft of a trunk or chest containing articles of clothing, jewelry, etc., is bad for uncertainty in description of the property. State v. Collett, 75 Pac. 271, 272, 9 Idaho, 608 (citing Potter v. State, 39 Tex. 388).

Though a passenger's baggage declaration specified only a "trunk," without any mention of its contents, it sufficiently complied with section 2802, Rev. St., requiring that, if such baggage contains any dutiable article, it shall be "mentioned." The specification of the "trunk" was equivalent to mention of its contents. United States v. One Trunk, 171 Fed. 772, 774.

TRUNK RAILWAY

An electric railroad company authorized to perform the duties of a carrier of freight and passengers between two cities in different states and all intermediate points is a "trunk railway," within a constitutional provision declaring that no city shall grant any franchise to street railways, etc., except to the highest and best bidder therefor, but that the provision shall not apply to a trunk railway. Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 77 S. W. 674, 678, 117 Ky. 146, 63 L. R. A. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230, 4 Ann. Cas. 445.

A "trust" in its technical sense is an obligation on a person arising out of the confidence reposed in him to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence. Weltner v. Thurmond, 98 Pac. 590, 595, 17 Wyo. 268, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1113; Maxwell v. Wood, 111 N. W. 203-204, 133 Iowa, 721 (citing Perry, Trusts, § 2); First State Bank of Le Sueur v. Sibley County Bank, 105 N. W. 485, 487, 96 Minn. 456; Allen v. Rees, 110 N. W. 583, 584, 136 Iowa, 423, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137.

A "trust," in its simplest form, is that relation between two persons by virtue of which one of them holds property for the benefit of the other. Cree v. Lewis, 112 Pac. 326, 327, 49 Colo. 186.

The mere word "trust," in its literal significance, implies the nurturing and sheltering of a sacred confidence, and out of this literal meaning has grown a legal significance, which, though broader in scope and laden with more material functions, has lost none of its elements of sanctity. McCoy v. McCoy, 121 Pac. 176, 181, 30 Okl. 379, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 146.

"Trusts" in the broadest sense embrace, not only technical trusts, but also obligations arising from fiduciary relationships. Rothschild v. Dickinson, 134 N. W. 1035, 1037, 169 Mich. 200.

"A 'trust' in the most acknowledged sense in which that term is used in English jurisprudence may be defined to be an equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal ownership thereof." Jones v. Byrne, 149 Fed. 457, 463 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Story, Eq. Jur. par. 964).

While, in its technical sense, a "trust" is the right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property, the legal title of which is vested in another, and implies separate coexistence of the legal and the equitable titles, vested in different persons at the same time; in its more comprehensive sense the term embraces every bailment, every transaction by an agent or factor, every deposit, and every matter in which the slightest trust or confidence exists. Bowes v. Cannon, 116 Pac. 336, 338, 50 Colo. 262.

"A 'trust' is where there are rights, titles, and interests in property distinct from the legal ownership. In such cases, the legal title, in the eye of the law, carries with it, to the holder, absolute dominion; but behind it lie beneficial rights and interests in the same property belonging to another. These rights, to the extent to which they exist, are a charge upon the property, and constitute an equity which a court of equity will protect and enforce whenever its aid for that purpose is properly invoked." Corbin v. Holmes, 154 Fed. 593, 604, 83 C. C. A. 367.

"The term 'trust' is a very comprehensive one. Every deposit is a direct trust. Every person who receives money to be paid to another, or to apply to a particular purpose, is a trustee. The cases of hirer and letter to hire, borrower and lender, pawner and pawnee, principal and agent, are all cases of express trust, etc. It has never been held, however, that these and the like cases are such technical trusts as to bring them within our limited equity jurisdiction." Young v. Mercantile Trust Co., 140 Fed. 61, 62 (quoting Chancellor Kent in Kane v. Bloodgood [N. Y.] 7 Johns. Ch. 90, 11 Am. Dec. 417).

A trust has been defined to be an "equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal ownership thereof." In other words, the legal owner holds the direct and absolute dominion over the property in the view of the law; but the income, profits, or benefits thereof in his hands belong wholly or in part to others. A confidence reposed in one to whom an estate in property is conveyed or set over, that he will permit another to take the profits and enjoy the estate according to terms agreed on. Wilson v. Kennedy, 59 S. E. 736, 739, 63 W. Va. 1.

Where a mother turned over money to her son on the understanding that he would pay her interest thereon for life, and that on her death the money should belong absolutely to him, a trust was created, enforceable in equity; a "trust" existing where there are rights, titles, or interests in property distinct from legal ownership, in which case the legal title carries with it to the holder absolute dominion, but behind it lie beneficial rights in the same property belonging to another, which are a charge on the property and constitute an equity which a court of equity will protect. Frost v. Frost, 131 N. W. 60, 61, 165 Mich. 591 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7120).

A gift made to a third person for the benefit of another creates a "trust," which will be administered and controlled like other ordinary trusts. Hall v. Hall, 93 Pac. 177, 178, 76 Kan. 806.

A gift to a charitable corporation for its corporate purposes is not a "trust" in the eyes of the law. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 90 N. Y. Supp. 168, 178, 44 Misc. Rep. 594.

A "trust" is a confidence reposed in some other person than the cestui que trust, for which the cestui que trust has no remedy but by a subpoena in chancery. A devise of land to the vestry of a church, to be used for such church purposes as the rector of the church should direct, was not a devise in trust, but gave the vestry the fee. Doan v. Vestry of Parish of Ascension of Carroll County, 64 Atl. 314, 315, 103 Md. 662, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, 115 Am. St. Rep. 379 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Lewin, Trusts [1st Amer. Ed.] p. 14).

If the giving of a mortgage to one person as security for a debt due another creates a trust, it is not a "trust in relation to real property," within the meaning of the code provisions relating to trusts. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf, 81 Pac. 1077, 1079, 147 Cal. 384.

Where a testator directed his executors on the happening of certain events to pay over his estate to the trustees of a university, to be used for female education of high grade under the management of such trustees, the word "trust," as used in a provision in the event that the trustees "accept the 'trust' hereby created," did not signify a technical legal trust, but referred to the confidence implied by the testator in vesting his property which he intended to devote to a great public work in the university corporation, to be managed by its trustees. Morgan v. Durand, 101 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1009, 51 Misc. Rep. 523.

The only basis for the so-called "savings bank trust," in the absence of proof of gift inter vivos, has been the doctrine of a tentative or revocable trust, which, in the absence of proof of revocation prior to the death of the depositor, took effect as a good trust upon his death. Money was deposited in a savings bank in the name of the depositor, but "in trust for J. S." "J. S." was the maiden name of depositor's sister, who was known by him to be married at the time of the deposit. The interest was drawn by the depositor, and no change in the deposit was made by him on the death of the sister. Held, that no "trust" was created for the sister which became operative on the subsequent death of the depositor. Garvey v. Clifford, 99 N. Y. Supp. 555, 557, 114 App. Div. 193.

A bequest to "my friend B, in the confidence that he will use it in the prosecution of his work against the encroachments" of a religious denomination "upon our common school system," was an "absolute gift," and not a "trust"; the relations of the legatee and testatrix having been those of confidence and deep interest in his work, and the expenses of the work having been in part met by public subscription, and he having never accounted to any one for the funds received. Poor v. Bradbury, 81 N. E. 882, 883, 196 Mass. 207.

Where testatrix's husband was given the use of a fund for life, with remainder in any unused portion of the fund to certain persons, there was no "trust" created, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1699, providing for the settlement of accounts of the trustee by the probate court. Hardy v. Mayhew, 110 Pac. 113, 117, 158 Cal. 95, 139 Am. St. Rep. 73.

Testator, on the happening of certain events, directed his executor to pay over his estate to the trustees of the University of Rochester, with an express desire that it should be used for purposes of female education in the city of Rochester, under the management of the trustees there, in connection with the university or otherwise, as the trustees might determine; the estate to be held as a perpetual fund, and the income to be used for the purpose named: Held, that the gift was to the trustees in their corporate capacity, or the university, absolutely, it being within the power of the university to devote the same to female education, and no trust was thereby created. The word "trust," as used in the will, was not used in its technical sense, but in the sense that the University of Rochester, upon receiving this property, had a responsibility to carry out, subject to the desires of the testator as set forth in his will. In re Durand, 107 N. Y. Supp. 393, 394, 398, 56 Misc. Rep. 235.

The word "trust," in Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 3, § 70, relating to the classification of claims against a decedent's estate, providing that, where decedent has received money in "trust" for any purpose, his executor or administrator shall pay out of his estate the amount thus received, and not accounted for, as a claim of the sixth class, applies only to technical trusts, and does not include the liability of a broker and loan agent to repay deposits of customers in his hands for investment. Felsenthal v. Kline, 73 N. E. 428, 429, 214 Ill. 121 (citing Wilson v. Kirby, 88 Ill. 566; Svanoe v. Jurgens, 33 N. E. 955, 144 Ill. 507; Shipherd v. Furness, 34 N. E. 1096, 153 Ill. 590).

Classification

Trusts are classified into two general divisions, "direct or express trusts" (that is, those springing from agreement of the parties), and "constructive or implied trusts" (that is, those created by the rules and principles of equity). Under this latter class fall all of those trusts known distinctively as "implied" or "constructive," as well as those called "resultant"; in short, all those that do not spring from the agreement of the parties. * * * A constructive trust is one not created by any words either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but only by the construction and operation of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370.

Essentials

The essential elements of a valid "trust" of personal property are a designated beneficiary, a designated trustee, who is not a beneficiary, a fund or other property sufficiently designated to enable title thereto to pass to the trustee, and the actual delivery of the fund or other property or of a legal assignment thereof to the trustee with the intention of passing legal title to him as trustee. Mersereau v. Bennet, 108 N. Y. Supp. 868, 873, 124 App. Div. 413 (citing Von Hesse v. MacKaye, 32 N. E. 615, 136 N. Y. 114; Brown v. Spohr, 73 N. E. 14, 180 N. Y. 201); Brown v. Spohr, 73 N. E. 14, 16, 180 N. Y. 201; People ex rel. Van Norden Trust Co. v. Wells, 103 N. Y. Supp. 874, 875, 118 App. Div. 881; People ex rel. Van Norden Trust Co. v. Wells, 103 N. Y. Supp. 874, 875, 118 App. Div. 881 (citing Brown v. Spohr, 73 N. E. 14, 180 N. Y. 201).

Among the four essential elements of a valid "trust" is a designated trustee, who must not be the beneficiary, and such trustee has the right, within the limitations of the law, to make an acceptance of his trusteeship conditional, and such condition, when expressed in the instrument, forms an essential and necessary part thereof, and the validity of the trust is dependent thereon. Where a trustee accepted a trust with the express reservation and condition that he might resign, surrender the trust, and convey the property to the settlor at his desire, his subsequent election to exercise such power and his reconveyance of the property to the settlor terminated the trust, and the rights of the cestuis que trust thereunder. Schreyer v. Schreyer, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1065, 1068, 101 App. Div. 456.

Every "trust" has three separate elements, the trust property, trust objects, and trust term; the first relating to the property subjected to the trust, the second to those for whose benefit it may be created, and the third to the time during which it may continue. Kahn v. Tierney, 120 N. Y. Supp. 663, 665, 135 App. Div. 897.

To constitute a "trust" there must be a trustee and an estate devised to him and a beneficiary. Simon v. Burgess, 127 N. Y. Supp. 147, 148, 71 Misc. Rep. 300.

To constitute a "trust," there must be sufficient words to raise it, a definite subject, and a certain and ascertained object. Floyd v. Smith, 51 South. 537, 538, 59 Fla. 485, 37

L. R. A. (N. S.) 651, 138 Am. St. Rep. 133, 21 Ann. Cas. 318.

A "trust" implies two estates or interests—one equitable and one legal; one person, as trustee, holding the legal title, while another, as cestui que trust, has the beneficial or equitable interest. Sims v. Morrison, 100 N. W. 88, 90, 92 Minn. 341 (citing Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co., 50 N. W. 1117, 48 Minn. 192, 15 L. R. A. 470, 31 Am. St. Rep. 637); Watkins v. Bigelow, 100 N. W. 1104, 1109, 93 Minn. 210.

A "trust" is defined as an obligation arising out of the confidence reposed in one who has the legal title to property conveyed to him that he will faithfully apply and deal with such property according to the confidence reposed. Therein is implied two estates or interests, one equitable and one legal; one person as trustee holding legal title, while another is cestui que trust. Under Code, § 2918, providing that a declaration of trust or powers as to real estate must be executed in the same manner as deeds, where plaintiff conveyed his interest in certain lands to the defendant and another, and in addition to the consideration expressed in the deed it was honestly agreed between the parties that, if the land was subsequently sold above a certain sum, then plaintiff should be entitled to one-third of the excess, or if an offer above that sum was made and the vendees keep the land, then the vendees would pay to plaintiff his share of the trust, the parol agreement went only to the question of consideration and did not amount to a declaration of trust, nor was the effect thereof to create or transfer an interest in lands within the meaning of the statute of frauds (Code, § 4625), and hence the agreement was binding on the parties. Allen v. Rees, 110 N. W. 583, 584, 136 Iowa, 423, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137 (citing Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co., 50 N. W. 1117, 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470, 31 Am. St. Rep. 637).

And it follows that a gift which vests both the legal title and the beneficial ownership of the subject of the gift in the donee is not one in trust, even if it be a conditional one. Watkins v. Bigelow, 100 N. W. 1104, 1109, 93 Minn. 210.

Particular words unnecessary

No particular terms are necessary to create a "trust," but the intention of the creator of the trust controls; and where he gives to the person to whom he delivers possession of property power to sell it, receive and invest the proceeds, and power to exercise the usual acts of ownership, with specific directions as to how the property and its income is to be disposed of, a trust is created, though such person is designated in the instrument as attorney, instead of trustee. Mersereau v. Bennet, 108 N. Y. Supp. 868, 872, 124 App. Div. 413.

Technical words are not necessary to create a "trust," and the courts will consider the situation and relations of the parties, the character of the property, and the purpose of the settlor in determining whether there was a trust; it being sufficient that the language used shows an intention by the settlor to create a trust and clearly shows the trust property, its disposition, and the beneficiary. Ruhe v. Ruhe, 77 Atl. 797, 800, 113 Md. 595.

In order to constitute a direct "trust," no particular words are necessary, so long as the intent is clear, but there must be a conveyance or transfer to a person capable of holding it, an object or fund transferred, and a cestui que trust or purpose to which it is to be applied. City of Austin v. Cahill, 88 S. W. 542, 548, 99 Tex. 172.

"If there is an intention to create a 'trust,' the trustee may be called in the instrument creating it 'agent,' or by any other similar designation." Johnson v. Cook, 50 S. E. 367, 368, 122 Ga. 524.

It is not necessary to use any particular formula of words in order to create a "trust" of personal property, and it is not even necessary that such a trust should be evidenced by any writing. Trust relations will be implied when it appears that such was the intention of the parties, and when the nature of the transaction is such as to justify or require it. Thus, where property was assigned to a corporation, to secure it and indemnify others who became the assignor's sureties on the faith of the pledge, it could sue as trustee of an express trust to reclaim the property pledged from the assignor, who had appropriated it to his own use, if any of the obligations of the assignor for which it was pledged remain undischarged. Hoffman House v. Foote, 65 N. E. 169, 171, 172 N. Y. 348.

Office as trust

See Office.

Statute of limitations

"Trusts" not reached or affected by the statute of limitations are technical and continuing trusts, of which courts of law have no cognizance. Thus, where defendant, as plaintiff's attorney, received $5,000 in settlement of a claim, agreeing to pay plaintiff $3,000, retain $750 for compensation, and pay $1,250 to other attorneys who assisted, but defendant paid plaintiff only $2,500, and paid nothing to the other attorneys, the plaintiff's claims against defendant both for the $500 and $1,250, which defendant had promised to pay over to the other parties, were not "trusts," but were money claims, subject to statute of limitations. Sheaf v. Dodge, 68 N. E. 292, 293, 161 Ind. 270 (quoting and adopting definition in Raymond v. Simonson [Ind.] 4 Blackf. 81).

Notwithstanding Rev. St. 1898, § 2081, providing that an express trust may be created, when "fully expressed and clearly defined" on the face of the instrument creating it, officers and directors of a corporation, whose fiduciary capacity is "fully expressed and clearly defined" in the articles of incorporation, are not "trustees" of a technical and continuing trust, cognizable only in equity, so as to be precluded from pleading limitations when sued by a receiver for acts of misfeasance and malfeasance for which they were amenable to an action at law at any time, either by the corporation or its stockholders, or, on insolvency, its creditors; the statute (section 4206) making no exception as against trustees of any kind. Boyd v. Mutual Fire Ass'n of Eau Claire, 94 N. W. 171, 174, 116 Wis. 155, 61 L. R. A. 918, 96 Am. St. Rep. 948.

The relation between a principal and an agent who has ceased doing new business for his principal, and whose duty it is merely to collect and remit the money due his principal on outstanding mortgages, is not such a "trust relation" as suspends the running of limitations. Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 102 N. W. 1059, 1062, 139 Mich. 578.

Use distinguished

A "use," a "trust," and a "confidence" are one and the same thing, and if an estate is conveyed to one person for the use of another, or upon a trust for another, and nothing more is said, the statute of uses immediately transfers the legal estate to the use, and no trust is created, although express words of trust are used. Jones v. Jones, 123 S. W. 29, 34, 223 Mo. 424, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424 (quoting and adopting definition in Perry, Trusts [5th Ed.] § 298).

TRUST (Combination)

See, also, Monopoly.

A "trust" is "any compact between two or more persons or corporations, affecting any article or commodity of which the public must have a constant supply; the intent and direct tendency of such an arrangement being the creation of a scarcity or the enhancement of the price." In re Charge to Grand Jury, 151 Fed. 834, 835.

A "trust" is a contract, combination, confederation, or understanding, express or implied, between two or more persons, to control the price of a commodity or services for the benefit of the parties thereto, and to the injury of the public, and which tends to create a monopoly. Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co., 56 S. E. 264, 269, 60 W. Va. 508, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268, 116 Am. St. Rep. 901, 9 Ann. Cas. 667; Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Co. v. Greenwood Hardware Co., 55 S. E. 973, 974, 75 S. C. 378, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 9 Ann. Cas. 902. See also, Klingel's Pharmacy v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1030, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 1184.

The combination by stockholders in two competing interstate railway companies to form a stockholding corporation which should acquire, in exchange for its own capital stock, a controlling interest in the capital stock of each of such railway companies, is a "trust," within the meaning of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, which declares illegal every combination in the form of a trust or otherwise in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 452, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679. See, also, State of Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 123 Fed. 692, 698.

The term "trust" includes any form of combination between corporations, or corporations and natural persons, for the purpose of regulating production and repressing competition by means of the power thus centralized. It was first used in a narrower sense, we believe, of an organization formed by a combination of several corporations under one direction, by the device of a transfer by the stockholders in each corporation of a majority of the stock to a central committee, who issued to the stockholders in return certificates showing, in effect, that though they had parted with their stock they were still entitled to share in the profits; the purpose being to control competition in production and transportation, and thus the price to the consumer. MacGinniss v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 75 Pac. 89, 95, 29 Mont. 428.

An association of persons and corporations engaged in the business of buying and selling live stock, and practically controlling that business at the place of operation, which has a by-law forbidding its members to buy or sell live stock for others without charging a commission therefor of at least 50 cents on a head, is a combination to carry out restrictions in full and free pursuit of a lawful business, and in virtue of that fact is a "trust," within the terms of chapter 265, p. 481, of the Laws of 1897. State v. Wilson, 84 Pac. 737, 738, 80 Pac. 639, 73 Kan. 334, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479.

The term "trust," as used in Gen. St. 1901, §§ 7864, 7868, defining and prohibiting trusts, is intended to apply to combinations and organizations of all kinds created for the purpose of controlling trade, transportation, production, price, or traffic in commercial commodities. State v. International Harvester Co. of America, 99 Pac. 603, 605, 79 Kan. 371.

Laws 1900, p. 125, c. 88, defining a "trust" or "combine" as a combination or agreement between two or more persons, etc., (a) in restraint of trade; (b) to limit, increase, or reduce the price of a commodity; (c) to hinder competition, etc.—is severable, and if any provision thereof is invalid it may be eliminated without affecting the validity of other provisions. State v. Jack- son Cotton Oil Co., 48 South. 300, 301, 95 Miss. 6.

To constitute a trust, within the anti-trust law (Rev. St. 1899, c. 143 [Ann. St. 1906, §§ 8965-8992]), there must be a combination of capital, skill, or acts; "combination," as so used, meaning "union" or "association." State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1044, 218 Mo. 1.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4540, requires every railroad to furnish reasonable and equal facilities upon reasonable and equal rates, to all corporations engaged in the express business, and Acts 1903, p. 119, c. 94, defines a "trust" as a combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized by the law of the state, or to prevent or lessen competition in the transportation of merchandise, and makes a "trust" unlawful. Held, that a contract between a railroad company and an express company, whereby the latter was given exclusive privileges, and the former bound itself not to contract with others to do an express business on the road, and agreed that, in case privileges should be accorded others by legislation or judicial proceeding, the express company in question should have credit for the sums paid by other companies, was violative of the anti-trust statute. State v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 91 S. W. 214, 219, 99 Tex. 516, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 13 Ann. Cas. 1072.

The anti-trust act (Act 1903, p. 119, c. 94), defining a "trust" as a combination to create restrictions in trade or restrictions in the free pursuit of any business permitted by the law of the state, prohibits a restriction of competition in business which under the laws of the state a person may engage in, but does not prevent an owner of a plantation from giving another the exclusive privilege of selling merchandise thereon. Redland Fruit Co. v. Sargent, 113 S. W. 330, 331, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 619.

Under anti-trust law of 1903 (Laws 1903, c. 94), defining a "trust" as a combination of capital by two or more persons to create restrictions in trade or the free pursuit of any business, and defining a "conspiracy" in restraint of trade as an agreement between two or more persons to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person any article of merchandise, a petition, which alleges that a manufacturer of farm implements and vehicles entered into a contract with a dealer therein whereby the manufacturer agreed to give the dealer the exclusive sale of its product, and whereby the dealer agreed not to buy or sell any other makes of like goods, and that the manufacturer and dealer carried the contract into execution to the injury of the people, charges a violation. State v. Racine Sattley Co. (Tex.) 134 S. W. 400, 403.

An agreement by the seller of a cotton gin and gristmill not to re-engage in that business so long as the purchasers operated it was not in violation of Laws 1903, c. 94, defining a "trust" as a combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons, and prohibiting combinations to abstain from engaging in or continuing in business. Malakoff Gin Co. v. Riddlesperger (Tex.) 133 S. W. 519, 522.

An agreement whereby plaintiff was to give defendant the sole and exclusive right to sell certain automobiles and supplies in a fixed territory for a given length of time is not in violation of Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 7796, defining a "trust" as a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons for specified purposes; there being no combination in this case. Nickels v. Prewitt Auto Co. (Tex.) 149 S. W. 1094, 1095.

Under Code 1892, § 4437, defining a "trust" as a combination or agreement between two or more persons, corporations, or firms, inter alia, to place the control of business or the products or earnings thereof in the hands of trustees, or to delegate the control or management of the business of the combining or contracting parties to any other persons than themselves and their proper agents and employes, and after having enumerated the various kinds of contracts which it denominates "trusts," declaring them inimical to the public welfare, the test of a trust and the essentials to its existence is that the contract or combination be, on account of its actual result, obnoxious to public policy, or be in itself and in its necessary effect inimical to the public welfare. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles, 37 South. 939, 942, 85 Miss. 520, 68 L. R. A. 715.

Act April 19, 1898 (93 Ohio Laws, p. 143), defining trusts and prohibiting them under penalties, declares in section 1 that a "trust" is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them, for "either, any, or all" of the following purposes, which are thereafter recited, authorizing the punishment by fine and imprisonment of a person who is an active member of, and assists in carrying out the purposes of, an association formed to prevent competition in the sale of an article of merchandise. State v. Gage, 73 N. E. 1078, 1079, 72 Ohio St. 210.

St. 1907, c. 530, was entitled an act to define a trust and to provide criminal penalties and punishment of corporations, persons, firms, and associations, or persons connected with them, and to promote full competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state. Section 1 defines a "trust" (1) as a combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons, etc., to create or carry on restrictions in trade or commerce, and (3) to prevent competition. An information charged accused as the managing agent of a meat company, pursuant to a combination and conspiracy into which they had previously entered with a butchers' association and the individual members thereof to carry out certain agreements, the effect of which would be to destroy free competition in the retail meat business in Sacramento, and in furtherance of this design compelled R., who was engaged in such business there, to pay accused and the meat company higher prices for meats than the accused and the company required the members of the association, each of whom were likewise engaged in such business, to pay for the same character of meats. Held to state all the elements of an offense within the first and third subdivisions of the law, and not defective for not alleging that the meat company, accused, or the association were able to control the meat market; the gravamen of the offense being the combination to prevent competition. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, 107 Pac. 712, 715, 12 Cal. App. 471.

Under Cobbe's St. 1907, § 12,000 (Gondring Act), declaring it to be a "trust" for two or more persons to create or carry out restrictions in trade, or to make or enter into, or carry out any contract with intent to preclude, or the tendency of which is to prevent free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the production, sale, traffic, or transportation of any article of merchandise, product, or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine, or unite any interest they have in connection with the sale, production, or transportation, that its price might in any way be affected thereby, and the anti-trust act (Laws 1905, p. 636, c. 162), declaring every contract or combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, illegal, where, on complaint by a member of a lumber dealers' association to the secretary of the association of a sale by a wholesale lumber dealer to one not a retail dealer, the secretary would demand of the wholesaler an explanation of why he had sold to one not a retail dealer, thereby in effect prohibiting a wholesaler to sell to others than a retailer under the implied threat of the destruction of his business with members of the association if he did so, the acts of the secretary were such as to stifle competition and to operate in restraint of trade, and were unlawful, and the officers and directors of the association whose duty it was to know what the secretary was doing, and how he was managing the affairs of the association, and who had frequent meetings at his office, which was the office of the association, were chargeable with knowledge of his acts, though they did not actively participate therein and the secretary, the association and its officers will be restrained from a continuance of such unlawful practice. State v. Adams Lumber Co., 116 N. W. 302, 312, 81 Neb. 392.

By the act of 1897 combinations to prevent competition in insurance or to settle the price thereof are declared to be a trust. The words "trade and business" in this act are intended as a generic term embracing all the transactions and practices mentioned in the act; and the term "trust" is properly made to include combinations or contracts in restraint of competition in insurance. State v. American Surety Co., 135 N. W. 365, 366, 91 Neb. 22, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 973.

TRUST COMPANY

In New Jersey legislative usage recognizes safe deposit and trust companies as "trust companies." The title of an act, entitled "An act concerning trust companies," expresses its object to be legislation regulating, not only trust companies incorporated under that designation, but also companies organized under the "act for the incorporation of safe deposit and trust companies." State v. Twining, 64 Atl. 1073, 1075, 73 N. J. Law, 683.

The term "trust company," as used in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 81, § 164, imposing an annual tax on the gross receipts of every "trust company," may be regarded as nomen generalissimum for financial and promoting companies. For the purposes of the tax law it may be given its accepted and ordinary meaning, by holding to be appropriate to such corporation all kinds of business which fairly fall within the powers usually found in the charters of such companies or currently conducted by them. State v. Central Trust Co., 67 Atl. 267, 270, 106 Md. 268.

TRUST DEED

As perpetuity, see Perpetuity.

Note secured by as estate, see Estate.

The use of the phrase "deed of trust" in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a deed of trust by which a debt is secured shall, for the purpose of taxation, be treated as an interest in property, had reference to those deeds of trust in common use which answer the purpose, and have many of the attributes, of a strict mortgage on realty. Bank of Woodland v. Pierce, 77 Pac. 1012, 1013, 144 Cal. 434.

The phrase "deeds of trust," within the statute requiring the filing with the complaint of an affidavit setting forth a statement of subsisting mortgages, deeds of trust, and other liens, refers to deeds of trust given as security. Charles A. Warren Co. v. San Francisco Savings Union, 96 Pac. 807, 809, 153 Cal. 771.

A "deed of trust" is not a lien, within Civ. Code, § 2872, nor an incumbrance, within Civ. Code, § 1114, so that a claim secured thereby should be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate of a decedent, under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, declaring that, if there be subsisting liens or incumbrances on the homestead of a decedent, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate. Weber v. McCleverty, 86 Pac. 706, 708, 149 Cal. 316.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 865, 866, providing that the grantee of realty subject to a trust acquires a legal estate except as against the trustee, a "trust deed" is substantially a mortgage with power of sale, and the trustor is the holder of the legal title, entitled to exercise the ordinary incidents of ownership subject to the execution of the trust. Hollywood Lumber Co. v. Love, 100 Pac. 698, 699, 155 Cal. 270.

"A 'deed of trust' is but a power, coupled, perhaps, with an interest." The power is irrevocable, and does not cease on the death of the mortgagor. Frank v. Colonial & U. S. Mortgage Co., Ltd., 38 South. 340, 341, 86 Miss. 103, 70 L. R. A. 135, 4 Ann. Cas. 541 (citing Walker v. Brungard (Miss.) 13 Smedes & M. 723; Hyde v. Warren, 46 Miss. 29).

A mortgage or "deed of trust" in the nature of a mortgage is intended as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of some collateral act, and becomes void upon such payment or performance. A "mortgage" does not invest the mortgagee with an absolute and indefeasible title. The equitable title, called the "equity of redemption," remains in the mortgagor. The mortgage is a security for the debt, and creates a lien upon the property in favor of the creditor. There is no difference in legal effect between a mortgage with a power of sale and a deed of trust executed to secure a debt, where the power of sale is placed in a third person. Both are securities for a debt. Both create specific liens on the property; and in both the equitable title or right of redemption remains in the debtor, and is an estate or interest in the property that the debtor may sell, or that may be seized and sold under judicial process by his other creditors, subject to the lien created by the mortgage or deed of trust. The owner of a sawmill property, including the mill, machinery, and logs and lumber, the personalty being subject to a chattel mortgage, entered into a contract with the chattel mortgagee by which he purported to convey and transfer to said mortgagee all of the property, both personal and real, with authority to take possession and to operate the mill, and to sell any and all of the property; the owner agreeing to execute conveyances of the same as required by him. In consideration of such contract the grantee agreed to pay certain indebtedness of the owner, including his own, and to apply to that purpose all sums received from the operation of the mill or sales of the property, after deducting expenses, the surplus, if any, to be paid over to the grantor. Held, that such contract was not a mortgage, but a trust agreement or deed, which vested the absolute title to the property in the grantee, and that it avoided a policy of insurance, previously issued to the grantor on the property, containing a provision that it should be void if his interest in the property should be or become other than unconditional and sole ownership. Brecht v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co., 153 Fed. 452, 455 (quoting and adopting definitions in Ladd v. Johnson, 40 Pac. 756; 32 Or. 195, 200; Bartlett v. Teah, 1 Fed. 768; Burrill, Assignm. § 2, and citing Appolos v. Brady, 49 Fed. 401, 1 C. C. A. 209; Richmond v. Mississippi Mills, 11 S. W. 930, 52 Ark. 30, 4 L. R. A. 413; Robson v. Tomlinson, 15 S. W. 456, 54 Ark. 229; State, to Use of Holliday, v. Benoist, 37 Mo. 501; Bank v. Crittenden, 23 N. W. 646, 648, 66 Iowa, 240, 241; Sablchi v. Chase, 41 Pac. 29, 108 Cal. 81; Monteith v. Hogg, 20 Pac. 327, 17 Or. 270).

TRUST EX MALEFICIO

See, also, Trustee ex Maleficio.

A "trust ex maleficio" arises on account of the fraud or misconduct of the trustee in taking title, or by virtue of some illegal act upon his part. Rogers v. Richards, 74 Pac. 255, 256, 67 Kan. 706.

A "trust ex maleficio" arises whenever a person acquires the legal title to property of another by means of an intentional false or fraudulent verbal promise to hold the same for a certain purpose, and, having thus obtained the title, retains and claims the property as his own. Chadwick v. Arnold, 95 Pac. 527, 530, 34 Utah, 48.

Where a trust is impressed upon devised property to enforce the performance of a promise to the testator subject to which it was intended to be devised. It is upon the ground of fraud in holding the property free from the effect of the promise, from which a "trust ex maleficio" arises. Powell v. Yearance, 67 Atl. 892, 896, 73 N. J. Eq. 117 (citing Williams v. Vreeland, 32 N. J. Eq. 136; In re Will of O'Hara, 95 N. Y. 403, 47 Am. Rep. 53).

TRUST FUND

The emergency fund of a fraternal beneficiary corporation existing under Rev. Laws, c. 119, authorizing such a corporation to create an emergency fund for use for the payment of benefits only, is a "trust fund"; and when a beneficiary has established his right to a death benefit, the corporation comes under a fiduciary relation to the beneficiary, as one of the persons entitled to a share in the emergency fund. Attorney General v. Su- preme Council, American Legion of Honor, 92 N. E. 138, 139, 206 Mass. 158.

Testatrix provided that in a certain contingency the trustee should pay over "all the aforesaid trust funds," mentioned in certain paragraphs of the will, to a corporation named. Held, that the words "trust funds" meant trust estates, and not trust moneys. Young v. Du Bois, 113 N. Y. Supp. 456, 457, 60 Misc. Rep. 381.

Property of corporation

The "trust fund doctrine" is the rule that the property of a corporation is a trust fund for the payment of creditors, but such property can be called a trust fund "only by way of analogy or metaphor." As between the corporation itself and its creditors it is a simple debtor, and as between its creditors and stockholders its assets are in equity a fund for the payment of its debts. McIver v. Young Hardware Co., 57 S. E. 169, 171, 144 N. C. 478, 119 Am. St. Rep. 970. See, also, Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America, 55 Atl. 259, 262, 65 N. J. Eq. 258.

While stockholders holding stock paid for by overvalued property would be liable to existing creditors under the equitable principle known as the "trust fund" theory of capital stock, the rule does not apply to subsequent creditors who had knowledge of the fraudulent issue of the stock when they extended the credit. Johnson v. Tennessee Oil, etc., Co., 69 Atl. 788, 791, 74 N. J. Eq. 32.

The assessable stock and the assets of a corporation constitute a "trust fund," not only for the benefit of existing, but also for future, creditors. Clark v. E. C. Clark Mach. Co., 115 N. W. 416, 419, 151 Mich. 416 (citing American Steel & Wire Co. v. Eddy, 89 N. W. 952, 130 Mich. 266; Peninsular Savings Bank of Detroit v. Black Flag Stove Polish Co., 63 N. W. 514, 105 Mich. 535; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203).

TRUST IN INVITUM

A "trust in invitum" is raised in favor of the owner of property by another stealing it and converting it into money. Lightfoot v. Davis, 91 N. E. 582, 585, 198 N. Y. 261, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 119, 139 Am. St. Rep. 817, 19 Ann. Cas. 747.

Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equitable Jurisprudence (section 1044), uses the term "trust in invitum," and the learned author well describes how and why the court of equity has resorted to this fiction to facilitate its peculiar jurisdiction and to work out justice in peculiar cases. In every instance where the court creates this quasi trust relation, it must find either actual fraud or some unconscientious conduct. In such case the court will fasten upon the property in the hands of the offending party and will convert him into a trustee of the legal title. In re Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Co., 159 Fed. 268, 269.

TRUST PROPERTY

As property, see Property.

TRUST RECEIPT

The "trust receipt" plan is an arrangement whereby a domestic importer, wishing to import goods from a foreign country, secures a bank or other person which will accept drafts drawn on it for the payment of the imported goods, and to which the bill of lading and other papers are sent, and on receipt of which the goods are turned over to the importer on the execution of a "trust receipt" agreeing to hold the goods in trust for the one advancing the money or, if sold, to pay the proceeds to such person. In re E. Reboulin Fils & Co., 165 Fed. 245, 246; In re Dunlap Carpet Co., 206 Fed. 726, 730 (citing Century Throwing Co. v. Muller, 197 Fed. 252, 116 C. C. A. 614; In re Cattus, 183 Fed. 733, 106 C. C. A. 171; In re Coe, 169 Fed. 1002; Id., 183 Fed. 745, 106 C. C. A. 181); Munroe v. Philadelphia Warehouse Co., 75 Fed. 545-547.

TRUSTEE

See Board of Trustees; Involuntary Trustee; Person Holding Stock as Trustee; Substituted Trustee.

"A 'trustee,' in the widest meaning of the term, may be defined to be a person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another." Jones v. Byrne, 149 Fed. 457, 463; McKeigue v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 110 N. W. 384, 385, 130 Wis. 543, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148, 118 Am. St. Rep. 1038, 10 Ann. Cas. 551.

A "trustee," in the widest meaning of the term is "a person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another," including bailees, factors, and agents, whose duties in their fiduciary capacity are recognized and enforced at common law. Haggerty v. Badkin, 66 Atl. 420, 421, 72 N. J. Eq. 473 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hill, Trustees, p. 1, and citing and adopting Willis, Trustees, p. 1, and Perry, Trustees, § 1). And the term includes executors, administrators, guardians, receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, factors, bailees, and agents, and all persons vested with the title or control of property and charged with fiduciary duties in relation thereto for the benefit of another; and beneficiaries of trust property, who are sui juris and whose rights are vested, may deal with and convey their equitable interests in the trust property, and the trustee will be required to convey the legal estate in accordance therewith, if such action be not contrary to the terms of the trust. McKeigue v. Chicago N. W. R. Co., 110 N. W. 384, 385, 130 Wis. 543, 11 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 148, 118 Am. St. Rep. 1038, 10 Ann. Cas. 554 (citing Hill, Trustees, § 41, 1 Lewin, Trusts [1st Am. Ed.] 491, 2 Lewin, Trusts, pp. 684, 692).

Code Civ. Proc. § 2514 defines a "trustee" as any person designated by will or any competent authority to execute a trust created by will. Runk v. Thomas, 94 N. E. 363, 367, 200 N. Y. 447.

In equity, a "trustee" is regarded in the light of an instrument or agent for the cestui que trust, and the authority confided to him is in the nature of a power. Insurance Co. of Tennessee v. Waller, 95 S. W. 811, 815, 116 Tenn. 1, 115 Am. St. Rep. 763, 7 Ann. Cas. 1078 (citing Gridley v. Wynant [U. S.] 23 How. 500, 16 L. Ed. 411).

In a statute providing that, where persons holding stock as executor, administrator, guardian, or "trustee," or in any other representative or fiduciary capacity, may represent the same at all meetings, the word "trustee" means trustees who have the same sort of interest that executors, administrators, and guardians have. Warren v. Pim, 59 Atl. 773, 784, 66 N. J. Eq. 353.

The powers of a "trustee" are only such as the settlor or testator confers in his deed or will, and if he provides that the trustee may sell, but shall not incumber or mortgage, that direction is the supreme rule by which the trustee is bound, and whatever the trustee does in disregard of this direction cannot bind the estate committed to him. Kenworthy v. Levi, 63 Atl. 690, 691, 214 Pa. 235.

W. deeded land to J., as trustee, with power to mortgage it. J. gave a mortgage beginning, "I, J., as I am trustee" under a deed from W., by virtue of the power in said deed, in consideration of $2,800, convey said land, with the condition that, if he pay to the said grantee said sum, the deed, and a note signed by him, whereby he promised to pay said sum, should be void, and with the covenant that he would observe the terms of said condition. J. gave a note, whereby he promised to pay the $2,800, signed "J., trustee." Held, that as the deed of W. gave no power to J. to make a personal promise on behalf of the beneficiaries or trustor, and as Civ. Code, § 2267, providing that a trustee is a general agent for the trust property, that his authority is such as is conferred on him by the declaration of trust and by this chapter, and none other, and that his acts, within the scope of his authority, bind the trust property to the same extent as the acts of an agent bind his principal, gives no such power, and as the note or mortgage contained no stipulation relieving him from personal liability, or requiring the lender to look to the mortgaged property alone as security, he was personally liable on the note. Hall v. Jameson, 91 Pac. 518, 520, 151 Cal. 606, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190, 121 Am. St. Rep. 137.

As descriptio personæ

The addition of the word "trustee" after one's signature is merely descriptio personæ. Coaling Coal & Coke Co. v. Howard, 61 S. E. 987, 988, 130 Ga. 807, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1051.

And where a bishop held title to the property of the diocese as trustee in accordance with the rules of the church, and for the purpose of raising money for the benefit of a congregation indorsed the note of the congregation as an irregular indorser, with the word "trustee" after his name, he being authorized in his representative capacity to bind the property to the diocese, he was entitled to show, by parol, that he intended to sign in his representative capacity only, and that the payee and indorsee had knowledge of the fact, and that the addition of the word "trustee" was not mere descriptio personæ. American Trust Co. v. Canevin, 184 Fed. 657, 659, 107 C. C. A. 543.

The word "trustee," signed to a deed, is not a mere descriptio personæ, but is an essential feature of the deed, for the purpose of putting on inquiry persons thereafter dealing with such trustee in relation to the deed. Flitcraft v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 60 Atl. 557, 559, 211 Pa. 114.

The word "trustee," added to a party's name in a written instrument, is sufficient to put the purchaser on inquiry as to all the terms and conditions under which it may have been executed. McLeod v. Despain, 90 Pac. 492, 497, 92 Pac. 1088, 49 Or. 536, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1066.

The word "trustee," following the name of the grantee in a deed, is notice that he is not the owner of the property, and is sufficient to put all subsequent purchasers from him on inquiry as to the existence and nature of the trust. Sternfels v. Watson, 139 Fed. 505, 507.

When dealing with equitable considerations, the affixing of the term "trustee" to the name of an assignee imports that he holds for the benefit of another. Farrington v. Stucky, 165 Fed. 325, 328, 91 C. C. A. 311.

The word "trustee," following the name of a grantee in a deed, is notice sufficient to put those dealing with him concerning the property on inquiry as to the existence and nature of the trust. Snyder v. Collier, 123 N. W. 1023, 1025, 85 Neb. 552, 133 Am. St. Rep. 682.

An instrument vesting title in one as trustee, without showing on its face the nature of the trust or the name of the beneficiary, vests the fee in the grantee; the word "trustee" being considered as descriptive of the person. Sansom v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co., 139 S. W. 778, 144 Ky. 555.

A conveyance to a person named, followed by the word "trustee," and to his heirs and assigns, is an absolute conveyance, and the grantee has unlimited power to convey; the word "trustee" being merely descriptive. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Fallon, 91 N. Y. Supp. 497, 498, 101 App. Div. 187.

The word "trustee," in an indorsement of a certificate of deposit, is express notice to a purchaser that there is a cestui que trust or beneficiary, and that his rights may not be sacrificed by the trustee in the sale or pledge of the certificate for his own benefit. Ford v. H. C. Brown & Co., 88 S. W. 1036, 1038, 1039, 114 Tenn. 467, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

Where a man and wife purchased lands with community funds, and the lands were conveyed to a third person as trustee, the word "trustee" after his name was not sufficient to create a trust for any specific purpose, and even if it did so the purchasers from him would only be required to determine the nature of his trust, and if found to be for convenience of the transfer, or for the purpose of sale, they would acquire the full legal and equitable title. Davidson v. Mantor, 89 Pac. 167, 168, 45 Wash. 660.

A contract for the sale of land, describing the vendees as "trustees," without more, prima facie, implies a trust in favor of an undisclosed beneficiary. Maffet v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 80 Pac. 489, 495, 46 Or. 443.

Where defendant set apart money of his own to the amount invested in certain of the installment stock of a loan association, and procured the stock to be issued in the names of his children, respectively, adding his own name as "trustee," and on the maturity of the stock took the check payable to himself as "trustee" for each of the interested children, and invested the proceeds in bank stock for the benefit of his children, and received stock as "trustee" for each of them, and in his own books opened an account between himself as "trustee" for the children and himself individually, declaring that as trustee he held certain shares in the bank, and afterwards received dividends on the stock as trustee, but put the money in his own individual account, from which he paid taxes on the stock and subsequently purchased additional shares, partly with the money belonging to the trust fund and partly with his own money, and on the failure of the bank charged "profit and loss" with the difference between the amount advanced and the amount received in dividends, etc., such acts constituted an irrevocable "trust" of the shares for the benefit of the children. Fowler v. Gowing, 152 Fed. 801, 814 (citing Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115; Duncan v. Jaudon, 15 Wall. [82 U. S.] 165, 21 L. Ed. 142).

Agent

A trustee may be called an "agent" in the instrument creating him, or by any other similar designation. Johnson v. Cook, 50 S. E. 367, 368, 122 Ga. 524.

Under Civ. Code, § 2219, making one who voluntarily assumes a relation of personal confidence with another a "trustee," and, under section 2229, prohibiting use of trust property by the trustee for his own benefit, if defendant, in purchasing bonds as decedent's agent and with decedent's money, received from the sellers, in consideration of the purchase, a stock bonus and did not account for it to decedent, he was chargeable with it as trustee. Bone v. Hayes, 99 Pac. 172, 174, 154 Cal. 759.

Directors of corporation

Directors of a bank are, in a certain sense, undoubtedly to be considered "trustees," but only in that sense in which an agent or bailee intrusted with the care and management of property is considered a trustee. A director more nearly resembles a managing partner. Stone v. Rottman, 82 S. W. 76, 82, 183 Mo. 552.

Directors of a national bank, while implied trustees, are not technically "trustees"; and hence directors who had ceased to be such prior to the bank's failure can plead limitations as a defense to a suit by the receiver to recover losses sustained, by their malfeasance or gross negligence. Emerson v. Gaither, 64 Atl. 26, 31, 103 Md. 564, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 7 Ann. Cas. 1114.

As employer

Executors and administrators

A "trustee" is one in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property is vested for the benefit of another; and, while an executor is a trustee in the broadest sense, he is not a trustee in the general acceptance of the term. In re Hibbler's Estate, 78 Atl. 188, 189, 78 N. J. Eq. 217.

An "administrator" is the trustee of the creditors. He represents the creditors, and not the deceased. Succession of Delaneville v. Duhe, 38 South. 20, 22, 114 La. 62 (citing Succession of Harkins, 2 La. Ann. 923; Judson v. Connolly, 4 La. Ann. 169). See, also, Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 287, 196 Mo. 587.

Police pension board

Act Cal. March 4, 1889, provides for a police pension fund, by directing that certain public money shall be set apart in the custody of the city treasurer, and styles the board of management "trustees," and those entitled to its benefits "beneficiaries." Section 7 of the act gives a widow of a deceased member of the police department, on conditions specified, a designated sum from the fund; and section 14 provides that on the last day of June in each year the surplus of the fund exceeding the average amount per year paid out on account of the fund during three years next preceding shall become a part of the general fund of the municipality. Held, that the board charged with the management of the fund are not "trustees" under an express trust for the persons entitled thereto, and limitations begin to run from the time of the accrual of a right to a pension, and not from the repudiation of the claim by the board; and a widow of a policeman, who waited over five years after his death before demanding her pension, was barred by limitations. Nicols v. Board of Police Pension Fund Com'rs, 82 Pac. 557, 558, 1 Cal. App. 494.

Public officer

Public revenues are but trust funds, and the officers but "trustees" for its administration for the people, so that the defense of voluntary payment has no application in case of payment of an excessive amount to the officer. State v. Young, 110 N. W. 292, 297, 134 Iowa, 505, 13 Ann. Cas. 345 (quoting and adopting the definition in Allegheny County v. Grier, 36 Atl. 353, 179 Pa. 639).

A settlement of a treasurer of the courthouse fund of a county, made with the commissioner appointed by the county court and confirmed, is conclusive except for fraud or mistake, though the commissioner first relied on the treasurer's books, and, after the settlement, the treasurer is merely a debtor for the amount found in his hands, and not a trustee therefor within Ky. St. § 2543 (Russell's St. § 209), so as to prevent the running of limitations in his favor, so that a proceeding to surcharge the settlement on the ground of fraud or mistake must be brought within the time prescribed by statute. Boyd's Ex'r v. Laurel County, 131 S. W. 171, 172, 140 Ky. 430.

Congress, by the acts of March 3, 1791, and May 1, 1810, confirmed the claim of the inhabitants of a town to certain lands as commons. The state Legislature by the Acts of January 4, 1827, and February 17, 1841 (Laws 1841, p. 65), authorized the election of a supervisor with certain duties in reference to the commons. By Act Feb. 14, 1855 (Priv. Laws 1855, p. 199), and Act March 21, 1874 (Laws 1873-74, p. 67), the supervisor was authorized to plat and survey the commons and sell the same when authorized by an election to do so, and to hold the money received for certain purposes and to invest the principal in bonds, mortgages, etc., on giving bond. In accordance with the statute, a sale of the commons was ordered, a supervisor appointed for two years, and he was re-elected five times, and in each term gave bond, the sureties on which bonds were different persons. Held, that the supervisor, though he gave bond and was called supervisor, was a "trustee" as to the funds collected for the town inhabitants, and hence a bill to require him to account for moneys misappropriated extending through his entire term was a proper subject of equity jurisdiction. People v. Bordeaux, 89 N. E. 971, 972, 242 Ill. 327.

Referee

Code, § 1312, provides that every inhabitant of the state shall list for the assessor all property subject to taxation in the state, of which he is the owner or has the control or management in the manner herein directed—the property of one under disability by the person having charge thereof, that of a married woman by herself or husband, that of a beneficiary for whom the property is held in trust by the trustee, and the personal property of a decedent by the executor or administrator, or, if there is none, by any person interested therein, etc., Held, that a referee appointed by the court as commissioner to sell property in partition proceedings is not a "trustee" controlling and managing the property within the meaning of the section, and is not personally liable for taxes on contracts made by him for the sale of the lands, since he does not hold or use either the property or the contracts with a view to investing, loaning, or in any way deriving any pecuniary profit for himself or the beneficial owners. In re Boyd, 116 N. W. 700, 702, 138 Iowa, 583, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1220.

Warehouseman

A warehouseman is a "trustee," within the meaning of Laws 1905, c. 35, § 55, cl. "d" (Code 1906, § 739), making it the duty of every person having custody of personal property as trustee to list it for taxation in the name of the owner; but such custodian is not personally chargeable with the property for the purpose of taxation if he lists it for that purpose in the name of the owner on the request of the assessor. Hannis Distilling Co. v. Berkeley County Court, 71 S. E. 576, 579, 69 W. Va. 426.

TRUSTEE DE SON TORT

Where the life beneficiary of trust property, whose husband is the trustee, has knowledge of the trust, acknowledges it, and voluntarily intermeddles with the possession, management, and disposition of the estate, taking part of it into her possession, she becomes a "trustee de son tort," and her representatives are estopped to deny her equal and continuous accountability with the trustee with respect to what she had taken into her own possession, in a suit by the remaindermen to recover for her conversion of part of the estate. Putnam v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., 83 N. E. 789, 794, 191 N. Y. 166.

TRUSTEE EX MALEFICIO

See, also, Trust Ex Maleficio.

One who knowingly takes title to property subject to a trust is a "trustee ex maleficio." Elliott v. Landis Mach. Co., 139 S. W. 356, 360, 236 Mo. 546.

Where plaintiff employed defendant as his agent to purchase certain property, and defendant, falsely representing to the seller that it was necessary that he should take title temporarily, wrongfully procured the deed to be made in his own name, he held title as a "trustee ex maleficio," and was liable at the suit of plaintiff to be compelled to convey. Harrison v. Craven, 87 S. W. 962, 966, 188 Mo. 590.

It is a general rule that any one wrongfully possessed of an estate becomes a "trustee ex maleficio," and is answerable to the party injured as cestui que trust; and so, where a bank receives money wrongfully, a trust arises between it and the true owner. Whitcomb v. Carpenter, 111 N. W. 825, 827, 134 Iowa, 227, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 928.

TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY

As aggrieved party, see Aggrieved Party.
As creditor, see Creditor.

As legal representative, see Legal Representative.

As officer, see Officer.

As purchaser, see Purchaser.

As trustee of express trust, see Trustee of Express Trust.

The "trustee in bankruptcy" is the hand of the court. He stands as its agent to liquidate the assets, to protect them, and to bring them before the court for final distribution. He is not, in fact, more representative of one creditor or claimant than another. The trustee, in the procedure, because he has the legal title to the assets, and is charged with the duty of saving and protecting them, represents the general fund. He is not a purchaser, but, as the title of his office imports, he is trustee for all who have interests and according to those interests. He himself has no interest, and there is nothing in his representation which stands between the court and those who have interests, for the recognition and protection of which they appeal to its authority. In re Ducker, 134 Fed. 43, 47, 67 C. C. A. 117.

"A 'trustee in bankruptcy' is defined by the bankrupt act as an officer, and is, in a certain restricted sense, an officer of the court; but he is not an officer of the court in any such sense as a receiver. He takes the legal title to the property, and in respect to suits stands in the same general position as a trustee of an express trust or an executor." Tiger Shoe Mfg. Co.'s Trustee v. Shanklin, 102 S. W. 295, 296, 125 Ky. 715, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365 (quoting and approving the definition in Re Smith, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 603, 121 Fed. 1014).

A "trustee in bankruptcy" is an officer of the court, and is appointed for the purpose of acting for the interests of all the creditors, without favor or partiality. No contract between him and a creditor should be upheld which is calculated to improperly influence his action, or which would tend to make it to his interest to favor one creditor over another. A contract between him and a creditor, whereby the latter agreed, in consideration of the trustee's acceptance of the appointment, to pay him a sum equal to the difference between a certain per cent. on the entire proceeds of the sale and the compensation which he would receive under the statute, is void. Devries v. Orem, 65 Atl. 430, 431, 104 Md. 648.

A "trustee in bankruptcy" is an officer of the court, and cannot be subjected to suits by the purchaser of personal property belonging to the estate without leave of the bankruptcy court. Carney v. Averill, 85 Atl. 494, 496, 110 Me. 172.

One elected to be "trustee in bankruptcy" does not become a "trustee" in fact until approval by the referee or judge of the selection; and General Order XIII (89 Fed. vii, 32 C. C. A. xvii), which makes a trustee removable by a judge only, does not prevent an appointment by the referee, on his disapproval of the creditors' choice and their neglect or refusal to make another choice. In re Kellar, 192 Fed. 830, 832, 113 C. C. A. 154.

TRUSTEE OF EXPRESS TRUST

According to Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 134, a "trustee of an express trust" is a person with whom or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another. Cousar v. Heath, 61 S. E. 973, 975, 80 S. C. 466.

One who, in concert with other persons, obtained franchises for the construction of street railways in a city, and, before incorporating, tore up certain existing railways, and contracted, on behalf of himself and those associated with him, to sell certain of the material so torn up, is a "trustee of an express trust," within the meaning of a statute authorizing such a trustee to sue in his own name. Nelson v. Hirsch & Sons' Iron & Rail Co., 77 S. W. 590, 594, 102 Mo. App. 498.

Agent

A person executing a lease in his own name, as owner, may maintain unlawful detainer, as "trustee of an express trust," within Civ. Code, § 5, without joining the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. Houck v. Williams, 81 Pac. 800, 34 Colo. 138.

Factor

A factor is not a "trustee of an express trust," in the strict sense of the term, but he is a "trustee," under Rev. St. 1898, § 2607, defining a trustee of an express trust to include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another.

Beardsley v. Schmidt, 98 N. W. 235, 237, 120 Wis. 405, 102 Am. St. Rep. 991.

Grantee

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4825, providing that a "trustee of an express trust" may sue without joining the person for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted, one to whom property has been deeded without consideration, and merely to hold title for the grantors and to convey as they might direct, is a proper person to bring an action to quiet title against an assignee of a satisfied mortgage on such property, executed by such grantors prior to the execution of the deed. Carr v. Cohn, 87 Pac. 926, 927, 44 Wash. 586.

Where a deed to a city for a money consideration recited that the grantee should hold the land for burial purposes and no other, and after an abandonment of such purpose the grantors sued in equity for a reconveyance and accounting or an injunction, the fact that complainants were nonresidents was of no avail to them as against the 10-year statute of limitations. The city could not be regarded as a "trustee of an express trust," in order to save complainants from the bar of the statute. Thornton v. City of Natchez, 41 South. 498, 501, 88 Miss. 1.

Guardian

A guardian is not a "trustee of an express trust" within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 252, providing that a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. Campbell v. Fichter, 81 N. E. 661, 662, 168 Ind. 645, 11 Ann. Cas. 1089.

Where plaintiff, as the general guardian of an infant, loaned certain of the infant's funds to defendants, taking from them a note and certain stock as collateral, and, at the special instance and request of defendant D., plaintiff delivered the collateral to him to sell for not less than the amount of the loan, after which D., pursuant to a conspiracy with the other defendants, converted the collateral, plaintiff was entitled to sue on the note, and to have the collateral or its proceeds declared a trust fund for plaintiff's benefit, as "trustee of an express trust." Schlieder v. Wells, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1000, 1001, 114 App. Div. 417 (citing Thomas v. Bennett [N. Y.] 56 Barb. 197; Bayer v. Phillips, 10 Civ. Proc. R. [N. Y.] 227).

Husband

Where a husband, with his wife's knowledge and consent, and in her presence, entered into a contract for the construction of buildings on her land, he was a "trustee," and entitled to sue in his own name for the breach of the contract, under a statute providing that a trustee of an express trust may sue in his own name without joining the beneficiary, and declaring that a person in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another shall be regarded as a "trustee of an express trust." Simons v. Wittmann, 88 S. W. 791, 797, 113 Mo. App. 357.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 251, provides that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as provided in section 252, which provides that a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, and that a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of the section shall include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another. Held, that the word "contract" is not used in a restricted sense, but applies to any kind of contract, and where one as agent was carrying on a jewelry business for his wife and sold jewelry to a third person, taking a note therefor secured by a chattel mortgage as his wife's agent, he was a "trustee of an express trust" as to his wife, and could sue for collection of the note and foreclosure of the mortgage without joining his wife as a party plaintiff. Owen v. Harriott, '94 N. E. 591, 593, 47 Ind. App. 359.

Partner

A managing partner, or one authorized by joint contract to represent his joint co-party, is not a "trustee of an express trust," within Code Civ. Proc. § 449, authorizing suit by the trustee of an express trust without the joinder of the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. Natter v. Isaac H. Blanchard Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 969, 972, 153 App. Div. 814.

Rev. St. 1899, § 541 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 578), providing that a "trustee of an express trust," within the meaning of the section shall be construed to include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, enlarges instead of restricts the meaning of the phrase "trustee of an express trust," so as to include, not only those who are such trustees under the ordinary rules of equity, but those in whose names contracts are made for the benefit of third persons. Where a lease was taken in plaintiff's name for the benefit of himself and another, and thereafter an interest was assigned to a third person, plaintiff held the leasehold as trustee of an express trust for himself and his partners, and was therefore entitled to sue alone in his own name for a breach of the lessor's covenant of quiet enjoyment, under Rev. St. 1899, § 541 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 578), declaring that a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted. Geer v. Boston Little Circle Zinc Co., 103 S. W. 151, 153, 126 Mo. App. 173 (citing Pomeroy, Code Rem. [4th Ed.] § 100 et seq.; Weaver v. Trustees of Wabash & E. Canal, 28 Ind. 112, 119; Snider v. Adams Exp. Co., 77 Mo. 523).

Payee

One who holds a draft made payable to himself is a "trustee of an express trust," and may maintain an action thereon in his own name against the acceptor of such draft, even if he has no beneficial interest in the proceeds. Eagle Mining & Imp. Co. v. Lund, 94 Pac. 949, 950, 14 N. M. 417.

Taxpayer

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 252, provides that a trustee of an express trust, etc., may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, and that "a 'trustee of an express trust,' within the meaning of this section, shall be construed to include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another." In an action by a private taxpayer as relator in the name of the state, and also in his individual capacity, on the bond of a county treasurer, alleging the refusal of the county officers to sue, relator is not a trustee of an express trust. State ex rel. Stuart v. Holt (Ind.) 70 N. E. 387, 388.

Trustee

A trustee in bankruptcy, maintaining an action in his own name as trustee for the use and benefit of the estate he represents, is a "trustee of an express trust," within the statute providing that an executor, administrator, guardian, or "trustee of an express trust" may bring an action without joining the person for whose benefit it is prosecuted. West v. Bank of LaHoma, 86 Pac. 59, 60, 16 Okl. 508.

The creditors, trustees, and the debtor entered into an agreement by which the debtor was to make stated payments to the trustees and to turn over certain life insurance policies, and the creditors agreed to forbear prosecution of their claims. Held, that the trustees are "trustees of an express trust," within Code Civ. Proc. § 449, and required to distribute the funds as provided for in the agreement, and, on default of the debtor to make the payments, could maintain an action against him. Heppenstall v. Baudouine, 113 N. Y. Supp. 849, 851, 60 Misc. Rep. 620.

TRUTHFULLY DISCLOSED

The state anti-trust law provides that, under penalty of fines, a corporation must answer under oath inquiries as to whether it is violating the provisions of such act, provided that no one "shall be subject to any criminal prosecution by reason of anything truthfully disclosed." Held that, since the act could only apply to acts done within the state, the response to inquiries need not disclose acts done outside the state, to which the laws of other states could alone apply, and therefore the immunity from criminal prosecution was not too narrow, so as to render the act unconstitutional, because it did not cover prosecutions by another state. As the act could not cover trusts founded in regard to interstate commerce, the response to inquiries need not cover acts in relation thereto, to which alone federal laws could apply, and the act was not unconstitutional, because not granting immunity from prosecution under the federal laws. The words "truthfully disclosed" mean only that, it being assumed that the answer made under oath is truthful, no disclosure made therein shall be the basis of criminal action against the affiant, and are not meant as a condition to the immunity from prosecution granted by the statute, and therefore do not render the statute unconstitutional as granting only a limited immunity. People ex rel. Akin v. Butler St. Foundry & Iron Co., 66 N. E. 349, 352, 201 Ill. 236.

TRY

See Regularly Submit and Try.

The delay within which a recused case should be tried by the judge ad hoc begins to run from the recusation of the judge a quo, and the case is "tried," within the contemplation of the law (Acts 1880, p. 39, No. 40), although dismissed on exception of "no cause of action" filed after the default, and although, on appeal, the judgment of dismissal being reversed, it is remanded for further proceedings. In re Stewart, 43 South. 56, 118 La. 476.

A default is not a trial, and the case has not been "tried." Adams v. Howard, 14 Vt. 158, 560.

A case is not "tried," even though a counsel for defendant appears, if a default is obtained by the plaintiff. Goddard v. Fullam, 38 Vt. 75, 76.

The word "tried," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 976, providing that an issue of law may be brought and tried as a contested motion, is to be deemed as synonymous with the words "disposed of." People v. Bleecker St. & F. F. R. Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 786, 787, 67 Misc. Rep. 582.

TRY WITHOUT JURY

An equity action in which a jury is called to find part or all of the facts is not "tried without a jury," within the meaning of section 5630, Rev. Codes 1899, and is therefore not governed by that section, either as to the manner of trial in the district court or the review in the Supreme Court upon appeal. Spencer v. Beiseker, 107 N. W. 189, 191, 15 N. D. 140 (citing Peckham v. Van Bergen, 80 N. W. 759, 8 N. D. 595).

The provision in Tariff Act 1897, § 1, par. 152, 30 Stat. 163, for "steel tubes, finished," includes bottle-shaped vessels of steel, which are used in the transportation of gas, and are about four feet long and eight inches in diameter, with one end permanently closed and the other tapered to a neck. United States v. Liquid Carbonic Co., 160 Fed. 455, 456, 87 C. C. A. 671 (citing and adopting United States v. Downing, 105 Fed. 1005, 44 C. C. A. 686).

Steel cylinders, severally 19 feet in length and 4 feet in diameter and 35 feet in length and 8 feet in diameter used as storage tanks for illuminating gas, are "tubes finished," within the meaning of the Tariff Act of 1897. United States v. Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, 168 Fed. 539, 93 C. C. A. 619.

TUITION

Under Act May 23, 1907 (P. L. 202), relating to the payment to a school district, in which high school pupils resident of another district are attending, of the pro rata cost of "tuition and school books," the word "tuition" does not include the cost of fuel, light, janitor's salary, and other incidental expenses; nor does it include interest upon bonds of the school district maintaining the high school. Norristown Borough School Dist. v. Upper Merion Tp. School Dist., 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 561, 562.

A bequest of a sum of money "to pay the 'tuition' or education" of orphans or poor children under a certain age meant "to pay for the instruction or school training of orphans; that is, to pay the fee charged by teacher or school for instruction." Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 370, 196 Mo. 234.

In Laws 1893, p. 303, c. 175, giving a surviving parent authority by will or deed to dispose of the "custody and tuition" of their minor children, "custody and tuition" indicates the management of property. "Tuition" implies, not alone the instruction of the minor, but the expenditure of money for that instruction, which is one of the important duties imposed upon guardians or one charged with the control of a minor. Kellogg v. Burdick, 96 N. Y. Supp. 965, 967, 110 App. Div. 472.

TUNING

"Tuning," in wireless transmission, is a term taken from the musical art, and implies the equalization of frequencies of vibration of wave lengths. National Electric Signaling Co. v. United Wireless Telegraph Co., 189 Fed. 727, 739.

TUNNELS

As place of work, see Place.

As real property, see Real Property.

"Tunnels" are practically horizontal wells, differing from ordinary wells only in that the waters from the former find their way to the surface by gravity, while in the latter pumping must be resorted to to bring the water to the surface; both disturbing the natural flow of the subterranean waters, and both being artificial means of reaching and controlling the natural subterranean flow to develop water power. Garvey Water Co. v. Huntington Land & Improvement Co., 97 Pac. 428, 432, 154 Cal. 232.

TURF EXCHANGE

"Turf exchange," as used in a statute prohibiting the operation of a turf exchange, means a pool room or place for betting on horse races. State v. Rabb, 39 South. 971, 115 La. 733; Same v. Nease, 80 Pac. 897, 46 Or. 433; Same v. Maloney, 39 South. 539, 544, 115 La. 498.

TURKEY

As poultry, see Poultry.

An allegation that the property raffled was a "turkey" is supported by proof that it was a dead turkey. Commonwealth v. Coleman, 68 N. E. 220, 222, 184 Mass. 193.

TURN OVER

The words "turn over," in a will directing executors to "turn over and pay" the residuary estate to a trustee, are applicable to the securities comprising part of the residue. Macy v. Mercantile Trust Co., 59 Atl. 586, 590, 68 N. J. Eq. 235.

TURN STOCK

Under the statute which requires railroad companies to maintain fences sufficient to "resist horses, cattle and live stock," an instruction that a company was required to maintain one sufficient to "turn stock" was not improper; the quoted terms being synonymous. Deal v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 129 S. W. 50, 52, 144 Mo. App. 684.

TURNOUT

As side track

The words "turnouts" and "switches," in Acts Tenn. 1903, c. 216, providing that any railroad company may build turnouts and switches without altering its charter, relate to tracks in the nature of side tracks adjacent to and used in connection with another line of track, and do not refer to a track which branches off entirely from the existing line to a distant objective point. City of Memphis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 539, 106 C. C. A. 75.

A "turnout," as applied to a railway, is a short line of track having connection by means of switches with the main track. By means of it a single-track road may be used by cars moving in opposite directions, the "turnout" affording accommodations at the side of the track for one train while the other is passing over the main track at that point. It does not include an additional track, which, taken in connection with the original track and with a double-track railway with which the two tracks connected at the limits of a borough, constituted an unbroken double-track line. Borough of Bridgewater v. Beaver Valley Traction Co., 63 Atl. 796, 798, 214 Pa. 343.

TURNPIKE

"A 'turnpike' is a highway, differing neither in the responsibility for its proper maintenance nor in any other particular from an ordinary highway, save in the mode of constructing and maintaining it. An ordinary public road is maintained and repaired by taxes. A turnpike is supported and maintained by the tolls exacted. A turnpike is regarded in law as a public easement, and not as private property. Every traveler has the same right to use it, paying the toll established by law, as he would have to use any other highway." State ex rel. Hines v. Scott County Macadamized Road Co., 105 S. W. 752, 758, 207 Mo. 54, 13 Ann. Cas. 656 (quoting State ex rel. Allison v. Hannibal & R. C. Gravel Road Co., 39 S. W. 910, 138 Mo. 332, 36 L. R. A. 457).

TURNTABLE

The "turntable doctrine" is based upon the idea that a dangerous instrumentality has been constructed where children were in the habit of congregating, or at a place inviting to children, to the owner's knowledge, so that he ought to have anticipated that they would be attracted to it. Meyer v. Union Light, Heat & Power Co., 151 S. W. 941, 942, 151 Ky. 332, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136;

Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776, 168 Mo. App. 431; Brown v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 123 S. W. 298, 300, 135 Ky. 798, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717 (citing Thompson on Negligence, p. 952). See, also, Brown v. Rockwell City Canning Co., 110 N. W. 12, 13, 132 Iowa, 631. But some courts do not accept this doctrine. Conrad v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 61 S. E. 44, 45, 64 W. Va. 176, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129.

"Tuyeres" of a Bessemer converter are the channels which connect the outer walls of the furnace with the interior. Farrel v. United Verde Copper Co., 121 Fed. 551, 553.

TWELVE

An instruction permitting the jury to assess defendant's punishment for manslaughter in the first degree at "twelve months" does not amount to an instruction to fix the punishment at a "year and a day." Untrein v. State, 41 South. 285, 288, 146 Ala. 26.

In an action on a fire policy, it was not error to refuse an amendment to the petition to the effect that a stipulation in the policy that any suit thereon must be commenced within "twelve months next after the fire" meant twelve months after plaintiff was entitled to commence suit. McDaniel v. German-American Ins. Co., 67 S. E. 668, 134 Ga. 189.

Rev. St. 1899, § 6547 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3274), now Rev. St. 1909, § 7342, requiring the court in cities having more than 100,000 population to excuse from jury service a person who has served on any jury within "twelve months next preceding" his challenge, means within twelve months from the date the juror began service on the regular panel, and not twelve months next preceding the trial, so that a juror summoned for one week beginning with Monday of the week of the trial, and who had sat on juries during that week, but not within a year prior to such Monday, was not disqualified. Kaiser v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 135 S. W. 90, 91, 155 Mo. App. 428.

TWENTY

The words "twenty days' notice," as used in a statute providing for the giving of "twenty days' notice" by publication in some newspaper, but which does not specify any number of issues of the paper in which the notice shall be published, are satisfied by a publication in one issue of the paper occurring twenty days prior to the date of the meeting or other action of which the publication purports to give notice. McGilveray v. City of Lewiston, 90 Pac. 348, 352, 13 Idaho, 338.

TWENTY-ONE

The rule of the common law by which an estate devised must at all events vest within a life or life in being and twenty-one years afterward has reference to time, and not to persons; the term "life or lives in being" referring not to the persons who are to take, as testator may select as the measure of time the lives of any persons in existence, and "twenty-one years afterward" are twenty-one years in gross, without regard to the life or coming of age of any person. Hayes v. Martz, 89 N. E. 303, 305, 173 Ind. 279.

The law notes no fraction of a day. In law a man is "twenty-one years old" on the day preceding his twenty-first birthday. Hence one born on June 9, 1883, is eligible to vote on June 8, 1904. Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 295, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

TWO

Any two corporations, see Any.

The word "two," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 3971, providing that any railroad company theretofore organized shall have the power to unite its road with any other railroad constructed or in progress of construction in this state, or in any adjoining state, and merge and consolidate the stock of the respective companies, making one joint-stock company of the "two" railroads thus connected, does not limit the roads that may consolidate to two, since, as a consolidated company may re-consolidate, it would make no substantial difference whether the consolidation was accomplished by successive acts or by one concurrent agreement. Smith v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 81 N. E. 501-506, 170 Ind. 382.

Code 1896, § 2921, makes it the duty of a mine owner to have and maintain at least "two available openings" to the surface strata.

tum of coal worked. Held, that one opening, divided into two parts by a partition, does not comply with the statute, which meant that there should be two separate and distinct openings, two holes in the ground. Howells Mining Co. v. Gray, 42 South. 448, 449, 148 Ala. 535.

The expression "two years," as colloquially used, is always understood as an approximate statement, and a declaration by an applicant for an insurance policy that he has not received medical attendance within "two years" before the date of the application will be considered as used in this sense, and attendance by a physician on the applicant, beginning one year and nine months and ending one year and seven months before the application, is not necessarily a breach of warranty. Owen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 25, 26, 74 N. J. Law, 770, 122 Am. St. Rep. 413.

TWO-STORY DWELLING HOUSE

The words "two-story dwelling house," in a deed conveying a lot and providing that nothing less than a "two-story dwelling house" shall be erected thereon, mean one two-story dwelling house designed and used for a single dwelling, and the construction of a flat dwelling house intended for the use of more than one family is prohibited. Bagnall v. Young, 114 N. W. 674, 675, 151 Mich. 69.

TWO-THIRDS VOTE

Where a "two-thirds vote" or other proportion of a legislative body is described as necessary for any purpose, two-thirds of those who are present and constitute a quorum is understood, unless special terms are employed clearly indicating a different intention. Misouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Simons, 88 Pac. 551, 554, 75 Kan. 130 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] 201, note 2).

Const. 1901, § 76, requires a "vote of two-thirds of each house" for the passage of a bill at a special session of the Legislature upon a subject other than one designated in the Governor's proclamation calling the session. The final vote on an act at a special session not relating to any subject designated by the Governor was, yeas, 65, nays, 0; the membership of the House being 105. Held, that, in view of Const. § 52, which provides that "a majority of each house, shall constitute a quorum to do business," and in view of the explicit language used in instances in which an intent of the Constitution to require a stated proportion of the entire membership of each house or of the Legislature to authorize action in certain matters, as in Const. §§ 125, 284, 286, that the requirement was complied with by a favorable vote on the act of two-thirds of a quorum of each house, and hence that the act was constitutionally passed. Farmers' Union-Warehouse Co. v. McIntosh, 56 South. 102, 104, 1 Ala. App. 407.

As used in Const. art. 4, § 23, providing that "two-thirds of that house" shall be required to pass a bill or joint resolution that has been unapproved and unsigned by the Governor, the expression quoted means two-thirds of the members present in a lawfully constituted session, and not two-thirds of the total membership. Smith v. Jennings, 45 S. E. 821, 822, 67 S. C. 324.

TYPE

The provision for "types, old," in the free list paragraph of the Tariff Act of 1897, does not include an alloy, containing approximately 85 per cent. of lead, 12 per cent. of antimony, and 3 per cent. of tin and copper, made from the dross of type metal refined and melted with 15 to 20 per cent. of old movable types, and cast in the form of stereotype plates, which were never used as such, but broken into pieces and packed in barrels for importation. Such material is dutiable as "type metal." Sapery v. United States, 135 Fed. 332, 68 C. C. A. 140.

TYPEWRITING

As printing, see Print—Printing.

As subscribe, see Subscribe—Subscription.

The word "typewriting" is defined as the process of printing letter by letter by the use of a typewriter. State ex rel. Coleman v. City of Oakland, 77 Pac. 694, 696, 69 Kan. 784.

TYPICAL CROSS-SECTION

A contract for the excavation of a bulkhead, the inner line of which was about 9 feet inshore from an established bulkhead line, and the base of which was to be 15 feet below mean low-water mark with allowance to the contractor for whatever he might excavate within an extra foot in each direction, specified that no payment should be made for excavation beyond those limits, "except where known loose rock is shown in the cross-sections above the top grade of the indicated rock, at a line ten feet westerly of and parallel to the bulkhead line, allowance will be made and paid for to a positive line which is forty-five degrees to the horizontal," and specified, as to "typical sections," that they were given as a guide only and to show approximately what the contractor might expect to encounter in the prosecution of the "work," and represented the "typical sections" as information upon (1) "the existing rock bottom which was the top of the loose rock; (2) the corresponding theoretical sections to be obtained, meaning the so-called nine-foot and fifteen-foot lines; and (3) the corresponding limiting lines to which payment will be made when it is impossible to produce the theoretical sections; and that all material was to be measured by comparison of 'accurate cross-sections.'" The points at which the 45-degrees lines should commence could not be ascertained before the work commenced. Held, that the "corresponding theoretical sections" meant the 10-foot and 16-foot lines; that the "typical cross-sections" could not be regarded as the "accurate cross-sections"; that "work" had a double meaning, and, for the purpose of fixing the beginning points of the 45-degree lines, did not begin until the blasting began, when the junctions between the loose rock and the ledge rock became "known," so as to be "indicated" upon the cross-sections made by the city after the work was completed; and that work to such junctions was necessitated and contemplated by the contract. R. G. Packard Co. v. City of New York, 137 N. Y. Supp. 9, 13, 151 App. Div. 941.

TYPICAL IMBECILE

Where a finding was to the effect that a certain person was a "typical imbecile," the qualifying word "typical" was probably intended to mean that it was a characteristic or common example of imbecility, not abnormal or unusual, and not belonging to other types of mental incapacity, such as idiocy or insanity. Caple v. Drew, 78 Pac. 427, 429, 70 Kan. 136.

U

UBERRIMA FIDES

"Uberrima fides" is the rule which applies to agents, partners, and trustees." Hence one owed his partner the strictest good faith, and as an agent of the firm was under obligation to keep an accurate account of the moneys which passed through his hands. Wiggins v. Markham, 108 N. W. 113, 115, 131 Iowa, 102 (citing Levi v. Karrick, 13 Iowa, 344; Keyes v. Bradley, 35 N. W. 656, 73 Iowa, 589).

UBI EST SPECIALIS, ET RATIO GENERALIS GENERALITER ACCIPIENDA EST

The maxim "ubi est specialis, et ratio generalis generaliter accipienda est," means that, when the reason for a particular legislative act and acts of the same general character is the same, they should have the same effect. Guile v. La Crosse Gas & Electric Co., 130 N. W. 234, 241, 145 Wis. 157.

UBI JUS, IBI REMEDIUM

"Ubi jus, ibi remedium," does not mean that compensation is given for every loss. It simply means that there is a remedy to enforce and protect every legal right. Carroll v. Rye Tp., 101 N. W. 894, 897, 13 N. D. 458.

The maxim "ubi jus, ibi remedium," finds expression in Civ. Code, Ga. 1895, § 4929, where it is declared that "for every right there shall be a remedy, and every court having jurisdiction of the one may, if necessary, frame the other." Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 101, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

ULTIMATE*ULTIMATE FACT

The distinction between "ultimate facts" to be found by the jury and mere "conclusions" is an interesting one, as is evidenced by the following extract: "It sometimes happens that facts are so close to the line dividing inferential facts from evidentiary facts that the only safe plan is to put them in the special verdict, where they can do no harm if they should turn out, in the opinion of the court, to be evidentiary facts, and where their absence might be fatal if they should turn out to be inferential facts." Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Jones, 69 N. E. 191, 192, 32 Ind. 189 (quoting Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 37 N. E. 348, 141 Ind. 550).

ULTIMATE OBJECT

ULTIMATELY

Testator declared that the income of the residue should be divided annually between his son and daughter, share and share alike, "subject to the provisions hereinafter contained," and in case of death of either of them his or her share should go to his or her children, and in case of death of either, and of all of the children of the deceased one, then the surviving son or daughter or surviving grandchildren should receive all of the residue; that all of his estate should "ultimately" be divided equally between all of the children of his son and daughter who should attain the age of 21 if a female, and 25 if a male, and that, when either such grandson or granddaughter should attain the required age, he or she should receive in kind the legal title to his or her proportion of the estate; provided that in case of the death of any of the grandchildren before attaining such ages, but after any such conveyance, then such grandchild receiving the conveyance should be entitled to a further share, so as in the end to divide the estate among the grandchildren attaining such ages equally. Held, that testator's two children each took one-half the income for life, and on termination of one of such life estates the children of the life tenant took their parent's share of the income during the life of the other life tenant, and on the termination thereof all of the grandchildren, whether born before or after testator's death, should "ultimately" share equally in the corpus of the estate provided they arrived at the required age. Pitzel v. Schneider, 74 N. E. 779, 782, 216 Ill. 87.

ULTRA VIRES

The term "ultra vires," in its literal sense, means beyond the power or capacity of a corporation, company, or person, and this must be understood to mean lawful authority. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Southern Ind. Ry. Co. (Ind.) 70 N. E. 843, 852.

"The term 'ultra vires' is the modern legal nomenclature for acts of a corporation through any of its instrumentalities which are beyond the powers conferred by law upon the legal entity." Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 770, 58 Misc. Rep. 401.

An "ultra vires" act is one beyond the express or implied powers of the corporation. Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Mining & Smelting Co., 113 Ill. App. 600, 609.

Undertakings of a corporation are "ultra vires" when they involve adventures beyond the scope of, or the power given, by the charter. Kavanaugh v. Commonwealth Trust Co. of New York, 118 N. Y. Supp. 758, 772, 64 Misc. Rep. 303.

The doctrine of "ultra vires" has no application to a corporation's torts, but is applicable only to its contractual relations.

Burke v. State, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1099, 1100, 64 Misc. Rep. 558.

"Ultra vires," when used with reference to tortuous acts of the agents of a municipal corporation, denotes an act or acts done on behalf of the corporation, not within the scope of the powers conferred on it. Healdsburg Electric Light & Power Co. v. City of Healdsburg, 90 Pac. 955, 956, 5 Cal. App. 558.

"Ultra vires" contracts are contracts which are beyond the statutory powers of the corporation, and not contracts expressly prohibited by statute and contrary to the public policy of the Legislature. Strickland v. National Salt Co. (N. J.) 81 Atl. 828.

An "ultra vires" act is one beyond the power of a corporation, and therefore without legal sanction or vitality; but, though a note given by a corporation for stock in another corporation is ultra vires and uncollectible, such note, when issued by a corporation having authority to issue negotiable paper, is not void in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Jefferson Bank of St. Louis v. Chapman-White-Lyons Co., 123 S. W. 641, 645, 122 Tenn. 415 (citing 1 Daniel Neg. Paper [3d Ed.] p. 352, § 377).

When acts of corporations are spoken of as "ultra vires," it is not intended that they are unlawful, or even such as the corporation cannot perform, but merely those which are not within the powers conferred upon the corporation by the act of its creation, and are in violation of the trust reposed in the managing board by the shareholders, that the affairs shall be managed and the funds applied solely for carrying out the objects for which the corporation was created. First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Guardian Trust Co., 86 S. W. 109, 117, 187 Mo. 494, 70 L. R. A. 79 (quoting and adopting the definition in Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504).

Without formulating a definition, it may be properly said that the doctrine of "ultra vires" is that at the instance of the state where public policy requires it, or at the instance of stockholders or creditors whose rights would otherwise be injuriously affected, corporations will be held powerless to do anything not clearly within the terms of their charter or statutory provisions. Our courts, however, hold that the plea of ultra vires will not avail a corporation with respect to an act for which it has received consideration in any case where the status quo ante cannot be restored. In such cases the corporation is estopped to set up the plea of ultra vires. Accommodation notes given by a business corporation are not valid as against corporate creditors or dissenting stockholders, but a corporation cannot be heard to plead that such notes, given by it with the consent of all the stockholders, were ultra vires. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co., 61 Atl. 167, 170, 69 N. J. Eq. 723 (citing C. & A. R. R. Co.

v. Mays Landing, etc., R. Co., 7 Atl. 523, 48 N. J. Law, 530; Breslin v. Frieze-Breslin Co., 58 Atl. 313, 70 N. J. Law, 274).

"We must look to the cases, rather than to the lexicographers, for a definition of the term 'ultra vires.' Without attempting to cover the whole ground, it may be said that if a contract is of such character that, had the corporation at once proceeded to execute it, its acts would have been contrary to public policy, or expressly or impliedly prohibited by statute, or would in any degree disable the corporation from the performance of its statutory duties, the undertaking cannot be enforced by either party. To this extent the cases, English, federal, and state, are in reasonable harmony." Under Act March 14, 1867 (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 3623), providing that the common council shall have exclusive power over the streets, highways, alleys, and bridges within such city, the common council of a city, in permitting a gas company to use the streets for distributing gas to the inhabitants, may protect the latter from extortion by providing that the company shall not charge in excess of certain prices for its service. Muncie Natural Gas Co. v. City of Muncie, 66 N. E. 436, 439, 160 Ind. 97, 60 L. R. A. 822.

"The doctrine of 'ultra vires' is a most powerful weapon to keep private corporations within their legitimate spheres, and to punish them for violations of their corporate charters, and it probably is not invoked too often; but to place that power in the hands of the corporation itself, or a private individual, to be used by it or him as a means of obtaining or restraining something of value which belongs to another, would turn an instrument, intended to effect justice between the state and corporations into one of fraud as between the latter and innocent parties. Such is the modern doctrine, evolved and settled in the progress of events, reaching from the time when private corporations were few, and the doctrine of ultra vires invoked quite as freely as to them as to public corporations, to a time when substantially all restrictions to the formation of such private bodies were removed, and they were authorized and commenced to exist, great and small, everywhere, for the purpose of conducting almost every kind of legitimate business. If such a body transcend its powers, it commits a wrong against the state, and ordinarily it is for the state only to call it to account for such violation." Harris v. Independence Gas Co., 92 Pac. 1123, 1126, 76 Kan. 750, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171 (quoting and adopting definition in Zinc Carbonate Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 79 N. W. 229, 103 Wis. 125, 74 Am. St. Rep. 845).

"Perhaps the most general statement which can be made of the doctrine of 'ultra vires,' is to say that the contract of a corporation which is unauthorized by, or in violation of, its charter or other governing statute, or entirely outside the scope of the purposes of its creation, is void, in the sense of being no contract at all, because of a total want of power to enter into it. The transaction may be beyond the powers of the corporation, simply because it is foreign to the purposes expressed or implied in the charter; it may invoke the exercise of a power, not forbidden, but simply ungranted, as, for example, where, a railroad company undertakes to guaranty the expenses of a public festival. In the better usage, the term 'ultra vires' is limited to acts of the latter class, and many of the courts make a distinction between transactions which are illegal, because forbidden, and those which are simply in excess of the granted powers." Where the charter of a railroad company conferred power to operate a railroad, to erect warehouses and other works necessary to the road, to erect all buildings, stations, other works, and accommodations necessary or convenient for the operation of the road, to aid any other company "in the construction of its road," to consolidate with any other corporation owning a railroad, or a railroad and any other property, and to guarantee the obligations of other railroad companies, a contract by which it contracted to pay out of certain of its earnings such "commissions" on its receipts as would make good to a hotel company a deficit in the hotel company's earnings sufficient to enable the hotel company to pay dividends on its stock and interest on its bonds was ultra vires and void. Western Maryland R. Co. v. Blue Ridge Hotel Co., 62 Atl. 351, 352, 354, 102 Md. 307, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, 111 Am. St. Rep. 362 (quoting and adopting definition in 10 Cyc. 1146; France's Elements of Corp. Law, § 72).

It is not "ultra vires" for a canal company to contract to construct a basin on land conveyed to it for a canal, to be connected with the canal, as a part of the consideration of the conveyance; a basin being necessary and useful for loading and unloading boats. Dawson v. Western Maryland R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 303, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

"Ultra vires" contracts are only those which are defective solely because they are beyond the power of the corporation, because involving some undertaking not within the scope of the corporation's charter. Ultra vires and illegality represent totally different ideas. Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 63 Atl. 70, 72, 102 Md. 608.

"A corporation is not liable on an accommodation indorsement in the hands of one who takes with knowledge of that fact. Such an indorsement is 'ultra vires.' That means that the corporation would not be liable on it, even if it had been authorized by all the directors and a majority of the stockholders." Cook v. American Tubing & Webbing Co., 65 Atl. 641, 646, 28 R. I. 41, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193 (citing Usher v. Raymond Skate Co., 39 N. E. 416, 163 Mass. 1, and J. G. Brill Co. v. Norton & T. St. Ry. Co., 75 N. E. 1093, 189 Mass. 431, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 525).

"A contract of a corporation which is 'ultra vires' in the proper sense—that is to say, outside the object of its creation as defined in the law of its organization, and therefore beyond the powers conferred upon it by the Legislature—is not voidable only, but wholly void and of no legal effect." A contract with a street railway company to pave a street for a consideration inuring to the benefit of abutting owners is ultra vires, since a street railway company organized under the Illinois law has no power to engage in the business of paving streets. Harding v. Harding, 68 N. E. 754, 760, 205 Ill. 105 (quoting and adopting definition in National Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Home Savings Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 54 N. E. 619, 64 L. R. A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245).

"Ultra vires contracts" of a municipal corporation are such as the corporation has no power to make under any circumstances or for any purpose; but where a municipal corporation enters into a contract which, under the existing law, it has authority to make, but fails to follow the procedure laid down by the statute, it is not "ultra vires," but irregular, and the contractor or his assignee may recover a balance due thereon. Rogers v. City of Omaha, 114 N. W. 833, 80 Neb. 591.

A contract of a corporation is "ultra vires" when it is outside the objects of its creation as defined in the law of its organization and therefore beyond the powers conferred on it by the Legislature. Where a corporation, formed, according to its articles, for buying and selling merchandise, guaranteed, merely as an accommodation to a customer indebted to it, payment for any merchandise a party might sell to such customer, the contract was "ultra vires," under Rev. St. 1889, § 2508, providing that no corporation shall engage in business other than expressly authorized in its charter, or the laws under which it was organized. Ellett-Kendall Shoe Co. v. Western Stores Co., 112 S. W. 4, 5, 132 Mo. App. 513.

A contract of a corporation which is unauthorized by or in violation of its charter or other governing statute, or entirely outside the scope of the purposes of its creation, is "ultra vires," in the sense of being no contract at all, because of total want of power to enter into it. "The transaction may be beyond the powers of the corporation simply because it is foreign to the purposes expressed or implied in the charter. It may invoke the exercise of a power not forbidden, but simply ungranted, as, for example, where a railroad undertakes to guarantee the expenses of a public festival. In the better usage, the term 'ultra vires' is limited to acts of the latter class, and many of the courts make a distinction between transactions which are illegal because forbidden and those which are simply in excess of granted powers." Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 770, 58 Misc. Rep. 401.

A corporate contract is "ultra vires," in the proper sense of that term, when it is outside the object of the corporation's creation as defined in the law of its organization and therefore beyond the powers conferred upon it by the Legislature. Such a contract is not merely voidable, but wholly void and of no legal effect. The objection to it is not merely that the corporation ought not to have made it, but that it could not make it. The purchase by a corporation, organized under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2839, subd. 9, providing for the organization of trust companies to buy and sell all kinds of government, state, municipal, and other bonds, and all kinds of negotiable and nonnegotiable paper, stocks, and other investment securities, of all the stock of another corporation, for the purpose of controlling its affairs or exercising its powers through the use of its name, is "ultra vires" and void; such section merely authorizing the purchase of stock as investment securities. Anglo-American Land Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Lombard, 132 Fed. 721, 737, 68 C. C. A. 89 (quoting and adopting definition given in Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 139 U. S. 24, 59, 35 L. Ed. 55).

"The term 'ultra vires' has been used without accurate discrimination. Certain contracts on the part of corporations may be prohibited by positive law, either statutory or common. Where such contracts are made by corporations, they are, of course, unlawful. They are mala prohibita and void, and for the same reason that the prohibited contract of an individual would be void. Yet courts have termed them 'ultra vires,' and have then proceeded to say that ultra vires contracts were void, and might be disregarded at pleasure. More properly speaking, ultra vires contracts of a corporation are such as do not in any manner serve the accomplishment of the purposes for which the corporation is chartered. They are contracts not positively forbidden, but impliedly forbidden, because not expressly or impliedly authorized." State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 113 N. W. 500, 503, 136 Iowa, 79 (quoting and adopting definition in Tourtelot v. Whithed, 84 N. W. 8, 9 N. D. 407).

"Ultra vires" acts of a corporation are such acts as are not within the charter of the corporation, which is the contract under which it is organized and does business, and which includes the privileges and franchises extended to the corporation by the law under which it is acting. Every act done by the directors or by a majority of the stockholders outside of the charter is unauthorized, though it might have been proper, had the stockholders by their contract seen fit to bring it within the scope of the business they agreed to do. It may be such an act as the law would permit the corporation to do, if the corporation contract had been made broad enough to include it, but is ultra vires, nevertheless, because it is outside of the contract made by the stockholders. Germer v. Triple-State Natural Gas & Oil Co., 54 S. E. 509, 517, 60 W. Va. 143.

In its primary sense, an act is "ultra vires" the powers of a corporation when it is wholly outside the scope of the purposes for which the corporation was formed or has its being, and which it has no authority to perform under any circumstances or in any mode. In a secondary sense, however, an act is ultra vires as it affects the rights of persons without whose consent it may not be done, or when a corporation is not authorized to perform it for the specific purpose, or in the particular manner involved, notwithstanding it may be within the scope of its general powers. If the act is ultra vires in the first sense, the defense is always available; but, when the doctrine is to be applied in the second sense, its availability depends on the circumstances of the particular case. Wykes v. City Water Co. of Santa Cruz, 184 Fed. 752, 755.

The term "ultra vires" is used in many different senses. First, it describes a contract which is not within the scope of the powers of a corporation to make under any circumstances or for any purposes. The second meaning refers to contracts of a class which the corporation had a right to execute, but with respect to which there has been some irregularity or defect in the actual exercise of the power "in some particular or through some undisclosed circumstance" affecting the individual contract in issue. The former class is ultra vires in the primary, and really only proper, sense of the term, while in the second it is merely secondary; that is to say, an ultra vires municipal contract in its true sense is a contract relating to matters wholly outside the charter powers of a corporation. When an act is ultra vires in the first sense mentioned, it is generally, if not always, void in toto, and the corporation may avail itself of the plea; but when it is ultra vires in the second sense, the right of the corporation to avail itself of the plea will depend upon the circumstances of the case. Beil v. Kirkland, 113 N. W. 271, 273, 102 Minn. 213, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793, 120 Am. St. Rep. 621 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7165, 7166).

ULTRA VIRES ABSOLUTE

The acts of a bank which are "ultra vires absolute" are such as are beyond the powers of the bank for any purpose and under all circumstances. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. National Bank of Commerce of Dallas, 106 S. W. 782, 785, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301.

UMPIRE

An "umpire" is one called into an arbitration to act only after a disagreement between the arbitrators, and his opinion and judgment as to the points of disagreement must control and determine the award; but he has no right, in the absence of one of the parties and one of the arbitrators, to act on information from the other party and arbitrator. Cravens v. Estes, 139 S. W. 761, 764, 144 Ky. 511.

Where an insurance policy provided that, in the event of a disagreement as to the amount of loss, the same should be ascertained by two disinterested appraisers; one to be selected by each party and the two selecting an umpire, to whom differences should be submitted, the award of any two being final the person chosen as umpire by the two appraisers was thereby invested with the power and authority only of an "umpire," in the strict sense of that term, and was authorized to act upon and decide only the matters on which appraisers failed to agree. He was not authorized to act with them as a third appraiser, or to form one of a majority of the three to render an award of the entire loss. Home Ins. Co. of New York v. M. Schiff's Sons, 64 Atl. 63, 66, 103 Md. 648.

UN

"Un" is a preposition, used indiscriminately, and may mean simply not. As used before another word, it may not necessarily mean "contrary to," but may mean "not authorized by," as in the word "unlawful." State v. Savant, 38 South. 974, 975, 115 La. 226.

UNABLE

Unable to attend to his duties

Where a statute authorizes the court to appoint an assistant prosecuting attorney, where the regular attorney is "unable to attend to his duties," the words mean some mental or physical incapacity to perform his duties, and not a lack of experience or incapacity to conduct the prosecution properly. Taylor v. State, 38 South. 380, 385, 49 Fla. 69 (citing Mahaffey v. Territory, 66 Pac. 342, 11 Okl. 213).

Unable to offer tax list

Under Rev. St. c. 9, § 74, barring the right to abatement of taxes unless the applicant was "unable" to offer the list to the assessors at the time appointed, an applicant for abatement of taxes does not show that he was "unable" to offer such list by proof that he in good faith supposed that he was a non-resident, and had been so regarded by the assessors for a series of years, including the year of the assessment complained of, if in fact he was a resident, and liable to taxation as such. Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Farrington, 66 Atl. 309, 311, 102 Me. 140.

Unable to travel

A witness who has returned home by medical advice, because it would have been dangerous for him to remain at the trial, is "unable to travel," within the meaning of a statute allowing his deposition to be read in such case. State v. Wheat, 35 South. 955, 959, 111 La. 860.

Unable to work

See Sick and Unable to Work.

UNANIMOUS—UNANIMOUSLY

In a statute requiring the "unanimous vote of all the members" of the council to pass an ordinance, those words mean the votes of all the members constituting the council, and not the unanimous vote of a quorum or of all the members present. Crickenberger v. Town of Westfield, 58 Atl. 1097, 71 N. J. Law, 467.

Under Act April 3, 1902, providing that, in case the owners of property along a street object to the construction of a sewer, it shall be constructed notwithstanding the objections, provided the board of health shall certify that a resolution has been "unanimously adopted" by the board that in its opinion the construction of the sewer is necessary to preserve the public health, held, that a unanimous vote of all the members of the board of health was not required, but that the resolution was "unanimously adopted" where the board of health passing the same was legally constituted and the resolution was adopted without any dissenting vote of all the members present, and all voting. Coxon v. Inhabitants of City of Trenton, 73 Atl. 253, 254, 78 N. J. Law, 26.

UNAPPROPRIATED

The term "unappropriated" refers to land that is not in the possession of one who claims the right of possession by virtue of a compliance with the law. Conn v. Oberto, 76 Pac. 369, 370, 32 Colo. 313.

UNAUTHORIZED

UNAUTHORIZED PURPOSE

A tax levied under an ordinance passed on an unconstitutional statute whereby territory is annexed to a city is one levied for an "unauthorized purpose," within the meaning of Scavenger Act, § 15, and may be adjudged void in a proceeding brought under such act. State v. Several Parcels of Land, 111 N. W. 601, 602, 78 Neb. 703.

UNAVOIDABLE*UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT

"Unavoidable accident," as used in a statute relieving railroad companies from penalty for a default caused by unavoidable accident, means an accident unavoidable by the railroad sought to be penalized. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 124 N. W. 819, 821, 110 Minn. 25, 19 Ann. Cas. 1088 (citing Patterson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 94 Pac. 138, 77 Kan. 236, 15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 733).

A railroad is not liable for injuries to a passenger resulting from unavoidable accident; but the "buckling" of rails due to their expansion by heat in warm weather, in consequence of the road's failure to leave sufficient space between the ends of the rails, is not an "unavoidable accident," which will relieve it of liability. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Burke, 145 S. W. 370, 371, 147 Ky. 694, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 208.

Where the findings exonerate defendant from all acts of negligence alleged, and the jury also find that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, the injuries were caused by what the law designates as an "unavoidable accident." Tawney v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 223, 224, 84 Kan. 354 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7149).

Where, in an action for injuries in a street car accident, the court instructed that the burden was on plaintiff to prove defendant's negligence, and, if he failed, he could not recover, an instruction that there was no liability for an unavoidable accident was properly refused; an "unavoidable accident" being necessarily one occurring not because of negligence, which was eliminated by the requirement of proof of negligence. Flanagan v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 145 Ill. App. 56; Id., 90 N. E. 688, 690, 243 Ill. 456.

The writ in an action begun within the period of limitations was issued April 16th, and the next day plaintiff's attorney in another county sent the writ by mail to the clerk of the county court, with a letter requesting him to approve the bail bond, and forward the writ to plaintiff's local attorney by United States mail. The clerk complied with the request, and on April 18th forwarded the letter to the latter attorney, who was then away from home, but returned in about a week, when a period of some 12 days still remained for service. He did not find the writ, and knew nothing about it until the following August, when it was discovered in a pigeonhole with mail relating to an official position held by the attorney, which had come in envelopes of the same sort. The attorney had assumed that his associates in the other county would attend to the service of the writ, and he acted in good faith. The writ failed in service by "unavoidable accident," within the meaning of V. S. 1214, providing that if, in an action commenced within the time limited by statute, the writ fails of sufficient service by unavoidable accident, the plaintiff may have a year from the determination of the original suit to commence a new action. Tracy v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 104, 107, 76 Vt. 313.

An "unavoidable accident" is defined to be "an event from an unknown cause or an unusual or unexpected event from a known cause, chance or casualty; as if a railroad bed be in good order, and the engine and cars be in good order, and the engineer and other attendants be skillful and careful, and yet a rail breaks and the train is crushed, and employes and passengers are killed, that is an unusual and unexpected event from an unknown cause, and an accident." Hence, in an action against a street railway for injuries received by a passenger from a derailment of defendant's car, an instruction that, if such derailment was the result of a mere accident, then the railroad company is not guilty, is not objectionable because charging the railroad company with the burden of showing that the derailment was accidental. Overcash v. Charlotte Electric R., Light & Power Co., 57 S. E. 377, 379, 144 N. C. 572, 12 Ann. Cas. 1040 (quoting and adopting definition in Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 76 N. C. 320).

In agreements to sell tomatoes, binding the seller, a canning company, to deliver 75 per cent. of the stipulated quantity in case of a total or partial failure of the crop, and containing an exception as to the remaining 25 per cent. if the failure was due to the destruction of the crop by hail, drought, or any "unavoidable" accident or casualty, the use of the word "unavoidable" suggests that the crop failure which was to excuse performance was one the seller could not avoid, thereby implying there might be a failure of the crops for which it would be to blame and which would not excuse performance. But this could not be true unless the failure was confined to territory over which it might have some control; that is, the vicinity of its canner, or at most the territory planted by persons with whom it made contracts and with whom it might have stipulated against inefficient cultivation of the crop. Ryley-Wilson Grocer Co. v. Seymour Canning Co., 106 S. W. 628, 632, 129 Mo. App. 325.

In Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hall, 52 S. E. 679, 683, 684, 124 Ga. 322, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, 4 Ann. Cas. 128, the court discusses at great length the definition of "act of God" and the distinction between an "act of God" and an "unavoidable accident," but without arriving at any conclusion of its own, except that, to relieve a carrier from liability on the ground that the injury was caused by an act of God, the carrier must itself be free from any fault contributing to the injury. In the course of the discussion the court makes the following citations: Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. 378, 80 Am. Dec. 627; Stroud's Jud. Dict.; *Bouv. #### Inevitable accident synonyms

An "unavoidable accident," within Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 3, 34 Stat. 1415, exempting railway companies from penalties for working employes overtime in case of "unavoidable accident," is an inevitable accident which could not have been foreseen and prevented by using ordinary diligence, and resulting without the company's fault. United States v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 189 Fed. 471, 477.

UNAVOIDABLE CASUALTY

Sickness of defendant's counsel preventing him from attending court is ground for vacation of a default judgment, under Kirby's Dig. § 4431, subd. 7, authorizing it in case parties are prevented by "unavoidable casualty or misfortune" from appearing or defending. Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. J. H. Davis & Son, 108 S. W. 202, 203, 85 Ark. 385.

If, when an action was begun and continuously until after judgment against defendant, she, though she had a good defense, was disabled by sickness from appearing in court or from preparing or making her defense, she was entitled to a vacation of the judgment for "unavoidable casualty or misfortune," under Civ. Code Prac. § 518, subd. 7. Baker v. Owensboro Savings Bank & Trust Co.'s Receiver, 130 S. W. 969, 970, 140 Ky. 121.

The casualty or misfortune that authorizes a new trial must be "unavoidable"; that is, such as could not be by the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence have been avoided, and does not include the failure to discover that an order had not been entered, due only to the laxity in searching the records in the office of the clerk of the court. Louis- ville & N. R. Co. v. Paynter's Adm'x, 101 S. W. 935, 938, 125 Ky. 520.

Unavoidable casualty or misfortune, within Civ. Code Prac. § 518, subsec. 7, which authorized the granting of a new trial for "unavoidable casualty or misfortune" preventing the party from appearing or defending, includes a case where plaintiff was ill, and neither she nor her counsel appeared, and the case was dismissed, of which action plaintiff was ignorant until long afterwards, supposing the attorney to be looking after her interests in the case. Ray v. Arnett (Ky.) 106 S. W. 828, 829.

Whether a misunderstanding between defendant and his counsel as to which of them should look up evidence of facts on which the defense rested, whereby the evidence was not obtained, amounts to "unavoidable casualty," within Code, § 4091, so as to authorize the setting aside of a default judgment, depends much on the honesty of it, of which a disclosure of a meritorious defense is some evidence. Such a casualty may be easily fabricated, and it is important that it be scrutinized closely. Farmers' Exchange Bank v. Trestler, 124 N. W. 793, 795, 145 Iowa, 665.

A foreign insurance company which had consented to service of process upon the Commissioner of Insurance ceased to do business in the state, and notified the commissioner that it had withdrawn therefrom, and that thereafter no service should be had upon him in suits brought against it. Thereafter suit was brought on an agency contract, and process served upon the commissioner, who failed or neglected to forward the summons to the company, and a default judgment was rendered before it knew of the pendency of the action. Held that, under Civ. Code Prac. § 518, subsec. 7, the company was entitled to have the judgment set aside for "unavoidable casualty or misfortune." Chicago Life Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 143 S. W. 740, 743, 147 Ky. 61.

The petitioner's counsel, on the 13th day of May, 1907, the day on which the term of court convened at which the action stood for trial, having written to the clerk of the court at Hobart, Okl., from Wichita, Kan., requesting to be advised by return mail on what day such case had been assigned for trial, no reply being received, on the 15th or 16th of the same month petitioner received a letter from a party at Hobart advising him that the case would be reached the latter part of the next week. Petitioner immediately wrote such party to advise him by wire on what day the case was set for trial. On the 18th he received a telegram as follows: "Your case is set for the 1st." Petitioner immediately took the letter to his attorney in Wichita, and they construed it to mean the case was set for the 1st of June, and set about to get ready for the trial of the cause. About the 23d of May petitioner received a letter from the same party at Hobart that judgment had been rendered on default on the 21st. On investigation, it was revealed that the telegram had been filed with the company at Hobart reading, "Your case is set for the 21st," but that by mistake in transmission, when delivered, it was made to read as above stated. If the telegram had been correctly transmitted, petitioner and his counsel would have been present on the 21st and defended the action. Held, that the construction of the telegram as delivered was reasonable, and, the petitioner and his counsel having exercised ordinary diligence, that this amounted to an "unavoidable casualty or misfortune," within the statute respecting vacation of judgments. McLaughlin v. Nettleton, 105 Pac. 662, 25 Okl. 319 (citing Corning & Horner v. Tripp [N. Y.] 1 How. Prac. 14; Trustees of the Northern Dispensary of New York v. Merriam [N. Y.] 59 How. Prac. 226; Boyd v. Williams, 56 Atl. 135, 70 N. J. Law, 185; Wynn v. Frost, 50 Pac. 184, 6 Okl. 89; Williams v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 15 S. E. 97, 110 N. C. 466; Syfers v. Kelsner, 66 N. E. 1021, 31 Ind. App. 6; Schnitzler v. Wichita Fourth Nat. Bank, 1 Kan. App. 674, 42 Pac. 496).

UNAVOIDABLE CAUSE

"Unavoidable causes," as the term is used in a contract relieving from a specified penalty for delay brought about through unavoidable causes, literally defined, are inevitable causes, such that no human power could prevent. City of Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 142 Fed. 329, 345, 73 C. C. A. 439.

Where several months elapse between the date of the death of counsel for the plaintiff in certiorari and the expiration of the time within which notice of the sanction of the petition could regularly have been given, such death will not be considered as "unavoidable cause," within a statute providing that in default of such notice, unless prevented by "unavoidable cause," the certiorari shall be dismissed. Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 415, 2 Ga. App. 181.

An "unavoidable cause," which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight," and which will legally excuse an interstate carrier of live stock for confining such stock in cars for a period longer than 28 consecutive hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, under Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 1, 34 Stat. 607, is one which cannot be avoided by that degree of prudence, foresight, care, and caution which the law requires of every one under the circumstances of the particular case, and as would have been exercised by a man of ordinary prudence under such circumstances. An accident occurring to a train through the negligence of the transportation company is not such a cause; nor is mere press of business, or the side-tracking of the train to allow for the passing of other trains, the meeting or passing of which could have been anticipated when the transportation was begun, or the lack of facilities for unloading or feeding. United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 Fed. 459, 461.

The measure of "due diligence and foresight" is that diligence and foresight which persons of ordinary prudence and care commonly exercise under similar circumstances. And the due diligence and foresight which condition the anticipation and avoidance of the other incidental or unavoidable causes specified in the 28-hour law is that degree of diligence and foresight which reasonably prudent and careful men ordinarily exercise under like circumstances. An "accidental or unavoidable cause" which cannot be avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight in the meaning of this law is a cause which reasonably prudent and careful men, under like circumstances, do not and would not ordinarily anticipate, and whose effects under similar circumstances they do not and would not ordinarily avoid. "Willfully" means "purposely or obstinately, and is designed to describe the attitude of a carrier who, having a free will or choice, either intentionally disregards the statute or is plainly indifferent to its requirements." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States, 194 Fed. 342, 344, 114 C. C. A. 334.

UNAVOIDABLE CONTINGENCY

Failure to deliver goods ordered is not due to "unavoidable contingencies," subject to which the order is taken, where they could have been furnished in a time satisfactory to the purchaser, if it would have accepted them in small shipments from time to time, instead of insisting on its right to have them in a single shipment. Union Trust Co. v. Weber-Seely Hardware Co., 84 S. W. 784, 786, 73 Ark. 584.

UNAVOIDABLE DANGER

The running of a steamer and the barge which she was towing onto a towhead and into a growth of three-inch willows and cottonwoods on the Mississippi river, as a matter of good seamanship during a very dark and foggy night when the river was in high flood, the barge not being on the bottom, was an unusual and unavoidable danger of the river, within a policy insuring the barge against "unavoidable dangers of rivers." Paddock-Hawley Iron Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. of Providence, R. I., 93 S. W. 358, 361, 118 Mo. App. 85.

UNAVOIDABLE DELAY

A delay caused by negligence is not "unavoidable." An allegation in a bill to obtain the issuance of a patent under Rev. St. § 4915, filed more than a year after the application was refused by the decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in interference proceedings that complainants brought suit within the year against the successful applicant, to whom the patent was granted, and learned for the first time after such suit had been pending for several months that the defendant had assigned the patent, whereupon that suit was dismissed and the present one was brought against the assignee, does not show that the delay was "unavoidable," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 4894; there being no allegation that the assignment was not recorded, nor that complainants had no means of ascertaining the fact of the assignment. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 186 Fed. 518, 520.

Where plaintiff had knowledge that its furnace was working badly, and that normal results could not be relied on, at the time it contracted to supply defendant's requirements of steel castings for the remainder of the year, the subsequent necessity to shut down its plant for repairs was not an "accident" or an "unavoidable cause of delay," within a custom or usage among manufacturers of steel castings that all contracts are subject to the contingency of accidents and "unavoidable delays." Lima Locomotive & Machine Co. v. National Steel Castings Co., 155 Fed. 77, 80, 83 C. C. A. 593, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713.

Under a statute prohibiting the running of freight trains on the Sabbath day, excepting trains starting on Saturday night, where the time of arrival at destination according to schedule is not later than 8 o'clock Sunday morning, railway officials should in good faith endeavor to avoid a necessity that a freight train, duly started on Saturday night, should have to run after 8 o'clock Sunday morning to reach destination; and in determining what is unavoidable, the movement of this train should not be considered as an isolated train running over the road and leaving out of consideration other trains, but this train should be considered in relation to other trains, and as one unit in a complex whole. Brand v. State, 60 S. E. 339, 342, 3 Ga. App. 628.

UNAVOIDABLE HINDRANCE

Where a vessel commenced discharging cargo in Rio de Janeiro on the day that the revolution began there in 1893, in which the insurgents captured government warships in the harbor, and there was thereafter more or less firing between such ships and forts and batteries on shore, and such a condition of affairs was produced by the hostilities as to render it practically impossible to receive the cargo with the dispatch contemplated by the charter, either because of the intrinsic danger incident to unloading or the inability to procure the necessary men to do the work, such condition constituted an "unavoidable hindrance," and, to the extent that it prevented compliance with the contract, excused performance, and relieved the char-terers from liability under the provision requiring them to pay demurrage for detention by the default of themselves or their agent. Burrill v. Crossman, 130 Fed. 763, 765, 65 C. C. A. 189.

UNAVOIDABLY PREVENTED

A statute providing that a motion for a new trial shall be filed within 10 days after the verdict or decision, unless the party is "unavoidably prevented," cannot excuse negligence of the applicant or his attorney, as it usually refers to circumstances beyond the control of the moving party. Todd v. Peterson, 81 Pac. 878, 881, 13 Wyo. 513.

In view of Civ. Code Prac. § 342, which provides that an application for a new trial must be made at the term at which the verdict or decision is rendered, and within three days after its rendition, unless unavoidably prevented, such an application on the ground that plaintiffs and their attorneys were prevented by accident and surprise, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, from attending the term of court at which the judgment against them was rendered, made at the following term of court, came too late, the words "unavoidably prevented" extending the time for making the application beyond the three days, but not beyond the term, after which other provisions of the Code must be looked to for relief. Wobble v. Finch (Ky.) 110 S. W. 808.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14a, 30 Stat. 550, provides that any person, after the expiration of a month and within the next 12 months subsequent to the adjudication, may file an application for discharge, and, if it shall be made to appear to the judge that the bankrupt was "unavoidably prevented" from filing it within such time, it may be filed within, but not after, the expiration of the next 6 months. Section 14b requires a denial of the application in case the bankrupt has been granted a discharge in voluntary proceedings within 6 years. Held, that the fact that, if a bankrupt applied for a discharge within 12 months, it would necessarily be denied because of his discharge in voluntary proceedings within 6 years such fact did not "unavoidably prevent" him from filing his application for discharge within such time, so as to authorize an extension of time to file until after the 6-year period had expired. In re Vaine, 186 Fed. 535.

UNBALANCED BID

An "unbalanced bid" for public work is a bid based on nominal prices for some work and enhanced prices for other work. Such a bid is not per se fraudulent nor unlawful, and where there is shown to have been no material enhancement of the gross price and the items are fairly identified, the contract is not reasonably assailable. Walter v. McClellan, 96 N. Y. Supp. 479, 481, 48 Misc. Rep.

215 (citing Reilly v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 18 N. E. 623, 111 N. Y. 478; Matter of Anderson, 17 N. E. 206, 109 N. Y. 554).

UNBECOMING CONDUCT

A provision of the Constitution of a Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers authorizing the expulsion of members for "unbecoming conduct" cannot lawfully be so construed as to sanction the expulsion of a member on the ground that he had testified as an expert against a railroad to the injury of other brothers and causing the brotherhood to lose prestige with the railroad. Thompson v. Grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, 91 S. W. 834, 838, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 176.

UNBORN CHILD

As existing person, see Existing Person.

UNBROKEN PACKAGE

An "unbroken package," within Local Option Law, § 18, which provides that the act shall not apply to certain deliveries of unbroken packages by wholesalers, is a package in the original form in which it was made by the shipper for shipment and delivery into a dry unit, if the receptacle is one ordinarily used by honest dealers in the same business, and is recognized commercially as such receptacle; the term not being restricted to the original package as put up by the manufacturer, and as received by the wholesaler; and hence a demijohn, filled by a wholesale dealer in a wet unit from a larger receptacle then in his store, and delivered in the same condition in a dry unit, is an "unbroken package," within the act. State v. Maire, 120 Pac. 87, 66 Wash. 591, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1051.

UNCERTAIN

UNCERTAIN DAMAGES

The rule against the recovery of damages where they are "uncertain" relates to uncertainty as to the cause rather than uncertainty as to the measure or extent. Thayer-Moore Brokerage Co. v. Campbell, 147 S. W. 545, 550, 164 Mo. App. 8.

UNCERTAIN PROFITS

In an action for breach of contract, profits are considered "uncertain" which are purely speculative in their nature, and dependent on so many incalculable contingencies as to make it impracticable to determine them by any trustworthy mode of computation. Dickerson v. Finley, 48 South. 548, 552, 158 Ala. 149.

UNCHASTE—UNCHASTITY

"Chastity" is that virtue which prevents the unlawful commerce of the sexes, and "unchastity" is the reverse of this. Lysacker v. Bemidji Pioneer Pub. Co., 130 N. W. 850, 851, 114 Minn. 179.

Unchaste character may exist without actual "unchastity." It consists of impurity of mind with reference to the sexual relations. State v. Hummer, 104 N. W. 722, 724, 128 Iowa, 505.

Lewdness synonymous

"Lewdness" is synonymous with "impurity," "unchastity," "licentiousness," and "sensuality." Jamison v. State, 94 S. W. 675, 678, 117 Tenn. 58 (citing Cent. Dict.).

UNCIVILIZED COUNTRY

See Wild and Uncivilized Country.

UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE

As the services rendered by appointees in the office of the city clerk and clerk of the board of aldermen of the city of New York are in the main legislative, such appointees are in the "unclassified service," within Civil Service Law (Laws 1899, p. 798, c. 370), § 8, though they are not directly appointed by the board of aldermen, but by the city clerk, himself elected by the board. O'Grady v. Polk, 116 N. Y. Supp. 290, 291, 132 App. Div. 47.

UNCLE

"Uncle" includes an uncle of the half blood. State v. Guiton, 24 South. 784, 785, 51 La. Ann. 155.

UNCLEAN HANDS

"Unclean hands," within the meaning of a maxim of equity, is a figurative description of a class of suitors to whom a court of equity as a court of conscience will not even listen, because the conduct of such suitors is itself unconscionable—i. e., morally reprehensible as to known facts." The fraud of an agent, that is by mere imputation chargeable upon a complainant, will not render the hands of the latter unclean within the meaning of this maxim. Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., 67 Atl. 339, 341, 72 N. J. Eq. 387, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 102 (citing and adopting American Association v. Innis, 60 S. W. 388, 109 Ky. 595).

UNCOLLECTED COSTS

Under Cr. Code, § 13, subd. 14, authorizing judgment for costs against one convicted of crime, and Municipal Court Act July 1, 1905, §§ 57, 58, as amended, imposing costs and providing that moneys collected on judgments in the municipal court shall be first applied to the payment of "uncollected costs," costs may not be imposed against the public incurred in unsuccessfully prosecuting one charged with crime, and the phrase "uncollected costs" includes only costs collectible by means of legal process, and there is no authority for the application of moneys collected to the payment of costs incurred in unsuccessfully prosecuting one for crime. Galpin v. City of Chicago, 94 N. E. 961, 966, 249 Ill. 554.

UNCONDITIONAL

UNCONDITIONAL AND SOLE OWNERSHIP

See, also, Entire, Unconditional, and Sole Ownership; Sole and Unconditional Ownership; Sole Ownership.

A person may be the "unconditional and sole owner" of premises on which an insured building is erected, though the property is encumbered by a mortgage. Vankirk v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 48 N. W. 798, 799, 79 Wis. 627.

A fire policy stipulating that it shall be void if the interest of insured be other than "unconditional and sole ownership" is not rendered void merely because of the issuance of a tax certificate creating, at most, a lien for taxes in existence in substance before the tax sale. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Colorado Leasing, Min. & Mill. Co., 116 Pac. 154, 159, 50 Colo. 424, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 597.

A purchaser in possession under a contract of purchase is the "unconditional and sole owner" within a fire policy though the purchase money has not been paid in full; the purchaser not being in default. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Colorado Leasing, Min. & Mill. Co., 116 Pac. 154, 159, 50 Colo. 424, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 597.

Conditions in insurance policies that the assured shall have "unconditional and sole ownership" of the property insured, or that he shall have the title in fee simple, are complied with by showing that he has the equitable title. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. McManus, 110 S. W. 797, 798, 86 Ark. 115.

A vendee in possession under a contract not signed by him, but referring to an application to purchase signed by him, was within the rule that the holder of an equitable title is the "unconditional and sole owner" within the meaning of that condition in a policy of insurance. McCullough v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 102 Pac. 814, 815, 155 Cal. 659, 18 Ann. Cas. 862 (citing and adopting 2 Cooley, Ins. 1369; Pennsylvania F. I. Co. v. Hughes, 108 Fed. 497, 47 C. C. A. 459; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr, 129 Fed. 723, 64 C. C. A. 251, 66 L. R. A. 569; Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co., 20 South. 419, 112 Ala. 108, 33 L. R. A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17; Dupreau v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 43 N. W. 585, 76 Mich. 615, 5 L. R. A. 671; Pelton v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 13 Hun, 23, affirmed 77 N. Y. 605; Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 12 Atl. 668, 117 Pa. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Crockett [Tenn.] 7 Lea, 725; Johannes v. Standard Fire Office, 35 N. W. 298, 70 Wis. 196, 5 Am. St. Rep. 159).

A vendee of land occupying it under an executory contract, on which he has paid a portion of the price, and on which he has erected a building, is an "unconditional and sole owner" in fee simple, within the condition of a fire policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of insured is other than unconditional and sole ownership of the fee-simple title. Jordan v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 66 S. E. 206, 207, 151 N. C. 341.

A vendee of land occupying the same under an executory contract of purchase is the "unconditional and sole owner" of the same and of the fee-simple title thereto, though the entire purchase price has not been paid, within the condition of a fire policy avoiding the same, if the interest of insured be other than the sole and unconditional ownership, or if the subject of insurance be located on ground not owned by insured in fee simple. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 98 Pac. 552, 555, 21 Okl. 873, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 129 Am. St. Rep. 808.

A condition in a fire insurance policy that insured must be the "unconditional and sole owner" does not refer to the legal title, but to insured's interest, and is not broken by incumbrances placed on the property by him; and hence insured would be the unconditional and sole owner, though he had given an option or made a conditional sale which he could not specifically enforce, and where the risk of loss by fire continues to be his. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Monumental Sav. Ass'n, 60 S. E. 93, 94, 107 Va. 701.

An insurer of goods obtained possession of them from their owner under an agreement to replace them, if he sold them, or pay the owner for them at a time specified, and obtained insurance thereon. The previous owner had no control over the goods and no right to repossess himself of them. Held, that insured had an "unconditional sole ownership" within the meaning of such words, as used in the policy of insurance. Bush v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 71 Atl. 916, 923, 222 Pa. 419.

A person holding a conveyance of land in fee simple is the sole and unconditional owner, within a provision of a fire policy that it should be void if the interest of the insured were other than "unconditional and sole ownership," though there are payments still due for the property, for which the vendor has a lien. President, etc., of Insurance Co. of North America v. Pitts, 41 South. 5, 6, 88 Miss. 587, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 117 Am. St. Rep. 756, 9 Ann. Cas. 54 (citing Union Assur. Soc. of London, England, v. Nalls, 44 S. E. 896, 101 Va. 613, 99 Am. St. Rep. 923; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. B. S. Rhea & Son, 123 Fed. 9, 60 C. C. A. 103; Ellis v. Insurance Co., 32 Fed. 646; 19 Cyc. 693; Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rodefer, 24 S. E. 393, 92 Va. 747, 53 Am. St. Rep. 846; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Cochran, 26 South.

932, 77 Miss. 348, 78 Am. St. Rep. 524; Rosenstock v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co., 35 South. 309, 82 Miss. 674).

Where, prior to the writing of a policy on a tug, plaintiff, the insured, contracted in writing to sell the tug to C., in consideration of $500 paid and a note for $2,300 given by C., payable on or before May 1, 1910, agreeing to give C. immediate possession of the tug, and a clear bill of sale covering the purchase on payment of the note, which was thereafter extended, C. being in possession at the time the insurance was effected, and at the time of the loss, the contract was in part executed; and hence plaintiff had not "unconditional and sole ownership" of the property, as required by the policy. Point Gratiot Sand & Gravel Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 877, 878, 77 Misc. Rep. 221.

One built an ice plant with his own money on a part of a block of ground the title to which was in his deceased wife and of which he was the owner by inheritance of a one-third interest. He was an ignorant man, who had originally bought the property and honestly supposed it was his own, and had always so considered and treated it. On his verbal application to an agent, insurance policies were issued to him covering the building and its contents. No written applications were made or required, nor any representations as to the nature or extent of his interest. Under the law of the state a cotenant who made improvements in the belief that he was the sole owner was entitled to have allotted to him the improved part, without taking into consideration the value of his improvements, or in case of sale was entitled to the increased value due to his improvements. Held, that the policies were not avoided by reason of a condition therein that they should be void "if the interest of the assured be other than 'unconditional and sole ownership,' or if the subject of the insurance be a building on ground not owned by the assured in fee simple. Rochester German Ins. Co., of Rochester, N. Y., v. Schmidt, 151 Fed. 681, 683.

An insured's ownership is "sole" when no one other than insured has any interest in the property as owner, and is "unconditional" when the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition, within the meaning of a policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of the insured be other than "unconditional and sole ownership." Rochester German Ins. Co., of Rochester, N. Y., v. Schmidt, 162 Fed. 447, 451, 80 C. C. A. 333.

The interest of a purchaser of property, which he has unqualifiedly agreed to purchase, and which the former owner has absolutely contracted to sell to him upon definite terms, is the sole and unconditional ownership within the meaning of such clause in insurance policies, since the vendor may compel the purchaser to pay for the property, and to suffer any loss that occurs. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 52 South. 799, 801, 59 Fla. 590, 138 Am. St. Rep. 171.

The just and reasonable purpose of insurance policies in requiring insured to have the sole and unconditional ownership of the insured property is to give protection only to those upon whom the loss insured against would inevitably fall but for the insurance, and to avoid taking risks for those whose lack of interest or whose contingent interest in the property might tend to encourage carelessness or wrongdoing in its use or preservation. Id.

To be "unconditional and sole," within the meaning of such phrase as used in an insurance policy, the interest or ownership of insured must be completely vested; not contingent or conditional, nor in common or jointly with others, but of such nature that insured must alone sustain the entire loss if the property be destroyed, whether the title be legal or equitable. Id.

The "unconditional and sole ownership" of property, within the meaning of such phrase in an insurance policy, is in those on whom the loss insured against would certainly fall, not as a matter of mere contract obligation, but as the result of real bona fide rights in the insured property. Id.

UNCONDITIONAL CONTRACT

An order for money drawn by a municipal corporation upon its treasurer, payable upon demand and without condition, is in effect a promissory note, and is an "unconditional contract in writing," within the meaning of a statute providing that, whenever defendant in justice court on an unconditional contract in writing makes defense, he shall make such defense at the first term. Morgan v. City of Cohutta, 47 S. E. 971, 972, 120 Ga. 423.

UNCONDITIONAL PROMISE TO PAY

Under Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, p. 722, c. 612, § 20, providing that an instrument, to be negotiable must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money, and must be payable on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, and section 22, defining an "unconditional promise" as therein used as follows: "An unqualified promise or order to pay is unconditional within the meaning of this act, though coupled with: (1) An indication of a particular fund out of which reimbursement is to be made, in a particular account to be debited with the amount; or (2) a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument. But an order or promise to pay out of a particular fund is not unconditional"—bonds issued by a joint-stock association, secured by trust deed and payable to bearer, are negotiable, although by the express terms thereof the stockholders of the association are exonerated from individual liability for payment of the bonds and interest; liability being confined to the security and to the assets of the association, and such limitation not restricting the liability to a particular fund. Hibbs v. Brown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 353, 357, 112 App. Div. 214.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3991, provides that a "negotiable instrument" is a written promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer. Section 3992 provides that a negotiable instrument must be made payable in money only, and without any condition not certain of fulfillment. Section 3996, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 124, provides that a negotiable instrument may contain a pledge of collateral security, with the authority to dispose thereof, also a provision for reasonable attorney fee, or both. Section 3997 provides that a negotiable instrument must not contain any other contract than such as is specified in this article. Laws 1903, p. 238, § 3, subd. 2, provides that an unqualified order or promise to pay is "unconditional" within the meaning of this act, though coupled with a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument. Held, that a paper containing an order or contract for goods, and a note promising to pay for them, is not a negotiable instrument, where, if the note be detached, the order for goods would be destroyed. State v. Mitton, 96 Pac. 926, 929, 37 Mont. 366, 127 Am. St. Rep. 732.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, c. 612, § 20), which provides that an instrument, to be negotiable, must be in writing and signed by the maker or drawer, must contain an "unconditional promise" or order to pay a sum certain in money, must be payable on demand at a fixed or determinable future time, and must be payable to order or to bearer, and section 22, which declares that "an unqualified order or promise to pay is unconditional within the meaning of this act, though coupled with * * * a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instruments," an instrument in the form of a letter, addressed to the general agent of an insurance company, dated April 19, 1905, which, after acknowledging receipt of a life insurance policy requested him "to place the said policy in force from this date, and I promise to pay you or your order the first annual premium, amounting to $53.10, as follows:

Cash paid W. E. Watts.....	$21.24
On July 10th, 1905.....	10.00
On Sept. 10th, 1905.....	10.00
On Nov. 10th, 1905.....	11.86

$53.10

"Arthur N. Taylor"

—is a "negotiable instrument"; the mere fact that its language shows that the consideration for the promise was an indebtedness for an unpaid balance of a premium upon a policy of insurance upon defendant's life which had been delivered to him not operating to make it nonnegotiable, under the statute or the customs and usages of merchants. Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Taylor, 131 N. Y. Supp. 475, 477, 146 App. Div. 424.

UNCONSCIONABLE

Equity will not enforce an unconscionable contract, but the fact that one provision of a legal contract, or even the entire contract, is more favorable to one party than to the other, does not ordinarily render it "unconscionable." Chanute Brick & Tile Co. v. Gas Belt Fuel Co., 109 Pac. 398, 399, 82 Kan. 752.

The word "unconscionable," as applied to attorney's contracts for contingent fees, means nothing more than that the amount of the fee contracted for, standing alone and unexplained, would be sufficient to show that an unfair advantage was taken of the client, or that a legal fraud was perpetrated on him. McCoy v. Gas Engine & Power Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 864, 865, 135 App. Div. 771.

An "unconscionable" contract is one such as no man in his senses and not under a delusion would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other. Wenninger v. Mitchell, 122 S. W. 1130, 1132, 139 Mo. App. 420.

An "unconscionable contract" for attorneys' fees is a fraud, and may be made so to appear by showing that it is such as no man in his senses, and not under a delusion, would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other. Defendant, having resided on land abutting a street for a number of years, sued to enjoin the city from lowering the street grade, having expressed himself as determined to prevent it if it cost him "a thousand dollars." Held, that a contract employing an attorney to represent defendant in such action, and agreeing to pay $500 for his services, was not unconscionable, nor was the charge disproportionate to the service. Ball v. Reyburn, 118 S. W. 524, 136 Mo. App. 546.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL

An "unconstitutional act" is not a law, and confers no rights, imposes no duties, affords no protection, and creates no offices. It is in legal contemplation as inoperative as though never passed. People ex rel. Stidger v. Horan, 86 Pac. 252, 262, 34 Colo. 304 (citing Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178); People ex rel. Farrington v. Mensching, 79 N. E. 884, 888, 187 N. Y. 8, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, 10 Ann. Cas. 101 (citing Norton v. Shelby County, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 118 U. S. 425, 442, 30 L. Ed. 178).

An "unconstitutional statute" is simply a statute in form, and is not a law, and under every circumstance or condition lacks the force of law, and is of no more saving effect to justify action taken under it than as though it had never been enacted. Minnesota Sugar Co. v. Iverson, 97 N. W. 454, 457, 91 Minn. 30.

UNCONTROLLABLE

The word "uncontrollable," in describing the event which excuses a carrier from liability for loss or damage of goods, qualifies the event as one which cannot be restrained or prevented. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 873, 875, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

UNDECORATED CHINA

Construing the provision for china decorated and china not decorated, in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B., pars. 95, 96, held, that merely adding a color to white china for utilitarian purposes does not make decorated china, and that china and cooking serving dishes of which the sloping undersides are irregularly colored brown in order to conceal smoke and finger marks, and without decorative effect, are dutiable as "undecorated china" under the latter paragraph. G. W. Thurnauer & Bro. v. United States, 159 Fed. 122, 86 C. C. A. 86.

UNDEFINED

"The term 'undefined' is probably defined the best as 'beauty unadorned is adorned the most.'" Wells, Fargo & Co. v. McCarthy, 90 Pac. 203, 210, 5 Cal. App. 301.

UNDER

See By, Through, or Under.

Sixteen years of age or under, see Years of Age.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 6116, providing that before granting any franchise for constructing and operating an elevated, underground, or other street railroad, "on," "over," or under any street or alley, etc., the word "over" means "over," and can only apply to elevated roads, and "under" means beneath," and can refer only to underground roads, and "on" means "on," and can only refer to a surface road on the street. Ruckert v. Grand Ave. Ry. Co., 63 S. W. 814, 818, 163 Mo. 260.

The word "under," as used in a mining lease giving the right to remove coal under coterminous and neighboring lands, together with the right to enter on and under said land, and to mine, excavate, and remove all of said coal, and remove on and "under" said land the coal from "under" adjacent coterminous and neighboring lands, cannot be said not clearly to mean that the rights granted may be exercised "under" the land, and that the right of removal relates to the coal conveyed under the land. Griffin v. Fairmont Coal Co., 53 S. E. 24, 38, 59 W. Va. 480, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

A quitclaim deed by a husband and others, in which the wife did not join, by the habendum clause declared that the grantee was to have and hold the premises to himself, his heirs and assigns forever, so that neither the grantors nor their heirs, nor any person or persons claiming under them, should at any time thereafter have or claim any right or title to the premises. Thereafter the wife obtained judgment for the recovery of title and possession of her homestead in the premises. Held, that the wife was not a person claiming "under" her husband, and that by the terms of the deed the grantors were not liable to the grantee by reason of the recovery had against him. McCracken v. Taylor (Tex.) 146 S. W. 693, 695.

As subject to

The words "under" and "subject" in a deed import that the grantee takes subject to an incumbrance, the amount of which has been deducted from the price, and a covenant is inferred that the grantee will protect the grantor therefrom. Faulkner v. McHenry, 83 Atl. 827, 828, 235 Pa. 298, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1151.

UNDER AND SUBJECT TO

Where land is sold "under and subject to" a mortgage, it constitutes a covenant of indemnity for the protection of the grantor, and the vendee's liability is coextensive with the original obligation of the vendor. In re May's Estate, 67 Atl. 120, 122, 218 Pa. 64 (citing and explaining Blood v. Crew Levick Co., 33 Atl. 344, 171 Pa. 328).

Where a purchaser takes land "under and subject to" a mortgage, he takes the land incumbered at an agreed consideration, which includes the incumbrance, and he agrees to indemnify the vendor to the extent of that consideration in the same manner as if it had been paid in cash and so applied at the time; but there is no personal liability on the part of the purchaser to pay the mortgage if the premises prove insufficient. Where premises covered by a mortgage to a trustee are conveyed to a purchaser "under and subject to" the mortgage, the purchaser is under no obligation to insure the property for the benefit of the mortgagee. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Penn Plate Glass Co., 22 Sup. Ct. 842, 849, 186 U. S. 434, 46 L. Ed. 1234.

UNDER THE CARE OF A PHYSICIAN

"Consulting" a physician, and being "under the care of" a physician, not only in the technical use of the terms, but to the common mind, may mean very different things. A man may consult a physician without being under his care at all." Hewey v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 600, 602, 100 Me. 523.

Though a prescription given by a physician in response to a casual inquiry would not amount to being under the physician's care within the meaning of a statement in an application for life insurance that the applicant had not been "under the care of a physician" within two years, and though a prescription given after more careful examination as to an exceptional or isolated occurrence might not constitute the contemplated relationship, it is not necessary that the applicant should be bedridden to constitute being under a physician's care; but if the applicant, being apprehensive as to his condition, though "up and around," consulted a physician, and entrusted his case to him for regular or continuous treatment within the two years, the representation would be false, and would relieve the insurance company from obligations under the policy issued thereon. Bryant v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 60 S. E. 983, 984, 147 N. C. 181.

UNDER CHARGES

Charges were filed against a member of a medical society for misconduct, but a copy of them was not served on him at the time, because he was then under suspension for another offense. Later his suspension was remitted, and he was restored to good standing, whereupon he immediately tendered his resignation. Three days thereafter a copy of the charges was served on him, with a notice of hearing. Held, that he was "under charges" when he attempted to resign, within a by-law of the society prohibiting acceptance of the resignation of any member under charges. Ewald v. Medical Society of New York County, 128 N. Y. Supp. 886, 889, 144 App. Div. 82.

UNDER THE CIVIL SERVICE RULES

By such acceptance of St. 1911, c. 468, and St. 1907, c. 272, § 1, thus included therein by reference, the tenure of the incumbent of the office of city marshal was changed, so as to last during good behavior, though he was holding the office under a prior appointment not received in accordance with civil service rules; the phrase "under the civil service rules," as used in the 1907 statute, having reference merely to the holding of the office, and not to the method of appointment. Barnes v. Rivers, 99 N. E. 464, 465, 213 Mass. 1.

UNDER COLOR OF

See By Virtue of.

UNDER CONSIDERATION

A case is "under consideration" before the grand jury, within the meaning of Rev. Laws 1906, section 5338, when witnesses are being examined. State v. Slocum, 126 N. W. 1096, 1097, 111 Minn. 328.

UNDER THE CONSTITUTION AND LAWS

Arising under the Constitution or laws, see Arise—Arising.

UNDER CONTROL

"Free medical treatment," guaranteed by contract to members of the relief department of a railroad company, means without cost to the disabled member; and the place of treatment, "one of the hospitals under its control," as between the member and the company, means the hospital to which the member is taken by the medical examiner of the company. Gainesville & Alachua County Hospital Ass'n v. Hobbs, 69 S. E. 79, 81, 153 N. C. 188.

Where a railroad rule required extra freight trains to run through yards under control, looking out for yard engines and other extras, the words "under control" required the engineer to run at such a speed as would enable him to bring his train to a stop within vision, and this without reference to whether the weather was clear or foggy. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Young, 200 Fed. 359, 365, 118 C. C. A. 465.

The rules of a railroad company, requiring an engineer approaching stations to have his train "under control" until the track is plainly clear, and after providing that the train might occupy the main track between outside switches at a designated station, declared that the responsibility for a collision within those limits would rest on the approaching train. Held to plainly require an engineer, in approaching those limits in the nighttime, to adjust his control to the distance he could see along the track as he advanced, so that, if the track was already occupied, he could avoid a collision after that point came in view. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Hooker, 170 Fed. 154, 157, 95 C. C. A. 410.

UNDER THE CONTROL, MANAGEMENT, OR OPERATION

The words "under the control, management or operation," as used in the proviso of Acts 1907, c. 41, providing that the act shall not apply to any railroad under 50 miles in length under the control, management, or operation of any other road, mean the same as the words "a part of." Coal & Coke R. Co. v. Conley, 67 S. E. 613, 634, 67 W. Va. 129.

UNDER CONVICTION

A citizen who has been convicted of bribery in an election and has undergone the punishment fixed by the judgment is not "under conviction" of bribery, within Const. art. 4, § 1 (Code 1906, p. 111), disqualifying such person. Osborne v. Kanawha County Court, 69 S. E. 470, 471, 68 W. Va. 189, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF

As used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 47, requiring trustees to collect and reduce to money the property of the estate "under direction of the court," the quoted words do not necessarily mean by order previously made. Rathbone v. Ayer, 82 N. Y. Supp. 235, 237, 84 App. Div. 186.

One of the accepted meanings of the word "direction" is the act of governing, ordering, or ruling. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1260, c. 93, § 18b, provides that no one shall be allowed to enter a mine, except under the direction of the mine manager, until all conditions shall have been made safe. Held that, when the mine manager directs a servant to enter a room to remove dangerous conditions, the servant in so doing is "under the direction of the manager" within the statute, though he is not present. Kellyville Coal Co. v. Bruzas, 79 N. E. 309, 311, 223 Ill. 595.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, subd. 7, 30 Stat. 546, gives courts of bankruptcy powers to cause the estate of a bankrupt to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed. Subdivision 15 authorizes the making of orders necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of the act, and section 47, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 557, declares that trustees, in collecting and reducing the money and property of bankrupts, shall act "under the direction of the court." Held, that such sections authorize the appointment of an auctioneer by the court to sell property of a bankrupt's estate in advance of any particular occasion therefor. In re Benjamin, 136 Fed. 175, 176, 69 C. C. A. 191.

UNDER THE DIRECTION AND CONTROL OF

A former resident of Ireland, after living here for more than 35 years, died, leaving one who was apparently his widow, and some relatives. There was nothing to suggest to any one that he had a lawful wife and child in Ireland who were not aware of his death in time to assert their claims. A question arose as to who was entitled to the remainder of his estate after his supposed widow's portion was set apart, and the administrator adopted the method prescribed by Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 93, § 142, to have the rights of the parties judicially determined. All requirements of the statute were complied with. All persons who apparently had claims on the estate appeared in response to the statutory notice. There was no question as to who the collateral relations were, and the only doubt was as to whether two who claimed to be children of deceased were such as the law would recognize. Pending the proceeding, the claimants agreed in court on a settlement of the controversy between themselves. The administrator gave his consent subject to the approval of the court, which appeared to have been verbally expressed. A claim by an attorney for services in effecting such settlement was allowed, and accounts of the administrator and his successor referring to the agreement and the distribution pursuant thereto were allowed, and expressly approved by the court. Held, that the distribution was made "under the direction and control" of the court as the law requires, and the administrators were not liable to account to the lawful wife and child because the court did not pass a more formal order, as it was requested to do. Garrett v. Kerney, 68 Atl. 1051, 1052, 107 Md. 501.

UNDER FULL CONTROL

"Under full control," used in a railroad company's rules requiring trains to approach and pass through yards "under full control," as understood by railroad men, means ready to stop at any moment. Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 97 Pac. 944, 947, 37 Mont. 461, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446.

UNDER THE GENERAL ELECTION LAWS

Act No. 131 of 1898, as amended, provides that elections for authorizing special taxes, under Const. art. 232, shall be held "under the general election laws" of the state, and where there were no voting booths provided, and the voting was carried on in the open, without any protection, and the ballots were prepared by other persons for the voters and were signed for them, the voter making his mark, and every elector was assisted and his ballot written for him by another who was not a commissioner of election, the result of the election will not be allowed to stand. F. B. Williams Cypress Co. v. Police Jury of St. Martin Parish, 55 South. 878, 879, 129 La. 267.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE INFLUENCE OF SUDDEN PASSION

The phrase "under the immediate influence of sudden passion," as used in a definition of manslaughter, as a voluntary homicide committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion, arising from an adequate cause, but neither justified nor excused by law, means: (1) That the provocation must arise at the same time of the commission of the offense, and that the passion is not the result of a former provocation. (2) That the act must be directly caused by the passion arising out of the provocation: it is not enough that the mind is merely agitated by passion arising from some other provocation. (3) The passion intended is either of the emotions of the mind known as anger, rage, sudden resentment, or terror, rendering it incapable of cool reflection. Sue v. State, 105 S. W. 804, 809, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 122.

UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF LIQUOR

The words "under the influence of any intoxicant" in a casualty policy, providing that only a certain amount should be paid in case an "accidental injury is sustained while the assured is insane, delirious or under the influence of any intoxicant or narcotic," meant such degree of influence as would materially impair insured's ability to care for himself and guard against casualties; such degree of influence being equivalent to intoxication in the ordinary meaning of the word. Bakalars v. Continental Casualty Co., 122 N. W. 721, 722, 141 Wis. 43, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1241, 18 Ann. Cas. 1123.

Under an insurance contract limiting the company's liability to one-fifth of the amount otherwise payable if the accident occurred while "under the influence" of any intoxicant, a finding that insured, when injured, was not under the influence of intoxicants "so as to prevent him from being 'fairly' able to take care of himself," showed him to have been under the influence of intoxicants within the contract, so as to entitle him to recover only one-fifth of the amount otherwise payable. Furry's Adm'r v. General Acc. Ins. Co., 68 Atl. 655, 656, 80 Vt. 526, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1012, 13 Ann. Cas. 515.

UNDER THE INSPECTION OF PROPER OFFICERS

Rev. St. § 2979, provides that, if an importer gives satisfactory security that the merchandise is to be exported, the collector and naval officers shall permit the merchandise under the inspection of the proper officers to be shipped without payment of duty. Held, that since by Treasury Department articles 834, 838, 841, and 842, providing a system of licensed truckmen to whom a limited custody of the goods is intrusted for the purpose only of transfer from warehouse to hold, the Treasury Department has construed the words "under the inspection of proper officers" to mean that the goods are to be under the constant surveillance of such officers from the time they leave the warehouse until they reach the ship, such construction should be regarded of weight by a federal court. United States v. Ehr Gott, 182 Fed. 267, 272.

UNDER THE LAWS

The phrase, "corporation 'under the laws' of the state of Virginia" is equivalent in legal intendment to the phrase "corporation existing under the laws of Virginia." Mathieson Alkali Works v. Mathieson, 150 Fed. 241, 243, 80 C. C. A. 129.

An affidavit filed under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8351, making any person, not being licensed under the laws of the state, who shall sell spirituous liquors, guilty of a misdemeanor, alleging that accused unlawfully sold beer, not then having a license to sell liquors "according to" the laws of the state, was not defective for using the words quoted, instead of the word "under," as used in the statute; the affidavit being sufficient to inform accused of the offense charged. The phrases "according to" the laws, and "under" the laws, may not in every sense be synonymous; but their meaning, as used in this connection, is so far identical as fully to meet the requirements of good criminal pleading. Skelton v. State, 89 N. E. 860, 861, 173 Ind. 462.

UNDER LIKE CIRCUMSTANCES

See Like Circumstances.

UNDER THE ORDER OR DIRECTION OF

A railway postal clerk is not "an officer, clerk, or employé" traveling "under the order or direction of the Postmaster General," within the intent of the Post Office Regulation, § 11. That regulation refers only to officers detailed for special duty. Hartman v. United States, 40 Ct. Cl. 133, 137.

UNDER THE ORDERS AND EMPLOYMENT OF

The San Antonio city charter places the police department under the control of the fire commission, and provides that the power of appointment given to the mayor and the city council shall not apply to persons serving in such department. A city ordinance made appropriations for the police department, and special police and special sanitation "under the orders and employment of the mayor." The words "under the orders and employment of the mayor" apply only to special police and special sanitation, and not to the police department, under the control of the police and fire commission, and the appropriation was made for the legal police department pursuant to the duty imposed by the charter. City of San Antonio v. Beck (Tex.) 101 S. W. 263, 264.

UNDER REASONABLE LAWS AND REGULATIONS

A gas company, whose charter requires it to furnish gas to private consumers "under reasonable laws and regulations" at a price not to exceed a certain rate per thousand cubic feet, is not authorized by the quoted words to charge a meter rate in addition where less than a certain quantity of gas is used. Louisville Gas Co. v. Dulaney, 38 S. W. 703, 704, 100 Ky. 405, 36 L. R. A. 125.

UNDER THIS ACT

The first proviso of Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 3, § 18, providing that only such persons as are entitled to administer an estate "under" the act shall have the right to nominate an administrator, related to the whole act, and not only to that part of the section that precedes it. In re McWhirter's Estate, 85 N. E. 918, 920, 235 Ill. 607.

UNDER THE UNITED STATES

Senators of the United States do not hold their places "under the government of the United States," within the meaning of the declaration in Rev. St. U. S. § 1782, that any one convicted under its provisions shall be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under that government. Burton v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 694, 202 U. S. 344, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 392.

UNDER WAY

A vessel, although her headway is killed in the water, is considered "under way," and subject to the navigation rules, unless she is at anchor, or tied to the shore, or aground. The Nimrod, 173 Fed. 520, 525.

The act of Congress prescribing navigation rules provides that a vessel is "under way," within the meaning of the rules, when she is not at anchor, or made fast to the shore, or aground. So a steamship not anchored or disabled must be held to the responsibility of a steam vessel under way in case of a collision. The Kaga Maru, 123 Fed. 139, 144.

A vessel is "under way," within steering and sailing rule 28, providing that, when vessels are in sight of one another, a steam vessel under way, whose engines are going with full speed astern, shall indicate the fact with three short blasts of the whistle, when she is not at anchor, or made fast to the shore, or aground. The Aurelia, 183 Fed. 341, 343.

A steam vessel lying with her nose against the bank of a stream, and holding her position against the current by the movement of her wheel, is a vessel "under way" within the navigation rules, and not entitled to the rights of an anchored vessel. The Ruth, 178 Fed. 749; Id., 186 Fed. 87, 89, 108 C. C. A. 199.

UNDERFLOW

"The 'underflow' is the subterranean flow of water which slowly finds its way through the sand and gravel constituting the bed of the stream, and to which rights by appropriation may attach." Howcroft v. Union & Jordan Irr. Co., 71 Pac. 487, 489, 25 Utah, 311.

UNDERGROUND STREAM

A "stream of water" has a defined channel. It has banks, and is very distinct from the percolations of subsurface water, which oozes in veins or filters through the earth's strata. An "underground stream" of water differs from a "surface stream" only with respect to its location above or below the surface. Stoner v. Patten, 63 S. E. 897, 898, 132 Ga. 178.

UNDERPINNING

A count in an action for damages charged that defendant undertook while excavating to support by underpinning a wall on the margin of plaintiff's land, and that such underpinning was done so negligently that as a proximate cause thereof a part of plaintiff's wall fell. Held, that the word "underpinning" meant placing something under the wall, and that the count rested upon the fact that the defendant undertook to place underpinning under the wall, and in so doing negligently caused it to fall, and that as to another count which rested upon defendant's failure to place props, etc., it and its allegations were distinguishable as separate counts on the same cause of action. H. H. Parker & Bro. v. Hodgson, 55 South. 818, 819, 172 Ala. 632.

UNDERSTAND

"'Understand' is to supply mentally as in explanation of an ellipsis." An assertion, although made in each transaction, by the customers of an office where futures are bought and sold, that actual delivery is "contemplated" and "understood" in all cases, will not prevent the keeper of the office from being guilty of maintaining a gaming house, if as a matter of fact the customers, throughout a continued course of dealings, do not make, tender, or accept actual delivery, but through the proprietor of the office settle their winnings and losses in money. The actual facts of the case must override the contradictory alleged contemplation of the parties.

Anderson v. State, 58 S. E. 401, 411, 412, 2 Ga. App. 1.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1884, authorizing the appointment of a resident of the county as an interpreter when a witness does not "understand the English language," where an Indian understood some of the language addressed to him in English, though he could not understand it all, and he had through association with Spanish companions acquired a slight knowledge of that language, and which was used in his conversation with defendant on the occasion of the commission of a crime, the court did not abuse its discretion in appointing an Indian interpreter, a resident of the county, for the Indian in question, when testifying as a witness on defendant's trial. People v. Salas, 84 Pac. 295, 296, 2 Cal. App. 537.

UNDERSTANDING

See Entirely Without Understanding;
On Any Understanding or Agreement.

As an agreement

The use of the ambiguous word "understanding" in a husband's testimony describing a transaction between him and his wife, on which he based claim to cotton produced on her land, does not sufficiently show a meeting of the minds in a contract or agreement intended to be obligatory on both, so as to make the judgment, in an action by the husband for damages to the cotton, pleadable as an adjudication against her. Williams v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 35 South. 169, 82 Miss. 659.

UNDERSTOOD

See Being Understood; It Was So Understood.

As agreed

The word "understood," as used in a clause inserted in a deed for the grantor's benefit, providing that it is "understood" that railroad companies shall have a right of way over the land, is synonymous with the word "agreed," and by accepting the deed the agreement becomes as binding on the grantee as if he had signed the instrument. In re Barkhausen, 124 N. W. 649, 651, 142 Wis. 292 (citing Higginson v. Weld [Mass.] 14 Gray, 165, 170).

In detinue for a mule claimed by plaintiff under a mortgage, plaintiff testified that he sold the mule to the mortgagor, who had had possession prior to the sale and execution of the mortgage, and that the mule was his up to the time that the mortgage was executed, and that it was "so understood." Held, that it was not error to refuse to exclude the expression "it was so understood," since, as used, it should be taken as synonymous with "agreement" and the statement of a fact, and not a condition. Holman v. Clark, 41 South. 765, 767, 148 Ala. 286.

The words "understood" and "agreed" may be used synonymously. Where, in an action to recover a reward for convicting certain voters of election bribery, the court found that one of the bribers signed and swore to the affidavits on which plaintiff instituted the prosecutions, and that it was "understood" between plaintiff and such briber that the latter should receive compensation therefor out of the amount recovered for the reward, the word "understood" was used in the sense of "agreed." Mount v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 80 N. E. 629, 630, 168 Ind. 661, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483 (citing Higginson v. Weld [Mass.] 14 Gray, 170; Barkow v. Sanger, 3 N. W. 16, 47 Wis. 501; Bullock v. Johnson, 35 S. E. 703, 110 Ga. 486; Saltmarsh v. Bower, 34 Ala. 613; Griffin v. Isbell, 17 Ala. 184; Winslow v. Dakota Lumber Co., 20 N. W. 145, 32 Minn. 238; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7161).

UNDERTAKE

A count alleging that defendants were employed to set plaintiff's broken leg and that in consideration thereof "undertook to reduce said fracture and set the broken bone in a proper and skillful manner, and undertook the care and charge of said leg and the cure thereof," but conducted themselves carelessly and unskillfully, is in case and not in assumption; the word "undertook," as used, not importing a promise. Lawson v. Crane & Hall, 74 Atl. 641, 642, 83 Vt. 115.

In an action for the wrongful seizure by defendant of plaintiff's goods the testimony of an officer who assisted defendant in the seizure and who testified in his behalf that he did not undertake to compel plaintiff to give defendant the goods was properly excluded as a conclusion of the witness; the word "undertake" not being used in the sense of purpose or intent, but in the sense that he did no act calculated to effect such purpose. Souther v. Hunt (Tex.) 141 S. W. 359, 363.

UNDERTAKER

As profession, see Profession.

A person who engages in the care of dead human bodies and the burial or other disposition of them, together with the conduct of the funeral and burial services, is an "undertaker." People v. Ringe, 110 N. Y. Supp. 74, 125 App. Div. 592; Id., 90 N. E. 451, 452, 197 N. Y. 143, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 18 Ann. Cas. 474.

UNDERTAKING

See Original Undertaking; Statutory Undertaking; Void Undertaking.

A simplified bond, without a seal, is known as an "undertaking." Wollenberg v. Sykes, 89 Pac. 148, 149, 49 Or. 163.

Promise distinguished

Where, in a suit to enforce a resulting trust, the complaint alleged that the property in controversy was conveyed to defendant on her promise and undertaking to redeliver the deed to plaintiff in the event of his recovery from an illness, etc., that plaintiff delivered the deed to defendant in trust only, defendant promising plaintiff at the time of such delivery, etc., such language did not necessarily mean an oral promise, since the term "promise" may be a contract, a pact, or an agreement, while the word "undertaking" is a stronger term and implies entering into a stipulation. Dennison v. Barney, 113 Pac. 519, 521, 49 Colo. 442.

UNDERWRITTEN

Bonds are "underwritten" by a person when that person buys the bonds and guarantees their sale. Bone v. Hayes, 99 Pac. 172, 174, 154 Cal. 759.

UNDEVELOPED GRANITE QUARRY

The phrase "undeveloped granite quarry" signifies a place from which granite may be taken. There is no inconsistency in a bill to rescind a sale of land for the purchaser's misrepresentations as to its value because it alleges that an "undeveloped granite quarry" under the land is of great value. Crompton v. Beedle, 75 Atl. 331, 335, 83 Vt. 287, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 399.

UNDISPUTED

UNDISPUTED TITLE

Under Greater New York Charter, § 978, as amended, requiring the commissioners of estimate and assessment in a street opening proceeding to give notice to the persons interested to present their claims, and requiring the commissioners to refer the taking of proof of title to property taken, where the same is undisputed, and proof as to any lien or incumbrance thereon, to their clerk or to the assistant corporation counsel in charge of the proceeding, an "undisputed title" is one which is not disputed before the commissioners by the presentment of adverse claims, and to create conflicting claims two or more persons must claim the same interest or right, and the interposition of a claim of lien or incumbrance does not raise a dispute as to the title; and the taking of proof as to any lien or incumbrance must be referred by the commissioners to their clerk or to the assistant corporation counsel, and where there is a dispute as to the ownership of a parcel of land the commissioners need only ascertain and report the value thereof and make an award to unknown owners, and the taking of proof of title is unnecessary. In re Mt. Olivet Ave. in City of New York, 127 N. Y. Supp. 218, 219, 70 Misc. Rep. 276.

UNDISTRIBUTED

"Undistributed," within Rev. Laws, c. 137, § 4, qualifying section 3, providing that administration shall not be originally granted more than 20 years after death of deceased, by providing that if administration has not been taken on the estate of a decedent within such 20 years, and any property remains undistributed, or thereafter accrues to such estate and remains to be administered, original administration may be granted, but such administration shall affect no other property, does not mean only "undistributed by an administrator"; but the section applies to all cases where property of an intestate has not been actually divided among and put in the control of the persons entitled as next of kin. Dallinger v. Morse, 94 N. E. 701, 702, 208 Mass. 501, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 982.

UNDIVIDED

UNDIVIDED PROFITS

The aggregate of all the excessive collection of life insurance premiums in a particular year constitutes that year's accumulation of surplus, which fund is sometimes called, or miscalled, "undivided profits," or "surplus earnings," or the like. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 96 S. W. 859, 893, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

UNDUE

UNDUE AND UNREASONABLE DISCRIMINATION

A contract entered into by a railroad company, granting to a steamboat company the exclusive right to receive and discharge freight and passengers at a dock or wharf which is a part of and connected with its depot and station grounds, and which affords the only means and facility for approaching the station grounds by means of the water highway, and excluding all the competitors of such steamboat company from like or similar privileges at any time or at all, is "undue and unreasonable discrimination" in favor of the one company and against its competitors, which is in violation of the provisions of Const. § 6, art. 11. Cœur d'Alene & St. Joe Transp. Co. v. Ferrell, 128 Pac. 565, 567, 22 Idaho, 752, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 965.

UNDUE INFLUENCE

See, also, Unduly Influenced.

The word "undue," when used to qualify "influence," has the legal meaning of wrongful. Sears v. Vaughan, 82 N. E. 881, 887, 230 Ill. 572.

Insistence upon one's legal rights is not "undue influence." Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 108 Pac. 42, 44, 12 Cal. App. 572.

The word "undue," as used in connection with "undue influence" as affecting the validity of a will, is not used in the sense lexicographers give to it as one of the popular meanings, disproportionate, inordinate, unworthy, as in the phrases "undue excitement," "undue partiality," "undue attachment," or the like; but as a legal phrase it is used in a stricter sense, as denoting something wrong according to the standard morals which the law enforces in the relations of men, and therefore something legally wrong, something violative of a legal duty; in a word, something illegal. Caughey v. Bridenbaugh, 57 Atl. 821, 823, 208 Pa. 414.

Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3834, "undue influence," which operates to invalidate a will, is such an influence as amounts to deception. De Nieff v. Howell, 75 S. E. 2.2, 204, 138 Ga. 248.

Plaintiffs purchased real estate, borrowing a balance of $670 of the price from defendant, and having the property conveyed to him as security. Plaintiffs being in financial difficulties, and having mortgaged their personal property to defendant for other indebtedness, found a purchaser for the real estate and contracted to procure a conveyance to him within 15 days. Defendant refused to execute a deed to the purchaser, unless plaintiffs consented to pay him $289.71, consisting of usurious interest and bonuses on account of the moneys advanced by him to plaintiffs, out of the purchase price of such real estate, and in order not to lose the sale, and because of plaintiffs' necessities, they agreed that he should receive such additional sum as demanded. Held, that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount so paid, as money paid under duress, under Civ. Code, §§ 1196, 1204, providing that an apparent consent is not real or free when obtained through undue influence, and defining "undue influence" to consist of the taking of a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of another's necessities or distress. Redford v. Weller, 131 N. W. 296, 297, 27 S. D. 334.

As deprivation of free agency

For influence to amount to "undue influence," it must destroy, or at least impair or prevent, free agency. Drinkwine v. Gruelle, 98 N. W. 534, 536, 120 Wis. 628.

"To constitute 'undue influence,' within the meaning of the law, there must be mental constraint, moral coercion, the substitution of external for internal agency." Franklin v. Belt, 60 S. E. 146, 148, 130 Ga. 37 (citing Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 472, 476).

"Undue influence," to justify the setting aside of a will, must be such as will deprive the testator of his or her free agency. Yorty v. Webster, 68 N. E. 1068, 1069, 205 Ill. 630 (citing Taylor v. Pegram, 37 N. E. 837, 151 Ill. 106; Francis v. Wilkinson, 35 N. E. 150, 147 Ill. 370; Thompson v. Bennett, 62 N. E. 321, 194 Ill. 57).

"Undue influence," in order to avoid a will, must be directly connected with the execution of the will, and be exerted for the purpose of procuring a will in favor of particular parties, to such an extent as to destroy testator's freedom of will and to practically render it that of another. Snell v. Weldon, 87 N. E. 1022, 1026, 239 Ill. 279.

"Undue influence," justifying the setting aside of the probate of a will, must be such as to deprive the testator of his free agency, rendering his act the result of the will of another, instead of his own. Johnson v. Farrell, 74 N. E. 760, 761, 215 Ill. 542.

"Undue influence," which would avoid a will, must be such as would destroy the liberty and free agency of the testator in the disposition of his property. Allday v. Cage (Tex.) 148 S. W. 838, 841.

To defeat a will, "undue influence" must overcome testator's will power and substitute that of another, must amount to coercion or fraud, and be tantamount to force or fear, and thus destroy testator's free agency. Council v. Mayhew, 55 South. 311, 318, 172 Ala. 295; Mullen v. Johnson, 47 South. 584, 587, 157 Ala. 262.

The "undue influence" which will vitiate a will must be such as amounts to coercion in destroying free agency, or such influence as deprives testator of his free agency, and prevents him from doing as he pleases with his property, but neither advice nor persuasion will vitiate a will made freely from conviction, though such will might not have been made but for such persuasion. Berst v. Moxom, 138 S. W. 74, 77, 157 Mo. App. 342.

There is no "undue influence," sufficient to set aside a deed, unless the influence took away the free agency of the grantor; for not every influence is undue, and undue influence cannot be predicated of any act, unless free agency is destroyed. Influence exerted by means of advice, arguments, persuasions, solicitation, suggestion, or entreaty is not undue, unless it is so importunate and persistent, or otherwise so operates, as to subdue and subordinate the will and to take away free agency. Burnett v. Smith, 47 South. 117, 118, 93 Miss. 566 (citing 8 Words and Phrases p. 7166).

"Undue influence" must destroy the free agency of testator, and amount to coercion, and it must be shown that testator had no free will. Wood's Ex'r v. Wood, 63 S. E. 994, 995, 109 Va. 470.

"'Undue influence' is such influence that the instrument is not properly an expression of the will of the testator in regard to the disposition of his property, but rather an expression of the will of another person." Gavitt v. Moulton, 96 N. W. 395, 399, 119 Wis. 35 (citing In re Jackman's Will, 26 Wis. 104).

"Undue influence," which will invalidate a gift, must be something which destroys the free agency of the donor, and substitutes therefor the will of another. What constitutes such undue influence cannot be precisely defined, and each case must be determined upon the consideration of its special facts. The means employed and extent of the influence are immaterial, if their effect be to destroy the free agency of the donor. The ultimate facts of undue influence may, and in many cases can only, be established by circumstantial evidence. Prescott v. Johnson, 97 N. W. 891, 892, 91 Minn. 273.

To constitute "undue influence," it is essential that the testator's or grantor's mind has been overcome, and it is not sufficient merely that there shall not have been an absolute freedom from influence. Schneider v. Vosburgh, 106 N. W. 1129, 1130, 143 Mich. 476.

To constitute "undue influence," the testator must be so influenced by persuasion, pressure, or fraudulent contrivance that he does not act intelligently or voluntarily and is subject to the will and purpose of another. It may be exerted through threats, fraud, importunity, or the silent, resistless power which the strong often exercise over the weak or infirm. It must be sufficient to destroy his free agency and substitute the will of another for that of the testator. Entreaty, importunity, or persuasion may be employed, as may appeal to the memory of past kindnesses and the calls of the distressed. Mere suggestions or advice addressed to the understanding or judgment of the testator never constitute undue influence; neither does solicitation, unless the testator is so worn out with importunities that his will gives way. In re Tyner, 106 N. W. 898, 899, 97 Minn. 181 (citing Robinson v. Robinson, 53 Atl. 253, 203 Pa. 401; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 43 Minn. 73, 44 N. W. 885).

Influence of the husband of a testator, to be "undue," must have been such as to destroy her free agency, and make her the implement of her husband's craft, and make the instrument executed by her the will of her husband rather than her own. It must operate to destroy her free agency, not at some time in the past, but at the very time and in the very act of executing the instrument. Solicitations, however importunate, cannot of themselves constitute "undue influence"; for though these may have a restraining effect, in that they persuade or induce the mind of the testatrix to consent to the thing asked for, they do not destroy her power to freely dispose of her estate. The mere fact that the testatrix changed her mind, and at the request of her husband made a will which she would not have made, but for his influence, is perfectly consistent with, and may be regarded as an exercise of, her free agency. To come within the ban of the law, the request and importunity of the husband must have gone to the point where argument and persuasion end and coercion, either physical or moral, begins, and the act of the testatrix must not have been a voluntary yielding to the request or demand of her husband, but a submission of her mind and will to his. In short, to be the product of undue influence, the will made must be in essence and effect the will of the party exercising it, rather than the will of the person executing it. Where testatrix, who executed her will four years after the death of her husband, felt herself bound by the promise she had made her husband when on his deathbed to give her property to his heirs and relatives, and believed that she would suffer the displeasure of her husband in the future if she failed to carry out his wishes, there was not such undue influence as to invalidate her will, though by reason thereof she willed her property to his relatives and heirs, to the exclusion of her own, a disposition she otherwise would not have made. Henderson v. Jackson, 111 N. W. 821, 823, 138 Iowa, 326, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479 (citing Englert v. Englert, 47 Atl. 940, 198 Pa. 326, 82 Am. St. Rep. 808; Kaufman's Will, 49 Pac. 192, 117 Cal. 288, 59 Am. St. Rep. 179; Schmidt v. Schmidt, 50 N. W. 598, 47 Minn. 451; Gilbert v. Gilbert, 22 Ala. 529, 58 Am. Dec. 268; Thompson v. Kyner, 65 Pa. 368; Shell's Estate, 63 Pac. 413, 28 Colo. 167, 53 L. R. A. 387, 89 Am. St. Rep. 181; Eastis v. Montgomery, 9 South. 311, 93 Ala. 293; McIntire v. McConn, 28 Iowa, 480; Perkins v. Perkins, 90 N. W. 55, 116 Iowa, 253).

To constitute "undue influence," the mind must be so controlled or affected by persuasion or pressure, artful or fraudulent contrivances, or by the insidious influences of persons in close confidential relations with him, that he is not left to act intelligently, understandingly, and voluntarily, but subject to the will or purposes of another. Howard v. Farr, 131 N. W. 1071, 1073, 115 Minn. 86.

"Undue influence," in relation to the making of a will, is influence such as to amount to overpersuasion, coercion, of force, destroying the free agency and will power of the testator. Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. 175, 185; Myers v. Hauger, 11 S. W. 974, 975, 98 Mo. 433; Thompson v. Ish, 12 S. W. 510, 511, 99 Mo. 160, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552; Tilbe v. Kamp, 54 S. W. 879, 55 S. W. 440, 154 Mo. 545. Where, in a will contest, the court charged that a will in favor of persons standing in confidential relations to testatrix was presumed in law to have been made under undue influence exercised by such beneficiaries, and that the will having been made in favor of testatrix's physician and nurse, to the partial exclusion of lawful heirs, the burden was on them to show want of undue influence, an instruction defining such term as influence amounting to overpersuasion, coercion, or force, destroying the free agency and will power of testatrix, was unobjectionable. Where the validity of a will was attacked because of alleged undue influence of S., evidence of declarations made by testatrix as to why she left the house of one of her relatives and built a house at P., and as to misunderstandings and disputes which occurred between her and her relatives prior to such removal, was admissible to show that testatrix's change of feeling towards her relatives was not brought about by S. Such evidence was also competent to rebut contestant's proof, concerning occurrences showing that testatrix was under control of S., and that she stated to various witnesses that S. would not allow testatrix's relatives to visit her, etc. Influence gained over testatrix by her physician and nurse through kindness and affection, which induced her to execute a will in their favor, without any imposition or fraud, was not undue influence sufficient to invalidate the will. Selbert v. Hatcher, 102 S. W. 962, 967, 205 Mo. 83.

Fraud or "undue influence" exercised over testator, to avoid a will, must be directly connected with its execution, the influence which law condemns being not the legitimate influence springing from natural affection, but the malign influence which springs from fear, coercion, or any other cause depriving testator of free agency in disposing of his property, and the influence must be specially exerted to procure a will in favor of particular persons. Sanger v. McDonald, 112 S. W. 365, 368, 87 Ark. 148.

By "undue influence" is meant the substitution of the will of another person for that of the testator, so that the testator is not able to dispose of his estate as if left to his own guidance or free agency. Hayes v. Hayes, 145 S. W. 1155, 1158, 242 Mo. 155.

An influence, sufficient to invalidate a will, must be such as to destroy the testator's free agency and induce him to do, against his will, that which he would otherwise not have done, and must operate on or influence the testamentary acts. Raison v. Raison, 146 S. W. 400, 402, 148 Ky. 116.

The word "influence," in the term "undue influence," as affecting the validity of a will, does not refer to any and every line of conduct capable of disposing in one's favor a free and self-directing mind, but to a control acquired over another which virtually destroys his free agency. Caughy v. Bridenbaugh, 57 Atl. 821, 823, 208 Pa. 414.

Neither advice, suggestions, reasons, or arguments addressed to the judgment of the person who is contemplating making a will, and which are intelligently considered by such person, nor even importunity or persuasion, if the testator has sufficient mental capacity and strength of will to properly weigh and consider them, and resist them unless adopted by him in the free exercise of his judgment and volition, will constitute "undue influence"; but whatever may be the nature and extent of the influence, if, because of the physical and mental weakness of the testator and the nature and persistency of the influence exerted, it is such that he is unable to resist it, and it deprives him of his power to act as a free agent in the manner that he otherwise would, it is "undue influence," and will avoid the will. Appeal of O'Brien, 60 Atl. 880, 881, 100 Me. 156.

The influence which is "undue" and will vitiate a will must amount to moral or physical coercion, which destroys free agency and constrains its subject to do that which, but for it, he would not have done. In re Buckman's Will, 85 Atl. 246, 250, 80 N. J. Eq. 556.

The "undue influence" which vitiates a will is such influence, whether slight or powerful, as is sufficient to destroy free agency, so that the act is the result of the domination of the mind of another rather than the expression of the will and mind of testator. In re Johnson's Will, 85 Atl. 254, 259, 80 N. J. Eq. 525.

"Undue influence," to invalidate a will, must amount to coercion, compulsion, or constraint, destroying testator's free agency, and obliging him to adopt the will of another, instead of exercising his own. Ginter v. Ginter, 101 Pac. 634, 640, 79 Kan. 721, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024 (citing Terry v. Buffington, 11 Ga. 337, 56 Am. Dec. 423; In re Shell's Estate, 63 Pac. 413, 28 Colo. 167, 53 L. R. A. 387, 89 Am. St. Rep. 181).

"Undue influence," that will destroy a will, must be such as in effect destroyed testator's free agency and substituted for his own another person's will, and directly affected the testamentary acts. In re Weber's Estate, 114 Pac. 597, 603, 15 Cal. App. 224.

"Undue influence," invalidating a will, must be an influence exerted prior to or at the time of the making of the will, and such as destroys free agency, constraining testator at the time the will is made to make a disposition of his estate contrary to and different from what he would have made had he been left to the free exercise of his own inclination or judgment. In re Ricks' Estate, 117 Pac. 532, 536, 160 Cal. 450.

"Undue influence," which will avoid a will, is not mere persuasion of testator, but such an influence as deprived him of the free exercise of his intellectual powers, exercised by coercion, imposition, or fraud, and impelling him to act in fear, a desire for peace, or some feeling which he is unable to restrain. In re Tresidder's Estate, 125 Pac. 1034, 1035, 70 Wash. 15 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, 7166-7172).

"Undue influence," such as invalidates a will, is any improper or wrongful constraint, machination, urgency, or persuasion, whereby the will of the person is overborne, and he is induced to do, or forbear to do, an act which he would not do, or would do, if left to act freely. In re Olson's Estate, 126 Pac. 171, 174, 19 Cal. App. 379.

Where there is merely such a dominating and controlling influence exerted over testator by excessive importunity, or of the mastery which one mind sometimes gains over another, the object which is consciously sought and gained is to lead testator to make a will which is different from the one he otherwise would have made and constitutes "undue influence." Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 91 N. E. 210, 211, 205 Mass. 310, 18 Ann. Cas. 410.

To avoid a deed on the ground of undue influence, the evidence must show such an influence exerted on the grantor as to override his will and to make the act of executing the deed a mere mechanical performance by him of the design of the person exerting the influence, and "undue influence" may consist in any influence which is so far operative as to destroy free agency. Du Bose v. Kell, 71 S. E. 371, 378, 90 S. C. 196.

To set aside a deed for "undue influence," it must appear that the influence destroyed the free agency of the grantor and substituted the will of another for his, and, unless such fact appears, the showing of a motive and an opportunity to exert undue influence, together with the falling mental powers of the grantor, are insufficient to overthrow the deed. Woodville v. Woodville, 60 S. E. 140, 144, 63 W. Va. 286.

"Before 'undue influence' can be made the ground for setting aside a deed, it must be sufficient to destroy free agency on the part of the grantor. It must amount to coercion—practically duress. Suggestion and advice, addressed to the understanding and judgment, do not constitute 'undue influence'; nor does solicitation, unless the party be so worn by the importunities that his will gives way. Earnest entreaty, importunity, and persuasion may be employed; but if the influence is not irresistible, it is not undue, and its existence is immaterial, even though it is yielded to." Jenkins v. Rhodes, 56 S. E. 332, 334, 106 Va. 564 (citing Greer v. Greer [Va.] 9 Grat. 330, 333; Orr v. Pennington, 24 S. E. 928, 93 Va. 268; Hammond v. Welton, 64 N. W. 25, 106 Mich. 244; Hamilton v. Smith, 10 N. W. 276, 57 Iowa, 15, 42 Am. Rep. 39; Conley v. Nailor, 6 Sup. Ct. 1001, 118 U. S. 127, 30 L. Ed. 112).

To constitute "undue influence," it is unnecessary that moral turpitude or improper motive should exist, and if one, from the best of motives, having obtained a dominant influence over a grantor's mind, induces him to execute a deed or other instrument materially affecting his rights, which he would not have otherwise executed, so exercising the influence obtained that the grantor's will is effaced or supplanted, the instrument is fraudulent. Myatt v. Myatt, 62 S. E. 887, 888, 149 N. C. 137.

"Undue influence" of a husband in procuring his wife to adopt his child by a former wife means that he so far dominated her will as to substitute his will for hers, with the result that the action brought about by the undue influence is not in reality her act. Phillips v. Chase, 89 N. E. 1049, 1050, 203 Mass. 556, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159, 17 Ann. Cas. 544.

As fraud

"Undue influence" is a species of fraud. Gallagher v. Neilon, 121 S. W. 564, 568. See, also, Pickler v. Wise, 132 N. W. 815, 817, 152 Iowa, 644.

"Undue influence" is either a species of fraud or a kind of duress. In either case it comes in for the same consideration as fraud in general. Heath v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 64 Atl. 1127, 79 Vt. 301.

"Undue influence" is recognized by all authorities as a species of fraud, and fraud, inducing a transfer of personal property or a chose in action, renders such transfer voidable, and one of the remedies of the party defrauded, or his executors, is a rescission of the transfer." Borchert v. Borchert, 113 N. W. 35, 37, 132 Wis. 593 (quoting and adopting definition in Coon v. Dennis, 69 N. W. 666, 111 Mich. 450).

The procuring of the execution of a will by "undue influence" partakes of the nature of a fraud, or imports at least a constructive fraud on testator. Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 91 N. E. 210, 211, 205 Mass. 310, 18 Ann. Cas. 410.

"Undue influence" is a species of fraud, and in probate law is an unlawful coercion which destroys the free agency of a testator, and substitutes for his free and disposing mind some will other than his own. In re Campbell's Will, 136 N. Y. Supp. 1086, 1104; Scott v. Barker, 113 N. Y. Supp. 695, 698, 699, 129 App. Div. 241 (quoting and adopting definition in Matter of Snelling, 32 N. E. 1006, 136 N. Y. 515; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357).

In an action to avoid a deed for undue influence in its procurement, an instruction that "undue influence" is a fraudulent influence, controlling the mind of him operated upon, by which the will is perverted from its free exercise, and submitting as issues whether defendant possessed undue influence over grantor, and, if so, whether he fraudulently used it to procure the deed, and whether he exerted a fraudulent influence over grantor sufficient to destroy free agency, etc., was not objectionable as laying too much stress on the element of fraud as part of the definition of undue influence. Myatt v. Myatt, 62 S. E. 887, 888, 149 N. C. 137.

"Undue influence" in the execution of a will is not the same as fraud. One may exist without the other, though undue influence may be exerted by means of fraud; "fraud" being a distinct head of objection from im-portunity and undue influence. That is undue influence which amounts to constraint which substitutes the will of another for that of testator, whether through a threat or fraud, but, however exercised, it must, to avoid the will, destroy testator's free agency when the instrument is made. In re Snowball's Estate, 107 Pac. 598, 600, 157 Cal. 301.

"Undue influence" may be exerted to prevent the detection of fraud with reference to testatrix. It may amount to fraud if sufficiently strong to secure the provisions of the will desired. Cooper v. Harlow, 128 N. W. 259, 261, 163 Mich. 210.

"Undue influence," sufficient to destroy a will, must be such as to constitute a fraudulent influence controlling testator's mind, so as to induce him to make a will which he would not otherwise have made. In re Abbe's Will, 59 S. E. 700, 701, 146 N. C. 273.

How exercised

"Undue influence" is that which compels the testator to do that which is against his will, from fear, the desire of peace, or some feeling which he is unable to resist. Sheppey v. Stevens, 185 Fed. 147, 156; Struth v. Decker, 59 Atl. 727, 730, 100 Md. 368 (quoting Schouler, Wills [2d Ed.] § 228); Robinson v. Robinson, 53 Atl. 253, 265, 203 Pa. 400.

"Undue influence" may well be defined as moral duress or coercion, whereby one is led to make a contract which he would not have made if left to act of his own free will. Foot v. De Poy, 102 N. W. 112, 114, 126 Iowa, 366, 68 L. R. A. 302, 106 Am. St. Rep. 365.

"Undue influence," violating a contract, must amount to force or coercion, so as to destroy free agency. Fjone v. Fjone, 112 N. W. 70, 71, 16 N. D. 100 (citing Davis v. Culver [N. Y.] 13 How. Prac. 62; Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380; Andrews, Am. Law).

"Undue influence" may be exerted on testator, so as to render his will invalid, either by fraudulent means or by physical or moral coercion practiced on him, without any actual deception. Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 91 N. E. 210, 211, 205 Mass. 310, 18 Ann. Cas. 410.

"Undue influence," which will vitiate a will, must amount to force and coercion, destroying free agency. It must not be the mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another. That would be a very strong ground in favor of the testamentary act. Further, there must be proof that the act was obtained by coercion or importunity which could not be resisted; that it was done merely for the sake of peace, so that the motive was tantamount to force and fear. Wallen v. Wallen, 57 S. E. 596, 599, 107 Va. 131.

"To establish 'undue influence,' sufficient to invalidate a will, it must be shown that the will of the testator was coerced into doing that which he did not desire to do." Gavitt v. Moulton, 96 N. W. 395, 399, 119 Wis. 35.

The "undue influence" that will suffice to set aside a will must be such as to overcome the free volition or conscious judgment of the testator and to substitute the wicked purposes of another instead, and must be the efficient cause without which the obnoxious disposition would not have been made. This may be accomplished, not alone by physical coercion or threats of personal harm or abuse, but also by the insidious operation of a stronger mind upon one weakened and impaired by disease or otherwise, whereby the latter is subject to the former and induced to do its bidding, instead of acting in the exercise of unconstrained volition or judgment. It is not all influence brought to bear upon the mind of the testator that may be denominated undue. In re Pickett's Will, 89 Pac. 377, 386, 49 Or. 127 (citing In re Holman's Will, 70 Pac. 913, 42 Or. 358).

To establish "undue influence" sufficient to invalidate a deed, there must be proof of threats or misrepresentation, undue flattery, or fraud practiced, or physical or moral coercion sufficient to overpower volition, destroy free agency, and impel the party on whom it is practiced to act against his inclination and will; motive, opportunity, or even ability to control in the absence of affirmative proof that it was exercised not being sufficient. Nelson v. Wiggins, 137 N. W. 623, 627, 172 Mich. 191.

"Whatever destroys free agency and constrains the person whose act is brought in judgment to do what is against his will and what he would not have done if left to himself is 'undue influence,' whether the control be exercised by physical force, threats, importunities, or any other species of mental or physical coercion." A grantor, who was deprived of her free will and agency in the execution of a deed of trust by the action and conduct of the grantee and his representatives in respect to the arrest and prosecution of the grantor's husband, executed the deed under duress in contemplation of law, so as to enable her to avoid the deed. Turner v. Overall, 72 S. W. 644, 648, 172 Mo. 271 (quoting and adopting definition in Earle v. Norfolk & N. B. Hosiery Co., 36 N. E. 188; Bell v. Campbell, 25 S. W. 359, 123 Mo. 1, 45 Am. St. Rep. 505).

"Undue influence" is such influence as compels the testator to do that which is against his will from fear, desire of peace, or some feeling which he is unable to resist. Such influence must in some measure destroy the free agency of the testator and must be sufficient to prevent the exercise of that discretion which the law requires in the exercise of the will. Mere arguments, persuasions, solicitations, or entreaties by a beneficiary in a will is not that character of "undue influence" which is contemplated by law when speaking of "undue influence." Franklin v. Boone, 88 S. W. 262, 263, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 597 (citing Patterson v. Lamb, 52 S. W. 99, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 512; Barry v. Gracette [Tex.] 71 S. W. 309; Morrison v. Thoman [Tex.] 86 S. W. 1069).

Actual "undue influence," inducing the execution of a will, may consist of threats of personal harm or duress, under the force of which a person makes a testamentary disposition of his property which is really against his will. In the same category is the undue influence exerted by a strong mind over a weak one by domination, by deceit, or by constant importunity and persuasion, which the weaker mind is unable to resist. Undue influence of this type can never be presumed, but must be affirmatively established; but where the beneficiary under a will maintains some confidential relation to testator, and where the will excludes the natural objects of testator's bounty, the burden of establishing freedom from undue influence is on the proponent. In re Marlor's Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 161, 162, 52 Misc. Rep. 263.

"Undue influence" is that which compels the testator to do that which is against his will from fear, the desire of peace, or some feeling which he is unable to resist. We say that the influence must be undue in order to vitiate the instrument, because influences of one kind and another surround every rational being, and operate necessarily in determining his course of conduct under every relation of life. Morrison v. Thoman (Tex.) 86 S. W. 1069, 1071 (quoting and adopting the definition in Schouler, Wills, § 227, and citing Vance v. Upson, 1 S. W. 179, 66 Tex. 479; Brown v. Mitchell, 12 S. W. 606, 75 Tex. 9; Trezevant v. Rains [Tex.] 19 S. W. 567; McIntosh v. Moore, 53 S. W. 611, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 22; Patterson v. Lamb, 52 S. W. 98, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 512).

"Undue influence" is "that which compels the testator to do that which is against his will from fear, the desire of peace, or some feeling which he is unable to resist. Undue influence may be exercised secretly as well as openly, and this is especially possible where a confidential relation exists between the principal devisee and the testator, and they dwell in the same house together. Such influence may be exerted in many ways, by violence, by force, by threats, by deceit or fraud, by excessive importunity, or by the silent, resistless, power which the strong often exercise over the weak or infirm." Goodloe v. Goodloe, 105 S. W. 533, 535, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 493.

Defendant, prior to his marriage to plaintiff, obtained a conveyance of her land to them as tenants by the entirety by threatening to sue her for $2,500, to cause others to sue her for slander and other causes of action, and by threats that she would never live to see the inside of her completed opera house, that she would be found dead, that he would stop work on her opera house, in which her money was largely invested, that he would smash everything and ruin the whole business, that she would lose all her property in the threatened litigations, and would be working at the washtub, without a rag to her back. Held, that the threats constituted a wrongful and "undue influence" exerted over plaintiff, controlling her action, and warranted the cancellation of the conveyance. Ring v. Ring, 105 N. Y. Supp. 498, 55 Misc. Rep. 420.

"It is a rule governing in ascertaining whether undue influence was exerted over the mind of a testator that the influence was such that it induced the testator to act contrary to his own wishes, and to make a different will from what he would have made if he had been left free to exercise his own wishes and desires according to his own judgment and discretion. No matter how great the fraud may have been, nor how vigorous and active the influence produced upon and exercised over the testator, they would not avail to set aside the will unless they were sufficient to overcome the volition and desire of the testator. Not every influence brought to bear upon the mind of the testator by a beneficiary will be classed as undue influence. Persuasion, entreaty, cajolery, importunity, argument, intercession, and solicitation are permissible, and cannot be held to be undue influence unless they subverted and overthrew the will of the testator, and caused him to do a thing that he did not desire to do. No more could a will made from mere persuasion, entreaty, or argument, which has been weighed and considered by the testator, and his own mind made up and voluntarily formed, be classed as undue influence, than could the arguments of counsel to a court, which are weighed and considered in arriving at a just conclusion as to the law of the case, be designated 'undue influence.'" Weitz v. Schneider, 78 S. W. 394, 396, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 201.

Gratitude, affection, etc.

"Undue influence," which will vitiate a will, must be wrongful, and influence secured through affection is not of that character. Fitzgerald v. Allen, 88 N. E. 240, 244, 240 Ill. 80 (citing Dowie v. Sutton, 81 N. E. 395, 227 Ill. 183, 118 Am. St. Rep. 266; Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 376).

The word "undue," when used to qualify "influence," has the legal meaning of "wrongful," and hence "undue influence" means a wrongful influence; but influence secured through affection is not wrongful, and when a will is made in favor of a child at his solicitation and because of partiality influenced by affection for him, it will not be "undue influence." Sears v. Vaughan, 82 N. E. 881, 887, 230 Ill. 572.

The "undue influence" which will avoid a will must amount to coercion or fraud, and must involve such force or fear as destroys the free agency of testator and constrains him to do that which is against his will; mere persuasion, addressed to his judgment and affections, not constituting undue influence. Mullen v. Johnson, 47 South. 584, 587, 157 Ala. 262.

"Undue influence" over a testator is influence amounting to force, coercion, or overpersuasion which destroys his free agency and will power. It must not be merely the influence of affection or attachment nor the desire of gratifying the wishes of one beloved, respected, and trusted by testator. Lindsey v. Stephens, 129 S. W. 641, 646, 229 Mo. 600; Hughes v. Rader, 82 S. W. 32, 53, 183 Mo. 630; Teckembrock v. McLaughlin, 108 S. W. 46, 51, 209 Mo. 533; Winn v. Grier, 117 S. W. 48, 59, 217 Mo. 420; Dausman v. Rankin, 88 S. W. 696, 704, 189 Mo. 677, 107 Am. St. Rep. 391.

"Undue influence," inducing the execution of a will, is such as amounts to force, coercion, or overpersuasion, which destroys the testator's free agency and will power, and not merely the influence of affection or desire to gratify the wishes of one who is near and dear to him. Weston v. Hanson, 111 S. W. 44, 50, 212 Mo. 248.

Influence which is gained over testator alone through kindness, and springs from fondness or affection, is not "undue influence" sufficient to avoid the will; such influence being that which is exercised through persuasion, coercion, force or fraud to the extent of overcoming the testator's free agency or will power, so as to substitute the will or wish of the person exerting such influence for that of the testator. Luebbert v. Brockmeyer, 138 S. W. 92, 93, 96, 158 Mo. App. 196.

Influence over another, acquired by kindness and attention, will not constitute "undue influence" within the meaning of the law, whether in case of a friend who has been made the beneficiary in a will, or in the case of a wife or child. Weber v. Strobel, 139 S. W. 188, 191, 236 Mo. 649.

"Motives of natural affection and gratitude on the part of the testator, even when accompanied by solicitations or arguments which appeal to such motives, do not constitute 'undue influence.'" Gavitt v. Moulton, 96 N. W. 395, 399, 119 Wis. 35 (citing In re Jackman's Will, 26 Wis. 104; Deck v. Deck, 62 N. W. 293, 106 Wis. 472, 473).

"Undue influence," defeating a will, is any influence over the mind of testator to an extent that destroys his free agency and to constrain him to do against his will what he would otherwise refuse to do, whether exerted at one time or another, directly or indirectly, if it so operated on his mind at the time he executed the paper, but any reasonable influence obtained by acts of kindness or by appeals to the feelings or understanding, and not destroying free agency, is not undue influence. Watson's Ex'r v. Watson, 121 S. W. 626, 629, 137 Ky. 25; Murphy's Ex'r v. Hoagland (Ky.) 107 S. W. 303, 306; Bannon v. Patrick Bannon Sewer Pipe Co., 119 S. W. 1171, 1175, 136 Ky. 556 (quoting with approval Murphy's Ex'r v. Hoagland (Ky.) 107 S. W. 303).

"The fact that a man bequeaths his estate to his wife, excluding his children, his father, or other relations, is absolutely immaterial upon the question of 'undue influence.' The silent influence of affection and respect, augmented by the tender and kindly attentions of a faithful spouse, cannot be regarded as in any sense undue. Nor will the fact that the wife by solicitation, or even by urgent importunity, procures for herself all her husband's property, or a larger share than he devises to others, raise a presumption of law that the husband's will was procured by undue influence exerted by her, or that his mind did not act freely in preparing it. * * * It will not be presumed, because a wife has ample opportunity to exert an influence which may be undue, that she has in fact done so. Nor will any presumption of undue influence arise from the fact that the wife advised her husband in his business affairs and guided him through many difficulties, and at one time advised or requested him to make a will in her favor." Fulton v. Freeland, 118 S. W. 12, 19, 219 Mo. 494, 131 Am. St. Rep. 576 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Underhill, Wills, § 94, p. 126; Rankin v. Rankin, 61 Mo. 295; McFadin v. Catron, 38 S. W. 932, 39 S. W. 771, 138 Mo. loc. cit. 219; Myers v. Hauger, 11 S. W. 974, 98 Mo. loc. cit. 439; Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. loc. cit. 185; Mays v. Mays, 21 S. W. 921, 114 Mo. loc. cit. 540).

"Undue influence" over a testator has been defined as that which compels him to do that which is against his will, from fear, a desire of peace, or some feeling which he is unable to resist. Influence which exists from attachment, affection, or a desire to gratify, or which results from argument and appeals to the reason and judgment of the testator, is not undue, nor sufficient to invalidate a will. Undue influence consists in exerting upon the testator such an improper influence, whether fraudulent, threatening, or otherwise coercive, as to effect a change in the testator's testamentary disposition, so that the will made is not the will he would have made if uninfluenced. Where testator by his will gave his wife the use of the estate, consisting of a house and lot, for life, with remainder to a son by a former wife, he being a middle-aged man and able to provide for himself, and on the same day, as the result of persuasion of his wife, who was in poor health, he made a new will, giving his estate to her absolutely, it was held insufficient to show undue influence. In re Hall's Estate, 125 N. Y. Supp. 253, 255, 68 Misc. Rep. 581 (citing Schouler, Wills [2d Ed.] par. 22; Matter of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193; Matter of Vedder, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 470; Matter of Polles, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1062, 37 Misc. R&P. 562, 568).

The influence which will avoid a will must be such as amounts to force or coercion destroying free agency; and it must not be the influence of affection, nor the mere desire to gratify the wishes of another. Dudderar v. Dudderar, 82 Atl. 453, 457, 116 Md. 605.

Influence gained by kindness and affection will not be deemed "undue influence," as ground for cancellation of a deed of gift, in the absence of any proof of imposition or fraud practiced by the grantee. Turner v. Gumbert, 114 Pac. 33, 37, 19 Idaho, 339.

It is not sufficient, to constitute "undue influence," that the testator's reason is convinced by persuasion or argument, if it is by his own will and intention that he carries that decision into effect. Mueller v. Pew, 106 N. W. 840, 841, 127 Wis. 288 (citing In re Jackman's Will, 26 Wis. 104; Deck v. Deck, 82 N. W. 293, 106 Wis. 470).

Persuasion, entreaty, cajolery, importunity, argument, intercession, and solicitation do not constitute "undue influence" sufficient to set aside a will, unless shown to have subverted and overthrown her will, and caused her to do that which she did not desire to do. Salinas v. Garcia (Tex.) 135 S. W. 588, 591.

Moderate solicitation to procure a deed does not constitute "undue influence." Teter v. Teter, 53 S. E. 779, 783, 59 W. Va. 449 (quoting and adopting Doran v. McConlogue, 24 Atl. 357, 150 Pa. 98).

"Honest and moderate intercession or persuasion, unaccompanied with fraud or deceit, and where the testator has not been threatened or put to fear by the flatterer or persuader, will not constitute 'undue influence.' That degree of importunity or undue influence which deprives a testator of his free agency, which is such as he is too weak to resist, and will render the instrument not his free and unconstrained act, is sufficient to invalidate it." The allegation of undue influence concedes testamentary capacity, but the degree of influence exerted involves necessarily to some extent the mental condition of the testator, and what degree of undue influence will vitiate a will depends somewhat on the bodily health and mental vigor of the testator. Kennedy v. Dickey, 59 Atl. 661, 662, 100 Md. 152, 68 L. R. A. 317 (quoting from Davis v. Calvert [Md.] 5 Gill & J. 302, 25 Am. Dec. 282, and citing Griffith v. Diffenderffer, 50 Md. 480; Stirling v. Stirling, 21 Atl. 275, 64 Md. 151; Woerner, Admr, § 31).

Mere advice, argument, or persuasion, if the grantor's mind acts freely thereunder, does not constitute "undue influence," which will invalidate a deed, though it may have led to its execution when it would not otherwise have been made. Bishop v. Hilliard, 81 N. E. 403, 407, 227 Ill. 382 (citing Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 6 N. E. 428, 116 Ill. 340; Wilcoxon v. Wilcoxon, 46 N. E. 369, 165 Ill. 454; Kimball v. Cuddy, 7 N. E. 589, 117 Ill. 213; Burt v. Quisenberry, 24 N. E. 622, 132 Ill. 385; Francis v. Wilkinson, 35 N. E. 150, 147 Ill. 370; Biggerstaff v. Biggerstaff, 54 N. E. 333, 180 Ill. 407).

The "undue influence" which will avoid a deed is an unlawful or fraudulent influence which controls the will of the grantor, and the affection, confidence, and gratitude of a parent to a child inspiring a gift will not render a deed voidable for undue influence, unless such influence has been so used as to confuse the judgment and control the will of the donor. Hacker v. Hoover, 131 N. W. 734, 736, 89 Neb. 317.

Relation to and capacity of person influenced

"Undue influence" has been defined to be the use, by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another, who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage of his weakness of mind, or of his necessities or distress. In re Welch's Will, 91 Pac. 336, 337, 6 Cal. App. 52 (quoting and adopting definition in Dolliver v. Dolliver, 30 Pac. 4, 94 Cal. 646).

Though a person of impaired mental strength is a more favorable subject of undue influence than a person not so impaired, yet the "undue influence" that will avoid a testamentary act of a person of impaired mental strength must destroy his free agency, and constrain him to do what is against his will. Smith v. Smith, 56 South. 949, 951, 174 Ala. 205.

Weakness of a person's mind does not, ipso facto, prove he was unduly influenced, but circumstances must be proved pointing to the successful employment of "undue influence" or positive testimony to that effect. Borchers v. Borchers, 122 S. W. 357, 361, 143 Mo. App. 72.

"Undue influence" in the execution of a will is not established merely by showing that the sole beneficiary was deceased's physician and stood in confidential relationship to him. In re Small's Will, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1065, 1066, 105 App. Div. 140.

A mere confidential relation existing between the testator and a beneficiary under his will, or the opportunity of such beneficiary to exercise "undue influence" over the testator, is not enough to avoid a will; but fraud or "undue influence," to set aside a will, must be such as to overcome the testator's free volition or conscious judgment, and to substitute the wicked purposes of another instead, and must be the efficient cause, without which the obnoxious disposition would not have been made. Influence arising from gratitude, affection, or esteem is not undue, nor can it become such unless it destroys the free agency of the testator at the time the instrument is executed, and shows that the disposition which he attempted to make of his property therein results from the fraud, imposition, and restraint of the person whose superior will prompts the execution of the testament in the particular manner which the testator adopts. In re Turner's Will, 93 Pac. 461, 464, 51 Or. 1 (citing In re Holman's Will, 70 Pac. 908, 42 Or. 345; In re Darst's Will, 54 Pac. 947, 34 Or. 58).

The amount of "undue influence" in validating a law varies with the strength of the mind of the testator, and the influence which would subdue and control a mind naturally weak or impaired might have no effect to overcome or mislead a strong mind. "Undue influence" is not often the subject of direct proof, but can be shown by all the facts surrounding the testator, the nature of the will, his family relations, condition of his health and mind, his dependency upon or subjection to control of the person supposed to have wielded the influence, the opportunity and disposition of the person to wield it, and his acts and declarations. In re Ellwanger's Will, 114 N. Y. Supp. 727, 740.

The burden is upon one alleging "undue influence" in the procurement of a will to prove it, and to that end the evidence must tend to show that the will was the product of an influence exerted upon testator to such a degree as to amount to force or coercion, or by importunities which he could not resist, so that the motive was tantamount to force or fear. While an illicit relation existing between a testator and a beneficiary, and an unjust and unnatural disposition of his property, are circumstances properly to be considered in connection with evidence of undue influence, they are not of themselves evidence either of fraud or of undue influence. Saxton v. Krumm, 68 Atl. 1056, 1057, 107 Md. 393, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 126 Am. St. Rep. 393.

Where testatrix, a firm believer in Spiritualism, consulted a medium the night before the will was executed, and the following morning stated that her deceased husband had told her that contestants (her orphan grandchildren) would cause trouble, and that she would thereupon make a will and give them $1 each, whereupon proponent advised testatrix to "give them a dollar," and the two then went to the office of a lawyer, who drew the will by which testatrix bequeathed to each of the grandchildren such sum, whether such alleged Spiritualistic revelations constituted "undue influence" to invalidate the will was for the jury. Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 81 N. E. 482, 486, 169 Ind. 154, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673.

Time of exerting influence

"Undue influence" may be exercised either through threats or fraud; but in order to avoid a will it must destroy the free agency of the testator at the time and in the very act of making the testament. In re Allison's Estate, 59 Atl. 318, 321, 210 Pa. 22.

"Undue influence," to avoid a will, must be of a kind that subjugates the mind of the testator to that of the person seeking to control it, so as to destroy the free agency of testator when the will is made. In re McNitt's Estate, 78 Atl. 32-34, 229 Pa. 71.

"Undue influence," to invalidate a will, must have been in operation upon the mind of the testator at the time of the execution of the will, and his free agency, liberty to act, and independent volition must have been overcome by the influence exercised upon him. Hart v. Hart (Tex.) 110 S. W. 91, 92.

"Undue influence," which vitiates a will, must be such influence as dominates testator when the will is made; exercise and not mere existence of undue influence being required. Gibony v. Foster, 130 S. W. 314, 324, 230 Mo. 106.

"Undue influence," which will avoid a will or deed, must go to the extent of depriving a party of his free agency, and must operate at the time of the transaction sought to be impeached. Sears v. Vaughan, 82 N. E. 881, 887, 230 Ill. 572.

"Undue influence," which will avoid a deed, must deprive the grantor of free agency, and must operate at the time of the execution of the deed. Riordan v. Murray, 94 N. E. 947, 950, 249 Ill. 517.

"Undue influence," to avoid a will, must be directly connected with its execution and be operating when the will is made. It must be influence specially directed toward procuring the will in favor of particular parties, and be such as to destroy the freedom of testator's will and render the instrument obviously more the offspring of the will of others. Bowles v. Bryan, 98 N. E. 230, 233, 254 Ill. 148.

"Undue influence," however used, must, in order to avoid a will, destroy the free agency of the testator at the time and in the very act of the making of the testament. It must bear directly upon the testamentary act." Where, in a contest of a will because of undue influence, it appears that the testator was of sound mind, in the active management of his affairs, that he was a lawyer, and drew the will himself, that the will remained in his possession for three years, from the date of its execution to the date of his death, and there was no evidence that the will was executed at a time other than its date, or that his wife was present when it was made, or that she requested the testator to make a will, or that she made a suggestion with reference to it, or that she knew of its existence until after her husband's death, there was no evidence sufficient to show that the wife unduly influenced the testator. In re Donovan's Estate, 73 Pac. 1081, 1082, 140 Cal. 390 (citing Goodwin v. Goodwin, 59 Cal. 560; Englert v. Englert, 47 Atl. 940, 193 Pa. 327, 82 Am. St. Rep. 808; Page on Wills [Ed. 1901] §§ 127, 130; Chaplin on Wills, p. 95).

"Undue influence," in order to avoid a will, must be such as to destroy the free agency of the testator at the time the instrument is made. It must be a present restraint, operating on the mind of the testator at the time of the making of the testament. In re Miller's Estate, 88 Pac. 338, 342, 349, 31 Utah, 415.

"Undue influence," however used, must, in order to avoid a will, destroy the free agency of the testator at the time, and in the very act of the making of the testament. It must bear directly upon the testamentary act." In re Higgins' Estate, 104 Pac. 6, 9, 156 Cal. 257 (citing Estate of Donovan, 73 Pac. 1081, 140 Cal. 390; Estate of McDevitt, 30 Pac. 101, 95 Cal. 17; Estate of Calkins, 44 Pac. 577, 112 Cal. 296; In re Wilson's Estate, 49 Pac. 172, 711, 117 Cal. 262).

In order to establish "undue influence," there must be proof of a pressure which overpowered the mind and bore down the volition of testator at the very time the will was made. In re Carithers' Estate, 105 Pac. 127, 130, 156 Cal. 422.

The "undue influence" which invalidates a will is an influence which destroys the free agency of testator, and places him in a position where he is dominated by another, and acts directly on his mind at the very time when he executes the will. Simon v. Middleton, 112 S. W. 441, 442, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 531.

Though a will may be made at the request and solicitation of the beneficiary, and but for such request it would not have been made, this is not enough to render it void, as made under "undue influence," since to be undue the influence must be of such a character as to subject the will of testator to that of the person exercising it. The influence must have been the controlling force inducing the will at the very time it was executed, though the person charged with exercising such influence need not have been personally present coercing the act, if the influence was actually operative in inducing it. Brackey v. Brackey, 130 N. W. 370, 371, 151 Iowa, 99.

"Undue influence," as a ground for setting aside a deed, must destroy free agency, and mere improper influences are not sufficient where they do not amount to fraud, and it must appear that the influence was exercised at the time of the execution of the deed. Kline v. Kline, 128 Pac. 805, 808, 14 Ariz. 369.

To be undue within the meaning of the law, influence must be such as subjects the will of the testator to that of the person exercising such influence, and makes the will express the purpose of the person exercising the influence, rather than that of the testator. It must be equivalent to moral coercion. Such "undue influence" must be directly connected with the execution of the will, operating at the time it was made. Parker v. Lambertz, 104 N. W. 452, 453, 128 Iowa, 496 (quoting Perkins v. Perkins, 90 N. W. 55, 116 Iowa, 253).

UNDUE PREFERENCE

A lease to a shipper of one of the piers and improvements thereon belonging to a terminal company, which relieves him from the payment of all wharfage and storage charges other than as the same may be included in the yearly rental, and has enabled him to acquire practically a monopoly of the export of cotton-seed products, constitutes an unlawful or "undue preference" under the act to regulate commerce, where other shippers are not and cannot be afforded the same facilities on the same conditions. Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 284, 219 U. S. 498, 55 L. Ed. 310.

A rule of a railroad company under which any coal mine operator on its line using its terminal tracks at the seacoast and there unloading its cars within five days on an average during any month is given as a premium a 50 per cent. larger allotment of cars during the next month is an attempted evasion of the provisions of the interstate commerce act requiring a fair and impartial distribution of cars between shippers, and gives an "undue preference" or advantage to shippers so favored, in violation of such act. United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 165 Fed. 113, 122, 91 C. C. A. 147.

The construction of the phrase "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage," as used in the interstate commerce act, when applied to any particular description of traffic, must be the same as when applied to any particular person, company, firm, corporation or locality. All of said terms being contained in Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 3, 24 Stat. 380, in a single sentence, the same construction must be given to each and every part of the sentence. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 141 Fed. 1003, 1014 (quoting and adopting definition in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 43 Fed. 37).

UNDUE PREJUDICE

Plaintiff, a corporation, was engaged in the general produce business with offices in different places in two states. Defendant had stations at the towns in those states and in adjoining states. It was defendant's custom for the terminal carrier to advance charges of connecting lines upon freight consigned to parties at those stations, and to deliver the freight to consignees, and to receive freight and deliver it to consignees, and to hold the bills until the correctness of the charges had been adjusted. From a bad motive defendant, after notice, refused to advance charges to connecting lines and transport freight consigned to plaintiff unless the charges were prepaid, while it gave credit to other consignees similarly situated. Held not to subject plaintiff to "undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage," within the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379. Gamble-Robinson Commission Co. v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 168 Fed. 161, 164, 94 C. C. A. 217, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982, 16 Ann. Cas. 613.

UNDUE RETURN

Under V. S. 1075, 1076, requiring officers to execute and return writs and precepts agreeably to the direction thereof, and subjecting them to a penalty for making a false and undue return, an officer who arrests defendant in a civil action on mesne process, which commands him to "make service and return according to law," must return the writ with a statement of substantially all his doings in executing the same; and a return, merely stating that he served the writ on defendant and read the same in his hearing, is not sufficient to enable the officer to justify under the writ for making the arrest, since the return is "undue." Gibson v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 11, 14, 78 Vt. 110, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 451.

UNDULY

In instructing upon a city's liability for damage to property by the overflow of a stream by changing the grade of a street, it is usual to instruct that the volume of water must have been "materially and unduly" increased; "unduly" meaning disproportionately, and not being synonymous with "materially." Walters v. City of Marshalltown, 120 N. W. 1046, 1048, 145 Iowa, 457, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199.

UNDULY INFLUENCED

In a suit by two children of a decedent to set aside decedent's deed of real estate to a third child, to the exclusion of one of the plaintiffs, the master found that the defendant and one of the plaintiffs "connived together to induce their mother to make a will in their favor to the exclusion of Thomas [her son] and her grandson, and that she was unduly influenced by them, and that, although she of her own volition and with the idea of preventing trouble, which might be occasioned if she left another will, suggested a deed instead, was nevertheless affected at said time by said undue influence." Held, in view of the fact that decedent made no will, at that time or later, that the finding that the mother was "unduly influenced" had no meaning except by reference to the deed, that the words "at said time" meant when the deed was executed, and that the word "affected" signified acted upon, moved, or changed. Lyons v. Elston, 98 N. E. 93, 94, 211 Mass. 478.

In an action by an employé for personal injuries, a replication to an answer relying on a release of the claim, which alleges that by reason of her injuries, bodily pain, and mental anguish consequent thereupon, and by reason of medicines taken to alleviate the pain, the employé had become so weak in body and enfeebled in mind that she did not understand the meaning of the writing, and while in that condition, of which the employer knew, he wrongfully procured and unduly influenced her to sign the writing, etc., is insufficient to show that the release was obtained by the employer's fraud; the words "unduly influenced" being no more than the equivalent of "falsely and fraudulently." Harris v. Bottum, 70 Atl. 560, 561, 81 Vt. 346.

UNENDURABLE

Under a statute requiring that cruelties shall be "insupportable" in order to constitute ground for divorce, an allegation that defendant's acts of cruelty were "unendurable" was sufficient; both words being expressive of intolerable conduct and having practically the same meaning. Gamblin v. Gamblin, 114 S. W. 408, 409, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 479.

UNENUMERATED MANUFACTURED ARTICLE

See Manufactures—Manufactured Article.

UNEQUAL

The tax imposed by Laws 1905, p. 432, c. 40, imposing a tax on the value of property passing by will or by intestate laws, except when passing to designated relatives of the testator or the intestate, or when passing to charitable, educational, or religious institutions, is not "unequal," in that the tax is not assessed on all the property passing by will or inheritance; for, whether the tax is considered as an impairment of the right of property, by incumbering the right to dispose of it at death, or as a tax on the privilege of succeeding to property at the death of the owner, it affects all citizens alike. Thompson v. Kidder, 65 Atl. 392, 396, 74 N. H. 89, 12 Ann. Cas. 948.

UNEQUIVOCAL EVIDENCE

The expression "unequivocal evidence," in the syllabus and opinion in Re McCoy's Will, 89 N. W. 665, 64 Neb. 150, was the equivalent of "evidence of an equivocal act or conduct." A simple preponderance of the evidence is all that is required to maintain an issue of fact in a civil action. Davidson's Estate v. Davidson, 97 N. W. 797, 70 Neb. 584.

UNEXPIRED TERM

Balance of, see Balance.

The phrase "unexpired term" is not synonymous with "vacancy." The former is the remainder of a period prescribed by law after a portion of such time has passed. A vacancy exists where there is no person lawfully authorized to assume and exercise at present the duties of the office. State ex rel. Hoyt v. Metcalfe, 88 N. E. 738, 743, 80 Ohio St. 244.

UNFAIR

The word "unfair" in a publication may sometimes mean dishonest, and when, by a colloquium or innuendo, shown to have this meaning, might give rise to a cause of action; but it does not necessarily involve so serious a charge. It may convey the idea of discrimination. It may mean that one is prejudiced or partial. It may mean illiberal, hard, ungenerous, or exacting. A publication stating the facts and reasons why defendants placed plaintiffs on an unfair list, taken as a whole, casts no imputation upon plaintiffs' character as individuals or upon their solvency or standing as merchants, and is not libelous. Watters v. Retail Clerks' Union No. 479, 47 S. E. 911, 912, 120 Ga. 424.

The word "unfair," as used in a rule of a labor union to indicate the attitude of employers towards members of the union, does not mean that the employer is guilty of fraud, or dishonest conduct, but only that the employer has refused to comply with the conditions upon which union men will consent to remain in his employ or handle materials produced by him. J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County, 98 Pac. 1027, 1029, 154 Cal. 581, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165.

The use of the term "unfair" has a distinct meaning in labor organizations, and it is in the nature of a direction to the members of these organizations not to use the article to which it is applied, and it is also an intimidation to those who are dealing in it. It gives them to understand that the article will be boycotted, and that would deter parties from using or dealing in it. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. v. Hansen, 144 Fed. 1011, 1014.

The word "unfair," when coupled with the word "list," is an idiom of the language of organized labor, and means a list of persons unfriendly to or rebellious against its rules and authority, and a notice, in a newspaper devoted to the interests of organized labor, that plaintiff, a contractor, had been placed on the "unfair list" by a certain labor union, and that the paper had instructions to publish the list "until the parties named have decided to set themselves square with organized labor," did not impute to plaintiff dishonesty, faithlessness to contract, unreliability, nor that he was undeserving of confidence. Labor Review Pub. Co. v. Galliher, 45 South. 188, 191, 153 Ala. 364, 15 Ann. Cas. 674.

UNFAIR COMPETITION

"Unfair competition" is distinguishable from the infringement of a trade-mark, in that it does not involve necessarily the question of the exclusive right of another to the use of the name, symbol, or device. A word may be purely generic or descriptive, and so not capable of becoming an arbitrary trade-mark, and yet there may be an unfair use of such word or symbol, which will constitute unfair competition. G. W. Cole Co. v. American Cement & Oil Co., 130 Fed. 703, 705, 65 C. C. A. 105. See, also, American Brewing Co. v. Bienville Brewery, 153 Fed. 615, 616.

"Unfair competition" does not necessarily involve the violation of any exclusive right to the use of a word, mark, or symbol as it may arise from the use of words, etc., which everybody may use; the test being whether what has been done tends to pass off the goods of one for those of another, or to deprive such other of his rights. Bates Mfg. Co. v. Bates Numbering Mach. Co., 172 Fed. 892, 895. See, also, Scriven v. North, 134 Fed. 366, 375, 67 C. C. A. 348.

The basis of an action for "unfair competition" is fraud or deceit, inducing the public to believe that defendant's goods are those of complainant; and where the likeness is in the goods themselves, because of the copying of the design of complainant's article, which is unpatented, and there is no attempt to deceive purchasers with respect to the manufacturer, there is no ground on which a court of equity can grant an injunction. Keystone Type Foundry v. Portland Pub. Co., 186 Fed. 690, 692, 108 C. C. A. 508.

The essence of the wrong in "unfair competition" consists in the sale of the goods of one manufacturer or vendor for those of another, and the copying by one manufacturer of stoves of an unpatented design of a stove made by another, only a few of which had been sold so that it was not known to the buying public, and no purchaser was deceived, the characteristic marks of the original designer being removed and those of the maker substituted, did not constitute unfair competition which would sustain a suit for an injunction. Rathbone, Sard & Co. v. Champion Steel Range Co., 189 Fed. 26, 31, 110 C. C. A. 596, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258.

In determining whether a representation as to goods constitutes "unfair competition," the test is whether it is calculated to deceive intending purchasers of such goods—that they are the goods of the first comer. It is not necessary that it should be calculated to so deceive first or intelligent purchasers. It is sufficient that it is calculated to deceive ultimate or ordinary purchasers, and ordinary purchasers include incautious, unwary, and ignorant purchasers. Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co., 121 Fed. 357, 364, 366.

To make out a case of "unfair or fraudulent competition"—an effort, in other words, to steal the trade built up by another—there must be an actual wrongful intent to deceive the public into the belief that the goods of the one party are the goods of the other, accompanied by such acts and devices as are likely to do so, or such duplication in form and dress of the one by the other as will produce a confusion calculated to bring this about, of which the party complained against is convicted of being willing to have the benefit. Lamont, Corliss & Co. v. Hershey, 140 Fed. 763, 764.

"Unfair competition" is not established by proof of similarity in form, dimension, or general appearance alone. When such similarity consists in constructions common to, or characteristic of, the articles in question, and especially when it appears to result from an effort to comply with the physical requirements essential to commercial success, and not to be designed to misrepresent the origin of such articles, the doctrine of 'unfair competition' cannot be successfully invoked to abridge the freedom of trade competition." J. A. Scriven Co. v. Morris, 154 Fed. 914, 918 (quoting and adopting the definition in Marvel Co. v. Pearl, 133 Fed. 160, 162, 66 C. C. A. 226, 227).

In suits to restrain the use of a trade-name, on the ground of "unfair competition," care must be taken not to extend the meaning of the word "unfair" to cover that which may be unethical, but is not illegal; and while it may be unethical for one trader to take advantage of another's advertising, it would in many cases be legal; the principle in such cases being that nobody has a right to represent his goods as the goods of some one else, the whole doctrine resting upon the prevention of fraud. Where the owner of a shoe store marked all the shoes he sold "E-Shoes," though they were procured from various sources, so that the name did not indicate any particular make of shoes, he may not enjoin the use of the name by another on the ground of unfair competition. Perlbery v. Smith, 62 Atl. 442, 444, 70 N. J. Eq. 638.

"Unfair competition" cannot be predicated upon the use by defendant of a plain brown cigar band with white lettering thereon, because it is similar in color and shape to one previously in use by complainant, where there is no evidence of an intention to imitate, and the only characteristic thing about either band is the name thereon, in which the two are dissimilar, both in name and style of lettering. E. Regensburg & Sons v. Juan F. Portuondo Cigar Mfg. Co., 142 Fed. 160, 164, 73 C. C. A. 378.

While a similarity may be traced in the principles on which actions for infringement of copyright and for unfair competition are founded, copyright is based on statute, while "unfair competition," except as affected by legislative enactment in connection with patents, trade-marks, etc., is dependent on abstract principles of law. Copyright relates to the printed material of a publication, while unfair competition may be concerned with any article of trade, whether having words or letters in its composition and appearance or not. West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 169 Fed. 833, 834, 853.

The doctrine of "unfair competition" is based on the principle of common business integrity, and equity only affords relief when this principle has been violated, and the mischief which equity will guard against is a confusion in trade-names, or in the identity of parties, or in the goods sold, so as to deceive the public and work a fraud on the party having a right to a trade-name. Eastern Outfitting Co. v. Mannheim, 110 Pac. 23, 24, 59 Wash. 428, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251.

"Unfair competition" consists in "one person imitating, by some device or designation, the wares made and sold by another, for the purpose of palming off or substituting his wares for those of the other, and in that way misleading the purchaser by inducing him to buy the wares made and sold by the first, instead of those made by the second. This, in law, constitutes misrepresentation and deception, and therefore becomes and is a fraud, not only against the person whose wares are thus imitated, but against the public as well." But the adoption by a telephone company of the same number as a call for its trouble department as that used by a rival company previously established for its trouble department, enabling the newer company to learn, through mistakes of subscribers of the older company, of cases of trouble in the use of its telephones, was not unfair competition against which an injunction would issue. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co. v. Utah Independent Telephone Co., 88 Pac. 26, 28, 31 Utah, 377.

The law of trade-marks is but a special feature of the general law of unfair competition in trade, which rests upon the elementary principle that no person has the right to sell his goods for those of another. But there are important distinctions to be observed between them. In the first place, "unfair competition," unlike the infringement of technical trade-marks, does not necessarily involve the violation of any exclusive right in the plaintiff to the use of the names of symbols employed by the defendant. There may be unfair competition resulting from an unauthorized and improper use of such names and symbols, although the plaintiff has no property right in them as a trade-mark. Any conduct designed and having a natural tendency to deceive the public, and enable one man to dispose of his goods for those of another, may be unfair competition, and be enjoined, although it is not expressly shown that any particular person was thereby actually deceived. Again, it is frequently stated that in cases of technical trade-mark the fraudulent intent to deceive is presumed, while in cases of unfair competition the plaintiff must prove this intent or show facts and circumstances from which it may be reasonably inferred. W. R. Lynn Shoe Co. v. Auburn-Lynn Shoe Co., 62 Atl. 499, 505, 100 Me. 461, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960.

"Unfair competition" in trade is not confined to the imitation of a trade-mark, but takes as many forms as the ingenuity of man can devise. It may consist of the imitation of a sign, a trade-name, a label, a wrapper, a package, or almost any other imitation, by a business rival of some distinguishing earmark of an established business, which the court can see is calculated to mislead the public, and lead purchasers into the belief that they are buying the goods of the first manufacturer. The first question is whether there is an imitation in fact, and this must be determined by inspection of the rival symbols or devices. It is not to be expected, of course, that there will ever be an exact copy. The imitator will always seek to introduce enough difference to justify a claim that there has been no imitation, while incorporating enough similarities to carry the general effect of the original design to the mind of the unwary purchaser. Cornelius v. Ferguson, 97 N. W. 388, 390, 17 S. D. 481.

"Unfair competition" is distinguished from trade-mark cases in this: That it does not involve necessarily the question of the exclusive right of another to use the name, symbol, or device. A word may not be capable of becoming an arbitrary trade-mark, and yet there may be an unfair use of the word, which will constitute unfair trade. The whole doctrine is based upon the theory of protection to the public, whose rights are infringed or jeopardized by confusion of goods produced by unfair methods of trade, as well as upon the right of complainant to enjoy the good will of a trade built up through his efforts, and sought to be taken from him by unfair methods. Sartor v. Schaden, 101 N. W. 511, 513, 125 Iowa, 696.

"The issue of 'unfair trade' arises only on a showing of fraud or deception in the use of a trade-name, trade-mark, or sign, by one in competition in the same line of trade." As to business where one party is engaged exclusively in the wholesale trade, and the other party exclusively in the retail trade, such issue does not arise. Regent Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Haaker, 106 N. W. 595, 597, 75 Neb. 426, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 447 (citing Sartor v. Schaden, 101 N. W. 511, 125 Iowa, 696; Kann v. Diamond Steel Co., 89 Fed. 706, 32 C. C. A. 324).

"Unfair competition" does not necessarily involve the question of the exclusive right of another to use a name, symbol, or device, and a word may not be capable of becoming an arbitrary trade-mark, and yet there may be an unfair use of the word amounting to unfair trade. The whole doctrine is based on the theory of protection to the public, whose rights are infringed or jeopardized by confusion of goods produced by unfair methods of trade, as well as on the right of the complainant to enjoy the good will of the trade built up by his own efforts. Dyment v. Lewis, 123 N. W. 244, 245, 246, 144 Iowa, 509, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73 (citing Sartor v. Schaden, 101 N. W. 511, 125 Iowa, 696).

UNFAVORABLE

See Very Unfavorable.

"Unfavorable" is a synonym of "adverse." Prunty v. Consolidated Fuel & Light Co., 108 Pac. 802, 803, 82 Kan. 541 (citing Webst. Dict.).

UNFINISHED

In a statute making a place where articles in a raw, unfinished, or incomplete state are converted into a new, improved, or different form a manufacturing establishment, the words "unfinished" and "incomplete" refer to a state or condition not yet attained, and mean not fully fashioned to meet some design. Factory Act (Laws 1903, c. 356) § 7, provides that an establishment wherein any natural products or other articles, in a raw, incomplete, or unfinished condition, are converted into a new improved or different form, is a manufacturing establishment, within the act. Held, that an establishment wherein railroad iron, old stoves, waste and scrap iron of every description, is cut into lengths, known as grade No. 1, grade No. 2 and busheling scrap, by machines, known as alligator shears, operated by power, to meet standing specifications of mills which purchase the product, is a manufacturing establishment within the act. Caspar v. Lewin, 109 Pac. 657, 659, 82 Kan. 604.

UNFIT FOR DUTY

Laws 1901, p. 154, c. 466, § 355, authorizing the compulsory retirement of police officers of the city of New York "unfit for duty," does not require the retirement of a policeman unable to perform full police duty or every conceivable duty, but only such as are unable to discharge with average efficiency the duties of their respective grades. People ex rel. Metcalf v. McAdoo, 77 N. E. 17, 18, 184 N. Y. 268.

Under a city charter authorizing the police commissioner to remove an officer upon a showing that he is permanently disabled so as to be "unfit for duty," the officer, in order to be retired, must be substantially unfit for the duty required of one of his rank or place in the force, and a certificate stating that an officer is "unfit for the performance of full police duty" is insufficient to authorize his retirement. Metcalf v. McAdoo, 95 N. Y. Supp. 511, 513, 48 Misc. Rep. 420.

UNFORESEEN CAUSE

A street railway construction contract provided that any claim for extra work due to change of location or grade, or to any "unforeseen cause," would not be allowed, unless agreed on in writing in the form of a supplemental contract, signed by the contractor and the engineers, specifying the price. Held, that the word "unforeseen" limited the word "cause" and meant that the cause was not foreknown, and hence extras claimed for, consisting of work done in setting additional and larger poles and in furnishing certain gains and cross-arms, because, owing to the grades and curves of the road, their use would create better railway construction, was not "unforeseen"; and hence plaintiff was not required to comply with such extra work provision in order to recover therefor. McCaffrey v. Groton & S. St. Ry. Co., 84 Atl. 284, 286, 85 Conn. 584.

Where a creditor, who attached the interest in land descending to the debtor on the ancestor dying intestate, knew of proceedings to probate the ancestor's will, which disinherited the debtor, but took no steps to become a party thereto, and the will was admitted to probate, the creditor's failure to contest the probate was not the result of "accident, mistake, or 'unforeseen cause,'" within the statute authorizing the granting of a new trial where, by reason of accident, mistake, or unforeseen cause, judgment was rendered against the applicant for a new trial. Seward v. Johnson, 62 Atl. 569, 570, 27 R. I. 396.

UNFORESEEN CASUALTY

A sale of standing timber, to be removed within a given time, is a sale of only so much of the timber as is removed within that time, or in a reasonable time thereafter, if the purchaser is prevented from removing it by act of God or of the seller, or by some unforeseen casualty or misfortune; and where standing timber was sold in May, 1910, to be removed in a year, and cutting was delayed until August and hauling until November, though the roads were in good condition in the fall, and it could easily have been removed, and though the buyer knew that the roads in winter would be bad, the buyer was not prevented from removing it by "unforeseen casualty or misfortune," and had no right to enter to remove it after the expiration of the year. Z. Harrell & Co. v. Danks, 151 S. W. 13, 14, 151 Ky. 71.

UNFORTUNATE

The word "unfortunate," as used in a devise of a fund in a will to be used in organizing and maintaining a home for bettering the condition and comforting the unfortunate widows and orphans of a certain city, is used in the sense of poor or indigent, and a devise for the indigent widows and orphans of a city is good, and not void on the theory that the class named is too indefinite. Gidley v. Loverberg, 79 S. W. 831, 835, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 203.

UNGROUND

The residuum in the process of decortiating pepper berries, consisting of the inner cuticle in the form of a powder, which, without further grinding, is mixed with ground pepper as an adulterant, is not within the provision in the Tariff Act of 1897 for pepper "unground." It is sufficient if the pepper reaches its ground condition by decortication, or some other process equivalent to grinding, to be excluded from this provision. Frame & Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 692.

UNIFORM

To make a patent license fee "uniform" it is not necessary that it be uniform for all time, or that each and every person taking a license shall pay that exact sum under all circumstances and conditions. If it is uniform for a considerable period of time, and accepted and paid by those who take licenses during that time, it answers the rules of law, even if, during that period, for some peculiar reason or special circumstances, a lesser fee is accepted from a few persons. Where two different uniform license fees under a patent prevailed at different periods of time, the fee having been reduced on a certain date, an infringer, whose infringement commenced during the first period and extended into the second, may properly be charged with damages at the higher rate until he ceased to infringe; but where he subsequently again commenced infringement, his liability should be measured by the rate then prevailing. Fox v. Knickerbocker Engraving Co., 158 Fed. 422, 427.

UNIFORM ASSESSMENT

An assessment is "uniform," within the meaning of the law, if the average ratio of assessed to actual market value is applied in determining the valuation of each separate tract. Mineral R. R. & Mining Co. v. Northumberland County Com'rs, 78 Atl. 991, 998, 229 Pa. 436.

UNIFORM OPERATION OF LAWS

See, also, General Law.

"'Uniform operation throughout the state' means universal operation as to territory. It takes in the whole state, and as to persons and things it means universal operation as to all persons and things in the same condition or category. When a law is available in every part of the state as to all persons and things in the same condition or category, it is of 'uniform operation throughout the state.'" Gentsch v. State, 72 N. E. 900, 901, 71 Ohio St. 151 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Spellmire, 65 N. E. 619, 622, 67 Ohio St. 77, 86).

Laws are general and "uniform," not because they operate on all alike, for they do not, but because every one who is brought within the circumstances and conditions provided by the law is affected thereby. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kinney, 85 N. E. 954, 956, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711.

The word "uniform," in the constitutional provision requiring laws of a general nature to have a uniform, operation "does not mean universal." The provision intends simply that the effect of the general laws shall be the same to and upon all persons who stand in the same relation to the law—that is, all the facts of whose cases are substantially the same." Ex parte Sohneke, 82 Pac. 956, 959, 148 Cal. 262, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475 (quoting and approving definition in Hellman v. Shoulters, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057, 114 Cal. 159); Ex parte Zhizhuzza, 81 Pac. 955, 957, 147 Cal. 328 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hellman v. Shoulters, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057, 114 Cal. 159); Ex parte Murphy, 97 Pac. 199, 202, 8 Cal. App. 440.

If a statute operates uniformly on all members of the class to which application of the statute is limited, as it properly may be, it has the "uniform application" required by Const. art. 1, § 11. Ex parte King, 106 Pac. 578, 579, 157 Cal. 161.

A law of general nature, passed for the whole state, and not applied to any particular locality therein, and having no words prohibiting its application to any particular locality, has "uniform operation," within Const. art. 5, § 59 (Bunn's Ed., § 132), though practically it may not operate in every part of the state. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1004, 22 Okl. 761.

That Rev. St. § 5198 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3493), authorizes recovery from a national bank only, and not from a state bank, of a penalty for taking usury does not render it obnoxious to the provision of the state Constitution that all laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation; laws being of "uniform operation" if they apply to all persons in like situation. Ingraham v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Greene, 132 N. W. 869, 870, 153 Iowa, 408.

The operation of a statute is "uniform" if its terms are applicable to all of a certain class in the state, though in certain localities there be none of that class; but, whenever they come into existence, the general law applies to them. State ex rel. Covington v. Thompson, 38 South. 679, 683, 142 Ala. 98 (citing State v. Nelson, 39 N. E. 22, 52 Ohio St. 88, 26 L. R. A. 317, 319).

Anderson's Law Dictionary states: "The operation of a law means its practical working and effect." Also: "'All laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation' means that such laws shall bear equally, in their burdens and benefits, upon persons standing in the same category." Again: "Every law of a general nature must operate equally upon all persons brought within the relations and circumstances provided for." Again: "A law is uniform when all persons brought within the relation and circumstances provided for are affected alike, when it has a 'uniform operation' upon all within the class upon which it purports to operate." Commonwealth ex rel. Carson v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 976, 210 Pa. 372.

UNIFORM RULE OF TAXATION

See, also, Uniform Taxation.

"Taxation by a 'uniform rule' will require that the rate of taxation shall be uniform, and such uniformity coextensive with the territory to which it applies, whether the tax is a state, county, township, or city tax, and that every species of property not exempt from taxation, whether lands, goods, money, or choses in action, and however used or employed, shall go upon the tax duplicate at its rule value in money. The true value in money is adopted as a standard for taxation, as the basis upon which a uniform rate of taxation is to be fixed. But taxation by a uniform rule does not necessarily demand that there should be the same mode of assessment for every species of property, without regard to any classification. An assessment, in the sense of a valuation of the property of the taxpayer for the purpose of determining the proportion of tax to be paid, should, it is true, be uniform in its mode, to the extent that the property is assessed according to its true value in money. But it would not follow that different classes of property may not be valued for taxation by different officers and boards, and by different modes and agencies. The same rigid and inflexible method of assessment for all classes of property might result in a marked inequality in the burden of taxation." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Shannon, 100 S. W. 138, 143, 100 Tex. 379, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Jones, 37 N. E. 945, 51 Ohio St. 492).

The phrase "uniform rules" in the Constitution does not refer to those regulations that pertain to the agencies and methods employed in the assessment and collection of taxes, but only to the basic rules for taxation, which settle how the public burden is to be distributed, including the designation of the property that is to contribute and the rate or rates by which the taxes are to be laid and apportioned. The constitutional requirement of uniform rules for taxation is satisfied by a uniformity that obtains without discrimination throughout a class of property set apart on reasonable grounds for separate treatment. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 672, 682, 75 N. J. Law, 120 (citing State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co., 4 Atl. 578, 48 N. J. Law, 146).

The Perkins act of 1906 (P. L. p. 571, c. 280), requiring what is known as second-class railroad and canal property to be assessed and taxed in the same manner and at the same rate as other property located in the district, the tax thereon to be paid to the proper officers of the several taxing districts, prescribes a "uniform rule of taxation" in respect to the subjects mentioned in the act. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Parker (N. J.) 67 Atl. 686, 687.

UNIFORM SERIES

The words "uniform series," as used in section 4, c. 179, Laws of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 7813), which authorizes the school text-book commission to select and adopt a uniform series of school text-books for use in the public schools of the state, have reference to the whole series of text-books adopted for use in the public schools. The use must be uniform in all schools of the same grade. The text-books adopted upon any subject may be made up of books prepared by different authors, provided the same text-book is adopted for use in the same grade in all the public schools. It is for the text-book commission, in its discretion and judgment, to determine whether or not text-books by different authors upon the same subject are so arranged as to permit them to be used connectedly. State ex rel. Simon v. Fairchild, 125 Pac. 40, 42, 87 Kan. 781.

UNIFORM TAXATION

See Equal and Uniform Taxation.

See, also, Uniform Rule of Taxation.

A tax is "uniform" if it is equal upon all persons belonging to the described class upon which it is imposed. While the constitutional provision that laws shall be passed taxing by a uniform rule certain kinds of property according to its true value in money is mandatory so far as ad valorem and uniform taxation is concerned, it does not limit the power of the General Assembly to provide the machinery for determining the value; and Revisal 1905, § 5290, providing for the assessment of railroad property by a commission, is not unconstitutional, although the property of individuals is valued at their places of residence by local assessors. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., v. City of Newbern, 60 S. E. 925, 926, 147 N. C. 165 (citing Gatlin v. Town of Tarboro, 78 N. C. 119; Burroughs, Tax'n, § 77).

A tax is "uniform" when it operates alike in all places where the subject of it may be found, and is not wanting in such uniformity because the thing is not equally distributed in all parts of the country. When one township requires the bridging of a stream which passes through it, and another township has no such stream, and therefore no such requirement is necessary, the law which permits the one requiring such bridge to incur a debt sufficient to build it is not void because of the fact that it has provided the manner in which the people of the township may be taxed greater than it is necessary for those in the other township to be. McMillan v. Board of Com'rs of Payne County, 79 Pac. 898, 900, 14 Okl. 659.

In levying excise taxes upon privileges, there may be proper classification and different rates applied to different classes; the term "uniformity in taxation" meaning simply taxation which acts alike on all persons similarly situated. Beals v. State, 121 N. W. 347, 348, 139 Wis. 544.

Under the requirement for "uniformity of taxation," it is not necessary that all assessments be made through the same officials or by the uniform method of procedure; but an assessment may be made by duly authorized officials, or the state may make it directly by appropriate legislative action. State v. City of Baltimore, 65 Atl. 369, 371, 105 Md. 1.

In the constitutional guaranty that a "uniform and equal" rate of assessment and taxation shall be provided for and that all taxation shall be "equal and uniform," the word "rate" is used in a somewhat different sense when applied to the assessment from that when applied to taxation. Equality in the rate of assessment means proportional valuation—relative, not absolute, equality. Equality in the rate of taxation means that the percentage shall be the same, or absolutely equal. No meaning can be attached to the word "uniform" which is not conveyed by the word "equal." The law providing that all live stock pastured in more than one county during the year shall be subject to taxation in each of the counties in proportion to the time that it ranges therein; that live stock and the owner thereof shall be liable to the home county "for taxes thereon at the rate of levy for state, county, and other purposes as other property is liable"; that the owner shall, unless he has sufficient real estate liable therefor, pay to the assessor at the time of the levy "the whole amount of said tax for the full year at the rate of the last preceding levy"; that whenever live stock is pastured in another county, it and its owner shall be liable to such county for the portion of taxes due thereon for the length of time that the stock remains within such county during the year "according to the last preceding rate of levy in said county"—and which fails to provide for a subsequent adjustment or equalization of the taxes collected from an owner of migratory stock in accordance with the rate of levy for the preceding year, in case such rate differs from the rate for the current year in which the taxes are collected, is repugnant to the Constitution. Lake County v. Schroder, 81 Pac. 942, 944, 47 Or. 136 (citing Crawford v. Linn County, 5 Pac. 738, 11 Or. 482).

Under Const. § 181, authorizing the imposition of license taxes, and section 171, requiring all ad valorem taxes to be uniform, the Legislature had no power to pass an act imposing an occupation tax on real estate agents varying in amount according to the class of the city in which such real estate agents resided, and exempting all who did not live or do business in such cities and towns. Hager v. Walker, 107 S. W. 254, 257, 128 Ky. 1, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 195, 129 Am. St. Rep. 238.

While it is conceded that absolute equality and uniformity of legislation on the subject of taxation is beyond human attainments, the constitutional provision requiring that all taxes be "uniform" should be given effect as far as possible, and, conceding that the words "equal" and "uniform" are used in the same sense, an occupation tax law, in order to meet the requirement of the Constitution, must require every taxpayer embraced in the legislative classification to pay the same amount, or, if the amount of taxation is fixed by a per centum on the income of the taxpayer, the basis of the tax must be limited to the income derived from the occupation that is taxed, and cannot be based on such income and another income, variable in amount and derived from different occupations. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davidson (Tex.) 93 S. W. 436, 457 (concurring opinion of Key, J.).

P. L. 1888, p. 269 (Gen. St. p. 3324), as amended by Laws 1906, cc. 82, 122, 280 (P. L. 1906, pp. 121, 220, 571), imposes a "uniform state tax," applicable to all railroad and canal corporations of the state, within the meaning of Act March 4, 1869 (P. L. 1869, p. 226), relative to transit duties, providing that all companies paying transit duties shall hereafter pay a certain prescribed tax until the Legislature shall by general law impose "a uniform state tax, equally applicable to all railroad and canal corporations." The court said: "We do not construe the words 'a uniform state tax,' in the act of 1869, to mean a tax uniform in amount throughout all the taxing districts of the state, within the entire territory of the state, but as fixing a rule of taxation which shall be uniform in its application to all railroad and canal property within the several taxing districts. The rate of taxation in the several taxing districts must, of necessity, owing to their different needs, vary; but the variance is uniform in its application upon all railroads and canal companies owning property within the several taxing districts; and hence the rate of taxation in the several districts falls with equal burden upon the property of each railroad and canal company within each of the taxing districts of the state." United New Jersey Ry. & Canal Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 438, 443, 75 N. J. Law, 35.

Chapter 91 of the Laws of 1905, being a supplement to the act for the taxation of railroad and canal property, and known as the "Duffield Act" (P. L. 1905, p. 189), is not in conflict with article 4, § 7, par. 12, of the Constitution of this state, which provides that "property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws, and by uniform rules, according to its true value." Bergen & D. R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 668, 672, 74 N. J. Law, 742.

UNILATERAL CONTRACT

The term "unilateral contract," as expressing the idea of a contract lacking in mutuality, is a legal solecism; there is no such thing as a one-sided contract. High Wheel Auto Parts Co. v. Journal Co. of Troy, 98 N. E. 442, 443, 50 Ind. App. 396.

To make a contract "unilateral," and thereby void, there must be no mutuality of obligation, and only one party thereto must be bound thereby. Cal Hirsch & Sons Iron & Rail Co. v. Paragould & M. R. Co., 127 S. W. 623, 624, 148 Mo. App. 173. See, also, Friendly v. Elwert, 105 Pac. 404, 406, 57 Or. 509, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 357.

UNIMPEACHABLE EVIDENCE

The evidence is unimpeachable, within Kirby's Dig. § 8012, subd. 5, providing for the probate of a will written in the handwriting of testator on the "unimpeachable evidence" of disinterested witnesses to the handwriting and signature of testator, where there is no evidence reflecting on the character or testimony of the witnesses testifying to the handwriting and signature of testator. Smith v. Boswell, 124 S. W. 264, 267, 93 Ark. 66. See, also, Arendt v. Arendt, 96 S. W. 982, 80 Ark. 204.

UNIMPROVED

The word "wild" is used interchangeably with the words "unimproved and uninclosed," relative to lands claimed under Kirby's Dig. § 5057, relating to adverse possession, and a finding that lands were wild is sufficient to show that they were uninclosed and unimproved. Rachels v. Stecher Cooperae Works, 128 S. W. 348, 352, 95 Ark. 6; Fenton v. Collum, 150 S. W. 140, 141, 104 Ark. 624.

UNINCLOSED LAND

A finding that lands were "wild" is a finding that the lands were "unimproved and uninclosed" within Kirby's Dig. § 5057, relating to title by limitation to uninclosed and unimproved lands. Rachels v. Stecher Cooperae Works, 128 S. W. 348, 95 Ark. 6; Fenton v. Collum, 150 S. W. 140, 141, 104 Ark. 624.

A horse which travels down a road, and from thence into a lane, and from thence onto a railroad's right of way, without encountering a fence, goes upon the right of way where the same passes through "uninclosed lands," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring a railroad to fence its tracks where the same pass through uninclosed lands. Reed v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 65, 67, 112 Mo. App. 575.

UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION

See Association.

UNINHABITED HOUSE

An "uninhabited house" is a house that is fitted for habitation, but is unoccupied at the time. State v. Rowland Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 58, 59, 153 N. C. 610.

UNINTENTIONAL

An instruction that if defendant, on his express malice aforethought, with intent to kill M., shot at him with a gun, and by mistake killed deceased, he would be guilty of murder in the second degree, was objectionable in the use of the words "by mistake" for "unintentionally"; they not being synonymous. Deneaner v. State, 127 S. W. 201, 204, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 624.

Among the items included in a materialman's lien account were window frames and blinds, alleged to have been delivered to the contractor pursuant to the plans, and the material was actually set into the walls, but afterwards taken out by the direction of the owners, and the materialman's testimony tended to show that it did not know that it, as well as some doors delivered, were not used when the lien account was filed; defendant's testimony being to the contrary. In a suit to establish a lien for material, the materialman requested an instruction that an inadvertent or unintentional misstatement of some of the items in the lien account as having been used in the building would not vitiate the whole account, so as to prevent him from obtaining a lien for the items correctly stated. Rev. St. 1909, § 8223, entitled a materialman to a lien, though he may have "unintentionally failed to enter in his account filed the full amount of credits to which the debtor may be entitled." Held, that it was error to refuse the requested instruction; the statutory word "unintentional" meaning without fraudulent purpose to withhold a credit to which a debtor was entitled, and not an omission of a credit when, in law, the right thereto may be doubtful. E. R. Darlington Lumber Co. v. Pottinger, 147 S. W. 179, 181, 165 Mo. App. 442.

UNINTERRUPTED

The word "uninterrupted," as used in an instruction making uninterrupted adverse enjoyment an element of prescription, means unbroken, and is synonymous with the word "continuous." Evans v. Scott, 83 S. W. 874, 876, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 373.

The word "continuously," in a bill of lading providing that the cargo shall be "received by the consignee immediately the vessel is ready to discharge and 'continuously' at all such hours," etc., is not synonymous with "incessantly" or "uninterruptedly," but the clause means no more than that the discharge should be reasonably continued, considering the time, place, and circumstances, the nature and character of the cargo, the situation of the vessel, and prevailing conditions generally. United States Shipping Co. v. United States, 146 Fed. 914, 920.

UNINTERRUPTED USE

The "uninterrupted and continuous enjoyment" of a right of way for twenty years, which is necessary before it ripens into an easement, does not mean that the one using such right of way must pass or repass every day for twenty years, but simply that he must exercise the right more or less frequently, according to the nature of the way, and without objection on the part of the owner of the land. Dummer v. United States Gypsum Co., 117 N. W. 317, 323, 153 Mich. 622 (citing and adopting the definition in Cox v. Forrest, 60 Md. 74).

UNION

See Labor Union; Reunion; This Union; Trade Union.

A "union" is a coupling nut, provided at one end with an internal shoulder, adapted to engage a pipe, called a spud, sleeved through the nut and adapted to engage such internal, by its external, shoulder; the other end of the nut being internally threaded and adapted, as it is screwed up, to draw in and seat the beveled end of the spud. Rainear v. Western Tube Co., 159 Fed. 431, 432, 86 C. C. A. 411.

UNIT*UNIT OF FORCE

The "unit of force," in scientific work, is that force which, when acting on a body weighing one gram, will give it an acceleration of one centimeter in one second. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

UNIT OF POWER

The "unit of power," called the "watt," equals 10,000,000 units of power in the C. G. S. system, or one ampere times one volt. One horse power is 746 Watts or three-fourths of a kilowatt. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

UNIT OF PRESSURE

The "unit of pressure," called the "volt," is that electrical force which, when steadily applied to a wire or other conductor having a resistance of 1,000,000,000 units of the C. G. S. system, will produce a current of one-tenth of a unit per second of that system. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

UNIT OF REPRESENTATION

Under Primary Election Law (Laws 1898, pp. 332, 341, c. 179) § 4, subd. 4, requiring the chairman of the general committee of each political party to deliver a statement of the conventions, committees, and offices for which delegates, candidates, etc., are to be elected at a primary, and the number of delegates and members of committees to be elected in each "unit of representation," and section 2, providing that "unit of representation" shall apply to an assembly district, etc., a rule of the general committee of a political party, which provides that the unit of representation shall be the assembly district, is valid, and a statement specifying the number of delegates, etc., to be elected in each "unit of representation" is sufficient, though it permits the participation in the nomination of candidates for offices on a smaller unit by those who cannot vote for the candidates at the general election, notwithstanding Election Law (Laws 1896, pp. 913, 922, c. 909) §§ 34, 53, defining a qualified elector; the election law not affecting the primary election law subsequently enacted. In re Sheridan, 107 N. Y. Supp. 244, 246, 57 Misc. Rep. 42.

UNIT OF RESISTANCE

The "unit of resistance," called the "ohm," is 1,000,000,000 units of the C. G. S. system. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

UNIT OF VOLUME

The unit of volume, called the "ampere," is one-tenth unit of the C. G. S. system. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

UNITE*UNITED IN BUSINESS

Under Rev. Code, § 4380, subd. 3, disqualifying a person from acting as a juror where he is "united in business with either party" to the action, where a person has an agreement with a party to the action, whereby one is sinking an artesian well and the other is contingently liable for a part payment of the expenses on failure to procure water, and has executed a contract to that effect, such person as a juror and the party litigant are "united in business" within the statute. Hall v. Chattin, 106 Pac. 1132, 1133, 17 Idaho, 664.

The relation of landlord and tenant between a juror and a party authorizes the sustaining of a challenge to a juror under Comp. Laws, § 3259, subsec. 3, making it ground for challenge for cause to a juror that he is "united in business" with either party. Sherman v. Southern Pac. Co., 111 Pac. 416, 418, 33 Nev. 385, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 287.

UNITED STATES OFFICER

Under Const. art. 2, § 2, providing for the appointment of officers of the United States, an "officer of the United States," within Pen.

Code, § 117 (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321, 35 Stat. 1109), punishing the acceptance of bribes by any officer of the United States, is one who is either appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the President alone, the courts of law, or heads of some executive department of the government, and a special officer appointed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians, is not an "officer of the United States." United States v. Van Wert, 195 Fed. 974, 976.

Under Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that all officers shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate, or Congress may vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts, or in the heads of departments, a special agent of the Land Department of the United States, appointed under an appropriation act to meet the expenses of protecting timber on public lands, but providing no fixed salary, tenure of office, or person with power to appoint, was not an "officer of the United States," within Rev. St. § 5481, providing that every officer of the United States, guilty of extortion under color of his office, shall be punished, etc. United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed. 616, 618, 621.

The provisions in Rev. St. §§ 753, 761, that the writ of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to a prisoner in jail, unless he is in custody for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof, in which case the court or judge shall proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case, and dispose of the party as law and justice require, confer jurisdiction on federal courts to release on habeas corpus an officer of the United States held in custody for an act done or omitted under authority vested in him by the laws of the United States, though there was no act of Congress covering the particular case. Assistant district attorneys, appointed by a United States district judge, as authorized by Act Cong. May 28, 1896, c. 252, § 8, 29 Stat. 181, are "officers of the United States courts" for their respective districts. In re Leaken, 137 Fed. 680, 682.

The second clause of section 2 of the Tucker Act, as amended in 1898, which withholds from the jurisdiction conferred on the Circuit and District Courts by said section suits brought against the United States to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of "officers of the United States," does not apply to a suit to recover disbursements made by a marshal in paying for the services of court bailiffs. Bailiffs are never sworn in accordance with the statute, and are not "officers of the United States," but come within the expression "officers of the court." United States v. Swift, 139 Fed. 225, 227, 71 C. C. A. 351 (citing United States v. McCabe, 129 Fed. 708, 64 C. C. A. 236).

UNITY

UNITY OF INTEREST

An estate in joint tenancy does not exist unless there is unity of interest, title, time, and possession; "unity of interest" meaning that the interests must accrue by one and the same conveyance, "unity of time," that they must commence at one and the same time, and it must also appear that the interests of the joint holders remain the same until the death of one of them, when the survivor takes it all. Staples v. Berry, 85 Atl. 303, 305, 110 Me. 32.

UNITY OF TIME

An estate in joint tenancy does not exist unless there is unity of interest, title, time, and possession; "unity of interest" meaning that the interests must accrue by one and the same conveyance, and "unity of time" that they must commence at one and the same time, and it must also appear that the interests of the joint holders remain the same until the death of one of them, when the survivor takes it all. Staples v. Berry, 85 Atl. 303, 305, 110 Me. 32.

UNIVERSAL

UNIVERSAL MALICE

By "universal malice" we do not mean a malicious purpose to take the life of all persons, but is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim. Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26, 30.

UNIVERSAL SUCCESSION

"Universal succession" is the artificial continuance of the person of a deceased by an executor, heir, or the like, so far as succession to the rights and obligations is concerned. It is a fiction, the historical origin of which is familiar to scholars, and it is this fiction that gives whatever meaning it has to the saying "mobilia sequuntur personam"; but, being a fiction, it is not allowed to obscure the facts when the facts become important. Blackstone v. Miller, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 278, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. Ed. 439.

UNIVERSITY

As public corporation, see Public Corporation.

As public school, see Public School.

A testatrix in one item of her will devised to trustees "my house and grounds," with all the buildings standing within such grounds, to be used for public purposes, and in a subsequent item gave the remainder of her estate to the trustees of a university; to be devoted to the construction "upon the grounds of the said university" of a building to be used for certain purposes. Held, that the term "university" was not used to designate any building or group of buildings, but the corporation, the preposition "of" denoting proprietorship and not location, and the word "grounds" evidently used in the latter item to express the rhetorical antithesis between "my house and grounds," used in the previous item, upon which a public hall and garden were to be established; and the establishment of the building upon the grounds "of the said university" will not be deemed to bear a limited or special meaning confining it to such lands as lie immediately adjacent to and are used in connection with the existing buildings of the university, but to embrace any land owned by the university so located as to make the building to be erected available for the purposes intended; and a tract not contiguous to the original and central campus upon which the existing university buildings are situated, but separated therefrom in part by a railroad, in part by a public street, and in part by land of other owners, the only communications between the tract and the central campus being by means of streets or lanes, would be "grounds of the said university," within the meaning of the will, where owned by the university. Trustees of Princeton University v. Wilson, 78 Atl. 393, 397, 78 N. J. Eq. 1.

Act Cong. July 2, 1862, granting certain public lands or land scrip to the several states, and providing that the proceeds thereof shall be invested to constitute a perpetual fund for the endowment of one "college" where the leading object shall be instruction in mechanic arts and agriculture, and appropriating money arising from the sales of the public lands to the states for the benefit of such schools, does not require that the "leading object" of the aided institution in its entirety, or as a complete institution, be the teaching of the branches of learning related to agriculture and mechanic arts. A university may, and usually does, embrace several colleges. The Wyoming statutes expressly declare that the State University "shall embrace colleges or departments of letters, of science, and the arts"; that the "college or department of the arts shall embrace courses of instruction in the practical and fine arts, especially in the application of science to the arts of * * * mechanics, engineering, architecture, agriculture and commerce, together with instruction in military tactics." It is sufficient if the aided institution maintains a college or department whose leading object is instruction in the prescribed branches, and applies the funds to the support of such college or department; and the institution will not be rendered incapable of appropriating the donations from the fact that a majority of its students are enrolled in other departments. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90, 99, 14 Wyo. 318.

UNIVERSITY PURPOSES

Under Act Cong. Feb. 18, 1881, 21 Stat. 326, and the amendment thereof, granting to the territory of Idaho and other territories 72 sections of land for "university purposes," and under the provisions of the Idaho admission act (Act Cong. July 3, 1890, 26 Stat. 216), providing for the disposal of the land granted for educational purposes, and section 8, providing that the proceeds of such land shall constitute a permanent fund to be invested and held and the income thereof used exclusively for university purposes, the interest of proceeds on such land cannot be used for the erection or equipment of university buildings or buildings connected therewith; the purpose of the university not being in any sense the erection or equipment of buildings therefor. Roach v. Gooding, 81 Pac. 642, 645, 11 Idaho, 244.

UNJUST

UNJUST DISCRIMINATION

While the owner of goods shipped generally can designate the route, and the receiving carrier must observe the owner's directions in delivering to a connecting carrier, the duty is one growing out of the particular contract of carriage or imposed as a common-law obligation, and a breach thereof by requiring of a connecting carrier, as a condition upon which it should receive goods, that they should be transported over a different route from that selected by the owner, requiring a violation by the connecting carrier of Rev. St. 1895, art. 4535, under which a connecting carrier, receiving goods from another carrier destined to a point on its line, must carry them on its line to destination, unless the person having a right to do so had routed them otherwise, is not an "unjust discrimination" within art. 4574, making it unjust discrimination to fail or refuse under regulations of the Railroad Commission to receive and transport without delay or discrimination tonnage, etc., destined to a point on or over a connecting line. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Thompson (Tex.) 118 S. W. 618, 621, 623.

To constitute "unjust discrimination" within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4574, defined as unreasonable preference to any particular shipper, a preference must be given to one shipper over shippers of similar freight under similar circumstances, and a contract binding a carrier to receive cars of another carrier and deliver them to a shipper for the reception of his freight is not invalid as creating an unjust discrimination, in the absence of evidence that the contract gave the shipper a preference over shippers of other similar freight, who could secure cars from other carriers. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Shawnee Cotton Oil Co., 118 S. W. 776, 779, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 183.

Under Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 4574, subd. 1, making it unlawful to give any undue preference or advantage to any locality, an order of the railroad commissioners, giving an undue and unreasonable preference to one of two cities, as to rates, is unlawful, though the city discriminated against, possesses superior natural advantages which offset the discrimination. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Galveston Chamber of Commerce, 115 S. W. 94, 99, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 476 (citing Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 145 U. S. 263, 36 L. Ed. 706).

As to issuing through bills of lading, or furnishing its cars to connecting carriers in order that shipments may be carried to ultimate destination without reloading at terminal points, the carrier may discriminate against cotton seed, provided all shippers are treated alike. The carrier's refusal to place cars of cotton seed on a warehouse sidetrack, it being the common practice of the carrier to deliver cars of cotton seed upon the side track of other parties, is a denial of "equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight," and "an unjust discrimination" in violation of the rule of the Railroad Commission. Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 996, 998, 5 Ga. App. 187 (following Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 50 S. E. 476, 122 Ga. 652, 69 L. R. A. 119).

UNJUSTLY

Surreptitiously distinguished

In Rev. St. § 4920, providing that in an action for infringement the defendant may plead the general issue, and may prove on trial that plaintiff had surreptitiously or unjustly obtained the patent for that which was in fact invented by another, who was using reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting the same, the word "surreptitiously" has no relation to a case where each party to an interference has really and truly proceeded independently and honestly, although the word "unjustly" may be strained to cover even a case like that. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Pneumatic Scale Corporation, 158 Fed. 415, 420.

UNKNOWN

A bet by parties, not aware of the fact, involving the question whether a third person has a lease on designated real estate, refers to an event unknown to the bettors, and constitutes "gambling" within Const. art. 1, § 9, forbidding pool selling, book making, or any other kind of gambling, and within Betting and Gaming Law, 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) p. 662, pt. 1, c. 20, tit. 8, §§ 8, 9, declaring that bets depending on any chance, "or unknown or contingent event," shall be unlawful, etc.; the word "unknown" referring to that which was unknown to the parties to a wager, the word "contingent" showing that the event referred to applies equally to existing or nonexisting events, the word "event" meaning that in which an action, operation, or series of operations terminates and having reference to something that has taken place, the words "unknown event" meaning a past circumstance unknown to the parties, and the words "contingent event" referring to one that hereafter may or may not occur. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 496, 59 Misc. Rep. 425.

Where plaintiff knew that defendants' residence, at the time of the contract sued on, was in S., that one of the defendants was attending school outside the state, and that the other defendants were traveling in Europe, and there was nothing known to him to lead him to believe that their absence from home was other than temporary, their residence was not "unknown" to him, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, subd. 3, authorizing suit in a county other than that of the defendant's residence, when such residence is unknown. Brooks v. Bonner (Tex.) 149 S. W. 564, 566.

The words "unknown claimants," in the statute as to proceedings against lands as state lands, mean such as are not known and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence. A claimant of land that is proceeded against as the state land, who is known or whose claim can be ascertained by the use of reasonable diligence, should be made a party to the bill eo nomine, and, if a resident of the state, should be served with process. It is error to proceed against such claimant under the general designation in the bill of "unknown claimants," and any decree that may be pronounced against him without his appearance in the cause will be void as to him for want of jurisdiction, and may be collaterally assailed. Preston v. Bennett, 68 S. E. 45, 47, 67 W. Va. 392.

UNKNOWN HEIRS

In Code Civ. Proc. §§ 79, 80 (Gen. St. 1909, §§ 5672, 5673), providing for services by publication in cases relating to real property, the term "unknown heirs," where the relief demanded is to exclude defendants from any interest in real property, means all kinds of heirs, including heirs of heirs of such defendants as well as the legatees of heirs. Howell v. Garton, 108 Pac. 844, 845, 82 Kan. 495.

UNKNOWN OWNER

Laws 1897, c. 103, § 6, makes it the duty of the county collector, county clerk, and county assessor, in proceedings to collect delinquent taxes, to furnish the county attorney such evidence as may be in their possession. Held, in a suit to quiet title, where plaintiff's deed was on record, and gave his residence as in a certain county of the state, a judgment for taxes against the "unknown owner" did not include plaintiff's title, since he was entitled to service of citation if within the jurisdiction of the court, and, not being an unknown owner, he was not a party to the proceedings. Scales v. Wren, 127 S. W. 164, 103 Tex. 304.

UNLAWFUL

See Willful and Unlawful.

An indictment using the words "unlawful, feloniously, of his malice aforethought, with deliberation and premeditation" to characterize the act charged means that it was "willful." Harding v. State, 126 S. W. 90, 91, 94 Ark. 65.

A complaint, in an action for injuries to a passenger while alighting from a train, which alleges that plaintiff, urged by the "willful," "unlawful," and "reckless" injunctions of the conductor, and in obedience to his directions, proceeded to alight from the train while in motion, and in so doing was injured, does not charge negligence, but charges willfulness; the word "unlawful" assigning no specific legal character to the acts alleged, and the word "reckless" being equivalent to "willful." Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 61 S. E. 1064, 1067, 81 S. C. 24.

Within the rule that, where the owner of a patent has given to another the right to use one of the machines made under the patent in a particular way only, or with supplies necessary to its use of a particular character or make only, the use of it in any other way, or with any other supplies or materials necessary to its operation is unlawful, the word "unlawful" does not imply a criminal use of the machine or device, but a violation of the contract or agreement under which the same is held and used. Cortelyou v. Charles Eneu Johnson & Co., 138 Fed. 110, 118.

The words "wanton," "willful," and "unlawful" do not necessarily mean, in statutes on malicious mischief, the same as "malicious." The word "malicious," as used in the statute on malicious wounding of domestic animals, means actual malice toward the owner, and any evidence which fairly shows that the act was necessary to prevent injury to the accused or to his property is admissible on the issue of malice. People v. Jones, 89 N. E. 752, 756, 241 Ill. 482, 16 Ann. Cas. 332 (citing 25 Cyc. 1677: 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4307; Glover v. People, 68 N. E. 464, 204 Ill. 170).

As in violation of law

"Unlawful," as applied to threatened injury to property, means contrary to law; that is, an injury threatened must be unlawful, irrespective of the purpose with which the threat is used. People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 7 Cal. App. 330.

The word "unlawful," in the act of August 1, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 114), to provide for local option elections in counties where the sale of liquor is unlawful except in dispensaries, must be interpreted in the light of the legislation of this state, where the word or its equivalent is used, and the legislative intent was evidently to embrace those counties in which, under the operation of some valid law of this state, the sale of liquor was declared to be unlawful, without reference to whether, under any of such laws, there might be an exception inuring to the benefit of a certain class enumerated by the General Assembly in an excepting clause. City of Barnesville v. Means, 57 S. E. 422, 425, 426, 128 Ga. 197.

An affidavit averring that accused was found "unlawfully" in possession of intoxicating liquors in a building described in his control for the purpose of keeping, running, and operating a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, in violation of the law, does not charge that accused was found in possession of liquor for the purpose of illegal sales, in violation of Acts 1907, p. 27, c. 16, § 1 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8337); the word "unlawful" not showing that the possession was in violation of law. Barnhardt v. State, 86 N. E. 481, 482, 171 Ind. 428.

As unauthorized by law

"Unlawful" does not necessarily mean contrary to law. "Un" is a preposition used indiscriminately, and may mean simply not, and "unlawful" means not authorized by law. State v. Savant, 38 South. 974, 975, 115 La. 226.

The word "unlawful" as applied to the purpose and acts of corporations is not used exclusively in the sense of malum in se or malum prohibitum, but it is often employed to designate powers which corporations are not authorized to exercise or contracts which they are not authorized to make, and includes acts and contracts which are ultra vires. Dunbar v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 87 N. E. 521, 533, 238 Ill. 456.

UNLAWFUL ACT

Engaged in unlawful act, see Engaged.

An act is not "unlawful," within the purview of the statute of this state defining involuntary manslaughter, unless it is prohibited by some valid law of this state. Hayes v. State, 75 S. E. 523, 525, 11 Ga. App. 371.

An "unlawful act," such as constitutes an element of involuntary manslaughter, is a thing which one has no right to do. State v. Woods (Del.) 77 Atl. 490, 491, 7 Pennewill, 499.

Under Code, § 2340, imposing liability for damages caused by dogs, except when the party injured is doing an "unlawful act," the unlawful act that will defeat liability must be one that directly contributes to the injury. Permitting an animal to run at large in a public highway is not such an "unlawful act." Beckler v. Merringer, 109 N. W. 185, 131 Iowa, 614.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY

At common law and under Pen. Code 1895, arts. 299-311, 313, 315, defining an "unlawful assembly" as the meeting of three or more persons with intent to aid each other, by violence or in any other manner, either to commit an offense or illegally to deprive any person of any right, etc., prohibiting unlawful assemblies for certain purposes, there is no unlawful assembly, except when it contemplates a disturbance of the peace or injury to the rights of individuals, and it cannot be composed of persons assembled to carry on their ordinary business, though on a day and in a manner not authorized by law, unless their actions will in some way disturb the rights of others or the public rights; and an actress, travelling about the country and entertaining the people, meeting with others on Sunday in a theater to entertain the people, is not guilty thereof. Ex parte Jacobson, 115 S. W. 1193, 1195, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 237.

"Unlawful assembly" is a distinct offense at common law, and if persons assemble for a purpose which, if executed, would constitute a riot, but separate without carrying out their purpose, their acts constitute an unlawful assembly. B. & C. Comp. §§ 1913, 1914, defining a "riot" as any use of, or threat to use, force, by three or more persons acting together, if accompanied by immediate power of execution, and making such assembly an unlawful assembly, where there is no actual commission of the unlawful act, or where the assembly is adapted to disturb the peace, etc., and providing a punishment for the former offense, but not for the latter, does not make an unlawful assembly a crime. State v. Stephanus, 99 Pac. 428, 53 Or. 135, 17 Ann. Cas. 1146.

UNLAWFUL COMBINATION

Where an "unlawful combination" exists, it is none the less unlawful because it exists under a self-imposed constitution and is governed by by-laws, and because it conducts its operations in a public or semi public way, asserting the right, in pursuit of its purposes, to interfere with individual liberty and with public interests; and, in a proceeding for damages for wrongdoing by such a combination to the special injury of an individual, the constitution and by-laws of the association constitute no protection as against compensatory damages. Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 114 S. W. 997, 1012, 215 Mo. 421, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492.

The test of an "unlawful combination" in restraint of trade, under Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 1, 26 Stat. 209, is its necessary effect upon free competition in commerce, and a combination, the effect of which is to stifle and substantially restrict such competition, is unlawful; but if the effect is only indirectly to restrict competition, while its chief result is to foster the trade to those who make it, it is not within the law. The union of two or more persons and the conscious participation of two or more minds is necessary to an unlawful combination. Union Pacific Coal Co. v. United States, 173 Fed. 737, 745, 97 C. C. A. 578.

UNLAWFUL CONSPIRACY

The word "unlawful," as used in the definition of conspiracy as a confederacy to do something "unlawful," includes the breach of civil as well as of criminal law. State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 654, 27 R. I. 252 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 178); State v. Dalton & Fay, 114 S. W. 1132, 1138, 134 Mo. App. 517 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bish. New Cr. Law [8th Ed.] § 178); State v. Bleunstock, 73 Atl. 530, 534-538, 78 N. J. Law, 256; Randall v. Lonstorf, 105 N. W. 663, 664, 126 Wis. 147, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470, 5 Ann. Cas. 371; White v. White, 111 N. W. 1116-1119, 132 Wis. 121 (quoting and adopting definition in Martens v. Reilly, 109 Wis. 464-473, 84 N. W. 840, 843).

The term "unlawful," used with reference to acts of conspirators, does not include every act which violates the rights of a private individual, and for which the law affords a civil remedy, but is held to include those acts which, by reason of the combination, have a harmful effect upon society and the public; and a combination may amount to a conspiracy although its unaccomplished object be to do that which, if actually done by an individual, would not amount to an indictable offense, and in that sense a conspiracy may consist of a combination to do what is merely "unlawful." Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 73 N. E. 770, 775, 214 Ill. 421.

UNLAWFUL CONTRACT

The word "unlawful," though properly used in designating contracts contrary to law, is inapplicable to contracts void on the ground of immorality, or on the ground that they are contrary to public policy. McCarter v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 61 Atl. 705, 70 N. J. Eq. 291.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 813, provides: "That is not lawful which is, first, contrary to an expressed provision of law; second, contrary to the policy of expressed law, though not expressly prohibited; or third, otherwise contrary to good morals." Under such statute a sale and transfer of a city license to sell intoxicating liquors in direct violation and disregard of section 387 of such statute is "unlawful," and where such sale of a license entered into and makes a part of the consideration for a promissory note, such note is wholly void. Arnett v. Wright, 89 Pac. 1116, 1117, 18 Okl. 337.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER

"Unlawful detainer" is a statutory remedy for the benefit of landlords against tenants who hold over after the expiration of their term. It is founded on a breach of contract implied by law, if not expressed, and it may be maintained either by the lessor or his heir or assignee to whom the land passes." It can be maintained only where the relation of landlord and tenant exists. Thompson v. Morgan, 69 S. W. 920, 924, 4 Ind. T. 412 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. West, 41 Ark. 535, and citing Mason v. Delancy, 44 Ark. 444, Necklace v. West, 33 Ark. 682, and Dortch v. Robinson, 31 Ark. 296); Showalter v. Ryles, 97 Pac. 569-571, 22 Okl. 329 (quoting Johnson v. West, 41 Ark. 535). See, also, Sass v. Thomas, 69 S. W. 893, 4 Ind. T. 331.

Under Shannon's Code, § 5093, defining "unlawful detainer" as where the defendant enters by contract, either as tenant or claiming through or under a tenant, the action of unlawful detainer lies only where the defendant entered by contract and as lessee, or under a lessee, and hence that form of action will not lie against one who entered under a conveyance from a tenant by curtesy. Shepperson v. Burnette, 92 S. W. 762, 116 Tenn. 117.

An action of "unlawful detainer" is purely possessory, with the incident of damages attached for the detention of the property. In such actions plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his right to possession, and not rely on the weakness of the adversary right. Fisk v. Arnold, 104 S. W. 824, 825, 7 Ind. T. 526.

"Unlawful detainer" is an action not to determine title but to recover immediate possession, and is based on a contract, express or implied, whereby the relation of landlord and tenant arises and exists between the parties, and in it, by provision of Kirby's Dig. § 3648, evidence of title is admissible only on the question of right of possession. Pringle v. Williams, 149 S. W. 101, 104 Ark. 322.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 3630, which provides that every person willfully and without right holding over lands or tenements after the term, or who shall peaceably and lawfully obtain possession thereof and hold the same willfully and unlawfully after demand in writing, shall be guilty of "unlawful detainer," the action of unlawful detainer can only be maintained where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, or, at least, where the possession has been obtained by the defendant permissibly; the action being founded on the breach of contract, that the tenant shall restore possession to the one from whom it was received. Miller v. Plummer, 152 S. W. 288, 290, 105 Ark. 630.

A tenant does not become primarily an "unlawful detainer" upon breach of the covenant in the lease to pay rent, but rather upon failure to pay after demand by a legal notice in the statutory time. This constitutes him an unlawful detainer of the premises. Hunter v. Porter, 77 Pac. 434, 438, 10 Idaho, 86.

A lessee is not guilty of an "unlawful detainer" simply because he remains in possession after breach of a covenant of which the lessor may or may not take advantage. The lessor must give the statutory notice demanding possession. Schnittger v. Rose, 73 Pac. 449, 451, 139 Cal. 656.

After one has served the statutory notice on another to remove from certain premises and the latter fails to comply therewith, the latter is guilty of "unlawful detainer," provided the former proves title and that the latter entered into possession without permission and without color of title. Columbia & Puget Sound R. Co. v. Moss, 87 Pac. 951, 952, 44 Wash. 589.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, declares that a tenant of real property for a term less than life is guilty of an "unlawful detainer" when he continues in possession, in person or by subtenant, of the property or any part thereof after the expiration of the term for which it is let to him without the permission of the landlord, or the successor in estate of the landlord, if any there be. Vatuone v. Canobio, 88 Pac. 374, 375, 4 Cal. App. 422.

The action of "unlawful detainer" is not a common-law action, but is purely statutory. MacKenzie v. Porter, 91 Pac. 917, 40 Colo. 340.

The fact that a tenant each month tendered one month's rent, which was refused, there being no pretense that the tenant deposited the rent in any bank for the landlord, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1500, did not entitle him to refuse payment and to retain possession of the premises after the landlord served him with the notice authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, providing that a tenant is guilty of "unlawful detainer" where he continues in possession, after default in payment of rent, and three days' notice requiring its payment or possession of the property shall have been served on him. Occidental Real Estate Co. v. Gantner & Mattern, 95 Pac. 1042, 1044, 7 Cal. App. 727.

An action in "unlawful detainer" will lie for a breach of collateral covenants, as well as for a breach of those which run with the land. Knight v. Black, 126 Pac. 512, 513, 19 Cal. App. 518.

"An 'unlawful detainer' is where one has lawfully entered into possession of lands or tenements, and after the termination of his possessory interest refuses, on demand in writing to deliver the possession thereof to any one lawfully entitled thereto, his agent or attorney." Code 1896, § 2127. In other words, before the suit can be maintained, there must have been a termination of the tenant's possessory interest. Barnewell v. Stephens, 88 South. 662, 663, 142 Ala. 609.

UNLAWFUL DISCRIMINATION

The fact that a railroad permitted the location of an elevator, maintained by a private corporation, on the industrial track on the right of way, does not render its refusal to construct, at its own expense, a side track to a competing elevator, located off the right of way, an "unlawful discrimination," within Const. art. 9, § 18 (Bunn's Ed. § 222). Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 99 Pac. 901, 903, 23 Okl. 94.

A gas company with the right under its charter to operate in several towns and cities in the state is not guilty of an "unlawful discrimination" as to one of such cities by abandoning its franchise and withdrawing its property and business therefrom. East Ohio Gas Co. v. City of Akron, 90 N. E. 40, 43, 81 Ohio St. 33, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 92, 18 Ann. Cas. 332.

UNLAWFUL DISPOSITION

Other unlawful disposition, see Other.

UNLAWFUL DISPOSITION OF MORTGAGED GOODS

To constitute an "unlawful disposition of mortgaged goods," they need not be taken beyond the state, nor with intent to defeat the lien, disposal with notice of the lien without the lienor's written consent and without payment or deposit as required by statute being sufficient. State v. Boyer, 68 S. E. 573, 575, 86 S. C. 260.

UNLAWFUL ENTRY

In one sense the term "unlawfully entered" is broad enough to include a forcible entry; but, assuming that a complaint in an action of forcible entry and detainer, which alleges an "unlawful entry," is defective, it may be properly amended so as to aver an unlawful and forcible entry. Wilson v. Campbell, 88 Pac. 548, 75 Kan. 159, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426, 121 Am. St. Rep. 366, 12 Ann. Cas. 766.

"Unlawful entry," within Kirby's Dig. §§ 1603-1605, defining burglary as the unlawful entering a building in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, and declaring that the manner of breaking or entering is not material, etc., is going into the building with the intention, formed at the time the entry is made, to commit a felony. Pinson v. State, 121 S. W. 751, 753, 91 Ark. 434.

UNLAWFUL IMPRISONMENT

In order to constitute "unlawful imprisonment," where no force or violence was actually used, the circumstances attending the arrest must be such as to warrant an apprehension that force will be used, if there was no submission to the restraint under it. Gunderson v. Struebing, 104 N. W. 149, 151, 125 Wis. 173.

To constitute an "unlawful imprisonment," where no force is actually employed, the submission must be to a reasonably apprehended force; and the fact that one considers himself restrained in person is not sufficient, unless there is in fact a reasonable ground to apprehend a resort to force on an attempt to assert one's liberty, and a mere asserted purpose to forcibly detain one is not sufficient. Powell v. Champion Fibre Co., 63 S. E. 159, 161, 150 N. C. 12.

Unlawful deprivation of an alien's right to enter the country constitutes "unlawful imprisonment," to obtain freedom from which habeas corpus lies. United States ex rel. D'Amato v. Williams, 193 Fed. 228, 231.

UNLAWFUL INCLOSURE

Under Act Feb. 25, 1885, which makes unlawful "all inclosures of public lands not claimed in good faith by the person inclosing the same, a fence built upon one's own land, which in fact incloses public lands of the United States, is 'unlawful,' regardless of the intent with which such fence is built or maintained. Homer v. United States, 185 Fed. 741, 745, 108 C. C. A. 79.

A settler in advance of surveys who incloses no greater area than the land laws permit him to enter is not a trespasser nor is his inclosure "unlawful"; Act Feb. 25, 1885, c. 149, 23 Stat. 321, p. 1524, to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public domain, not being intended to prevent actual bona fide settlers from occupying an entryman's proportion of the public lands. McAllister v. Okanogan County, 100 Pac. 146, 147, 51 Wash. 647, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 764.

Defendant owned a tract of 5,000 acres of grazing land with a mountain range to the east and north of it. He built a fence from the range on the east, westward to the south of his land, and then northwestward to the north range, inclosing between such fence and the mountains his own land and also public lands, which he used for a pasture. There were two breaks in the fence through which, as well as over the mountains, trails led into the pasture, but for practical purposes the fence and mountains prevented defendant's stock from straying out and other stock from coming in. Held, that such fence did not constitute an "unlawful inclosure" of public lands, within Act Feb. 25, 1885, 23 Stat. 321. United States v. Johnston, 172 Fed. 635, 637.

UNLAWFUL INJURY

An "unlawful injury," within Pen. Code, § 519, providing that extortion may be accomplished by a threat to do unlawful injury to property, can include no injury that is not of such character that, if it had been committed as threatened, it would have constituted an actionable wrong, an injury for which suit for the resultant damages could be brought against the defendant, or which if merely threatened, could be enjoined in equity, if the remedy at law were deemed inadequate. People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 419, 420, 153 Cal. xviii, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

UNLAWFUL INTERCOURSE

In Act No. 134, p. 175, of 1890, making it a crime to abduct a woman of previous chaste character for the purpose of prostitution or for any unlawful sexual intercourse, etc., the term "unlawful sexual intercourse" means sexual intercourse out of wedlock, and is not restricted to such sexual intercourse as is made unlawful by some express statute. State v. Savant, 38 South. 974, 975, 115 La. 226.

UNLAWFUL INTEREST

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3104, provides for forfeiture of all interest where usurious, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 3106, as amended by Acts 1907, p. 277, c. 143, declares that the person paying the usurious interest may recover double the amount thereof. Held, that under Const. art. 16, § 11, as amended in 1891, declaring that all contracts for a greater rate of interest than 10 per cent. shall be deemed usurious, the term "usurious interest," means "unlawful interest," and hence was not limited to the excess over the lawful rate, but included all the interest received and collected. Baum v. Daniels, 118 S. W. 754, 755, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 273.

UNLAWFUL KILLING

"An 'unlawful killing' means any killing of a human being which is not justifiable or excusable by the law." State v. Wetter, 83 Pac. 341, 346, 11 Idaho, 433.

The violation of a penal ordinance of a municipality regulating the driving of horses in public streets, as a result of which death ensues, is not an "unlawful killing," within Rev. St. § 6S11, defining the crime of manslaughter. State v. Collingsworth, 92 N. E. 22, 23, 82 Ohio St. 154, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 770, 137 Am. St. Rep. 775.

UNLAWFUL MONOPOLY

A corporation engaged in selling tobacco products at retail is not rendered unlawful by the fact that a majority of its stock is owned by another corporation, which is itself an unlawful combination in restraint of interstate commerce, and which sells to the retailing corporation the larger part of its goods, where the latter conducts its business independently in a lawful manner, and sells also goods of other manufacturers. Nor does it constitute an "unlawful monopoly," in violation of Sherman Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 2, 26 Stat. 209, because it operates in the several states 400 retail stores out of 600,000 places where tobacco is sold. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700, 703, 704.

UNLAWFUL PREFERENCE

To establish an "unlawful preference" under the Bankruptcy Act, it must be alleged and proved that at time of the transfer transferor was insolvent, that the property transferred was such as his creditors had a right to subject to their claims, that he intended a preference, and that transferee had reasonable cause to believe the transferor so intended. In re Leech, 171 Fed. 622, 96 C. C. A. 424, 625.

It is not every intent to hinder creditors in collecting, or to prevent them from collecting, but an intent to do so unlawfully, that constitutes an "unlawful preference" under the Bankruptcy Act. Sargent v. Blake, 160 Fed. 57, 61, 87 C. C. A. 213, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, 15 Ann. Cas. 58.

An agreement, on the sale of a saloon business, that money paid by the purchaser to a third person pending settlement of a dispute, representing the value of the unexpired license, was to be returned to the brewing company as a part of the amount it had advanced to the seller to obtain the license, did not create an "unlawful" preference within the Bankruptcy Act. Sharp v. Simonsch, 119 N. W. 790, 791, 107 Minn. 133.

A chattel mortgage, in so far as given to secure a present advancement and an indorsement on a note for a present obligation created, is a valid lien as against other creditors, and is not an "unlawful preference" under Revisal 1905, § 968, as amended by Revisal Supp. 1911, § 968, which provides that a preference, invalid as to other creditors, shall be deemed to have been given where property has been transferred or conveyed in consideration of a pre-existing debt, when the grantee or transferee knew or had reasonable ground for believing that the grantor or assignor was insolvent at the time. Wooten v. Taylor, 76 S. E. 11, 13, 159 N. C. 604.

UNLAWFUL PURPOSE

As used in an instruction that a common design and unlawful purpose is the essence of conspiracy, the phrases "common design" and "unlawful purpose" are synonymous. Imboden v. People, 90 Pac. 608, 622, 40 Colo. 142.

UNLAWFUL RATE

The purpose of the Interstate Commerce Act, prohibiting a carrier from giving any special rate or rebate, etc., is to require railroads to have one uniform published tariff rate for all interstate shipments, and any other rate is an "unlawful rate." Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Holmes, 90 Pac. 22, 24, 18 Okl. 92.

UNLAWFUL VIOLENCE

Where the members of a charivari party forcibly place a bride and groom in a wagon against their will and draw them up and down the streets, they are engaged in an act of "unlawful violence," within Gen. St. 1901, § 2501, making municipalities liable for their acts. City of Cherryvale v. Hawman, 101 Pac. 994, 995, 80 Kan. 170, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645, 133 Am. St. Rep. 195, 18 Ann. Cas. 119.

UNLAWFULLY

The term "unlawfully," as used in the federal statute defining manslaughter, means without legal excuse. O'Barr v. United States, 105 Pac. 988, 990, 3 Okl. Cr. 319, 139 Am. St. Rep. 959 (quoting Roberts v. United States, 126 Fed. 897, 61 C. C. A. 427).

The word "unlawfully," in an indictment, conveys the same meaning as the words "without authority of law." Schley v. State, 37 South. 518, 519, 48 Fla. 53; State v. Holland, 45 South. 380, 381, 120 La. 429, 14 Ann. Cas. 692; Fooshee v. State, 108 Pac. 554, 559, 3 Okl. Cr. 666.

In the statute punishing unlawful intercourse with a female under 18 years of age, the word "unlawfully" is used in the sense of "without authority of law," "not permitted by law." State v. Tinkler, 83 Pac. 830, 831, 72 Kan. 262.

In the statute providing that whoever shall "unlawfully" carnally know a female under 16 years of age shall be punished, etc., the word "unlawfully" is used to exempt carnal knowledge of a woman under 16 where the parties are husband and wife; and, though an indictment under the statute must charge that the intercourse was unlawful, it is not necessary that the word "unlawful" should be used in the accusatory part thereof. Moss v. Commonwealth, 128 S. W. 296, 297, 138 Ky. 404. See, also, Plunkett v. State, 82 S. W. 845, 72 Ark. 409.

Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 6, defines the word "bribe" as anything of value or advantage, etc., given with a corrupt intent to influence "unlawfully" the person to whom it is given in his action, vote, etc., in any public or official capacity. Section 165 punishes one giving a bribe to any member of any board of supervisors with intent to "corruptly" influence such member in his action on any matters, etc. Held, that the use of the word "unlawfully" as qualifying "to influence" in section 7, adds nothing to the meaning of section 165, and hence an indictment for bribery charging an intent to "corruptly" influence, etc., by giving money, etc., was sufficient, though the word "unlawfully" was not used. People v. Glass, 112 Pac. 281, 286, 158 Cal. 650.

It has been held that the use of the word "unlawfully," in an indictment charging the commission of an act causing miscarriage or abortion, "negatives or precludes any inference or possibility that the act was done by a surgeon for the purpose of saving the woman's life." Johnson v. People, 80 Pac. 133, 137, 33 Colo. 224, 108 Am. St. Rep. 85 (quoting Commonwealth v. Sholes [Mass.] 13 Allen, 554).

The use of the word "unlawfully," in an affidavit in the language of the statute denouncing as unlawful the sale of milk containing dirt, precludes all legal excuse for the offense, and negatives a sale for any other purpose than food, thus rendering the affidavit sufficient, if that is the construction to be given the statute. State v. Closser (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1057, 1060.

Where the sufficiency of an indictment for causing nonmailable matter to be deposited in the post office is not questioned until after verdict, the words "willfully, 'unlawfully,' wrongfully, and knowingly," as used therein, were to be taken in their broadest sense, as applying to all that was expressed in respect of the act, and therefore as imputing to defendants knowledge of the contents of the circular alleged to have been mailed, and of the book of which it was an advertisement. Burton v. United States, 142 Fed. 57, 59, 73 C. C. A. 243.

The Rhode Island statute provides that no person shall operate a motor vehicle on the public highways recklessly, or so as to endanger the life or limb of any person, and prescribes precautions to be taken by the operator while using a public highway. A complaint thereunder charged as to the offense that defendant did "unlawfully" operate a certain motor vehicle in a certain public highway named "recklessly," and in operating it "recklessly" ran and drove into a team being driven by complainant on such highway, so as to endanger his life and limb, etc. Held, that disregard of or inattention to the duty prescribed by the law constituted unlawfulness and recklessness; that the words "unlawfully" and "recklessly," in the complaint, described the manner in which defendant drove, so as to negative an inference that the collision was an innocent accident; and that the facts stated constituted an offense under the statute. State v. Welford, 72 Atl. 396, 397, 29 R. I. 450.

In their ordinary acceptation, the words "unlawfully," willfully, and knowingly," when applied to an act or thing done, import knowledge of the act or thing so done, as well as an evil intent or bad purpose in doing such thing. United States v. Mitchell, 141 Fed. 666, 671 (citing Price v. United States, 17 Sup. Ct. 366, 165 U. S. 311, 41 L. Ed. 727); Clement v. United States, 149 Fed. 305, 314, 79 C. C. A. 243 (citing Rosen v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 434, 161 U. S. 30, 33, 40 L. Ed. 606).

The words "unlawfully," feloniously," as used in an indictment charging accused with "unlawfully, feloniously" receiving property theretofore feloniously stolen, mean that the act which they characterize proceeded from a criminal intent and evil purpose, and thus exclude all color of right and excuse for the act. Bise v. United States, 144 Fed. 374, 375, 74 C. C. A. 1, 7 Ann. Cas. 165.

"An information charging that the accused "unlawfully" and feloniously" did steal, take, and carry away certain property, with the intent then and there to steal and carry away the said personal property, includes therein the element of felonious intent upon the part of the taker to deprive the owner permanently of such property and convert the same to his own use." Martin v. State, 93 N. W. 161, 162, 67 Neb. 36.

The words "willfully," "unlawfully," "feloniously," and "maliciously" import only that criminal intent which is the necessary part of every felony or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific "purpose" to do the act which is an element of the crime charged. Whether the indictment is on a statute or at the common law, it is a rule universal and without exception that every intent, like everything else, which the law makes an element of the offense, must be alleged, for otherwise no prima facie case appears. Newby v. State, 105 N. W. 1099, 1100, 75 Neb. 33.

The word "unlawfully," in an allegation that defendant did "unlawfully" assault prosecutor, implied that the assault was delivered with a criminal intent, and sufficiently advised defendant of the offense he was charged with having committed. State v. Koonse, 101 S. W. 139, 142, 123 Mo. App. 655.

The complaint in an action for the death of a person struck by a train, which alleges that defendant "unlawfully and grossly, negligently and wantonly omitted to give any signal," and ran the train at a "speed grossly, negligently and wantonly high," and "unlawfully, wantonly and grossly, carelessly and negligently" ran the train over decedent, and which charges a violation of a municipal ordinance regulating the speed of trains, and which states the facts showing the relative situation of the parties at the time and before the accident, charges negligence, for the word "unlawfully" refers to the alleged violation of the ordinance, and the words "willfully" and "wantonly" merely meaning "recklessly" or "heedlessly." Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 226, 230, 41 Mont. 480.

Feloniously distinguished

The charge that an act was done "feloniously" includes the charge of "unlawfulness." State v. Miller, 89 S. W. 377, 380, 190 Mo. 449.

The word "feloniously" includes "unlawfully" in its meaning, for an act cannot be said to be "feloniously" done and not be "unlawfully" done. People v. St. Clair, 91 N. E. 573, 574, 244 Ill. 444 (citing Carroll v. State, 75 S. W. 471, 71 Ark. 403).

Rudely distinguished

An information charging that accused "willfully" and "unlawfully" displayed an alleged deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb, etc., is insufficient to charge an offense under Pen. Code 1895, art. 334, providing punishment for those who "rudely" display any pistol or other deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb, for "willfully" is not synonymous with "rudely," nor does it convey the same meaning. The instrument could be displayed "willfully" or "unlawfully" without coming within the terms of the statute. Fuller v. State, 87 S. W. 832, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 300.

Willfully compared

The words "unlawfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, and after deliberation and premeditation," used in charging murder, include all the meaning conveyed by the word "willfully." Daniels v. State, 88 S. W. 844, 845, 76 Ark. 84.

Without lawful purpose compared

An averment in an indictment that the defendant "unlawfully, willfully, and wantonly sent" an indecent letter to a female is not sufficient to show an offense under a statute which makes it a misdemeanor "willfully and wantonly" to send such a letter to a female, "without lawful purpose in sending the same." State v. Smith, 46 N. J. Law, 491.

Wrongfully compared

The words "unlawfully," "willfully," "fraudulently," and "feloniously," in an indictment, include the word "wrongfully." State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 162, 118 La. 547 (citing State v. Brown, 6 South. 541, 41 La. Ann. 345; Marr's Cr. Jur. of Louisiana, verbo, "Indictment," subd. "The Words of the Statute").

UNLAWFULLY CARRYING

To constitute the offense of "unlawfully carrying" a pistol, the pistol must be carried on or about defendant's person. Davis v. State, 82 S. W. 512, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 148.

Carrying a pistol to a shop to have it repaired, and returning home with it, is not an "unlawful carrying," within the meaning of Pen. Code, art. 338. Mangum v. State (Tex.) 90 S. W. 31.

UNLAWFULLY HOLD OVER

A complaint in justice's court, which showed that plaintiff was the owner of real estate described, that a room in the building thereon was occupied by defendant, that plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession, that defendant held possession without right, and for 15 days last past unlawfully kept plaintiff out of possession thereof, showed the relation of landlord and tenant, and was sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8071, giving justices jurisdiction of actions by landlords for the possession of land; the words "unlawfully kept" meaning unlawfully detained, synonymous with the statutory words "unlawfully hold over." Everett v. Irwin, 94 N. E. 352, 353, 47 Ind. App. 263.

UNLAWFULLY IN THE UNITED STATES

Found unlawfully in the United States, see Find—Found.

UNLEAVENED

There is no common, uniform, or general trade understanding including the words "leavened" or "unleavened." There is however, a substantial agreement among dictionary definitions that "leavened" means any substance that sets up fermentation in, or raises or makes light, and the evidence showed that this broad definition corresponded with ordinary understanding and speech. The term "unleavened," as applied to wafers, is restricted to wafers such as are used as a vehicle for taking medicine, or as seals, or for religious purposes. Edible wafers, raised in the making by the use of baking powder or bicarbonate of soda, are "leavened" although these agents do not produce fermentation, and are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 6, as nonenumerated manufactured articles, and are not entitled to free entry under paragraph 696 in the free list as "wafers unleavened or not edible." F. H. Leggett & Co. v. United States, 131 Fed. 817, 818 (citing Stand. Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Webst. Dict.).

UNLESS

"Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 20, providing that, in the absence of any contract in relation to lands through which a railroad may pass, it shall be presumed that the land has been granted by the owner to the company, 'unless' the owner shall apply for an assessment of the value of the lands within two years next after the location of the road, has no application where a deed is executed by the owner of the land to the railroad within two years after the building of the road, and a claim under the deed is inconsistent with a claim under the statute." "The word 'unless,' used in the act, is thus defined by Webster: 'Unless. Upon any less condition than the fact or thing stated in the sentence or clause which follows; if not; supposing that not; if it be not; were it not that.' The Century Dictionary defines the same word as follows, omitting some secondary meanings: 'If it be not that; if it be not the case that,' etc. These definitions clearly indicate a negative condition precedent, as much so as the condition in a mortgage that, 'unless' the money is paid, or 'if it be not' paid, by a certain day, the land may be sold. If the money is paid on or before the day limited, the mortgagor is in no default whatever, and the power of sale never arises." City of Hickory v. Southern Ry. Co., 49 S. E. 202, 205, 137 N. C. 189.

The word "unless," in Domestic Relations Law (Laws 1896) c. 272, § 3, declaring a marriage void if contracted by a person whose husband or wife by a former marriage is living, "unless" either the former marriage was annulled or dissolved for a cause other than the adultery of such person, or the former spouse has been sentenced to imprisonment for life or has absented himself or herself for five successive years without being known to be alive, partakes more of the character of a proviso than of an exception, but, whether considered as an exception or a proviso, it is not necessary to negative the matter in the pleading, and where, in a suit for breach of marriage promise, the validity of plaintiff's marriage to a third person on account of his having a living spouse by former marriage at the time became material, it was not necessary for her to specifically negative the exceptions to the law in a reply setting up the prior existing marriage of her alleged husband. Stein v. Dunne, 103 N. Y. Supp. 894, 896, 119 App. Div. 1.

In an action against a railroad company for wrongful death, where plaintiff relied on the humanitarian doctrine, a charge that, unless the jury believe from the evidence that the engineer did not discover the peril of plaintiff's intestate in time to avoid the injury, they must find for defendant is erroneous, because "unless" is equivalent to "if not," and the use of the double negative predicates plaintiff's right of recovery upon the absence of negligence. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Finch (Ala.) 59 South. 619, 620.

The word "unless," as used in an insurance policy providing that no action could be sustainable unless the proofs had been furnished in the specified time, and the words "until after," as used in a policy providing that no action could be sustainable until after proofs were furnished, etc., mean the same thing—that the proof having not been furnished within the specified time, the accused's right of action in either case is cut off. Teutonia Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 82 S. W. 840, 842, 72 Ark. 484.

UNLESS OTHERWISE DIRECTED

The use of the words "unless otherwise directed by the court or judge granting the writ," in Laws 1899, p. 1502, c. 712, § 45, authorizing certiorari to review an assessment of a special franchise and directing that the writ run to the state board of tax commissioners, and to no other board or officer, "unless otherwise directed by the court or judge granting the writ," does not entitle the local assessors to intervene, as such words apply only to parties legally interested in the proceedings, and not to the local assessors desiring to be made parties to repel any reflection cast upon their actions in making the assessment. People ex rel. Rochester Tel. Co. v. Priest, 73 N. E. 1100, 1102, 181 N. Y. 300.

UNLESS THE SUIT CAN BE MAINTAINED

Within the rule that attachment is but an incident to a suit, and, "unless the suit can be maintained," the attachment must fall, the term means "unless the court has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant." Laborde v. Ubarri, 29 Sup. Ct. 552, 214 U. S. 173, 53 L. Ed. 955 (quoting Ex parte Des Moines & M. R. Co., 103 U. S. 794, 796, 26 L. Ed. 461, 462).

UNLIMITED

UNLIMITED CONVEYANCE OF AN EASEMENT

An "unlimited conveyance of an easement" is in law a grant of unlimited reasonable use, and deeds of flowage rights, though absolute in form, convey as against the servient estate right to reasonably necessary use only. Chapman v. Newmarket Mfg. Co., 68 Atl. 868, 74 N. H. 424, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

UNLIMITED GUARANTY

An "unlimited guaranty" may be defined as one that is unlimited both as to time and amount. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Cole, 93 N. E. 465, 466, 83 Ohio St. 50, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 773.

UNLIMITED POLICY

An "unlimited insurance policy" on lumber, etc., means that the policy covers lumber within the mill and adjoining buildings, as well as lumber in the yards. Ferguson v. Lumbermen's Ins. Co., 88 Pac. 128, 129, 45 Wash. 209.

UNLIQUIDATED

UNLIQUIDATED CLAIM

Though by express provision of Rev. St. 1895, art. 3089, a demand on a fire policy, in case of total loss of the property insured, is a liquidated demand, a claim for breach of a contract to renew or procure insurance is an "unliquidated demand" within article 754, providing that unliquidated damages cannot be set off in an action on a certain demand. Wise v. Ferguson (Tex.) 138 S. W. 816, 818.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, provides that if one or more, but not all of the members of a firm are adjudged bankrupt, the firm property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless on consent of the nonbankrupt partners, but that such partners shall settle the partnership business as soon as possible, and account for the interest of the bankrupt partners. By section 63 debts of the bankrupts may be proved and allowed against their estate which are (1) a fixed liability as evidenced by a judgment or an instrument in writing, owing at the filing of the petition, whether then payable or not; (4) founded upon an open account or upon contract; (5) founded upon provable debts reduced to judgments after the petition is filed and before discharge. Section 63, subd. "b," permits unliquidated claims against the bankrupt to be liquidated as the court may direct, and may thereafter be proved. Plaintiffs were partners with defendants in buying and selling tobacco, and plaintiffs knew, when defendants filed a petition in bankruptcy, that the venture would result in loss, leaving defendants indebted to plaintiffs, though the exact amount was not then known, and could not be known until the rest of the tobacco was sold. Held, that plaintiffs had an "unliquidated claim" against defendants within section 63, subd. "b" which was provable when plaintiffs filed their petition. Dycus v. Brown, 121 S. W. 1010, 1013, 135 Ky. 140, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 190.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES

While an attachment will not issue in an action for "unliquidated damages," this merely means that the amount plaintiff is entitled to recover shall be ascertained or ascertainable by reference to the contract and proof of what was done under it, and that the standard by which defendant's liability is to be measured shall be furnished by the contract, and not left open to mere speculation or vague conjecture. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 75 Pac. 653, 655, 142 Cal. 134 (citing Wade, Attachm. § 23).

UNLOAD

UNLOADING WITHOUT PERMIT

Where a person arriving in the United States took with him from the vessel articles which he had willfully omitted to declare to the customs officers, he was guilty of "unloading merchandise without a permit," in violation of section 2872, Rev. St. United States v. 218½ Carats Loose Emeralds, 153 Fed. 643, 646; Two Hundred and Eighteen and One-Half Carats Loose Emeralds v. United States, 154 Fed. 839, 83 C. C. A. 475

(citing United States v. One Pearl Necklace, 111 Fed. 165, 49 C. C. A. 287, 56 L. R. A. 130; One Pearl Chain v. United States, 123 Fed. 374, 59 C. C. A. 499; United States v. One Pearl Chain, 139 Fed. 517, 71 C. C. A. 500; United States v. Five Packages of Tapestry, 114 Fed. 496).

UNMANUFACTURED

Powdered opium prepared by a series of processes from gum opium, which result in a more valuable article, having a new use and a new commercial signification, held not to be opium "crude or unmanufactured," within the meaning of a tariff act. Merck v. United States, 151 Fed. 14, 15, 80 C. C. A. 510.

Congress, in using the words "unmanufactured tobacco," in Tariff Act 1897, par. 215, must be deemed to have adopted the construction given by the federal Supreme Court to those words as used in an earlier tariff act. Latimer v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 242, 223 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 526.

Dyers' sticks of hard wood, which have been trimmed and peeled, and had the rough edges removed, and the ends rounded, are not dutiable as manufactures of wood, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, 30 Stat. 168, but as wood "unmanufactured" under paragraph 198, 30 Stat. 167. United States v. Knipscher & Maas Silk Dyeing Co. 152 Fed. 590, 591.

Wheat injured by frost to such an extent as to reduce it to a low grade, or to "no grade," but which can still be used for seed and for making flour, is dutiable as wheat, under the tariff act of 1897 (30 Stat. 170) and not as a nonenumerated "unmanufactured" article (30 Stat. 205). United States v. W. P. Devereux Co., 135 Fed. 428.

UNMARRIED

See If She Remains Unmarried.

In an action for wrongful death under Rev. St. 1909, § 5425, authorizing an action by an administrator where his intestate left no husband, wife, or minor child, natural born or adopted, the allegation that deceased was single and unmarried, without an allegation that he left no children surviving him, natural born or adopted, is insufficient to show that the action is properly brought by an administrator, since although under the rule that pleadings shall be liberally construed, especially after verdict, the word "unmarried" might properly be held to mean that deceased had never been married, and that he left no natural children, it cannot be held to constitute an allegation that he left no adopted children. Hegberg v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 147 S. W. 192, 210, 164 Mo. App. 514 (citing 7 Words & Phrases, p. 6520).

Testatrix, on making her will, had five unmarried daughters, one married daughter, and an incompetent son. In her will she expressed a wish that her unmarried daughters, or such of them as desired to live together, with her son, should live in one household, and directed that the house wherein they had been living be kept in repair, etc., so long as any of her daughters remaining single might choose to make it their home. She further directed that a share of the estate held in trust for her son's benefit should on his death go to her "unmarried daughters." Before the execution of the will the word "unmarried" was substituted by testatrix in the draft for "surviving." Held, that only those daughters unmarried at the date of the son's death were included. Robinson v. Martin, 93 N. E. 488, 489, 200 N. Y. 159.

As never having married

Primarily the word "unmarried" means never having been married. Cheek v. Walker, 50 S. E. 863, 864, 138 N. C. 446.

The word "unmarried," as used in a testamentary provision directing that in case of the death of his daughter without issue that portion of the estate bequeathed to her should go to such person or persons as would "receive the same were I to die in and an inhabitant of the state of New York, unmarried and intestate," means not married at the time of testator's death, not as never having been married; and in such event the property bequeathed passes to the descendants, and not to the collateral relatives of the testator. In re Union Trust Co., 72 N. E. 107, 108, 179 N. Y. 261.

A daughter of the intestate, who had been married, and had left her husband and returned and kept house for intestate, but was not divorced, was not "unmarried," within Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2046, 2049, providing for the setting aside of the homestead and exempt property of an intestate to his widow, minor children, and unmarried daughters remaining with the family. Wilkins v. Briggs, 107 S. W. 135, 138, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 596.

Divorced persons

A divorced woman is not an "unmarried female," within the meaning of Va. Code 1904, § 3677, making it a felony to seduce and have illicit connection with any unmarried female of previous chaste character under promise of marriage. Jennings v. Commonwealth, 63 S. E. 1080, 109 Va. 821, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 265, 132 Am. St. Rep. 946, 17 Ann. Cas. 64 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7196).

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1869, provides that whenever a person dies intestate, all his estate shall vest in his heirs, subject to the payment of debts. Article 2060 declares that the homestead shall not be liable for any debts of the estate except for the purchase money thereof, taxes due, or for work and materials used for improvements thereon, and article 2046 provides that the court shall set apart for the use of the widow, minor children, and unmarried daughters remaining with the family of the deceased all such property as may be exempt from execution. Article 2055 declares that, should the estate prove insolvent, the title of the widow and children to all property paid to them under the statute shall be absolute and free from any debts of the estate. Held, that where an ancestor and his widow both died leaving an insolvent estate, and a homestead, and at the time of the widow's death a divorced daughter was residing on the homestead with the widow as a member of the family, together with certain grandchildren, such divorced daughter was an "unmarried daughter" within the statute, so that the homestead was not subject to the debts of the widow's general creditors. Anderson v. McGee (Tex.) 130 S. W. 1040, 1043.

Rev. St. Ohio 1906, § 5441, authorizes an allowance in lieu of a homestead to a widow, or to an unmarried female, having in good faith the care, maintenance, and custody of any minor child or children of a deceased relative, resident of Ohio, and not the owner of a homestead. Held that, since under the decisions of Ohio, the words "having in good faith the care, maintenance and custody of any minor child or children of a deceased relative" qualified the word "widow" as well as the words "unmarried female," where a bankrupt was a divorced woman, who supported her two minor children, she was entitled to an exemption in lieu of homestead, as an "unmarried female" having the custody, etc., though she might not be regarded as a widow. In re Giles, 158 Fed. 596, 597, 85 C. C. A. 418.

Widows

A devise to testator's spinster or "unmarried" nieces includes those nieces who, at testator's decease, were widows, as well as those who had never married. In re Conway's Estate, 37 Atl. 204, 181 Pa. 156.

Where at the time of a devise to three unmarried daughters so long as they remain unmarried, one of the daughters is a widow, the term "unmarried" will include the widow, by giving the word a secondary, and perhaps a less accustomed, meaning, which is "not being married at the time in question." Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Armstrong, 62 Atl. 456, 457, 70 N. J. Eq. 572.

Act March 4, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 56), as amended by Act March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 287), provides that whenever any member of the police department of a city after 10 years' service shall die from natural causes, his widow or children, or if there are no widow or children then his mother or "unmarried sisters," shall be entitled to $1,000 from a fund created by the act. Held, that the words "unmarried sisters" as so used did not mean never having been married, but included sisters of the officer who were widowed at the time of his death. Mott v. Scanlan, 125 Pac. 762, 763, 19 Cal. App. 250.

UNNATURAL WILL

A will is "unnatural" in a legal sense only when it is contrary to what the testator, from his known views, feelings, and intentions, would have been expected to make. When it is in accordance with such views it is not "unnatural," however much it may differ from the ordinary actions of man in similar circumstances. Where a testator had a prejudice against his son-in-law, and for this reason left his property to his daughter's children, instead of to the daughter, for the purpose of avoiding the probability of the estate coming into the hands or management of the daughter's husband, although the prejudice was without just foundation, the will was not "unnatural." In re Morgan's Estate, 68 Atl. 953, 954, 219 Pa. 355.

UNNECESSARILY

The word "unnecessarily" means heedlessly; without necessity; outside of the usual course of business pertaining to the subject. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Franklin (Tex.) 123 S. W. 1150, 1155.

Under an allegation in a petition against a railroad company for negligent treatment of plaintiff employé at the company's hospital, stating that the surgeon furnished "carelessly and negligently and unnecessarily" performed a specified operation, the words "carelessly and negligently" are not synonymous with "unnecessarily"; the latter term negating necessity for the operation, while the other terms refer to the manner of performing the operation. Williams v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Wyo.) 124 Pac. 505, 508.

The terms "voluntarily" and "unnecessarily," in the rule that a passenger who voluntarily and unnecessarily undertakes to ride on the platform of a moving train cannot recover for damages sustained from such perilous exposure, impose a limitation on the rule, and where it appears that, owing to the overcrowded condition of the car, there is neither sitting nor standing room on the inside, it may not be negligence to occupy the platform. But so long as there is standing room inside the car the passenger cannot occupy the platform. A declaration for injuries to a passenger, alleging that he took passage on the rear coach of defendant's train, and not being able to secure a seat in that coach, because of its overcrowded condition, stood on the rear platform thereof and was thrown from the train while it was passing around a curve at a rapid speed, but failing to allege that the defendant attempted to gain a seat in any other coach of the train, or requested any of the trainmen to secure a seat for him, or that there was no standing room inside the rear coach, was demurrable; it not appearing that plaintiff was not voluntarily and unnecessarily riding on the platform. Meyere v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry., 72 S. W. 114, 116, 110 Tenn. 166.

UNNECESSARY

Acts of an officer, in serving a warrant, in taking plaintiff out of bed at 1 o'clock at night, carrying him to a lockup in a patrol wagon with intoxicated people, and placing him in a cell not sufficiently warm, were within his authority under the process, and if there were no other acts to which the words "unnecessary" and "unwarrantable," as used in a recital in the bill of exceptions that the arrest was made in an unusual manner and with acts of unnecessary and unwarrantable cruelty and indignity are applicable, the words do not imply an act beyond the authority of the process. Laing v. Mitten, 70 N. E. 128, 129, 185 Mass. 233.

A delay may be "necessary," and yet "unreasonable." If it is made necessary by the negligence of the party chargeable therewith, such delay is in legal contemplation "unreasonable" however imperatively necessary it may have been. In an action for delay in the shipment of cattle, an instruction holding the carrier liable only in case the delay was both unreasonable and unnecessary was erroneous, since it would be liable if the delay was unreasonable, though rendered necessary by its negligence. Rogers v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 94 S. W. 158, 162.

UNNECESSARY DANGER

See, also, Exposure to Unnecessary Danger.

In a proviso in a contract of insurance exempting the insurer from liability for an accident resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, "the words 'unnecessary danger' signify that the danger meant is one not incident to the duty or avocation of the insured; and this view consists with another term of the policy, in which the occupation of deceased was referred to and he was insured as a train porter, a hazardous calling. The words 'voluntary exposure' signify that the insured must be exposed to danger with the consent of his will, which carries the idea that the danger incurred must be realized, instead of unexpected." Bateman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 85 S. W. 128, 129, 110 Mo. App. 443.

UNNECESSARY EXPOSURE TO DANGER

See, also, Exposure to Unnecessary Danger.

The expression "unnecessary exposure to danger," in an accident policy providing that it should not cover injuries from such exposure, includes exposure attributable to negligence of insured; the provision being intended to hold insured to the exercise of ordinary care and to exempt insurer from liability from injury occurring through a failure to exercise such care. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 112 Pac. 1026, 1030, 27 Okl. 496.

Where an accident insurance policy cut down the liability of an insurance company if injuries shall result from an unnecessary exposure to obvious danger, and it appears that the insured was described as a "clerk in a store, not doing porter's work," and it also appears that the store was a general store in a mining region, and that one of the clerk's duties was to go to a powder house about 1¼ miles away from the store, and deliver the powder to customers, the insurance company has no standing to claim a reduction in liability because the insured was killed by an explosion at the powder house while in the ordinary performance of his duties. In such a case the mere handling of explosives either in the store or in the powder house was not an "unnecessary exposure to obvious danger" within the meaning of the policy. Alloway v. General Acc. Ins. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 371, 377.

UNOCCUPIED

See Personally Unoccupied.

Vacant and unoccupied, see Vacancy—Vacant—Vacate.

The terms "unoccupied" and "unappropriated" refer to land that is not in the possession of one who claims the right of possession by virtue of a compliance with the law. Conn. v. Oberto, 76 Pac. 369, 370, 32 Colo. 313.

"Vacant" and "unoccupied" are not synonymous terms. If an insurance policy is conditioned to be void in case the premises become "vacant or unoccupied," the existence of either condition will avoid the policy; but if a policy contains the condition that in case the premises are left "vacant and unoccupied," etc., then they must be both vacant and unoccupied in order to defeat it. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel (Ind.) 73 N. E. 612, 614.

A new building in process of construction was not within a provision in a list of prohibited risks by which insurer's agents were prohibited from insuring "unoccupied buildings." Harris v. North American Ins.

As commonly used and understood, the word "occupation" is synonymous with "possession," but as used in a fire policy, providing that it shall become void if the house insured becomes "unoccupied," means that no one lives therein. It is not synonymous with vacant, but is that condition where no one has the actual use or possession of the thing or property in question. In such constructions the word is to be construed with reference to the nature and character of the building, the purpose for which it is designed, and the uses contemplated by the parties as expressed in the contract. Yost v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 594, 599.

House

"The word 'occupation,' as applied to a dwelling house, means living in it; and hence, to become vacated or unoccupied, it must be without an occupant—without any person living in it." Baggerly v. Lee, 73 N. E. 921, 923, 37 Ind. App. 139 (citing Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Boyd, 49 N. E. 285, 19 Ind. App. 173; Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 5 Thomp. & C. 619; American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 169).

Where the husband of a tenant of a building and his hired man slept in the building after the tenant had removed the greater part of the furniture, but leaving a part, and the husband left on the premises his horses and chickens, etc., the house was not vacant or "unoccupied" within a fire policy stipulating that it should be void if the building became vacant or unoccupied, and so remained for ten days. Seubert v. Fidelity-Phoenix Ins. Co. of New York, 136 N. W. 103, 104, 29 S. D. 261, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58.

In a policy exempting the insured from liability, in case the property he insures should become vacant or unoccupied, the words "vacant" and "unoccupied" have a definite and fixed meaning, and that is "that, if the house insured should cease to be used as a place of human habitation, or for living purposes, it would then become vacant and unoccupied." The extent of the time of vacancy is not the essence of the contract. Vacancy of insured property is universally recognized in insurance circles as an increased risk, and in contemplation of law there is as much violation of such a provision in a contract by a vacancy for a brief period as there would be for a more extended period. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel (Ind.) 75 N. E. 849.

"For a dwelling house to be 'occupied,' it must be used by human beings as their customary place of abode." The mere presence of goods in the house and a supervision over it is not occupancy. That requires living in it. Knowlton v. Patrons' Androskog- gin Mut. Life Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 289, 292, 100 Me. 481, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517 (citing Moore v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co., 6 Atl. 27, 64 N. H. 140, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384; Sonneborn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law, 220, 43 Am. Rep. 365; Herrman v. Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644).

The occupancy of a dwelling house within a fire policy, stipulating that it shall be void if the building becomes vacant or unoccupied and remains so for 10 days, means that some person is living in it, and, if for ten days no person is living in it, the house is "unoccupied," and the policy is forfeited, but one may occupy premises which are not places of abode, and a house occupied by a caretaker or watchman not making the house his domicile is occupied. Walton v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 141 S. W. 1138, 1141, 162 Mo. App. 316.

UNOCCUPIED FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5920a-5981, relate to the duration of school terms in school townships; and section 5999 grants the right to use a public school building for other than school purposes when "unoccupied for common school purposes." Held, that the term "unoccupied for common school purposes" had reference only to the time intervening between terms of school, and did not authorize a religious organization to use a schoolhouse on Sundays and evenings during a school term, when the school was not actually in session. Baggerly v. Lee, 73 N. E. 921, 923, 37 Ind. App. 139.

UNOPENED

Neither the failure of county authorities formally to open up streets in a platted addition outside of corporate limits, nor the fact that they have not been used by the public, will make them in law closed or unopened streets, within Gen. St. 1901, § 6058, where everything was done at the time the plat was filed necessary to open them for public use. Where open lands, lying wholly outside corporate limits, have been regularly platted, and the streets dedicated to the public, such streets cannot be regarded as "unopened," within Gen. St. 1901, § 6058, making county roads vacant which have remained unopened for public use for seven years. Kiehl v. Jamison, 101 Pac. 632, 79 Kan. 788.

UNPAID

UNPAID BALANCE

The "unpaid balance," as used in the statutes giving a lien to materialmen and subcontractors on any unpaid balance after notice of claim for a lien, means any sum of money which is due when the notice is given, or that may subsequently become due under the contract to the contractor. McDonald

Stone Co. v. Stern & Marx, 38 South. 643, 645, 142 Ala. 506 (citing Alabama & Ga. Lumber Co. v. Tisdale, 36 South. 618, 139 Ala. 250).

UNPAID TAX

Gen. St. 1894, § 1602, subd. 3, providing that, if lands sought to be redeemed from tax sale shall have been sold to a purchaser, the party redeeming shall pay all "unpaid delinquent taxes" accruing subsequent to the sale, means taxes that are overdue and unpaid in fact. Jenswold v. Minnesota Canal Co., 101 N. W. 603, 93 Minn. 382.

An assessment of real estate was declared illegal by the court, and stricken from the roll, because the name of a nonresident owner had been placed among the names of resident owners. Held not an "unpaid tax," within Laws 1874, c. 610, § 3, as amended by Laws 1887, c. 193, allowing the town board to examine the list of unpaid taxes returned by the collector, and, after adding certain percentages, to reject all taxes on land so imperfectly described or so erroneously assessed that the taxes cannot be collected, and authorizing a reassessment, as there was no unpaid tax to be returned by the collector, so that a reassessment would be a new and original assessment, requiring notice to a landowner. Douglas v. Board of Sup'rs of Westchester County, 65 N. E. 162, 163, 172 N. Y. 309.

UNPLATTED LANDS

Prior to 1890 a 40-acre tract of land lying wholly outside a city was platted as an addition to the city. In 1891 the plat was vacated by the board of county commissioners. The land has ever since been used as one tract for farming purposes. All conveyances affecting it have referred to it by its legal description. Held, that since the vacation of the plat it has been "unplatted lands" within the meaning of section 1220 of the Gen. Stat. of 1909, which authorizes a city by ordinance to extend its limits so as to annex adjoining territory. State ex rel. Dawson v. City of Wichita, 128 Pac. 369, 88 Kan. 375.

UNPRECEDENTED

Within the rule that a municipality is not liable for injuries from insufficiency of its sewage system to carry off the surface water in case of an extraordinary storm, the word "extraordinary" is not used as synonymous with "unprecedented," but with "unusual," that which is rare or uncommon, happens sometimes, but not so often as to be regarded as a common occurrence. Geuder Paeschke & Frey Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 33 N. W. 835, 839, 147 Wis. 491.

INPRODUCTIVE

Where property held under a testamentary trust for a beneficiary for life with gift over of the corpus produces an income grossly disproportionate to its value, with no probable prospect of an increase of income, the property is unproductive within Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 573, c. 547) § 85, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 40, c. 136, § 1, authorizing a sale of trust property because it has become "unproductive," and the court has jurisdiction, with the consent of the remaindermen, to order a sale of the property. Webster Realty Co. v. Delano, 120 N. Y. Supp. 440, 443, 135 App. Div. 488.

UNPROFESSIONAL

UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Other unprofessional conduct, see Other.

Procuring or aiding and abetting in procuring a criminal abortion is "unprofessional and dishonorable conduct," within Comp. St. 1907, § 4327, providing for the revocation of a physician's license for such conduct. Munk v. Frink, 116 N. W. 525, 527, 81 Neb. 631, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439.

An attorney was declared to be guilty of "unprofessional conduct" who represented to an ignorant man, who had employed him to obtain for him a divorce, that he filed a bill and obtained a decree of divorce, and misled and deceived him by delivering to him a copy of the fictitious decree, and represented to the mother of the woman whom he was about to make his second wife that her prospective son-in-law was divorced, when he had not filed a bill nor taken any steps toward obtaining for his client a divorce, and when he had not been divorced. People v. Belinski, 69 N. E. 5, 6, 205 Ill. 564.

B. & C. Comp. § 1066, providing that an attorney shall be disbarred by this court upon proper proceedings for that purpose whenever it shall be made to appear to the court that if he were then applying for admission to the bar his application should be denied because of "unprofessional conduct," means that an attorney shall be disbarred when it appears that his general moral character or unfitness is such that, if he were applying for admission, his application would be denied. State ex rel. Grievance Committee of State Bar Ass'n v. Tanner, 88 Pac. 301, 302, 49 Or. 31.

The provision of St. 1901, p. 56, c. 51, authorizing revocation of physician's certificate for "unprofessional conduct," and declaring that it shall be deemed unprofessional conduct to issue medical advertising in which grossly improbable statements are made, but not defining what would constitute such statement, is too indefinite for enforcement. Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners of the State, 84 Pac. 39, 148 Cal. 590, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

The fact that the term "professional conduct" is not defined by Laws 1903, No. 59, § 7, authorizing the revocation of a physician's license for "grossly immoral or unprofessional conduct rendering him unfit to practice," does not render the statute void for uncertainty, as the term must be construed to mean that which is by general opinion considered to be grossly unprofessional because immoral or dishonorable. Aiton v. Board of Medical Examiners of Arizona, 114 Pac. 962, 13 Ariz. 354.

UNREASONABLE DELAY

The terms "negligent delay" and "unreasonable delay" are used interchangeably and are of the same meaning. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Gillett (Tex.) 99 S. W. 712, 713.

Where a motion is filed in a cause pending in the Supreme Court to strike the bill of exceptions from the record, and sustained because of defects therein, a delay of the plaintiff in error for over two years thereafter in moving to withdraw the record for the purpose of applying to the trial court to have the bill of exceptions amended is "unreasonable," and the relief will be denied. Freeburgh v. Lamoureux, 81 Pac. 97, 13 Wyo. 454.

Where a board of park commissioners commenced proceedings for the condemnation of land on May 18th, and abandoned them on August 14th, after an appeal to the district court, but before any hearing therein, the delay was not so long as to be unreasonable within the rule that in the absence of a showing of "unreasonable delay," and, in the absence of statute, no action lies for the abandonment of ad quod damnum proceedings. Ford v. Board of Park Com'rs of City of Des Moines, 126 N. W. 1030, 1032, 148 Iowa, 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 940.

Where a principal in a bond, securing the completion of certain buildings conveyed to him on which the obligee held certain mortgages, bound himself to complete the buildings without delay, and it appeared that the deed to the property was not made to him until November 13, 1901, when he entered into possession, and, he having done nothing to complete the work, notice of breach of covenant was given to him on December 14, 1901, and the surety in the bond was notified of the default on the 20th, the obligee's delay in announcing his election to claim a default could not be deemed unreasonably long as a matter of law. Burr v. Union Surety & Guaranty Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 114, 117, 107 App. Div. 315.

A delay may be "necessary," and yet "unreasonable," if it is made necessary by the negligence of the party chargeable therewith, such delay is in legal contemplation "unreasonable," however imperatively necessary it may have been. In an action for delay in the shipment of cattle, an instruction holding the carrier liable only in case the delay was both unreasonable and unnecessary was erroneous, since it would be liable if the delay was unreasonable, though rendered necessary by its negligence. Rogers v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 94 S. W. 158, 162.

A telegram was delivered to defendant company in May, 1906, for transmission to plaintiff, which the company did not deliver to plaintiff at all, and no claim for damages was made to defendant until January, 1907. Code, § 2164, provides that no action against a telegraph company for damages caused by erroneous transmission or unreasonable delay in delivery of a message shall be maintained, unless the claim has been presented to the company within 60 days from the accrual of the cause of action. Held, in plaintiff's action against the company for damages, that defendant's entire omission to deliver the message was neither "erroneous transmission" nor "unreasonable delay in delivery," and that plaintiff was not required to present his claim to the company as a condition precedent to his right of action. Larsen v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 130 N. W. 813, 814, 150 Iowa, 748.

"The defendant contends that the shipment was not seasonable, and we think his contention must be sustained. * * * It was understood that the defendant ordered a portion of the goods for use on Memorial Day. They were not shipped until May 18th, 18 days after the receipt of the order, and did not reach Waterville until after Memorial Day. It is the opinion of the court that the delay was 'unreasonable' and that the action cannot be maintained." Rhoades v. Cotton, 38 Atl. 367, 368, 90 Me. 453 (citing and adopting Fisher v. Boynton, 32 Atl. 995, 87 Me. 395).

Under a statute providing that a divorce must be denied where there is an "unreasonable lapse of time" before the commencement of the action, and providing that unreasonable lapse of time is such delay in commencing the action as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same with intent to continue the marriage relation, the delay of a wife for more than ten years to seek a divorce, and then only in response to plaintiff's complaint, establishes the presumption of her "acquiescence with intent to continue the marriage relation." Kenniston v. Kenniston, 92 Pac. 1037, 1039, 6 Cal. App. 657.

UNREASONABLE DISCRIMINATION

See Undue and Unreasonable Discrimination.

UNREASONABLE DISTRESS

A substantially excessive distress being necessarily an unreasonable one, within Civ. Code 1902, § 2434, providing that a distress for rent shall be reasonable and not too great, and that a landlord who makes "unreasonable and excessive distress" shall be liable for damages sustained by the tenant by reason of such excessive distress, a charge submitting to the jury the question whether the distress was unreasonable—that is, whether the amount of property seized to pay $80 was excessive—was not erroneous in not submitting the question whether it was unreasonable and excessive; the word "excessive" being undoubtedly used in the charge in the sense of substantially excessive. A distress of goods which, at the sale thereunder, sold for $255, to pay a rent claim of $80 and $10 expenses, would warrant a charge as matter of law that it was unreasonable and excessive, within Civ. Code 1902, § 2484, making the landlord liable to the tenant for damages from such a distress; the property subject to seizure consisting, not of a single article, but of numerous articles. Alexander v. Able, 70 S. E. 1009, 1010, 88 S. C. 368.

UNREASONABLE TIME

The phrase "unreasonable time," as used in the statement of the rule that, as the ground of attachment must exist at the time the warrant of attachment was issued, an "unreasonable time" should not be allowed to elapse between the making of the affidavit and the issuance of the writ, means such delay as would under the circumstances cast suspicion on the verity of the affidavit, or lead to the supposition that the ground stated for the attachment had ceased to exist. Martinovich v. Marsicano, 89 Pac. 333, 334, 150 Cal. 597 (citing Kesler v. Lapham, 33 S. E. 289, 46 W. Va. 293).

UNREASONABLY RESISTED

Where, in an action against executors on a note indorsed by testator, the only question litigated was whether testator had waived protest, and such fact was established by a son of testator, who was also the father of the executor and brother of the executrix, whose testimony was not disputed, and whose whereabouts were at all times known to defendants, a finding that payment was "unreasonably resisted," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1836, allowing plaintiff costs where his claim has been unreasonably resisted, was warranted. Pauley v. Millsbaugh, 88 N. Y. Supp. 565, 567, 95 App. Div. 208.

Where an administrator of the indorser of a note had no defense on the merits, and the only issue presented by him was whether the claim based thereon had been presented and rejected, and its collection barred by the short statute of limitations, which was determined against him, he was properly held to have "unreasonably resisted and neglected payment of the claim," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1836, authorizing taxation of costs in such event against the administrator, payable out of the estate. Gardner v. Pitcher, 95 N. Y. Supp. 678, 682, 109 App. Div. 106.

UNREGISTERED DEED

Laws 1885, p. 233, c. 147, § 1, now Revisal 1905, § 980, provides that no "conveyance of land or contract to convey or lease of land" for more than three years shall be valid as against creditors or purchasers for a valuable consideration from the donor, bargainor, or lessor, but from the registration thereof, provided no purchase from any such donor, bargainor, or lessor shall avail to pass title as against any unregistered deed executed prior to December 1, 1885, when the person holding or claiming under such unregistered deed shall be in actual possession and enjoyment of the land. Held, that the words "unregistered deed," as used in the proviso, is used in its broad generic sense, and has the same scope as the quoted words, "conveyance of land," etc., used in the first part of the section. McNeill v. Allen, 59 S. E. 689, 690, 146 N. C. 283.

UNSAFE

See Become Unsafe.

A method of work, to be "unsafe," must be such that a reasonably prudent man would not, under the circumstances, adopt it. Lewis v. Barton Salt Co., 107 Pac. 783, 784, 82 Kan. 163.

As insolvent

The words "unsafe or insolvent" in St. 1898, § 45-11, making a bank officer criminally responsible who shall receive a deposit, knowing the bank to be unsafe or insolvent, are used as legal equivalents. The term "unsafe or insolvent" does not mean insolvent in the limited sense of inability to pay indebtedness in the ordinary course of business, but means insolvent in the broad sense of a deficiency of assets realizable in cash within a reasonable time to pay liabilities. A bank is "unsafe or insolvent" when the cash value of its assets realizable in a reasonable time in case of liquidation, as ordinarily prudent persons would close up their business, is not equal to its liabilities, exclusive of stock liabilities. Ellis v. State, 119 N. W. 1110, 1117, 138 Wis. 513, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1022.

It is true that the phrase "unsafe to continue to transact business," as used in Act March 26, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 172) c. 147, providing that upon the failure of a bank to conform to the bank commissioners' order requiring the discontinuance of unsafe practices, or if the commissioners decide it to be unsafe for the bank to continue to transact business, they shall take control of the bank, etc., is broader than the term "insolvent"; and a finding that it is unsafe for a banking corporation to continue business does not necessarily mean that it is insolvent. But the converse of this is not true. The act clearly contemplates that it is unsafe for an insolvent banking corporation to continue business and that a determination by the commissioners that such corporation is insolvent is equivalent to a finding that it is unsafe for it to continue business. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 97 Pac. 306, 309, 154 Cal. 194.

UNSAFE AND DANGEROUS

The term "unsafe and dangerous," in an instruction imposing liability on a city for injuries from a defective condition of a sidewalk rendering the same "unsafe and dangerous," is the equivalent of not being reasonably safe; the language importing more than a mere defective condition. Squiers v. Kansas City, 75 S. W. 194, 195, 100 Mo. App. 628.

UNSEAWORTHY

See Seaworthy—Seaworthiness.

A vessel is not "unseaworthy," within the meaning of a marine policy, because there may have been a deficiency in kinds of fodder supplied for animals, a portion of its cargo. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Western Assurance Co. of Toronto, 168 Fed. 962, 964.

Where, during the unloading of a barge in the usual manner, which caused an uneven keel for a few hours, she sprang a leak, and the remaining cargo was damaged by water, such damage was not caused by "fault or error in the management of the vessel," within section 3 of the Harter Act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445), but from "unseaworthiness," or from "negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading," within section 1, for which the vessel is liable. Donaldson v. J. W. Perry Co., 138 Fed. 643, 645, 71 C. C. A. 93 (citing The Carib Prince, 18 Sup. Ct. 753, 170 U. S. 655, 42 L. Ed. 1181; The Germanic, 25 Sup. Ct. 317, 196 U. S. 589, 49 L. Ed. 610).

UNSECURED DEBT

"Unsecured debt," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2716, authorizing a receiver for an insolvent trader at the instance of creditors representing one-third of the unsecured debt of the trader, means a debt for which no security is held; not one secured by collateral security or pledge, though such security may be less than the debt. Farmers' Union Warehouse Co. v. Coweta Fertilizer Co., 65 S. E. 291, 133 Ga. 132.

Shares of stock in national and state banks are "unsecured solvent debts" due from others to the taxpayer, from which he is entitled to deduct his unsecured debts due to bona fide residents of the state as authorized by Rev. Codes, §§ 1682, 1683, 1685. First Nat. Bank of Weiser

v. Washington County, 105 Pac. 1053, 1056, 17 Idaho, 306.

UNSERVICEABLE

County property becomes "unserviceable," within Pol. Code 1895, § 278, so as to authorize its sale by the commissioners of roads and revenues, where it cannot be beneficially or advantageously used under all the circumstances. Dyer v. Martin, 64 S. E. 475, 477, 132 Ga. 445.

UNSETTLED

The affairs of a partnership are "unsettled," so as to subject it to bankruptcy adjudication, as authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 5, subd. "a," 30 Stat. 548, so long as the partnership debts are unpaid. In re Pinson & Co., 180 Fed. 787, 790.

UNSKILLFULNESS

Where plaintiff sought to recover for decedent's death in a street railroad accident under the humanitarian rule, and charged that decedent's death was caused by the negligent unskillfulness, etc., of defendant's servant, and there was evidence that the motorman had been in charge of the car in question only about a week, having been in actual service about half of that time, plaintiff's counsel was justified in arguing that defendant was negligent in placing the car in charge of an inexperienced servant; the term "unskillfulness" being sufficient enough to include inexperience. Ellis v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 138 S. W. 23, 33, 234 Mo. 657.

In an action against a surgeon for performing an operation unskillfully and without plaintiff's consent, the court charged that defendant was not required to possess or exercise the highest degree of skill, but was bound to possess and exercise that degree of skill usually possessed by surgeons generally in that section of the country. If, "however, in performing the operation, defendant failed to do so with that skill which is usually possessed by the profession of surgeons in that section of the country, the skill used by defendant in performing the operation was not the degree of skill required by law." Held, that the clause quoted was improper, and that the court, in place thereof, should have charged that, if the operation was performed by defendant with such skill, then it was not "unskillfully" performed, within the meaning of the instructions. Van Meter v. Crews, 148 S. W. 40, 43, 149 Ky. 335.

UNSOLD

See Remain Unsold.

UNSOUND

A stipulation in a contract of fraternal insurance with a married woman that the policy should not take effect unless delivered to her "while in sound health" is not violated by reason of the applicant being pregnant at the time of delivery of the policy. Confinement in childbirth is not a "personal ailment" within the meaning of such a provision in a contract of insurance. Pregnancy is not per se a condition of "unsound health," nor a disease, within the meaning of such terms used in an application for a policy of insurance. Rascot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 108 Pac. 1048, 1053, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180.

UNSOUND MIND

See Mental Unsoundness.

The mind may in a sense be said to be "unsound" where its possessor is suffering from delusions, hallucinations, and illusions, and yet he may be held responsible for a criminal act, where the intent is an essential ingredient of the offense, if these things are not the products of a diseased mind. Porter v. State, 37 South. 81, 83, 140 Ala. 87.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3938, provides that persons of unsound mind and infants may not alien land or any interest therein. Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 240, declares that technical words and phrases having a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law shall be understood according to their technical import. Held, that the words "unsound mind," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3112, providing what persons may make a will, having been construed to mean a person of such unsoundness of mind as incapacitates him from making a will according to the standard fixed by the adjudicated cases, its use in section 3938 would be given the same technical meaning; and hence an allegation in a guardian's complaint to set aside a conveyance of real property by his ward that the ward was of unsound mind when the conveyance was executed was not fatally defective as alleging a mere conclusion. Humphrey v. Harris, 96 N. E. 38, 39, 48 Ind. App. 469.

A request to charge that if B. on September 2, 1902, did not have mental capacity sufficient to understand his property rights and the character, object, and nature of the transfer of the corporate stock in question and to transfer the same according to a definite purpose and desires of his own, then he was of "unsound mind," but if he had mental capacity sufficient to understand his property rights and character, object, and nature of the transfer of the stock by means of the powers executed and to transfer the same according to a definite purpose and desire of his own, he was not of unsound mind, sufficiently presented the question of lack of capacity to the jury. Bannon v. Patrick Bannon Sewer Pipe Co., 119 S. W. 1170, 1175, 136 Ky. 556.

Under a statute which provides that persons of "unsound mind" at the time of their production cannot be witnesses, a person who can apprehend the obligation of an oath and is capable of giving a fairly correct account of the things he has seen or heard is competent as a witness, although he may be afflicted with some form of insanity. State v. Simes, 85 Pac. 914, 12 Idaho, 310, 9 Ann. Cas. 1216.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3702 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2071), providing that, for the purposes of the chapter relating to insane persons, the words "insane person" or the words "person of unsound mind" shall be construed to mean either an idiot, or a lunatic, or a person of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own affairs, there is no distinction in law between irresponsible persons, persons of unsound mind, or idiots and raving maniacs. In re Crouse, 120 S. W. 666, 670, 140 Mo. App. 545.

The fact that a woman 73 years old deeded her farm to her eldest son in consideration of his promise to maintain her during her lifetime, and sold him stock thereon at a price less than its actual value, will not warrant the appointment of a guardian, under Code, § 3219, providing for the appointment of a guardian of the property of a "person of unsound mind." Arment v. Arment, 111 N. W. 812, 813, 134 Iowa, 199.

The expression "unsound mentally" indicates nothing as to the extent or degree of the mental defect, and does not denote an exemption from legal responsibility from criminal acts. Commonwealth v. Hallowell, 72 Atl. 845, 846, 223 Pa. 507.

As every grade of mental incapacity

The words "lunacy" and "unsound mind" have been bent out of their technical sense in some instances; a legislative construction being given thereto in harmony with the broad views of courts that they include every phase of unsound mind rendering one incapable of caring for himself or his property. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903.

Under a statute authorizing all persons to dispose of their property by will, except infants and "persons of unsound mind," the latter exception includes idiots, persons non compos, lunatics, monomaniacs, or distracted persons. The term includes every species of unsoundness of mind, although, if the unsoundness of mind does not in any way influence or affect the provisions of the will, it may be a valid one. Swygart v. Willard, 76 N. E. 755, 757, 166 Ind. 25.

As incapable of transacting business in hand

Every mind in the legal sense is sound that can reason and will intelligently in the particular transaction being considered, and every mind is "unsound" or insane that cannot so reason and will. In re American

Board of Com'rs for Foreign Missions, 66 Atl. 215, 221, 102 Me. 72.

Inability to conduct ordinary affairs

Where mental incapacity renders one unable to conduct the ordinary affairs of life and leaves him in a condition to be the victim of his misfortune, he is of "unsound mind," within Kirby's Dig. § 7812, providing that a person of unsound mind includes one who is a lunatic, idiot, or deranged. Pulaski County v. Hill, 134 S. W. 973, 975, 97 Ark. 450.

"Unsound mind" means inability to transact ordinary affairs of life, to understand their nature and effect, and exercise the will in relation thereto. Kaack v. Stanton, 112 S. W. 702, 705, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 495.

UNSUITABLE PERSON

See Suitable Person.

UNTENANTABLE

Under a lease of a store building for the retail clothing business which provided that, while the demised premises are untenable by fire, rent shall cease, a fire which so damaged the building that it could not be used for the retail business, although the goods were left on the shelves pending insurance adjustment, rendered the building "untenantable," and released the lessee from rent for that period, though he did not surrender possession. Acme Ground Rent Co. v. Werner, 139 N. W. 314, 151 Wis. 417.

The continued occupation by a tenant of a building after its damage by fire is some evidence of its fitness for occupation, but is not conclusive evidence on the point within the lease providing that on the building becoming untenable in consequence of a fire the rent shall cease until everything is put in complete repair; the word "untenantable" meaning not fit to be rented or occupied by a tenant. Reischmann v. L. N. Hartog Candy Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 435, 437.

Where premises are rented for a store, and the lease provides that if they are rendered untenable by fire the rent is to cease, the premises became "untenantable" when from fire the building is damaged so that it is unfit for carrying on a shoe store, and cannot be restored by ordinary repairs such as can be made without unreasonable interruption to the business. Wolff v. Turner, 65 S. E. 41, 6 Ga. App. 366.

UNTIL

An order extending the time for filing a bill of exceptions "until" the following term limited the time to the first day of the following term. Akins v. City of Humansville, 113 S. W. 687, 688, 133 Mo. App. 502.

The word "until," as used in the expression, "until otherwise provided by law," means "up to that time," "till the point or degree that," and as so used means until the law provides some other disposition of the matter in question. Holcomb v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 112 Pac. 1023, 1024, 27 Okl. 667.

Testator directed that a trust created by his will should continue until the expiration of 20 years after his death and the death of his wife. Held, that the language could not be read as if the words had been "until the expiration of 20 years after my death and until the death of my wife," and the intention of the testator to have the trust continued 20 years after the death of the widow, as well as 20 years after his own death, was disclosed. Robinson v. Bonaparte, 61 Atl. 212, 216, 102 Md. 63.

Under the Code the persons selected as grand jurors in January of each year are to act for one year and "until" other persons are selected the next year. This means that they shall act only until the happening of the event mentioned and not afterwards. The word "until," as used in section 210, is a word of limitation, and designates the end of the thing referred to. The meaning of this word when used as in the Code is aptly stated by the Court of Appeals of Missouri as follows: "The word 'until' is a word of limitation, used ordinarily to restrict what immediately precedes it to what immediately follows it. Its office is to point out some point of time, or the happening of some event, when what precedes it shall cease to exist, or have any further force or effect." Halsey v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 91 Pac. 987, 992, 152 Cal. 71 (citing Maginn v. Lancaster, 73 S. W. 372, 100 Mo. App. 116).

The proper words to be used in creating a limitation upon the term granted by a lease are "while," "as long as," "until," and "during." Vanatta v. Brewer, 32 N. J. Eq. 268, 270.

The word "at," in a will giving a certain sum of money to the children of the testator's daughter that she then had and might or should have "at" the time of her death, should be construed in the sense of "until." Haggerty v. Hockenberry, 30 Atl. 88, 89, 52 N. J. Eq. 354.

As excluding last day

Act Aug. 31, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 305), provided that respondent's term as jury commissioner under appointment made by the Governor ran "till the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January, 1911," and that on the expiration of each term the Governor should appoint successors who should hold office for three years from the expiration of the term of their respective predecessors. Held, that the word "till" meant "up or down to; as far as; until," the words "to," "till," and "until" being synonymous, and, "until" being primarily a word of exclusion, respondent's term did not include any part of the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January, and hence, since the term of the existing Governor did include that day, there was a vacancy in the office of jury commissioner, which the Governor had power to fill by appointment. Oberhaus v. State ex rel. McNamara, 55 South. 898, 902, 173 Ala. 483.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines the word "to" as a term of exclusion, unless by necessary implication it is manifestly used in a different sense. Webster recognizes the words "to," "till," and "until" as synonymous in the sense here used. The Century Dictionary gives like recognition as to the use of these words. Where on the 25th day of February plaintiff in error was allowed to the 15th day of March to make and serve a case for the Supreme Court, the time granted expired at 12 o'clock midnight March 14th. Maynes v. Gray, 76 Pac. 443, 69 Kan. 49, 105 Am. St. Rep. 146, 2 Ann. Cas. 518.

While in the interpretation of instruments by which powers are created or estates granted, the word "until" is generally used to delimit the extent of that which is within the grant, and hence excludes the day up to which the grant runs, where the term of a judge was to continue until a certain date, the term of the incumbent of the office included such date; the function of the preposition being not to limit, but to extend. Fulton v. Woodward, 24 Atl. 402, 54 N. J. Law, 481.

When a period of time is to continue "until" a certain day, such day is excluded; and where, in a lease, both "from" and "until" are used, then, unless the two dates named are both outside of the term granted, the general rule excluding both these dates cannot be applied. Where the words "from" and "until" are used in a lease in connection with the phrase a "term of two years," either one or both of the dates named may be either included within the term or excluded therefrom, and the whole instrument must be considered to get the true intent. I. X. L. Furniture & Carpet Installment House v. Berets, 91 Pac. 279, 280, 32 Utah, 454.

The word "until," in Acts 1900-01, p. 1291, declaring that one of the terms of the city court of Gadsden shall continue "until" the third Saturday in December, is exclusive of that day. Johnson v. State, 37 South. 421, 141 Ala. 7, 109 Am. St. Rep. 17.

When time to do an act is given until a day named, the word "until" will be deemed exclusive, unless it is shown by the context or otherwise that the contrary was intended. Carver v. Seever & Bryan, 102 N. W. 518, 519, 126 Iowa, 669 (citing Century Dict.; People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94).

While the word "until" is perhaps most frequently used in a restrictive sense, and excludes the day mentioned, it depends on the intent to which it is used which is to be inferred from the nature and circumstances of the case. Harvey v. Provident Inv. Co. (Tex.) 150 S. W. 284 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7218).

Where defendant was granted "until January 5th" to have his bill of exceptions signed by the presiding judge, the time for signing expired on the night of January 4th, and the court did not, on January 5th, which was in vacation, have power to extend the time until January 6th, as the term "until January 5th" excluded that day. Richardson v. State, 39 South. 12, 142 Ala. 12.

As including last day

The word "until," in New York City Charter, § 1401 (Laws 1901, p. 599, c. 466), providing that judges of the Court of Special Sessions shall hold office until December 31st in the years mentioned, was inclusive. People v. Fitzgerald, 89 N. Y. Supp. 268, 269, 96 App. Div. 242.

The word "until," when applied to the extension of time for the filing of the bill of exceptions "until" a certain date, includes such date. Bloch Queensware Co. v. Smith, Saxton & Co., 80 S. W. 592, 593, 107 Mo. App. 13 (citing St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Gracy, 29 S. W. 579, 126 Mo. 472).

Under Act Feb. 28, 1907, continuing one of the terms of the city court of Montgomery "until" the Saturday before the second Monday in July, the Saturday named should be included within the term, the rule to be applied being that in statutes limiting the continuance of terms of court until a certain day, which is the last day of the week or month, the interpretation to be placed upon the word "until" is that the last day named is to be included. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Knabe, 48 South. 501, 503, 158 Ala. 458.

If, by an order in a criminal case, a defendant be required to enter into a recognizance for his appearance in court on June 25, 1904, and he be given until that time in which to present a bill of exceptions, the strict legal and lexicographic meaning of the word "until" is controlled by the context, and the bill may be presented on the day named. State v. Horine, 78 Pac. 411, 412, 70 Kan. 256.

Until after

The word "unless," as used in an insurance policy providing that no action could be sustainable unless the proofs had been furnished in the specified time, and the words "until after," as used in a policy providing that no action could be sustainable until after proofs were furnished, etc., mean the same thing—that, the proof having not been furnished within the specified time, the accused's right of action in either case is cut off. Teutonia Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 82 S. W. 840, 842, 72 Ark. 484.

Until further order of court

Where a temporary injunction was granted "until further order of the court," the words quoted import an order that until such time, for good cause appearing, the same should be modified or dissolved, not an arbitrary right of dissolution at the court's discretion. The broadest powers given to courts in the control of their records and judgments do not comprehend arbitrary power of rescinding orders once entered, but do comprehend that such orders of modification or rescission should be based upon good reasons presented to the court. Humphry v. Buena Vista Water Co., 84 Pac. 296-297, 2 Cal. App. 540.

The words "until the further orders of the court," contained in a restraining order, together with the day set for hearing on which parties are required to show cause, if any, why a temporary injunction should not issue against them, mean only "in the meantime." Ex parte Grimes, 94 Pac. 668, 671, 20 Okl. 446.

Until his successor is elected and qualified

The words "until his successor is elected and qualified," as used in the Constitution and statutes relative to the terms of officers, are not intended to prolong the term of office beyond such reasonable time after the election as will enable the newly elected officer to qualify, and after the expiration of such reasonable time, if the newly elected officer fails to qualify, the office becomes vacant. Prowell v. State, 39 South. 164, 166, 142 Ala. 80 (citing City Council of Montgomery v. Hughes, 65 Atl. 201, 206, 207; Chelmsford Co. v. Demarest [Mass.] 7 Gray, 1).

Under Pierce's Code, § 4224 (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 425), fixing the term of the county treasurer's office at two years and "until his successor is elected or qualified," the word "elected," meaning elected by the same electoral body that elected the incumbent whose term of office is thus fixed, does not permit the qualification as such successor by a person appointed by the county board because of the failure to qualify of the person elected as such. State ex rel. Vanderveer v. Gormley, 102 Pac. 435, 438, 53 Wash. 543.

Act Feb. 26, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 189), creating the law and equity court of Madison county, provided that the judge should be appointed by the Governor to hold "until the general election in 1910, and until his successor is elected and qualified," the term to be six years, and until the incumbent successor is elected or appointed and qualified, and that the judge should be elected at the general election in 1910, and every six years thereafter the judge to take and file the oath of office required of certain judges. Held, that Code 1907, § 1463, providing that judges of inferior courts, when not otherwise provided for by law, shall hold their respective offices for six years from the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January next after their election and until their successors are elected and qualified, did not apply to a judge of such court, nor prolong the term of office of an appointee as judge of a superior court, or delay the right of a judge elected to fill a succeeding term of the same office, when the terms of both were fixed by the act creating the court, so that on the election and qualification of a successor to the appointee as judge of the court so elected, the appointee's term of office ipso facto expired. Betts v. Ballentine, 55 South. 814, 815, 172 Ala. 325.

A clause in an official bond guaranteeing faithful discharge of the officer's duties for a specified term, and "until his successor is appointed," will not hold the surety for defaults occurring beyond a reasonable time after the expiration of his term; but what is a reasonable time is a question of fact for the jury, and cannot be determined upon a demurrer. Camden v. Greenwald, 47 Atl. 458, 459, 65 N. J. Law, 458.

The words "until his successor shall qualify," used in relation to a term of office, were not intended to prolong the term beyond a reasonable time after the election to enable the newly elected officer to qualify. Act Feb. 7, 1899 (Acts 1898-99, p. 676), provided that the superintendent of education of Montgomery county should be elected at the general election to be held on the first Monday in August, 1900, and at the general election every four years thereafter, that his term of office should begin on October 1st following the election, and that he should hold office until his successor should be duly qualified. Acts 1903, p. 438, in relation to general elections, provided that county superintendents should be elected in November, 1904, and every four years thereafter. It was held that the provision as to the superintendent holding office until his successor should be duly qualified did not prolong the term of office of the incumbent at the time of the election in November, 1904, beyond a reasonable time to enable the newly elected officer to qualify. State ex rel. Covington v. Thompson, 38 South. 679, 683, 142 Ala. 98 (citing Prowell v. State ex rel. Hasty, 39 South. 164, 142 Ala. 80).

Until the hearing

Where, in proceedings to procure a new trial, movant is allowed "until the hearing" to prepare and present for approval a brief of the evidence, the term "until the hearing" includes only the time between the date of the order granting time and the time when the court enters upon the actual hearing; and an attempt to file a brief of evidence, which has not been approved by the trial judge, after the court has orally announced judgment dismissing the motion though the judgment has not been reduced to writing or signed, is nugatory. Davis v. State, 70 S. E. 148, 149, 8 Ga. App. 711.

UNTO

"Unto a jail or building" is not a common form of expression, and in no popular sense has it ever been used to mean to convey within a building. Probably no case can be cited where that word has ever been construed to be synonymous with or to mean "into." People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 137 Mich. 399.

UNUSUAL

An instruction assuming that the operation of a train around a curve "at an unusually high rate of speed" was negligence is erroneous, such a speed may be "unusual," but safe. Flucks v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 122 S. W. 348, 349, 143 Mo. App. 17.

UNUSUAL CARE

By "unusual care" is meant a greater degree of care than is necessary where danger is not apparent. Walsh v. Central New York Telephone & Telegraph Co., 68 N. E. 146, 148, 176 N. Y. 163.

UNUSUAL FRESHET OR STORM

"Unusual," as applied to a freshet, does not necessarily mean "extraordinary," though the word "unusual" is sometimes used in that sense. Thus to charge that a builder of a bridge over a stream is required to leave openings for the passage of the water reasonably to be expected to flow therein, but that no liability can attach for the results of an "unusual rain" or extraordinary freshet, was an improper statement of the duty. Broadway Mfg. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal Ry. & Bridge Co., 106 Pac. 1034, 1035, 81 Kan. 616, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, 2628; Avery v. Vermont Electric Co., 75 Vt. 235, 54 Atl. 179, 59 L. R. A. 877, 98 Am. St. Rep. 818; American Locomotive Co. v. Hoffman, 105 Va. 343, 54 S. E. 25, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 252, 8 Ann. Cas. 773).

Within the rule that a municipality is not liable for injuries from insufficiency of its sewage system to carry off the surface water in case of an extraordinary storm, the word "extraordinary" is not used as synonymous with "unprecedented," but with "unusual," that which is rare or uncommon, happens sometimes, but not so often as to be regarded as a common occurrence. Gender Paeschke & Frey Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 133 N. W. 835, 839, 147 Wis. 491.

UNUSUAL MANNER

See Cruel and Unusual Manner.

UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT

Since, under Laws 1908, c. 168, a county convict cannot be confined for more than two years for nonpayment of a fine and costs, section 2 of chapter 109, providing for confinement until payment of fines and costs, is not unconstitutional, as providing for "unusual punishment," in violation of Const. 1890, § 28, and Const. U. S. Amend. 8. Ex parte McInnis, 54 South. 260, 98 Miss. 773.

UNVALUED POLICY

An "unvalued policy" is one in which the value of the interest at risk is not fixed in the policy, but is estimated by a certain standard, and in case of loss is made out by proof. Peninsular & O. S. S. Co. v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 185 Fed. 172, 173, 174.

UNWARRANTABLE

Acts of an officer, in serving a warrant, in taking plaintiff out of bed at 1 o'clock at night, carrying him to a lockup in a patrol wagon with intoxicated people, and placing him in a cell not sufficiently warm, were within his authority under the process; and if there were no other acts to which the words "unnecessary" and "unwarrantable," as used in a recital in the bill of exceptions that the arrest was made in an unusual manner and with acts of unnecessary and unwarrantable cruelty and indignity, are applicable, the words do not imply an act beyond the authority of the process. Laing v. Mitten, 70 N. E. 128, 129, 185 Mass. 233.

When defendant drove its automobile at a speed of 20 miles an hour towards plaintiff on a narrow approach to a bridge, from whence plaintiff could not escape without proceeding forward to a cross-street, and though observing the frightened condition of plaintiff's horse, and his signals to them to stop and allow him to escape, refused to slacken its speed, causing plaintiff's horse to run away and injure him, such conduct was an "unwarrantable use of the highway," rendering defendant liable for plaintiff's injuries. Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 74 N. E. 615, 617, 165 Ind. 465, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656.

UNWEANED LAMB

As sheep, see Sheep.

UNWROUGHT METAL

Iron sand, a completed article manufactured from cast iron and steel scrap, is not dutiable as "unwrought metals," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 183, 30 Stat. 166. Harrison Supply Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 155, 156.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 183, 30 Stat. 166, for "unwrought metals," does not include ferro-alloys which, though capable of being wrought into different forms and shapes, are not to any extent shown to be imported to be themselves wrought into useful articles, but are generally used for imparting certain qualities to steel in the process of its manufacture. E. J. Lavino & Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 245; United States v. E. J. Lavino & Co., 175 Fed. 964, 965, 99 C. C. A. 637.

In construing the provision in paragraph 183, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, 30 Stat. 166, for "metals unwrought," held, that "unwrought" implies a metal which is capable of being wrought, and not a substance fit only to be used with other ingredients to produce an entirely different and distinct product, and that ferro-chrome, ferromolybdenum, ferro-tungsten, and ferro-vanadium, used only in imparting certain qualities to steel, and incapable of being themselves wrought into any useful article, are not within said provision. United States v. Roesseler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., 131 Fed. 576; Id., 137 Fed. 770, 772, 70 C. C. A. 346.

UP

See Bucking Up; Fixed Up; On—Upon; Paid Up; Wound Up.

UP TO AND INCLUDING

Under Transfer Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60, as amended by Laws 1910, c. 706) § 221, establishing increasing rates of taxation in proportion to the amount of property transferred, the words "up to and including the sum of" relate to the excess over the amount subject to the previous rate of taxation, and should be construed to read "up to and including an excess equal to the sum of," and they do not relate to the entire amount of the transfer. In re Jourdan's Estate, 128 N. Y. Supp. 728, 729, 70 Misc. Rep. 159.

UPLAND OWNER

Laws 1897, c. 89, § 45 (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6750), provides that the owner of lands abutting or fronting on tide or shore lands of the first class shall have the right for 60 days following the filing of the final appraisal of the tide and shore lands to apply for and purchase all or any part of the tide or shore lands in front of the lands so owned. Const. art. 17, § 2, declares that the state disclaims all title in and claim to all tide, swamp, and overflowed lands patented by the United States and not impeached for fraud. Held, that where overflowed lands bounded by a meander line, and located below high-water mark, were patented prior to the adoption of the Constitution, section 6750 did not invariably confer on the owner of the upland above high-water mark the exclusive right to purchase shore lands to the exclusion of the owner of such overflowed lands, and hence the owner of upland which fronted but did not abut on platted tide or shore lands was not entitled to a preference right to purchase such shore lands as against the owner of private lands located below high-water line fronting on the inner line of tide and shore land platted and offered for sale by the state; he being regarded as the "upland owner" for such purpose. Bleakley v. Lake Washington Mill Co., 118 Pac. 5, 7, 65 Wash. 215.

UPPER STORIES

In a statute providing that owners of buildings more than two stories high shall provide convenient exits from the different upper stories, the term "upper stories" means all stories above the ground floor. Rose v. King, 49 Ohio St. 213, 221, 30 N. E. 267, 15 L. R. A. 160.

URBAN EASEMENTS

The "urban easements" belonging to property abutting on streets are the rights that one's windows should not be darkened, that the free enjoyment of pure air should not be substantially interfered with, and that the free and usual access thereto should not be impaired. The value of property is affected as these rights are taken away or substantially impaired. As between lessor and lessee, the injury from this technical trespass is not the same, and the former has his remedy for any injury sustained to his reversionary right, while the tenant has his remedy for any injury occasioned to him according to the circumstances of the hiring. Where the city of New York leased land under an agreement which was practically perpetual, with periods for renewal and readjustment of rentals, consented to the construction of an elevated road in front of the premises after a building had been erected by the lessee, and the building and lease were sold after the commencement of the operation of the road, and the lease was thereafter renewed, there was an impairment of the leasehold interest for which damages were recoverable, though when the renewal was made the road was built and in operation. Storms v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 71 N. E. 3, 5, 178 N. Y. 493, 66 L. R. A. 625.

URBAN HOMESTEAD

In order to constitute land an "urban homestead," it is not necessary that it should have been originally surveyed or platted by the city. It is sufficient that the land is recognized as a part of the plat or plan. It is unimportant that the lots of which it is composed do not conform to the dimensions or shape of lots generally in the platted parts of the city, where its use, controlled by the city and surroundings, impress the property with the character of an urban homestead. A contention, in a suit by the owner to enjoin the sale of such property on execution, that such lot constituted a part of a rural homestead, is untenable. Harris v. Matthews, 81 S. W. 1198, 1204, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 424.

Under Const. art. 16, § 51, providing that to constitute an "urban homestead" the land claimed as such must be used as a home, etc., a mere intent to make unoccupied property a homestead is insufficient to constitute it a homestead; it being required that the intent concur with acts of preparation to seasonably and actually use and occupy the property as a home. Cobb v. Collins, 111 S. W. 760, 761, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 63.

In determining whether a homestead is "urban" or rural, the corporate line does not control, but should be considered as a material fact when the property has been acquired after the city limits have been established. Const. art. 16, § 51, provides that a rural homestead shall consist of not more than 200 acres, and that an "urban homestead" shall consist of a "lot or lots" not to exceed in value $5,000. Land, designated as a lot in a particular block in the city plan, and within the limits of a city, was purchased and used for a residence in connection with the owner's business as a merchant, and afterwards the owner purchased land adjoining his residence property, but separated from it by the city's limits as generally recognized, which he used for pasturing the family horses or cattle, and for raising products for home consumption; both lots being valued at less than the constitutional limit for urban homesteads. The city exercised no jurisdiction over such tract and levied no taxes thereon, nor was it rendered for city taxation. Held, that the term "lot or lots" must be taken in its popular sense, and did not embrace land within the limits of the corporation not connected with the plan of the city; that the original homestead was urban in character, and the later acquisition was rural; and that, as there could be no blending of urban and rural homesteads, the tract last purchased was not a part of the owner's homestead, and hence was subject to foreclosure under a deed of trust. First Nat. Bank v. Litchfield (Tex.) 144 S. W. 350, 352.

URBAN REAL ESTATE

"'Urban real estate' is that situated in a city, or a town resembling a city." Stees v. Bergmeier, 98 N. W. 648, 650, 91 Minn. 513.

Acts 1888, p. 127, c. 98, § 19, relating to the annexation of a certain tract to Baltimore, provided that until 1900 the tax rate upon all "landed property" and taxable personal property in the tract should not exceed the rate of Baltimore county for 1887, and that after 1900 the rate should be the same as for the rest of the city of Baltimore, provided that the increased rate should not take effect until avenues, streets, or alleys should be opened through the property, and at least six dwellings or storehouses be ready for occupation upon each block of ground so to be formed. Acts 1902, p. 199, c. 130, provided that the term "landed property" in the act of 1888 should mean real estate, whether in fee simple or leasehold, that, the provision as to the opening of avenues, etc., should mean opened graded, kerbed and otherwise improved from kerb to kerb by pavement or other substantial material, and that the term "block of ground" should mean an area not exceeding 200,000 superficial square feet, bounded on all sides by intersecting avenues, streets, or alleys, graded, kerbed, and otherwise improved from kerb to kerb, by pavement or other substantial material. A triangular block, being part of the tract annexed by the act of 1888, contained 1,000,000 superficial square feet, bounded on one side by 3,034 feet of a road, part of which was kerbed and macadamized, the rest covered with an inch of stone, but unkerbed. On another side was a common road, not graded, kerbed, or paved, and on the third side was a private toll road, kerbed and paved in the middle. There were about 47 dwellings and storehouses on the block. Held, that a leasehold interest in the block was taxable under the county, and not the city, tax rate. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Schafer, 68 Atl. 138, 140, 107 Md. 38.

URBAN SERVITUDES

Use of streets for the laying of sewers and gas and water pipes constitutes "urban servitudes." Sweet v. Perkins, 101 N. Y. S. 163, 165, 115 App. Div. 784.

URETHRA

The "urethra" of a female is a duct starting from the vagina, which is a canal leading to the womb, and leading to the bladder for the purpose of emptying it. The same lips are around the vagina and urethra, and from the outer edge of such lips to the bladder the distance is about two inches. Clark v. People, 79 N. E. 941, 943, 224 Ill. 554.

US

A warrant of attorney contained in a joint and several note signed by eight makers authorizing the holder to have judgment confessed against "us, or any or either of us," is not exhausted by the entry of judgment against one or more but not all of the makers, but is the equivalent of eight separate warrants each signed by one of the makers, and the holder may enter a several judgment against each maker. George D. Harter Bank v. Straus, 170 Fed. 489, 491.

USABLE VALUE

"Usable value" means the value of the use of the premises to the occupant, as distinct from the rental of the premises in a lease by the owner to a tenant. Bates v. Holbrook, 85 N. Y. Supp. 673, 677, 89 App. Div. 548; Bly v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 592, 593, 111 App. Div. 170 (citing Bates v. Holbrook, 70 N. E. 1094, 178 N. Y. 568).

The "usable value" of premises is not synonymous with "rental value," but has, as a term, an equivalent sense, which should be allowed to be shown in condemnation proceedings. Reisert v. City of New York, 68 N. E. 731, 736, 174 N. Y. 196.

USAGE

See Common Usage; Trade Usage.

Usage, in its most extensive meaning, includes custom; but in its narrower significance it refers to a general habit, mode or course of procedure. Wilmington City Ry. Co. v. White (Del.) 66 Atl. 1009, 1012, 6 Pennewill, 363.

A custom or "usage" is the result of a long-continued and substantially uniform practice. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Doty, 133 Fed. 866, 872, 67 C. C. A. 38.

"Usage" is a reasonable and lawful public custom concerning transactions of the same nature as those which are to be affected thereby, existing at the place where the obligation is to be performed and either known to the parties or so well established, general and uniform, that they are presumed to have acted with reference thereto, and usage in a particular locality is something which exists in general repute in the trade affected thereby in the community, and which all residents are supposed to know of, and are presumed to have contracted with reference to. Miller v. Wiggins, 76 Atl. 711, 712, 227 Pa. 564. But one not shown to have knowledge of a trade usage confined to a particular business, which is not shown to be of such a general and notorious character that he must be presumed to have contracted with reference to it, is not bound by such usage. Bixby v. Bruce, 95 N. W. 34, 35, 69 Neb. 78 (citing 2 Greenl. Ev. § 251).

"'Usage' is a matter of fact, not of opinion. Usage of trade is a course of dealing; a mode of conducting transactions of a particular kind. It is proved by witnesses testifying to its existence and uniformity, from their knowledge, obtained by observation of what is practiced by themselves and others in the trade to which it relates." Ames Mercantile Co. v. Kimball S. S. Co., 125 Fed. 332, 336 (quoting Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 574).

Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 38) § 322, provides that a check must be presented for payment within a reasonable time after its issue. Section 4 provides that, in determining what is a reasonable time, regard is to be had to the nature of the instrument, any usage of trade or business with respect to such instruments, and the facts of the particular case. Held that, in view of the custom of the New York Clearing House Association, the deposit of a check received after banking hours, on the morning of the day after its receipt, and its presentment for payment in the usual course of business by the bank of deposit on the day following, showed due diligence in presentment; "reasonable" being a relative term to be determined according to the circumstances of the case, "reasonable time" meaning "so much time as is necessary under the circumstances conveniently to do what the contract requires," and "usage of trade" meaning a known, uniform, and reasonable usage, not contrary to law or public policy. Zaloom v. Ganim, 129 N. Y. Supp. 85, 87, 72 Misc. Rep. 36.

Custom distinguished

"Usage" is a repetition of acts, and differs from "custom" in that the latter is the law or general rule which arises from such repetition; and while there may be usage without custom there cannot be a custom without a usage accompanying or preceding it. American Lead Pencil Co. v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry., 134 S. W. 613, 615, 124 Tenn. 57, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323.

The term "custom" refers to those usages which have existed and been universally recognized for so long a period as to acquire the force of law and be binding without the assent of the individual, while "usage" refers to an established method of dealing adopted in a particular place, or by those engaged in a particular vocation or trade, which acquires legal force because people make contracts in reference thereto. Byrd v. Beall, 43 South. 749, 751, 150 Ala. 122, 124 Am. St. Rep. 60 (citing 12 Cyc. 1033).

"The word 'custom' is sometimes used synonymously with 'usage,' meaning a course of dealing which derives its legal force from assent, express or implied; again, as something which by long usage or judicial sanction has acquired the force of law, and is binding without regard to the question of assent." "Usage" in its most extensive meaning includes "custom." "Customs" are of two kinds, general and particular. Wilmington City Ry. Co. v. White (Del.) 66 Atl. 1009, 1012, 6 Pennewill, 363.

USE

See Life Use; Superstitious Use.

A "use," a trust, and a "confidence" is one and the same thing, and if an estate is conveyed to one person for the use of another or upon a trust for another, and nothing more is said, the statute immediately transfers the legal estate to the use, and no trust is created, although express words of trust are used. Jones v. Jones, 123 S. W. 29, 34, 223 Mo. 424, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424 (quoting and adopting the definition in Perry, Trusts [5th Ed.] § 298).

Charitable use, see Charity.

His own use and benefit, see His.

Other public use, see Other.

Similar use, see Similar.

One of the most common meanings of the word "use," as defined by Webster, is "usefulness, utility, advantage, productive of benefit"; and "public use" may well mean public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit. State ex rel. Edwards v. Millar, 98 Pac. 747, 753, 21 Okl. 448.

Where a will provides for a gift in trust, the residue to be "used, paid out, and expended" for the care of her husband, the trust contemplates the consumption of the principal of the residue as far as necessary for the care of the beneficiary. In re Lehre's Will, 131 N. Y. Supp. 992, 72 Misc. Rep. 565.

As benefit or profit

In general, the "use" or usufruct of a thing does not mean the thing itself, but the right to use, enjoy, hold, or occupy, and have the fruits thereof. If the thing is in the form of real estate, the use includes its occupancy or cultivation, or the rent which can be obtained for the same, and if it is money or its equivalent, the use, generally speaking, consists of the interest which it will earn. Linton v. Howard, 128 N. W. 793, 795, 163 Mich. 556.

Webster defines the word "use," as a noun, primarily as follows: "The act of employing anything, or of applying it to one's service; application; employment; conversion to some purpose; as, the use of a pen in writing; his machines are in general use." The ordinary meaning of the use of a thing is not the thing itself, or any part thereof, but is that which the thing will produce. If it is a house or other building, it is the rent which can be obtained for it; if it is money, it is the interest it will earn. In re Moor's Estate, 128 N. W. 198, 199, 163 Mich. 353.

A depositor in a savings bank formed a fixed purpose of giving the deposit to her brother, and that the deposit should at once become his property. She had lost her bank book, and delivered to her brother an order on the bank, directing it to pay the entire deposit to him. At the time of the delivery of the order to him, she stated that she gave him the deposit "subject to her use of the same" for life. Held to show an intention to make an absolute gift; the word "use" as applied to the use of money being the profit derived therefrom. Candee v. Connecticut Sav. Bank, 71 Atl. 551, 552, 81 Conn. 372, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568.

The word "use," in a testamentary disposition of property to be held "in trust for the use of the preacher, or preachers, who shall hereafter serve Zoar Church, * * * and for no other purpose," is not to be given such a limited meaning as will require an occupancy of the land as a parsonage but will be given a general significance so as to permit the enjoyment of the property irrespective of actual occupancy. White v. Britton, 56 S. E. 232, 234, 75 S. C. 428.

The requirement of the California Codes that an applicant for the purchase of school lands must state that it is for his own "use and benefit" does not mean that the applicant must go into possession and occupy the land personally and devote it to the use of which it is capable, but simply means that, when one makes application to purchase, he does so with the intention and purpose of deriving whatever profit and advantage may accrue through the purchase for himself alone, as contradistinguished from a purchase for the benefit or advantage of some other person, and, as an element of the benefit, he may properly have in contemplation the sale of land at a profit some time after he has obtained his certificate of purchase. Henshall v. Marsh, 90 Pac. 693, 697, 151 Cal. 289.

Where a will created a trust fund giving the dividends, rents, and profits of trust property to testator's widow for life, and on her death the corpus to certain remaindermen, in ascertaining the rights of the wife under the trust, the phrase "dividends, rents, and profits" will be treated as synonymous with "use and income." Boardman v. Boardman, 62 Atl. 339, 342, 78 Conn. 451, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779.

As destruction

In a statute relating to prize money, where the "use of the vessel has been appropriated to the United States," the term "use of the vessel" does not mean the destruction of the vessel to prevent its recapture, and, where captors of a vessel destroy it to prevent recapture, they are not entitled to prize money. The Santo Domingo, 119 Fed. 386, 390.

As employ

One contracting to pay a reasonable compensation for the use of another's drilling tools to repair a gas well is liable to pay a reasonable compensation for the time he has possession and use of the tools, and his liability is not limited to days of actual service; the word "use" applying to one's service, employment, or conversion to some purpose. Independent Torpedo Co. v. J. E. Clark Oil Co., 95 N. E. 592, 593, 48 Ind. App. 124 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7226, 7227).

In the Standard Dictionary the word "use" is defined as: "The act of using; employment, as of means or material for a purpose; application to an end, particularly a good or useful end; as, the use of steam in navigation." Webster defines it as: "The act of employing anything or applying it to one's service; application, employment, conversion to some purpose; as, the use of a pen in writing." Thus the mere possession by one whose business it was to fill siphons with aerated water for dealers, of a box of siphons found near the filling machine, but not shown to have been filled by him, was not a "use" of such siphons, within Laws 1896, p. 998, c. 933, § 3, providing that the "use" of a bottle, siphon, etc., by any person, other than the one whose name or mark shall be thereon, without the latter's consent, shall be presumptive evidence of unlawful "use." People v. Sommer, 106 N. Y. Supp. 190, 191, 55 Misc. Rep. 55.

Under a statute providing that the bill of exceptions "used" on the hearing of a motion for a new trial shall constitute a part of the record on appeal, a bill of exceptions settled and employed as the record of the proceedings upon which the motion was grounded may be considered. Boin v. Spreckels Sugar Co., 102 Pac. 937, 939, 155 Cal. 612 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 30 Pac. 887, 17 Nev. 259). See, also, Kelly v. Ning Yung Ben. Ass'n, 72 Pac. 148, 149, 138 Cal. 602.

As intentional use

Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2370 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2268), makes it a felony to use any instrument with intent to procure the miscarriage of a pregnant woman. Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2045 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 1948), makes all persons concerned in a crime, whether a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act or aid therein, though not present, principals. Held, that to "advise" and "procure" a pregnant woman to use an instrument, with intent by accused to cause her miscarriage, constitutes a "use" of the instrument in violation of section 2370. Greenwood v. State, 105 Pac. 371, 372, 3 Okl. Cr. 247.

Where the owners of a dumping scow placed a man in sole charge with power to dump her load, and he, becoming unnecessarily alarmed at the roughness of the sea while being towed to the dumping grounds, dumped a part of her load into the waters of a harbor, in violation of act March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 13, 30 Stat. 1152, the scow is subject to the penalty imposed by section 16 of the act, although the action of the scowman was contrary to the orders of the owner; but the towing tug, although the property of the same owner, where the master had no reason to anticipate the violation of the statute, cannot be said to have been "used or employed" in such violation, and is not subject to the penalty therefor. The Scow No. 9, 152 Fed. 548, 551 (citing The Emperor, 49 Fed. 751).

Where the person placed in charge of a scow by the owner, for the purpose of dumping her load, in the business in which she was "used," and in which the owner was engaged, discharged such load into the waters of a harbor, in violation of Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 13, 30 Stat. 1152, such act was in a sense within the scope of his employment, although contrary to the owner's general instructions, and the scow was "used" for the unlawful purpose, within the meaning of section 16 of the act, and subject to the penalty thereby imposed. The Scow No. 36, 144 Fed. 932, 935, 75 C. C. A. 572.

Condemn use in fee simple

Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 23, § 366, as amended by Acts 1908, c. 240, empowering certain corporations to acquire by condemnation any property right whatsoever necessary for its purpose in its discretion, "either in fee simple or the use thereof in fee simple or for a less estate," etc., a corporation organized for the transmission of electrical power may take both a fee simple in property desired and also an easement to cut and trim trees which may interfere with its use of the land. Webster v. Susquehanna Pole Line Co. of Harford County, 76 Atl. 254, 260, 112 Md. 416, 21 Ann. Cas. 357.

As keep

The "using" of a building for a certain purpose, and the "keeping" of a building for such purpose, are almost synonymous terms. While it may not necessarily follow that, because a building is kept for an unlawful purpose, it is actually being used for such purpose, yet a building which is being used for an unlawful purpose is being kept for such purpose. Laws 1903, p. 153, c. 12, § 7, punishing every person who lets any building, knowing that it is intended to be used for an unlawful purpose, means that, when a person lets any building to be used for an unlawful purpose, he lets it to be kept for such purpose. Oligschlager v. Territory, 79 Pac. 913, 914, 15 Okl. 141.

As occupied

Rev. Laws, c. 104, § 1, authorizing certain cities, for the prevention of fire, to regulate the inspection, materials, construction, alteration, and use of buildings, does not authorize an ordinance prohibiting reshingling of a roof; the word "use" indicating the purpose for which the building may be occupied. Commonwealth v. Hayden, 97 N. E. 783, 784, 211 Mass. 296.

Title conveyed

Testator directed his executors to hold his real estate until a designated date and then divide it into shares, and he gave a share to his son. By a codicil he declared that the devise to the son should be for his sole "use" independent of his wife, and that, on his death without issue living at the time of his death, the devise should go to others. Held, that the son acquired only a life estate; the word "use" meaning the transfer of an interest in land for life. Love v. Walker, 115 Pac. 296, 301, 59 Or. 95 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7228).

A will whereby testator gave to his wife all his personal property, with a restriction that so much thereof as consisted of "monies, notes, mortgages, bonds, and similar valuables" she should have the use of for life, and after her death the same should go to others, and whereby he devised all his real estate to the wife under the same restrictions, with the right to dispose thereof and invest the proceeds, etc., vested a life estate in the wife in the restricted portion of the personalty and in the realty; the word "use" not imparting the power to destroy or consume, but only the right to enjoy. In re Moor's Estate, 128 N. W. 198, 199, 163 Mich. 353.

A gift of testator's real and personal property to his wife "to her own private use forever" and after her death the "balance" to his and her relatives, in equal shares, is a gift to the wife in fee simple; the word "use" implying more than a mere usufruct, and the word "balance" meaning what remains or is left over. Brohm v. Berner (N. J.) 77 Atl. 517.

The word "use," according to its ancient definition, included every form of beneficial or equitable estate; there being no more all-embracing term for any estate less than legal. When used, however, in a will bequeathing the residue of testator's estate to the "maintenance and use" of testator's two sons, it was not restricted in meaning either in itself or by its association with the word "maintenance," but should be construed to evidence testator's intention to give to the sons the entire income of the property. In re Scharmann, 118 N. Y. Supp. 687, 688, 63 Misc. Rep. 640.

A devise of the "use" of land for life creates a life estate. Little v. Colman, 66 Atl. 483, 484, 74 N. H. 215.

4 Wds. & P. 2d Ser.—70

Webster defines "to use" among other definitions as "to make use of; to convert to one's service; to avail oneself of; to put to a purpose." Where testator gave his wife all his property to be used by her according to her desire, any remaining property on her death to be divided among brothers and sisters, the wife took a life estate with a power of sale of any or all property and the right "to use" the proceeds as she might desire. McGuire v. Gallagher, 59 Atl. 445, 99 Me. 334.

A deed described the land by metes and bounds and referred to it as "being the triangular piece * * * lying between the lines of the old street and the proposed improvement as laid down on said map together with the use of such portion of land in front of said triangle as was lately included in T. avenue, as formerly laid." At the time of the execution of the deed the grantee owned as a homestead land on T. street, and the grantor owned land directly opposite. A proposed change in the street would leave a triangle on the side owned by the grantor between the line of the new street and the line of the old street. At the time of the execution of the deed, the old street was in use. Held, that the grantor conveyed the fee of the triangle and the land in front of it between the triangle and the land of the grantee; the word "use" meaning entire, exclusive, complete, or any other comprehensive word expressing all of the purposes to which land can be put. Blauvelt v. Passaic Water Co., 72 Atl. 1091, 1093, 75 N. J. Eq. 351.

The power given by law to a devisee to "use" the principal means the "power to consume," and the power to consume real estate necessarily includes the power to convey. Kennedy v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co., 65 Atl. 1102, 1103, 216 Pa. 575.

The words "use and benefit" are words of wide application, and mean the entire beneficial interest in the property in question. Roberts v. Lynn Ice Co., 73 N. E. 523, 524, 187 Mass. 402 (citing Smith v. Harrington [Mass.] 4 Allen, 566; Paine v. Forsaith, 30 Atl. 11, 86 Me. 357; Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345; Heaston v. Board of Com'rs of Randolph County, 20 Ind. 898, 403).

As used in a will by which testatrix bequeathed to her husband the "use and benefit" of all her property, with full power to use and transfer the same as if it belonged to him in fee, the succeeding paragraph declaring that on the death of her husband she gave the remainder to her daughter and two children, the words "use and benefit" had reference to a qualified estate, rather than an absolute estate in fee, and the husband acquired a life estate under the will only, with an added power of disposition, and the property remaining after his death passed to testatrix's daughter and her children, as provided. Pool v. Napier, 124 N. W. 755, 756, 145 Iowa, 699.

The phrase "use and benefit," as used in a devise for one's use and benefit, is appropriate in creating a life estate, but not in the creation of an absolute estate. Fuller v. Wilbur, 49 N. E. 916, 917, 170 Mass. 506.

Where testator's will devised to his wife all his real and personal property for life to use and dispose of according to her best judgment, and the third paragraph provided that, after her death, all of the described property should be equally divided among the testator's children or their heirs forever, the wife took only a life estate subject to remainder in fee in the children; the expression "use and dispose of" not adding anything to her estate, and at most merely authorizing her to dispose of her life estate. Hovely v. Herrick, 139 N. W. 384, 385, 152 Wis. 11.

Use of check

Where defendant sent plaintiff a check for less than the amount claimed in satisfaction, directing plaintiff not to use the check unless he accepted it in full settlement, and plaintiff, while refusing to accept the check in settlement, had it certified and retained possession, such certification amounted to "use" of the check, since by certification the drawer was relieved from liability, and the bank became the debtor of the holder. Scheffenacker v. Hoopes, 77 Atl. 130, 133, 113 Md. 111, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 205.

Use of church

Gift to use of church, see Gift to Church.

Use as a dwelling house

We may "use" a building, or the building may be "used" by us. So we may "use" no buildings other than dwelling houses, or no buildings other than dwelling houses may be used by us. No rule of grammar is violated by either form of expression. A restriction in a deed that "no buildings other than dwelling houses," with the usual outbuildings appertaining thereto, "shall be erected, placed, and used upon the said land" is not violated where the house is occupied by defendants as their home, and they sleep, eat, and live there, and have no other home or place of residence, though one room in the house has been fitted up as an operating room, and the house is also used as a hospital, for surgical and medical cases, and as a lying-in hospital, for which defendants have been duly licensed. Carr v. Riley, 84 N. E. 426, 427, 198 Mass. 70.

Use of engine

An engine which was employed in filling a silo for several days was being "used," within the meaning of a policy forbidding the use of an engine near the barn, since its use was as permanent as the character of the work required. Wilson v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 55 Atl. 662, 664, 75 Vt. 320.

Use as evidence

See For Use as Evidence.

Use of franchise

Where a corporation was authorized to acquire property, appropriate and distribute water, construct canals, and establish, collect, and receive rates, water rents, and tolls, and was authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, the actual exercise of such powers by the construction of canals in a county other than that in which the corporation's principal place of business was located, constituted the "use" of a franchise by the corporation in such county which was there subject to taxation. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Merced County, 84 Pac. 285, 288, 2 Cal. App. 593.

Use of land

See Value of Use of Land.

Use liquor

The word "used," in a question in an application for life insurance, "Have you ever used spirits, wine, or malt liquors to excess?" does not imply an occasional indulgence in strong drink; it means to be accustomed; to make a practice of. It is a word which is synonymous with custom or habit or habitual indulgence. A negative answer to the question does not constitute a misrepresentation or false statement which will avoid the policy issued thereon merely because it is shown that the insured had sometimes, but not habitually, drank to excess. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Exchange Bank of Macon, 126 Fed. 360, 361, 61 C. C. A. 310.

The word "use" in a question to an applicant for life insurance, "Do you use liquors?" means habit, practice, or custom, and a negative answer was not false because the applicant had drunk liquor, however slight the use. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California v. Terry, 84 S. W. 656, 657, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 486 (citing Cent. Dict.; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Liddell, 74 S. W. 87, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 252; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Simpson (Tex.) 28 S. W. 837; Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Trefz, 104 U. S. 203, 26 L. Ed. 708; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co., 5 Sup. Ct. 119, 112 U. Co. of California*, 36 South. 595, 112 La. 574, 66 L. R. A. 322; May, Ins. pp. 379, 637, and 638; Stand. Dict.; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Relf, 36 Ohio St. 596, 38 Am. Rep. 613; Chambers v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 67 N. W. 367, 64 Minn. 495, 58 Am. St. Rep. 549); Brignac v. Pacific Mut. Life

Ins. Co. of California, 36 South. 595, 596, 112 La. 574, 66 L. R. A. 322.

Where a by-law of a mutual benefit society provided that it should be relieved from liability in case the member became intemperate in the use of intoxicating liquors, or his death should result from his intemperate use thereof, the words "intemperate use" should be construed as equivalent to habitual intemperance in such use, but the word "use" employed in the sentence relieving the company from liability in case of death resulting from the intemperate use of such liquors was not employed with reference to a fixed habit, but should be construed to mean the means only by which death was caused, so that where insured died as the result of a fall, which was directly caused by his intoxicated condition, the society was not liable without regard to whether insured had acquired a fixed habit of intoxication. Ury v. Modern Woodmen of America, 127 N. W. 665, 666, 149 Iowa, 706.

Use of the mails

See Fraudulent Use of the Mails.

Use of public funds

That the Legislature, in providing a fund and authorizing its "use" for declared purposes and constituting the incumbent of the office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction the paymaster authorized to disburse from the fund for certain duties for which he was allowed to employ clerical assistants, did not thereby constitute the officer the owner of the fund. The right of use conferred was the right to disburse in payment for such service germane to the duties of the office. State v. Stockwell, 134 N. W. 767, 769, 23 N. D. 701.

Use as public highway

"Use as a highway," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663, creating a highway by 20 years' user, contemplates a continuous use of the way as a public road which every citizen has a right to use for travel; and though the way need not be kept in repair, or accepted by the public authorities, the use by the public must be under a claim of right, either with the landowner's consent or over his objection. Pister v. McCreery, 88 N. E. 303, 304, 307, 172 Ind. 613, transferred from Appellate Court, 86 N. E. 980 (citing Board of Com'rs of Shelby County v. Castetter, 33 N. E. 986, 34 N. E. 687, 7 Ind. App. 309; Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 455, 458, 13 Am. Rep. 309; Morse v. Sweeney, 15 Ill. App. 486, 492; Starr v. Camden A. R. Co., 24 N. J. Law, 592, 597; *Arkansas River Packet Co. v. E. 54, 142 Mass. 324).

The moving of a building along a highway, when permission is obtained from the proper authorities, is a "use of the highway," within Pub. St. 1882, c. 109, § 17, providing for the necessary cutting, disconnecting, or removing of electric wires in the necessary use of streets. Richards Building Moving Co. v. Boston Electric Light Co., 74 N. E. 350, 351, 188 Mass. 265.

Use of railroad

A "bona fide claimant," within section 3376 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing a penalty for demanding and receiving on sale of a ticket a greater sum for the transportation of the passenger than that allowed by law, is one claiming in good faith. "Using" the road of such company implies an intention to use it. It does not imply a contract personally to use it. Pennsylvania Co. v. O'Connell, 95 N. E. 773, 774, 84 Ohio St. 218, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 540.

Code, § 2071, makes every railroad company liable for damages to employés by the mismanagement of the engineers or other employés, when such wrongs are in any manner connected with the use and operation of any railway about which they shall be employed. Plaintiff was a machinist's helper in the machine shop of defendant railroad company where engines were brought for repairs, his duty being to block the wheels of an engine when placed over the draw pit in the shop and to remove such blocks when the engine was to be moved. After one set of wheels had been put on an engine and it was about to be moved by another engine, in order to put on the second pair of drivers, plaintiff attempted to brush a chock from under the wheel of the dead engine, when the other engine started without warning and crushed his hand. The operating department of the railroad had no control over the machine shops, which were used only for repairing disabled equipment which had been withdrawn from service, and not merely for temporary repairs and cleaning, as were the roundhouses. Held, that the statute referred to the physical "use and operation" of the railroad in transportation, and the rails on the shop floor did not constitute a "railway," nor was the movement of the repaired engine by the other engine done in the "use and operation" of the railway, within the meaning of the statute, so that the company was not liable for the negligence of the engineer in starting the live engine. Slaats v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 63,

Use of street

See Customary Use of Street.

The term "use" in an ordinance, regulating the use of the streets of a city by persons who use vehicles thereon, and requiring the payment of certain license fees therefor, has reference to a continued or repeated practice; and the ordinance applies to all who, in such sense, use the vehicles described, and includes nonresidents as well as residents of the municipality. Linton v. City of Columbus, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 390.

Laws 1880, p. 255, c. 221, authorized the formation of corporations for the building and operating by animal power of railways in villages and towns, but not in cities, and by various acts the powers of rural railways were enlarged, all the acts requiring the consent of the local governing body before tracks could be laid in streets. Laws 1897, p. 290, c. 175 (St. 1898, § 1863a), prohibits the condemnation of streets or alleys in cities. Laws 1899, p. 537, c. 306, amending the former laws, extended the right to villages, and Laws 1901, p. 686, c. 465, amending St. 1898, § 1863, now embodied in Sanb. St. Supp. 1906, § 1863a, provided that all the statutes relating to the exercise of eminent domain by railways should apply to street railroads, but nothing therein should apply to any street, alley, etc., in any city or village, unless the use of the street, etc., should first be granted to the street railway by a franchise duly passed by the board of trustees or council of such village or city. Petitioner sought to condemn the streets of a city for the purpose of operating an interurban street railway therein, but had never secured the consent of the city to use the streets for interurban purposes. Held, upon consideration of the statutes and the history of the legislation, which always required the consent of a city to the use of the streets for the purpose for which they were used, that "the use of the street," required by section 1863a, was the use of the streets for interurban purposes only, and the fact that the use of the streets had been granted petitioner for local street railway purposes was not sufficient within the statute, and since petitioner had never secured the use of the streets for interurban purposes, the condemnation proceedings were properly dismissed. Beloit, D. L. & J. Ry. Co. v. Macloon, 110 N. W. 897, 900, 136 Wis. 218.

Use tracks

General Railroad Law N. Y. (Laws 1892, c. 676) § 98, requiring a street railroad company, "so long as it shall continue to 'use' any of its tracks in any street," to pave between such tracks, etc., applies to tracks maintained by a company under claim of right, although not actually used by it, or used only to a small extent. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City Ry. Co., 191 Fed. 216, 224.

Use weights

Revisal 1905, §§ 3063, 3067, 3073, relating to weights and measures, requiring every person "using" weights and measures to permit the standard keeper to adjust the same, and providing that every person "using, buying, or selling by weights and measures," who shall neglect to comply with the act, shall forfeit a specified sum, do not, when considered in the light of the history of legislation on the subject, impose a penalty for the refusal to permit the standard keeper to adjust scales used by a railroad company in weighing freight for shipment; the words "buying and selling" limiting the word "using." Nance v. Southern Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 116, 118, 119, 120, 121, 149 N. C. 366.

Use of wharf

"Use of a wharf," as used in Stat. Me. c. 93, § 7 (Laws 1889, p. 255, c. 287), providing that all domestic vessels shall be subject to a lien for use of a wharf, means "wharfage," which has been regarded as among the usual and necessary port charges of the vessel. Wharfage is the use of a wharf furnished in the ordinary course of navigation, and a contract relating to wharfage, as understood in the laws and usages of maritime affairs, is a maritime contract. It does not, however, include a claim for rent of a wharf under a lease which continues to accrue during the absence of the vessel. The James T. Furber, 129 Fed. 808, 810.

Used for charitable purposes

Under P. S. 496, exempting from taxation property "used" for charitable uses, the Masonic Temple of the Grand Lodge of Masons authorized, by Acts 1896, No. 259, to take and hold property for a site for a temple, and to erect a building thereon for the benefit of the masonic fraternity, is not exempt from taxation where the entire building is let to tenants who pay rent to the Grand Lodge which has no intention to ever use the building itself or any part of it directly and immediately for charitable uses, but which merely intends to use the net income from the rent for such use at some uncertain future time, since the word "used" means the direct and immediate use of the property itself, and not the remote and consequential benefit derived from its use. Grand Lodge of Masons v. City of Burlington, 78 Atl. 973, 975, 84 Vt. 202.

Used for railroad purposes

Pub. Laws 1888, p. 269, exempts all "property used for railroad purposes" from local taxation. Held that, ordinarily where a company has not completed its road and is engaged in the work of construction, the exempted words of the statute must be extended to property within the right of way not actually used for other purposes during such work of construction. In re New York Bay R. Co., 66 Atl. 916, 917, 75 N. J. Law, 111.

The expression "property used for railroad and canal purposes" is, upon the question of its valuation under subdivision 2, § 3, Act March 27, 1888, for the taxation of railroad and canal property, the precise equivalent of "property to which a value is imparted by its use under a railroad or canal franchise." Long Dock Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 73 Atl. 53, 55, 78 N. J. Law, 44.

Property taxed under P. L. 1888, p. 269 (Gen. St. p. 3324, § 239), was a ferry house, being part of a railroad terminal at tide water, in connection with which the companies had established a ferry under the authority of Revision P. L. 1903, p. 646, Gen. St. p. 2647, § 40. Held, that so far as the lands and buildings were necessary for the purposes of the terminal, and not actually used for other purposes, they were property "used for railroad purposes," and only taxable by the state board. In re United New Jersey R. & Canal Co., 68 Atl. 167, 168, 75 N. J. Law, 334.

On an issue as to whether certain pieces of property in Jersey City belonging to the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey were "used for railroad purposes," so as to render them assessable by the state board of assessors under the act of March 27, 1888 (Gen. St. p. 3324), the following property was held to be used for railroad purposes: A plot of land which was occupied exclusively by the Pullman Parlor Car Company for storing ice and other articles used by that company in connection with its cars which were hauled over the lines of the railroad for the transportation of the passengers of the railroad who chose to ride in parlor cars, though the railroad derived no profit from the use of the property other than the accommodation afforded to its passengers; a trestle used exclusively by the railroad for the delivery of coal to a coal company, the coal being dumped directly from the cars into holds of vessels lying at the wharf, the coal company having an office on the wharf for the transaction of its business at that point; land partly occupied by railroad tracks and which it was intended should be entirely so occupied in the near future; a plot of ground lying in the terminal yard of the company, running through which were certain tracks used for cars transporting structural iron for a construction company, the open ground adjoining the tracks being used by such construction company for unloading the iron brought in and assorting it for reshipment on the cars of the railroad. In re Central Railroad of New Jersey, 59 Atl. 1062, 1064, 72 N. J. Law, 86.

Used for sale of intoxicating liquor

Under the statute declaring it a misdemeanor for any person owning, using or controlling a house of any kind to sell or give away liquor by such device as is known as "the blind tiger," or by any other name or device, the "use" or control of the house need not be habitual or permanent in order to constitute the offense defined by the statute; but it is sufficient if it be used or controlled by defendant at the time of the illegal sale of liquor therein. Henry v. State, 92 S. W. 405, 77 Ark. 453.

Used in construction

Explosives employed in blasting rock in grading and tunneling for a railroad are "used" in or about its construction, within the meaning of the Mechanic's Lien Law (Acts 1883, p. 296, c. 220), as amended by Acts 1891, p. 215, c. 98. Hercules Powder Co. v. Knoxville, L. & J. R. Co., 83 S. W. 354, 357, 113 Tenn. 382, 67 L. R. A. 487, 106 Am. St. Rep. 836 (citing Basshor v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 3 Atl. 285, 65 Md. 99).

Under Mechanic's Lien Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 82) §§ 1, 7, 21, giving a contractor a lien for the amount due him for material, fixtures, apparatus, machinery, services, or labor, providing that no lien for material shall be defeated for want of proof that the material after the delivery actually entered into the construction of the building, though it be not shown that such material was actually "used in the construction of such building or improvement," and giving subcontractors liens for materials, a subcontractor of the original contractor to construct a brick and reinforced concrete building is not entitled to a lien for lumber furnished for false work, and subsequently removed; the quoted words referring to material used as a part of the construction, so as to become a part of the completed structure. Rittenhouse & Embree Co. v. F. E. Brown & Co., 98 N. E. 971, 972, 254 Ill. 549.

While food furnished a railroad contractor for his workmen may be said to be "used" in the construction of the road on which they work, it is only so in a remote and consequential way or sense, and will not give the furnisher a mechanics' lien thereon. Groceries and food furnished for workmen, while in a sense used in the construction of the road, are not materials which so enter into its construction that a lien can be based on them. S. B. Luttrell & Co. v. Knoxville, L. & J. R. Co., 105 S. W. 565, 572, 119 Tenn. 492 (citing Giant Powder Co. v. Oregon Pacific Ry. Co., 42 Fed. 474, 8 L. R. A. 700; Elliott, R. R. § 1068).

Used in interstate commerce

Under the safety appliance act of March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 2, 27 Stat. 531, which makes it unlawful for any railroad company engaged in interstate commerce to haul or permit to be hauled or used on its lines, any car used in moving interstate traffic, not equipped with couplers coupling automatically by impact, as amended by Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, § 1, 32 Stat. 943, which provides that the provisions of the original and amendatory acts relating to couplers, etc., shall be held to apply to all cars used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, a car with a defective coupler, billed for the repair shop, but which was not sent there but was left on a track in ordinary use in a switchyard, to be repaired by the switchmen and then coupled to other cars, was being "used," within the meaning of the statute. Erie R. Co. v. Russell, 183 Fed. 722, 724, 106 C. C. A. 160.

The word "used," in Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, requiring common carriers to equip any car used in moving interstate traffic with automatic couplers, applies to all cars and trains operated by a railroad carrier of interstate commerce over an interstate highway, irrespective of whether they are operated between points situated in the same state, or whether they are empty, or whether the traffic carried is interstate traffic. Wabash R. Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 1, 3, 93 C. C. A. 393.

A freight car loaded with interstate freight, and placed on a side track in the railway yard at destination, to await simple repairs to the automatic coupler, is "used in moving interstate commerce," within the meaning of Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, 27 Stat. 531, when a coupling with another car is thereafter attempted by the carrier's order, during the course of switching operations. Delk v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 617, 620, 220 U. S. 580, 55 L. Ed. 590.

A car loaded with coal, to be delivered to a consignee in another state, is "used in moving interstate traffic," within the meaning of Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 2, 27 Stat. 531, by the railroad company which takes it from the place of loading, although such company only undertakes to deliver it to a connecting carrier within the same state. United States v. Southern Ry. Co., 135 Fed. 122, 126.

The phrase "used in moving interstate traffic" does not mean that a car must be actually loaded and on its journey from one state to another in order to be within the provisions of the act, but only that it has been, and is intended to be, so used whenever required, and it is a violation of the act to move such a car not equipped with automatic couplers from one state to another as a part of a train, although it is empty at the time; nor is the mere fact that it is destined to a repair shop a defense. United States v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 154 Fed. 516, 518.

A car used in intrastate commerce only, though moved in a train containing a car bearing interstate traffic, was not "used in connection therewith," where they were in different parts of the train and not in position to be coupled or uncoupled. United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 166 Fed. 997, 999.

The federal safety appliance act applies to a defective car or engine used in moving a box car from one switch track to another in defendant's yards, when the purpose of moving such car is to load it with merchandise for shipment into another state. The act does not apply to cars which, though standing on the tracks of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, were not being used in such commerce; and where, after an interstate carriage a car is unloaded, it ordinarily ceases to be used in interstate commerce, as where it is used in intrastate traffic, or remains idle, awaiting repairs or such future use as may afterwards be determined; but where, after an interstate carriage, it is to return empty to the state from which it came, it is within the act throughout the trip, including the time between the unloading and the beginning of the return trip. A defective car, which is being hauled in a train that contains cars that are being used in moving interstate commerce, is within the act, though the defective car is not itself being "used in interstate commerce." Bresky v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 132 N. W. 337, 338, 115 Minn. 386.

USE AND OCCUPATION

See Action for Use and Occupation.

USEFUL

The utility intended by Rev. St. § 4929, authorizing the granting of a patent for any new, "useful," and original shape or configuration of any article of manufacture, is artistic, and not practical. What is meant is that the design shall constitute something which is artistically worth the while, and is not frivolous or hurtful. Williams Calk Co. v. Neverslip Mfg. Co., 136 Fed. 210, 215.

Proper synonymous

As used in the rule of the Circuit Court of Appeals, providing that, whenever it shall be necessary or "proper," in the opinion of the presiding judge, that original papers should be inspected in the court upon writ of error or appeal, the presiding judge may make such order for the safe-keeping and return of such original papers, as to him may seem "proper," etc., the word "proper" is equivalent to the word "useful" or the word "aidful." The rule fixes the limit within which the presiding judge may act in such matter, and he is not authorized to make an order for incorporating original papers introduced in evidence in the record, instead of copies, merely for the purpose of saving expense, nor unless in his opinion an inspection of the originals, as distinguished from authenticated copies, is either necessary or would be useful or aidful in the determination of the appeal. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Brennan & Co., 156 Fed. 213, 215.

USEFUL DESIGN

The term "useful," in relation to designs means adaptation to producing pleasant emotions. There must be originality and beauty. Mere mechanical skill is not sufficient. Roberts v. Bennett, 136 Fed. 193, 195, 69 C. C. A. 533 (citing Rowe v. Blodgett & Clapp Co., 103 Fed. 873; Bevin Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Starr Bros. Bell Co., 114 Fed. 362; Eaton v. Lewis, 115 Fed. 635; Id., 127 Fed. 1018, 61 C. C. A. 562). See, also, H. S. Earle Mfg. Co. v. Clark & Parsons Co., 154 Fed. 851, 852 (citing Gorham Mfg. Co. v. White, 14 Wall. 511, 20 L. Ed. 731; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Triumph Electric Co., 97 Fed. 101, 38 C. C. A. 65; Rowe v. Blodgett & Clapp Co., 112 Fed. 61, 50 C. C. A. 120; and Walker, Pat. [4th Ed.] § 375).

USEFUL ENTERPRISE

The business of conducting public billiard halls and poolrooms is not a "useful enterprise" within the rule that a municipality cannot say who shall exercise the right of engaging in a lawful business having no injurious tendency; and an ordinance authorizing the licensing of poolrooms is valid. Goytino v. McAleer, 103 Pac. 174, 10 Cal. App. 683.

USEFULNESS

See Reasonable State of Usefulness.

USELESS

Highway Law, Laws 1890, p. 1193, c. 568, § 84, authorizing the discontinuance of a highway as "useless," means "practically useless," and not "absolutely useless," since the term "useless" is seldom employed in its absolute sense. In re Trask, 92 N. Y. Supp. 156, 157, 45 Misc. Rep. 244.

Under the statute providing that a highway may be discontinued when a majority of the commissioners shall determine that it is "useless," a highway should be discontinued as useless where it is substantially abandoned by the general public, or where some other highway will better accommodate the public. In re Howland, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1122, 1123.

USER

See Nonuser.

Dedication presumed from user, see Dedication.

USING FOR HIRE

As used in an ordinance providing for the payment of a license by owners of vehicles used or let for hire, the term "using for hire" was intended to apply to cases where persons, the hirers, did not take temporary possession, but where the owners handled the wagon and team for pay. Sweetman v. City of Covington (Ky.) 82 S. W. 386.

USING MAILS TO DEFRAUD

See Defraud; Fraudulent Use of the Mails; Scheme.

USUAL

See Unusual.

In prosecutions for homicide, in charging as to the presumption that persons intend the ordinary results of their acts, the words "necessary," "probable," "usual," and "ordinary" are substantially synonymous. Beauregard v. State, 131 N. W. 347, 351, 146 Wis. 280.

Reining or driving a runaway horse is not driving in the "usual and customary" manner. Williams v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co., 93 Pac. 122, 129, 6 Cal. App. 715.

USUAL ABODE

See House of Usual Abode.

USUAL AND ORDINARY CARE

The words "usual and ordinary care," in connection with an extrahazardous business, such as conducting an electric light company, mean nothing more or less than that, if there be great danger and hazard, there should be a corresponding degree of skill and attention required by law. Bourke v. Butte Electric & Power Co., 83 Pac. 470, 474, 33 Mont. 267.

USUAL BUSINESS OFFICE

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 8092 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3843), providing that in suits against mutual companies process shall be served on the president, secretary, or chief officer in charge of the "principal office" of such company, a return of service, reciting that it was served on the secretary of the company, he being in said defendant's "usual business office" and in charge thereof, is insufficient to confer jurisdiction, since it does not show that such office was the company's principal office. Thomasson v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 116 S. W. 1092, 1094, 217 Mo. 485; Wiccarver v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 117 S. W. 698, 700, 137 Mo. App. 247.

USUAL CHARGE

Insurance is a "usual charge," within the terms of a joint adventure contract providing that, in ascertaining net profits, "taxes on the capital employed and other charges as usual" were to be made. Stone v. Wright Wire Co., 85 N. E. 471, 473, 199 Mass. 306.

USUAL COURSE OF BUSINESS

Commercial paper may be said to be received in the "usual course of business" when it is indorsed and delivered for value under such circumstances that a business man of ordinary intelligence and capacity would give his money, goods, or credit for it, when offered for the purpose for which it is transferred; and it would not be in due course, if he should at once suspect the integrity of the paper itself, or the credit and standing of the party offering it. Matlock v. Scheuer- man, 93 Pac. 823, 826, 51 Or. 49, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747.

The expression "usual course of business," as one of limitation upon the powers of a corporation, is generally referable to the activities of a going concern and has little, if any, application to one which is upon the threshold of liquidation because of insolvency. In the latter condition, the managing officers, with the approval of the shareholders, may make any fair and equitable disposition of the assets which, not being in violation of any provision of law, will insure the payment of all debts and is reasonably calculated to preserve the largest equity for the shareholders. George v. Wallace, 135 Fed. 286, 295, 101 C. C. A. 662.

The transferring of goods into the name of an insolvent's broker, falsely stating that they are his, and selling them as his, when they are not, is not a "sale in the usual course of business" of the true owner. Jaquith v. Davenport, 84 N. E. 125, 127, 197 Mass. 397.

USUAL DOMESTIC REMEDIES

According to the New York Pharmacy Act, the term "usual domestic remedies" means medicines, a knowledge of the properties of which and dose has been acquired from common use, and includes only such remedies as may be safely employed without the advice of a physician. An unlicensed person, charged and proved to have received money for recommending a certain substance as a cure for disease, cannot exculpate himself by showing that the substance he recommended was a domestic medicine, in the sense that it was a well-known remedy, the effect of which was a matter of common knowledge. State v. Huff, 90 Pac. 279, 283, 75 Kan. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

USUAL FORM

The term "short form," as used in Acts 1898, p. 92, in referring to the "short form" of bills of exceptions in that act, as contrasted with bringing up the case "in the usual form," refers to excepting to the judgment, decree, or verdict, segregating a certain ruling, assigning error on it, and bringing it up as a necessarily controlling ruling in the brief mode set out in the statute. The "usual form" referred to means some form or methods for bringing cases to the reviewing court, which were usual before the enactment of the statute. Lyndon v. Georgia R. & Electric Co., 58 S. E. 1047-1050, 129 Ga. 353.

USUAL OUTBUILDINGS

A deed of property intended for an improved residence district contained a restriction, for the benefit of the grantor and his grantees, that "no buildings, other than dwelling houses * * * with the usual outbuildings appurtenant thereto," should be erected or used upon said land. Held that, construing the restriction with reference to the meaning of the language at the date of the deed, a garage or storehouse for automobiles was not of the kind described as the "usual outbuildings appurtenant thereto," and that its erection was a violation of the restriction. Riverbank Improvement Co. v. Bancroft, 95 N. E. 216, 218, 209 Mass. 217, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 450.

USUAL PLACE OF ABODE

See House of Usual Abode.

The term "usual place of abode," as used in statutes authorizing substituted service of summons on a defendant, means the place of residence of the defendant at the time of service. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. L'Heureux, 118 N. W. 565, 82 Neb. 692 (citing Blodgett v. Utley, 4 Neb. 25; Seymour v. Street, 5 Neb. 85; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 593, 23 L. Ed. 398; Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750; Ruby v. Pierce, 104 N. W. 1142, 74 Neb. 754); Berryhill v. Sepp, 119 N. W. 404, 405, 106 Minn. 458, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344 (citing and adopting State v. Toland, 15 S. E. 599, 600, 36 S. C. 515; Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182, 192; Walker v. Stevens, 72 N. W. 1038, 52 Neb. 653; Mygatt v. Coe, 44 Atl. 198, 199, 63 N. J. Law, 510; Ser v. Bobst, 8 Mo. 506, 507; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398; Madison County Bank v. Suman's Adm'r, 79 Mo. 527, 530; Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Norris, 63 N. W. 634, 61 Minn. 256).

One who had a plural wife went to England with her and resided and worked there for three years. During his absence in England, his other wife A. built a house in Salt Lake City with money furnished by him, and during his absence she lived therein. He never saw the house nor lived in it until after his return from England, during which time summons was attempted to be served on him by leaving a copy at such house with his wife A., on which judgment was rendered by default, concerning which he had no knowledge until he returned from England. Held, that such house was not plaintiff's "usual place of abode" within Comp. Laws 1907, § 2948, subd. 8, authorizing substituted service by leaving a copy of the process at the defendant's usual place of abode with a suitable person at least fourteen years of age; the term "place of abode" as so used being the place where defendant lives or abides, his "then present residence," and is not synonymous with "domicile." Grant v. Lawrence, 108 Pac. 931, 933, 37 Utah, 450, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 280.

The term "usual place of abode," as used in Gen. St. 1865, c. 164, § 13, providing that "In suits in * * * divorce * * * if the plaintiff or other person for him shall allege in his petition that part or all of the defendants are nonresidents of the state, or have absconded or absented themselves from their 'usual place of abode' in this state, etc., the clerk shall make an order or publication," etc., means and is used in the same sense as the word "residence" is used. In an action for divorce, a petition alleged "that defendant is a nonresident of this state, or that he has absconded or absented himself from his usual place of abode in this state so the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him." Held, that the allegations were sufficient to authorize an order for service of notice by publication. Hinkle v. Lovelace, 102 S. W. 1015, 1017, 204 Mo. 208, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 120 Am. St. Rep. 698, 11 Ann. Cas. 794.

As used in B. & C. Comp. §§ 55, 396, 400, subd. 2, providing that "the summons shall be served by delivery of a copy thereof * * * to the defendant personally or if he be not found, to some person of the family above the age of fourteen years at the dwelling house or usual place of abode of defendant," the terms "dwelling house" and "usual place of abode" are synonymous and evidently mean a domicile. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 73 Pac. 325, 328, 43 Or. 513.

USUAL PLACE OF RESIDENCE

The term "usual place of residence," as used in statutes authorizing substituted service of summons on a defendant, means the place of residence of the defendant at the time of service. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. L'Heureux, 118 N. W. 565, 82 Neb. 692 (citing Blodgett v. Utley, 4 Neb. 25; Seymour v. Street, 5 Neb. 85; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398; Cauehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750; Ruby v. Pierce, 104 N. W. 1142, 74 Neb. 754).

USUAL RESIDENCE

"'Usual residence' means customary; common." State v. Snyder, 82 S. W. 12, 27, 182 Mo. 462 (quoting State v. Washburn, 48 Mo. 240).

USUAL RISK

An insurance policy insuring a brig against "risks contained in all regular policies" of insurance, being an insurance against the "usual risks" was insurance against loss by capture. Levy v. Merrill, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 180, 186.

USUAL SHORT RATE

A fire insurance policy provided that the assured might cancel the policy when the premium or note or obligation given for such premium has been actually and fully paid in cash, in which case the company might retain the usual short rate from the date of the policy to the time of cancellation. A policy was issued for a term of five years; the premium being payable in five annual installments of $19 each, and the first installment being paid on the issuance of the policy. The usual rate for insurance for the term of one year was $28.50. Held, that insured was not entitled to cancel the policy at the termination of the first year without paying either the remaining installments or the rate for a one-year policy. The "usual short rate" referred to in the policy is the customary rate charged for insuring like property in a like amount for original short-term insurance. Home Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 128 S. W. 273, 274, 143 Mo. App. 237.

USUAL STOPPING PLACE

As used in St. 1898, § 1818, declaring that, if any passenger shall refuse to pay his fare, he may be ejected at any "usual stopping place," the words "usual stopping place" do not mean "station or passenger station," but rather a place reasonably safe for the discharge of passengers, and where they will not be exposed to unreasonable hazard. Hence the statute was satisfied by ejecting the passenger at a point where a large number of employes engaged in mills were received and discharged by defendant in going to and coming from a city; accessible dwelling houses being not more than 500 or 600 feet away, and a hotel within 60 rods, though there was no depot or ticket office at that point. Habeck v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 132 N. W. 618, 619, 146 Wis. 645, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 485.

USUALLY

In an action for injuries to a passenger, an instruction that plaintiff assumed the risks "ordinarily" incident to the coupling of the cars, instead of such risks as were "usually" incident thereto, was not objectionable; such words being regarded as synonymous. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Morrow (Tex.) 93 S. W. 162, 163.

USUALLY CULTIVATED OR IMPROVED

Code Civ. Proc. § 325, providing that adverse possession, not based on a written instrument, judgment, or decree, may be established by showing that the land was "usually cultivated or improved," means that the land should be cultivated or improved in the manner and to the extent usual in the case of similar property. Gray v. Walker, 108 Pac. 278, 279, 157 Cal. 381.

USUALLY LIABLE

Within the rule that the limit of municipal responsibility to dispose of surface waters and sewage is to provide for such storms as are usually liable to occur, the term "usually liable" excludes storms which are liable to occur, and so are within reasonable anticipation that they may or will occur, but only at long intervals. Geuder Paeschke & Frey Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 133 N. W. 835, 839, 147 Wis. 491.

USUALLY RESIDENT WITHIN

Inhabitant of, synonymous, see Inhabitantcy—Inhabitant.

USUCAPTION

"Usucaption," a term concerning the acquisition of title to land, relates purely to a question of law. Cooper v. Falk, 33 South. 567, 570, 109 La. 474.

USUFRUCT

The term "usufruct" signifies the right of enjoying a thing, the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. Schwartz v. Gerhardt, 75 Pac. 698, 699, 44 Or. 425 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

As used in Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2480, providing that, in all cases where the thing sold remains in the possession of the seller because he has reserved to himself the usufruct or retains possession by a precarious title, there is reason to presume that the sale is simulated, and, with respect to third persons, the parties must produce proof that they are acting in good faith and establish the reality of the sale, the word "usufruct" embraces the right of habitation or occupancy reserved by the vendor, and under which he retains possession of the thing sold. This retention of possession by reservation in the deed or by agreement with the vendee creates a prima facie presumption of fraud, since such possession is inconsistent with the nature of the contract of sale, transferring as it does the ownership and possession of the property. Radovich v. Jenkins, 48 South. 988, 989, 123 La. 355.

Civ. Code La. art. 533, defines a "usufruct" as the right of enjoying a thing the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profits, utilities, and advantages which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. It also declares that the obligation of not altering the substance of the thing takes place only in the case of a perfect usufruct. Article 534 declares money to be an imperfect usufruct, and by article 536 the ownership of such a usufruct is in the "usufructuary," who is entitled under article 556 to the possession and use of the usufruct, and to proceed by action against all persons who obtain possession and enjoyment thereof. Held, that the position of a "usufructuary" of money was unlike that of an executor or administrator, but like that of a legal owner. Benedict v. Clarke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 964, 965, 139 App. Div. 242.

USUFRUCTUARY

A person to whom, out of the revenues or an estate, a certain amount is to be paid monthly is not a "usufructuary." Succession of Ward, 34 South. 135, 136, 110 La. 75.

Civ. Code La. art. 533, defines a "usufruct" as the right of enjoying a thing the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profits, utilities, and advantages which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. It also declares that the obligation of not altering the substance of the thing takes place only in the case of a perfect usufruct. Article 534 declares money to be an imperfect usufruct, and by article 536 the ownership of such a usufruct is in the usufructuary, who is entitled under article 556 to the possession and use of the usufruct, and to proceed by action against all persons who obtain possession and enjoyment thereof. Held, that the position of a "usufructuary" of money was unlike that of an executor or administrator, but like that of a legal owner. Benedict v. Clarke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 964, 965, 139 App. Div. 242.

USURIOUS

See, also, Usury.

Place where usurious interest is taken as disorderly house, see Disorderly House.

To make a contract of loan "usurious" it must appear that, at the time the contract was entered into, the parties agreed that an unlawful rate of interest should be paid and received. In the absence of such understanding any subsequent conduct of the parties, however fraudulent, will not make the contract "usurious." Ardmore Loan & Trust Co. v. Dillard, 104 S. W. 814, 816, 7 Ind. T. 501.

Under Laws 1891, c. 4022, p. 51, § 2, defining usurious contracts and prescribing penalties and forfeitures, and which by section 2 makes unlawful and usurious any contract, contrivance, or device whatever, whereby the debtor is required or obligated to pay a greater sum than the actual principal sum received, together with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, a contract by a corporation, not operating under the building and loan association laws of Florida, with a shareholder, whereby the corporation agrees to advance to the shareholder $7,300 at 7 per cent. interest per annum, and that the interest should be calculated and added to the principal, and the sum thus obtained should be divided into 120 equal monthly payments of $82.13, due on the 11th day of each succeeding month, and that 10 per cent. of the whole sum, or $730, should be deducted as a bonus for making the advance and that therefore the real transaction was an advance or loan of $6,570 at 10 per cent. per annum, and that under the terms of the contract a penalty of 10 per cent. was to be imposed on the shareholder if he made default in paying any one of these monthly installments, and that the installment should then also bear interest at 7 per cent. per annum, and that, if the borrower made default in the payment of three consecutive monthly installments, the whole debt should ipso facto become due, payable, and collectible, with no provision in the contract for eliminating any part of the unearned interest contained in the installments thus precipitated to maturity, is unlawful and "usurious." Maxwell v. Jacksonville Loan & Improvement Co., 34 South. 255, 268, 45 Fla. 425.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3104, provides for forfeiture of all interest where usurious, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 3106, as amended by Acts 1907, p. 277, c. 143, declares that the person paying the usurious interest may recover double the amount thereof. Held, that under Const. art. 16, § 11, as amended in 1891, declaring that all contracts for a greater rate of interest than 10 per cent. shall be deemed usurious, the term "usurious interest," means "unlawful interest," and hence was not limited to the excess over the lawful rate, but included all the interest received and collected. Baum v. Daniels, 118 S. W. 754, 755, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 273.

The "usurious interest," which, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3106, as amended by Acts 1907, c. 143, is recoverable by the person paying it from the person receiving or collecting it, to twice the amount so received or collected, means the whole amount of the interest received, and not the excess above what might lawfully have been received. Taylor v. Shelton (Tex.) 134 S. W. 302, 304.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3709 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2077), provides that a party exacting "usurious interest" shall not recover more than the amount due on the principal debt, with legal interest, after deducting therefrom all payments of usurious interest, whether paid as commissions or as interest. An agent of a lender furnished money to a borrower at the highest legal rate of interest, and without the knowledge of the lender charged the borrower commissions for making the loan. Held, that the note was "usurious." Little v. Hooker Steam Pump Co., 100 S. W. 561, 563, 122 Mo. App. 620.

The "usurious transaction," from the date of which the two years' limitation prescribed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5198, for actions to recover back twice the amount of interest paid a national bank, begins to run, occurs on the date of the payment of the usurious interest, and not on the date when the debt was paid. McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank, 32 Sup. Ct. 240, 241, 223 U. S. 493, 56 L. Ed. 523.

USURP—USURPATION

A person holding an office to which he is ineligible under the Constitution is guilty of "usurpation of office," and may be punished by fine, as provided by Ky. St. 1903, § 1364. Hill v. Anderson, 90 S. W. 1071, 1072, 122 Ky.

87 (quoting Commonwealth v. Adams [Ky.] 3 Metc. 6).

Webster defines "usurp" as "to commit seizure of place, power, function, or the like without right; to seize and hold it in possession by force or without right; as, to 'usurp' a throne," etc. Bouvier defines "usurper" as "one who intrudes himself into an office which is vacant and ousts the incumbent without any color of title whatever; his acts are void in every respect." Anderson gives the same definition, and derives it from "usurpare"—"to seize to one's own use." To "usurp" an office is to seize it by force, actual or constructive, without any color of right or title. "Usurpation" is entirely different from holding an office originally rightfully possessed, but to which the incumbent becomes ineligible. Thus one holding the office of notary public, who continues to exercise the functions of that office after his appointment and qualification as post master, is not guilty of "usurpation" of office, within the statute making usurpation of office a misdemeanor. Palmer v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 588, 122 Ky. 693. And so, according to these definitions, the defendant was not guilty of "usurpation" of office, within the statute, making it an offense for any person to hold any office after his election thereto shall have been declared illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction, or to usurp any office established by law, where, though his election to the office of road supervisor was not legal, he was put into it by the fiscal court, and, though he retained possession and exercised the duties of the office after the fiscal court had declared the office vacant, there had never been a judicial determination that the election was illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction. Eubank v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 368, 369, 126 Ky. 348 (quoting and adopting the definition in Palmer v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 588, 122 Ky. 693).

Where a sheriff collected taxes after his term had expired, giving a receipt therefor as an ex-sheriff, it was not a "usurpation" of office, within Ky. St. 1903, § 1364, as he did not profess in so doing to hold the office of sheriff, or to be entitled to discharge its duties. Commonwealth v. Bush, 115 S. W. 249, 252, 131 Ky. 384.

A "usurpation" is nothing more nor less than the assumption of power not authorized. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 421, 451.

USURPER

A "usurper" is one who intrudes himself into an office which is vacant, or ousts the incumbent without any color of title. Palmer v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 588, 122 Ky. 693; Eubank v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 368, 369, 126 Ky. 348; Commonwealth v. Bush, 115 S. W. 249, 252, 131 Ky. 384.

USURY

See, also, Usurious.

By the canon law, "interest" and "usury" were synonymous terms, and it was unlawful to take any money for the use of money, and this law was rigidly enforced by the temporal authorities of England until the reign of Henry VIII, when the legal right to take interest was first created by act of Parliament (St. 37 Hen. VIII, c. 9), and ever since, in England and in this country, this right has existed in legal contemplation as the creature of statutory enactment. Ex parte Berger, 90 S. W. 759, 761, 193 Mo. 16, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530, 112 Am. St. Rep. 472, 5 Ann. Cas. 383.

"Usury" is an illegal profit required and received from the borrower by a lender of money, and to constitute it there must be a loan or forbearance, the loan must be of money or something circulating as money, it must be repayable absolutely and at all events, and something must be exacted for the use of the money in excess of and in addition to the interest allowed by law. Clemens v. Crane, 84 N. E. 884, 889, 234 Ill. 215.

Any profit made or loss imposed on the necessities of the borrower, whatever form, shape, or disguise it may assume, where the treaty is for a loan, and the capital is to be returned at all events, is so much profit taken on a loan and amounts to "usury" if it exceeds the legal rate of interest. Hall v. Eagle Ins. Co. of London, Eng., 136 N. Y. Supp. 774, 783, 151 App. Div. 815.

A profit greater than the lawful rate of interest, intentionally exacted as a bonus for the loan of money, imposing on the necessities of the borrower in a transaction where the treaty is for a loan and the money is to be returned at all events, is "usury." Doster v. English, 67 S. E. 754, 755, 152 N. C. 339.

"Usury" is exacting or receiving more than the lawful rate of interest. But, if the debt on which it is complained usury is exacted may be wholly discharged according to its terms without reaching the usury, there is no usury, since the debtor has the privilege of paying the lawful sum only. Taylor v. Buzard, 90 S. W. 126, 114 Mo. App. 622 (citing Clark, Cont. 401).

Where a loan contract allows the lender to demand repayment of the principal sum, with legal interest in any event, and there is a further stipulation for a contingent benefit beyond the legal rate of interest, the contract is usurious. "Usury" arises where a borrower gives the lender a note, and at the same time, by separate agreement, gives him the option to either demand payment of the note or to cancel it and take stock deposited as collateral security and dividends thereon in lieu of the note at any time before or after maturity. U. T. Hungerford Brass & Copper Co. v. Brigham, 95 N. Y. Supp. 867, 868, 47 Misc. Rep. 240.

As interest greater than allowed by law

The offense of "usury" consists in taking unlawful interest. Sanford v. Kunz, 71 Pac. 612, 613, 9 Idaho, 29.

Under Code 1896, § 2626, fixing the legal rate of interest, and section 2630, providing that all contracts at a higher rate are usurious, "usury," generally speaking, is the taking of more for the use of money than the law permits. Darden v. Schuessler, 45 South. 130, 154 Ala. 372.

Agreement necessary

To constitute "usury," there must be an agreement on the part of a lender to receive and on the borrower to give for the use of money a greater rate of interest than 10 per cent. Citizens' Bank of Junction City v. Murphy, 102 S. W. 697, 699, 83 Ark. 31.

To constitute "usury," there must either be an agreement whereby the borrower promises to pay and the lender knowingly receives a higher rate of interest than that allowed, or such higher rate must be knowingly "reserved, taken, or secured." Briggs v. Steel, 121 S. W. 754, 755, 91 Ark. 458.

Intent

Erroneously claiming more than is due is not "usury." Fidelity Loan Ass'n v. Connolly, 95 N. Y. Supp. 576, 577.

Interest in advance

"Usury" is the reserving and taking, or contracting to reserve and take, either directly or by indirection, a greater sum for the use of money than the lawful interest." To take interest at the highest legal rate in advance on a long loan is palpable usury, though the authorities are almost unanimous that in short-time loans it is not usury to reserve the interest in advance. The taking of interest for a portion of a year, computed on the principle that a year consists of 360 days, or 12 months of 30 days each, is not usurious, provided this principle is resorted to in good faith as furnishing an easy and practical mode of computation, and not as a cover for usury. Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 53 S. E. 664, 666, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592, 4 Ann. Cas. 639 (quoting Civ. Code 1895, § 2877).

Loan or forbearance

It is an essential requisite to a "usurious" transaction that there be a loan, expressed or implied. Lusk v. Smith, 81 Pac. 173, 175, 71 Kan. 550.

"To constitute 'usury,' there must be a loan or forbearance of money and an agreement, express or implied, by the borrower to repay the same with interest in excess of the rate allowed by law." All money due or to become due under municipal contracts were assigned in consideration of money paid therefor; the amount paid being the face value, less a discount of about 10 per cent. Held, not usurious, though the discount might in amount exceed the legal rate of interest. Dickson v. City of St. Paul, 117 N. W. 426, 427, 428, 105 Minn. 165 (citing Webb, Usury, §§ 19-24; Struthers v. Drexel, 7 Sup. Ct. 1293, 122 U. S. 487, 30 L. Ed. 1216; Footte v. Emerson, 10 Vt. 388, 33 Am. Dec. 205; Reger v. O'Neal, 10 S. E. 375, 33 W. Va. 159, 6 L. R. A. 427; Balfour v. Davis, 12 Pac. 89, 14 Or. 47; Raynolds v. Carter [Va.] 12 Leigh, 186, 37 Am. Dec. 642).

Sharing in profits

Intervener loaned $12,000 to a firm to purchase timber lands, the firm to repay such loan, and for the use of the money to pay intervener 50 cents per thousand feet of lumber cut, the amount to be cut to be not less than 20,000,000 feet, the principal to be repaid at the rate of $2 per thousand feet of lumber as it was cut, such payments on the principal to amount to not less than $500 per month. Within about two years from the date of the loan intervener had received back the $12,000 of the principal, and, in addition thereto, $2,627.20, and claimed a balance due of $7,442.33, and in settlement thereof received notes aggregating $6,000, $1,200 in cash, and $243 in open account. Held, that the notes so given were based entirely on a usurious consideration; "usury" being the taking, receiving, reserving or charging either directly or indirectly a greater sum for the use of money than the lawful rate of interest, and a contention that the transaction was only a profit-sharing agreement could not be sustained, as the stipulated payments were to be made whether the adventure succeeded or failed. Chas. A. Riley & Co. v. W. T. Sears & Co., 70 S. E. 997, 1000, 154 N. C. 509.

UTENSILS

See Farming Tools and Utensils.

A steam thresher for harvesting a rice crop is a "farming utensil," as used in Civ. Code, art. 3259, making the vendor's privilege superior to the privilege of the lessor for rent. The word "utensils" more especially means an implement or vessel for domestic or farming use. See Standard Dictionary verbo. As used in Civ. Code, art. 3259, "utensils" is a translation of "ustensiles," used in article 2102 of the Code Napoléon. This word, in France, has been held to include a "machine a battre," or threshing machine. Fuzier Herman, Code Civil, vol. 4, p. 873. In French jurisprudence the word is used as synonymous with "agricultural instruments," whatever may be their nature. Laporte v. Libby, 38 South. 457, 458, 114 La. 570.

UTERO-GESTATION

In Crim. Code, § 6, providing that "any physician or other person who shall administer, or advise to be administered, to any pregnant woman with a vitalized embryo, or fetus, at any stage of utero-gestation, any medicine, etc., the word "utero-gestation" means pregnancy. One of the definitions of such word given by the Standard Dictionary, by the Century Dictionary, and by Webster is "pregnancy," and this is the sense in which it is used in this connection. Edwards v. State, 112 N. W. 611, 612, 79 Neb. 251.

UTILITY

See Public Utility.

UTMOST CARE

It is usual to use the word "highest" in instructions upon the degree of care required toward passengers, instead of "utmost," and the former should be used, though there may be but slight difference in their meaning. Quinn v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 118 S. W. 46, 48, 218 Mo. 545.

In an instruction that every protection reasonably accessible must be used in the first place in protecting electric wires, and the utmost care should be used to keep them so, the words "reasonably" and "utmost care" meant the same thing. Winkelman v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 85 S. W. 99, 100, 110 Mo. App. 184.

An instruction that a carrier owed to a passenger the "utmost care" for his safety was not objectionable; such care being no more than the highest degree of care which a carrier is bound to exercise. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Keeling, 120 S. W. 847, 848, 102 Tex. 521.

The term "utmost," as applied to care, is synonymous with the expression "such precaution as human skill and foresight could suggest." Gregory v. Elmira Water, Light & R. Co., 83 N. E. 32, 34, 190 N. Y. 363, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 160.

A charge, defining "utmost care" to be such a degree of care as would be exercised by a very careful, prudent, and competent person under the same or similar circumstances, was proper. Weatherford, M. W. & N. W. Ry. Co. v. White, 118 S. W. 799, 803, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 32.

The terms "ordinary care," "utmost care," and "highest degree of care" are relative, and are applicable solely to the particular circumstances. Anderson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 99 Pac. 91, 95, 15 Idaho, 513.

A telegraph company, failing to deliver within a reasonable time messages intrusted to its care, does not exercise, in the delivery thereof, the "utmost diligence," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 699, declaring that a carrier of messages must use the utmost diligence in the transmission and delivery thereof. Blackwell Milling & Elevator Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 P. 235, 236, 17 Okl. 376, 10 Ann. Cas. 855.

UTMOST CARE AND SKILL

The words "utmost care and skill" do not mean the utmost care and diligence which men are capable of exercising, but mean the utmost care consistent with the carrier's undertaking, and with due regard for all the other matters which should be considered in conducting the business. Ilges v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 93, 94, 102 Mo. App. 529 (citing Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co., 19 N. E. 373, 148 Mass. 207, 2 L. R. A. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 541).

By "utmost care and skill" is meant the highest degree of care and skill known which may be used under the same or similar circumstances. Mangan's Adm'r v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 91 S. W. 703, 706, 122 Ky. 476, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 459 (citing Thomp. Neg. §§ 797, 4036; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co., 19 S. E. 344, 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786; Alexander v. Nanticoke Light Co., 58 Atl. 1068, 209 Pa. 571, 67 L. R. A. 475, and cases cited in notes; City Electric Street Ry. Co. v. Connery, 33 S. W. 426, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570, 54 Am. St. Rep. 262; Ugla v. West End St. Ry., 35 N. E. 1126, 160 Mass. 351, 39 Am. St. Rep. 481).

In an action against a street railroad company for personal injuries, the court instructed that the defendant was bound to exercise toward plaintiff "the utmost care, skill, and vigilance" to carry her safely, and also, on her arrival at destination, to stop the car at the usual stopping place, or some other place where it was suitable for plaintiff to alight; and if defendant's servants in charge of the car failed to exercise the utmost care, skill, and vigilance, and by reason thereof did not stop at the usual place, but beyond it at a place unsafe and unsuitable for alighting, and plaintiff was consequently injured while alighting, and while she herself was exercising ordinary care, defendant was liable. Defendant insisted that the phrase, "utmost care, skill, and vigilance," overstated the care defendant was bound to observe, and called for the highest conceivable care, and that the court should have defined the expression "utmost care and skill" as the care and skill which very cautious men exhibit in similar circumstances. The appellate court, in passing on defendant's objections, said that that objection had often been raised to instructing juries by the words used in the present case, and that it was not the best or most approved form of charge, and that it was well to advise the jury that the law means by "utmost care and skill" the degree of those qualities used by very cautious men in the same vocation. Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 314, 317, 102 Mo. App. 573.

An instruction, in an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger by the derailment of the coach, that the burden was on the carrier to prove that the coach, the engine, roadbed, tracks, and ties were reasonably safe "so far as human skill, diligence, and foresight could provide, * * * and that by the utmost human skill, diligence, and foresight is meant such skill, diligence, and foresight as is exercised by a very cautious person under like circumstances," is not erroneous, though no standard by which to measure the carrier's duty is furnished by requiring it to exercise care so far as human skill, diligence, and foresight can provide. Skiles v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 108 S. W. 1082, 1083, 130 Mo. App. 162.

UTTER

To "publish and utter" a check bearing a forged indorsement is to offer it to another with direct or indirect assertions that it is good. State v. Anderson (Del.) 74 Atl. 1097, 1099, 1 Boyce, 135.

To "utter" a forged instrument is to put it in circulation, or to offer to do so, with fraudulent intent to injure another. Holloway v. State, 118 S. W. 256, 258, 90 Ark. 123.

The crime of "uttering a forged writing" consists in offering to another a forged instrument with a knowledge of the falsity of the writing and with the intent to defraud. To constitute the offense it is not necessary that the writing should have been actually received as genuine by the party to whom the same is offered, or that the attempt to defraud be successful; the uttering is complete if the forged instrument is offered as genuine, or declared or asserted, either directly or indirectly, by words or by actions as good. Maloney v. State, 121 S. W. 728, 730, 91 Ark. 485, 134 Am. St. Rep. 83, 18 Ann. Cas. 480 (citing Wharton's Cr. Law [10th Ed.] 708; 5 Ency. of Evid. 865; Elsev v. State, 2 S. W. 337, 47 Ark. 572; People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 390; State v. Horner, 48 Mo. 520; Smith v. State, 29 N. W. 923, 20 Neb. 285, 57 Am. Rep. 832; 19 Cyc. 1388; Holloway v. State, 118 S. W. 256, 90 Ark. 123).

The word "utter" means to put out, to pass off, and, in case of forged paper or counterfeit, there may be an uttering without an actual passing of the paper or money. In a prosecution for uttering obscene pictures, where defendant took a person into a room in which there was a book containing pictures and pointed the book out to him, whereupon the person opened the book and inspected the pictures, the pictures were not uttered, within the statute making it a crime to utter obscene pictures. McGuinness v. McGuinness (N. J.) 62 Atl. 937.

One authorized by a creditor to collect a debt has no authority, on receiving from the debtor in payment a check payable to the creditor, to indorse the creditor's name, and a person taking the check with knowledge of such indorsement, with intent to obtain money thereon based on the indorsement, and who does obtain money thereon, is guilty of "uttering a forged check." People v. Minge, 103 N. Y. Supp. 627, 629, 118 App. Div. 652.

Intent and knowledge

To constitute the offense of "uttering a forged check," there must be an intent to cheat and a knowledge of the falsity of the instrument. Under a statute defining the offense of uttering forged instruments, knowing them to be forged, it is error to charge that the jury should find defendant had knowledge if he had notice of any suspicious circumstances sufficient to put a reasonably prudent man on inquiry which, if followed up, would have led to knowledge of the forgery. Wells v. Territory, 98 Pac. 483, 487, 1 Okl. Cr. 469.

Delivery and receipt

"To 'utter and publish' a document is to offer directly or indirectly, by word or action, such document as good." "Uttering" means substantially to offer. If a person offers another a thing (as, for instance, a forged instrument, or a piece of counterfeit coin which he intends to pass as good), the act constitutes an "uttering" whether the thing offered be accepted or not, and the offer need not go so far as to be in law a tender. But it must be a complete attempt to do the particular thing which the law forbids, though there may be a complete conditional uttering as well as any other, which will be criminal. Allegation that defendant did "utter and publish" a certain forged check is supported by evidence that he offered to pass said check as a genuine instrument, though the offer was not accepted, and defendant did not exhibit it to the witness; there being other evidence from which the jury might find that such check was forged by defendant and was in his possession when such offer was made. Walker v. State, 56 S. E. 113, 127 Ga. 48, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1175, 119 Am. St. Rep. 314 (quoting and adopting definition in Whart. Cr. Law [10th Ed.] vol. 1, § 703, and citing State v. Horner, 48 Mo. 520; 1 Bish. Cr. Law [1st Ed.] § 185).

Under Code, § 4854, defining the offense of "uttering" a false instrument as the uttering and publishing as true any instrument such as is described in section 4853 as an instrument, the false making of which constitutes forgery, which section includes deeds, bonds, etc., it is not essential that the instrument be actually transferred to or accepted by another as genuine; it sufficing that such instrument be offered as genuine with intent to defraud, and hence an indictment for uttering a forged mortgage need not allege an actual transfer nor the name of the transferee, if such transfer was made. State v. Weaver, 128 N. W. 559, 560, 149 Iowa, 403, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1137.

Forgery distinguished

Forgery distinguished, see Forgery.

Probating will

Tender of a will for probate, knowing it to be forged, is an "uttering" thereof, though the surrogate may not have jurisdiction to admit it to probate. State v. Ready, 72 Atl. 445, 447, 77 N. J. Law, 329.

Publish synonymous

An indictment alleging that accused did "utter and publish" as true a forged instrument states an offense under Rev. St. § 833, making it an offense to "alter or publish" as true a forged instrument, since the word "utter" is mere surplusage, and does not show that accused did not commit the offense of publishing, the words "utter" and "publish" conveying the meaning of disposing of the forged instrument, and having about the same meaning. State v. Barrett, 46 South. 1016, 1017, 121 La. 1058 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7251).

V

VACANCY—VACANT—VACATE

See Casual Vacancy.

The Standard Dictionary defines the word "vacant" as devoid of occupants, empty, unfilled, unoccupied, having no incumbent, and states that that is vacant which is without that which has filled or might be expected to fill it, that it has extensive reference to rights or possibilities of occupancy. Knight v. Trigg, 100 Pac. 1060, 1064, 16 Idaho, 256.

The word "vacating," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 4665, subd. 9, providing for appeal from an order vacating or refusing to vacate a previous order, judgment, or decree, means the vacating or setting aside of any part of a previous order. In re Phelps' Estate, 101 N. W. 496, 497, 93 Minn. 350.

The word "vacate," in a statute relating to "vacation" of streets, could be applicable only to a highway already existing. Erie R. Co. v. City of Passaic, 74 Atl. 338, 79 N. J. Law, 19.

A street is "vacated," within St. Okl. 1893, § 584, relating to the vacating of streets, when its character as such is destroyed, and it is thereafter held in private ownership, the same as the adjacent lots to which it has accreted. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. City of Shawnee, 183 F. 85, 87, 105 C. C. A. 377.

To "vacate" premises in the ordinary signification of the word means only a surrender of actual possession—of possessio pedis. A requirement in a certificate of purchase issued to a purchaser of state land, that he shall vacate the premises on his failure to pay the purchase money is complied with by a surrender of the actual possession of the premises, without a surrender to the state of the certificate. People v. Clough, 63 Pac. 1066, 1069, 16 Colo. App. 120.

VACANCY — VACANT — VACATE (Of Building)

"Vacant" means unfilled; unoccupied, without a claimant, tenant, or occupier. A house was called "vacant" which was inhabited by no one. Burrill's Law Dict. 1019. A "vacant" house is an untenanted house. Anderson, Law Dict. 1078. "Vacant" is unoccupied (Standard Dict.); not occupied or filled with incumbent or tenant. Century Dict. Bedell v. Edgett, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1013, 1014, 120 App. Div. 451.

A policy of insurance provided that, if the premises were unoccupied for 10 days, the policy should be void. Held, that the fact that the premises were reoccupied after such time did not avoid the forfeiture. Hardiman v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 61 Atl. 990, 991, 212 Pa. 383.

In an action on an insurance policy providing that it was to become void if the buildings became vacant or unoccupied, the answer alleged that the possession and occupancy of the buildings described and of the insured premises was changed, and said premises ceased to be occupied as provided in the policy. Held, that the answer was sufficient to raise the question of a vacancy, for the terms "vacancy" and "nonoccupancy" are used interchangeably and are equivalent in meaning. Cone v. Century Fire Ins. Co., 117 N. W. 307, 308, 139 Iowa, 205.

The principal idea in the condition in an insurance policy avoiding it if the premises shall become "vacant and unoccupied" is increase of risk, and that idea must have been intended as part of the definition of the words "vacant and unoccupied." It was intended by the words in the connection in which they were used to refer to such a desertion of the premises and removal from them, as would materially increase the risk. Where a policy against loss by fire, lightning, tornado, and windstorm covered a dwelling house and double corncrib, with a stable addition and hay and corn, places separate valuations on the separate subjects, and more than 30 days after the removal of the tenant from the house, which stood some 200 or 300 feet from the corncrib, the corncrib was destroyed by a windstorm, the provision that the policy should be void if the above-mentioned premises became vacant prevented recovery for the corncrib, though the farm was worked by the owner from his adjoining farm, and the crib was used for the storage of farm machinery. Republic County Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 76 Pac. 419, 421, 69 Kan. 146, 105 Am. St. Rep. 156, 2 Ann. Cas. 20.

Dwelling house

Where a policy on a dwelling house in process of construction was conditioned against vacancy, and permission was given for mechanics to work in and about the premises 30 days after date, the building never having been occupied as a dwelling house, was not "vacant and unoccupied" after the expiration of such permits; those words referring to a permanent removal and entire abandonment of the house. Harris v. North American Ins. Co., 77 N. E. 493-495, 190 Mass. 361, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137 (following Johnson v. Norwalk Fire Ins. Co., 56 N. E. 569, 175 Mass. 529).

In a policy exempting the insured from liability, in case the property he insures should become vacant or unoccupied, the words "vacant" and "unoccupied" have a definite and fixed meaning, and that is "that if the house insured should cease to be used as a place of human habitation, or for living purposes, it would then become vacant and unoccupied." The extent of the time of vacancy is not the essence of the contract. Vacancy of insured property is universally recognized in insurance circles as an increased risk, and in contemplation of law there is as much violation of such a provision in a contract by a vacancy for a brief period as there would be for a more extended period. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel (Ind.) 75 N. E. 849.

"A dwelling house is chiefly designed for the abode of mankind. For the comfort of the dwellers in it, many kinds of chattel property are gathered in it, so that, in the use of it, it is a place of deposit of things inanimate, and a place of resort, and a place of resort and tarrying of beings animate. With those animate far away from it, but with those inanimate still in it, it would not be 'vacant,' for it would not be empty and void. And * * * with all inanimate things taken out, but with those animate still remaining in it, it would not be unoccupied, for it would still be used for shelter and repose. And it is because, in our experience of the purpose and use of a dwelling house, we have come to associate our notion of the occupation of it with the habitual presence and continued abode of human beings within it that that word applied to a dwelling always raises that conception in the mind. Sometimes the use of the word 'vacant,' as applied to a dwelling, carries the notion that there is no dweller therein; and we should not be sure always to get or convey the idea of an empty house by the words 'vacant dwelling.'" Knowlton v. Patrons' Andros-coggin Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 289, 291, 100 Me. 481, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517.

Same—Change of tenants

Where plaintiff's husband, who lived in another house on the same lot, placed a bed in the insured house after the tenant vacated, and slept there five nights each week, carrying on his business on the premises during the day, the house was not "vacant and unoccupied for ten days" within the forfeiture clause of the insurance policy. Thieme v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 499, 500, 100 App. Div. 278.

Where the husband of a tenant of a building and his hired man slept in the building after the tenant had removed the greater part of the furniture, but leaving a part, and the husband left on the premises his horses and chickens, etc., the house was not "vacant" or unoccupied within a fire policy stipulating that it should be void if the building became vacant or unoccupied, and so remained for 10 days. Seubert v. Fidelity-Phenix Ins. Co. of New York, 136 N. W. 103, 104, 29 S. D. 261, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58.

Under a policy of fire insurance, providing that the entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon, shall be void if the building described, whether intended for occupancy by the owner or tenant, shall become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for ten days, a "vacancy" for 30 days during a change of tenants does not of itself void the three years' policy, which has yet a long time to run, where the insurance company declares no forfeiture. Athens Mut. Ins. Co. v. Toney, 57 S. E. 1013, 1016, 1 Ga. App. 498 (citing Cooley, Briefs, Ins.).

Where a tenant moved out of a dwelling the last week in February, and another person moved in about the first of May following, but in the meantime no one occupied the dwelling, and the doors thereof were unfastened the greater part of the time and even stood open, and children about town made a playground of the premises, and occasionally domestic animals wandered into the building, the building was "vacant or unoccupied," within a fire policy providing that it would be void if the building should be or become vacant or unoccupied and so remain, unless by agreement indorsed on or added to the policy, and the policy was voided, though the dwelling remained occupied until a fire. Hoover v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 69 S. W. 42, 43, 93 Mo. App. 111.

Same—As empty

Where, after the tenant of an insured house moved out, another person moved in at the request of the owner, so as to preserve the insurance, had all his effects in the house, with control of the premises, and was corporally present and in actual possession of the premises every night during most of the time between departure of the tenant and the destruction of the house by fire, which was about a month, and was not absent from the place during that time for more than four days, the house was occupied, within a provision of the policy that the insurance should only continue while the premises were occupied by a tenant as a private dwelling house, and that the entire policy, unless otherwise provided, should be void if the building, whether intended for occupancy by the owner or tenant, should remain vacant or unoccupied for 10 days, and the fact that only one of the rooms in the house had been used by the occupant, and that the other rooms were not furnished, did not render the house vacant within the policy; the word "vacant" meaning "empty" in its ordinary sense. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., v. Owens (Tex.) 132 S. W. 828, 830.

Same—Temporary absence

A mere temporary absence of the occupants of a dwelling house, with the intention to return, when the premises are left in their usual condition, does not make the house "vacant," with a fire policy providing that it should be void if the premises should become and remain vacant for more than 10 days.

Kampen v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 133 N. W. 163, 164, 116 Minn. 68.

Same—As unoccupied

"The word 'occupation,' as applied to a dwelling house, means living in it; and hence, to become vacated or unoccupied, it must be without an occupant—without any person living in it." Baggerly v. Lee, 73 N. E. 921, 923, 37 Ind. App. 139 (citing Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Boyd, 49 N. E. 285, 19 Ind. App. 173; Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 5 Thomp. & C. 619; American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 169).

Within a by-law of a mutual insurance policy, providing that vacation of the property for longer than 10 days shall suspend the policy, but reoccupation, with notice thereof, shall revive it, "vacant" has the same meaning as "unoccupied"; and when no one lives in the house it is vacant, though the last occupant has left some furniture in it. Brashears v. Perry County Farmers' Protective Ins. Co. (Ind.) 98 N. E. 889, 890.

"Vacant" and "unoccupied" are not synonymous terms. If an insurance policy is conditioned to be void in case the premises become "vacant or unoccupied," the existence of either condition will avoid the policy. But if a policy contains the condition that it shall be void in case the premises are left "vacant and unoccupied," then they must be both vacant and unoccupied, in order to defeat it. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel (Ind.) 73 N. E. 612, 614.

Factory or mill

Delays and interruptions incident to the business, such as low water, diminished custom, or derangement of machinery, causing a temporary discontinuance of the use of a mill operated by water power, does not render it "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of an insurance policy. Waukau Milling Co. v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 109 N. W. 937, 939, 130 Wis. 47, 118 Am. St. Rep. 998, 10 Ann. Cas. 795 (citing Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116).

Store

Plaintiff occupied defendant's storeroom under a lease expiring September 1, 1910, and agreed not to claim an extension of the lease, but to vacate on that date; but on August 23d plaintiff executed a bill of sale of his business to his wife, and agreed with another to deliver possession of the store on or before September 26th, and assigned the good will of the business, and on September 1st the store was in the actual possession of plaintiff's wife, he being employed as her clerk. Held, that the store was not vacated by plaintiff on September 1st pursuant to his agreement; it being necessary that premises be unoccupied, without a claimant, tenant, or occupier, in order to be "vacated." Rothbart v. Rothman, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1095, 143 App. Div. 156.

VACANCY—VACANT—VACATE (Of Office)

Vacancy created by death, resignation, or otherwise, see Otherwise.

An office is "vacant" whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event. Mays v. Bassett, 125 Pac. 609, 610, 17 N. M. 193.

A "vacancy in office," within the meaning of the law, can never exist when an incumbent of the office is lawfully there and in the discharge of his official duty. Holtan v. Beck, 125 N. W. 1048, 1052, 20 N. D. 5.

Absence of a member of a jury commission is not equivalent to a "vacancy" in the board sufficient to prevent action. State v. Bouvy, 50 South. 849, 851, 124 La. 1054.

The word "vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An existing office without an incumbent is vacant. There is no basis for the distinction that it applies only to an office vacated by death, resignation, or otherwise. Commonwealth v. McAfee, 81 Atl. 85, 88, 232 Pa. 36 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7529).

"The term 'vacancy' means an empty space, a place unfilled, and, when applied to an office, it means the state of being destitute of an incumbent, or a want of the proper officer to officiate in such office. But in neither case has it any reference whatever to any former time or to any former condition of the place or office. If a place or office is empty now, there is a vacancy, regardless of whether it has once been filled or has always been empty. And so of an office." Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 686, 122 Tenn. 471.

The term "vacancy," as used in a constitutional provision that the filling of all vacancies not otherwise directed or provided by the Constitution shall be made in such manner as the Legislature shall direct, cannot be made to cover the case of an office of which there is an incumbent in possession, and in the discharge of his duties, merely by the device of extending his term. State ex rel. Cummings v. Trehwitt, 82 S. W. 480, 482, 113 Tenn. 561.

The office of township tax collector becomes "vacant," under Act July 2, 1895, where a borough is created out of part of its territory, where the incumbent of such office is a resident at the time of that portion of the township which becomes the borough. Commonwealth ex rel. Boland v. Topper, 68 Atl. 666, 667, 219 Pa. 221.

"A 'vacancy in office' is defined by section 1521. Ky. St. 1903, as follows: 'The term "vacancy in office," or any equivalent phrase, as used in this article, means such as exists when there is any unexpired part of a term of office without a lawful incumbent therein, or when the person elected or appointed to an office fails to qualify according to law, or when there has been no election to fill the office at the time appointed by law. It applies whether the vacancy is occasioned by death, resignation, removal from the state, county, or district, or otherwise." Combs v. Eversole, 86 S. W. 560, 561, 120 Ky. 346.

Const. art. 7, § 5, providing that the Governor may fill "vacancies" in offices not otherwise provided for by the Constitution or by law, until the same shall be filled by the General Assembly or by the people, applies to vacancies in offices to which incumbents are elected by the people or General Assembly, and does not authorize the filling of vacancies in office filled by appointment of the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, which occur while the Senate is in session. In re Railroad Commission, 67 Atl. 802, 803, 28 R. I. 602.

Under Ky. St. §§ 1521, 1522, defining a vacancy in office as existing when there is an unexpired term of office without a lawful incumbent, and providing for appointments to fill vacancies, and sections 3588, 3589, providing for the election of a school board in a city in the odd years, and empowering the board to fill vacancies until the next general election, appointees to fill vacancies in the board holding under appointments made on April and August of an even-numbered year hold office until the next general election in the odd-numbered year. Hollar v. Cornett, 138 S. W. 298, 299, 144 Ky. 420.

The word "vacancy" has no technical meaning, but must be understood with reference to the context in which it is found. The provision in the Missouri Constitution declaring that, when any office becomes vacant, the Governor, unless otherwise provided by law, shall appoint a person to fill such vacancy, who shall continue in office until a successor has been elected or appointed and qualified, means that the appointee shall hold the office until the end of the term in which the vacancy occurs, and thereafter until everything required by law to give title to the office to another person has been done. State ex inf. Hadley ex rel. Wayland v. Herring, 106 S. W. 984, 988, 208 Mo. 708.

The word "vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein. State ex rel. Chenoweth v. Acton, 77 Pac. 299, 300, 31 Mont. 37; Territory v. Mann, 120 Pac. 313, 315, 16 N. M. 744.

Acts 1909, c. 103, § 3, amending Acts 1907, c. 435, provides that all vacancies in the State Board of Elections shall be filled by joint vote of the General Assembly, except vacancies occurring when it is not in session, when, if the office of only one member is vacant, the remaining members of the board shall fill the vacancy, and if they fail to do so it shall be filled by the Secretary of State, Comptroller, and Treasurer, and that if there be more than one vacancy it shall be filled by appointment by such officers. Held, in view of the meaning of "vacant," which meant "without an incumbent," regardless of when or how it became vacant, and of the words "occur" and "happen," which were synonymous and meant "existing" or "to be found," that the Comptroller, Secretary of State, and Treasurer were authorized to fill two or more vacancies in the board of elections during recess of the Legislature, whether such vacancies occurred during recess or while the Legislature was in session. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 683, 122 Tenn. 471.

Code, § 1272, providing that vacancies in county offices shall be filled by the supervisors, and that the district court may appoint a suitable person to act as clerk of such court until the vacancy is filled in the manner provided by law, construed as authorizing the supervisors alone to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of the district court, and as empowering the court to appoint a person to act as clerk until the vacancy is filled by the board, so that the office remains vacant until the board fills it or until an election intervenes, is not in conflict with Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that a person appointed to fill a vacancy in an office shall hold until the next general election, a "vacancy" existing in an office when it has no lawful incumbent, and a vacancy being filled by the lawful appointment or election thereto of some qualified person. State ex rel. Heffelfinger v. Brown, 123 N. W. 779, 780, 144 Iowa, 739.

The word "vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied in the manner provided by the statute or law with an incumbent legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties pertaining to it, and conversely it is vacant whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent. Under Code 1906, §§ 3435, 3436, providing for general municipal elections on the second Tuesday in December, 1906, and every two years thereafter, for all elective municipal officers, and that the officers-elect shall qualify and enter on the discharge of their duties on the first Monday of January after their election and shall hold office for two years and until their successors are elected and qualified, and providing that in case of vacancy, the unexpired term of which shall not exceed six months, the vacancies shall be filled by appointment, and, if the unexpired term exceeds six months, a general election shall be held to fill such vacancy, the election of one not qualified to hold office has the same effect as if there had been no election, and caused the old incumbent to hold over until the next general election, and there was no vacancy to be filled. State v. Hays, 45 South. 728, 729, 91 Miss. 755 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Harrison, 16 N. E. 384, 113 Ind. 434, 3 Am. St. Rep. 666).

Laws 1903, c. 363, redistricted Maury county, and extinguished a number of civil districts by merging them with other original districts, reducing the number from 25 to 9. The justices of the peace for four districts were left unaffected. The places of the justices for the other five districts could be filled by an election held after 10 days' notice given by the proper authorities; for, notwithstanding these five are new districts, yet the places to be filled in them are "vacancies," within the statute. State v. Akin, 79 S. W. 805, 806, 112 Tenn. 603 (citing Condon v. Maloney, 65 S. W. 871, 108 Tenn. 82).

Conviction of felony

Under the provisions of the charter of San Francisco that an office becomes "vacant" when the occupant is convicted of a felony, there is a vacancy in the office of mayor when a verdict of guilty has been entered on trial of the mayor for a felony, and the board of supervisors has, on the judgment thereon being certified to them, declared the office vacant, though an appeal from the judgment is perfected and a certificate of probable cause granted. McKannay v. Horton, 91 Pac. 598, 600, 151 Cal. 711, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146.

Creation of office

An office newly created becomes ipso facto vacant in its creation. The word "vacant" as applied to an office means without an incumbent, and an existing office without an incumbent is vacant, whether the office is a new or an old one. State ex rel. Buckner v. City of Butte, 109 Pac. 710, 712, 41 Mont. 377.

Where a new judicial district is created out of a part of the counties comprising an old judicial district, and the judge of the old district resides in a county not within the new district, there is a "vacancy" in the office of judge of the new district within Rev. Codes, § 317, subd. 5, declaring that an office shall be deemed vacant when the incumbent ceases to reside in the district in which the duties of his office are to be exercised. Knight v. Trigg, 100 Pac. 1060, 1065, 16 Idaho, 256.

Gen. St. 1902, § 3366, provides that every corporation organized thereunder shall have three or more directors, who shall hold office for a year, and who may fill any vacancy in the board for the unexpired portion of the term. Held, that the provision does not apply to newly created directorships, but merely gives the directors authority to appoint for the remainder of a term which has been partly filled, since while the word "vacancy" may sometimes fitly describe the condition of an office which has never been filled, yet, when read with the other words of the sentence, such meaning cannot properly be given to that word as here used. Gold Bluff Mining & Lumber Corp. v. Whitlock, 55 Atl. 175, 177, 75 Conn. 669.

An office is "vacant" when there is no legal incumbent to discharge its duties. It is vacant when it is not filled, as a house would be vacant when it is empty. A new house which has never been occupied is no less vacant than an old one which had been occupied, but whose tenant has removed from it. So a new office, which has never been filled, is vacant when there is no incumbent, as much so as if it had had an incumbent and he had resigned or died. Const. § 129, designating the term of office of circuit judges, provides that the General Assembly shall, at the same time the judicial districts are laid off, direct elections to be held in each district to elect a judge therein. Section 152 declares that, unless provided in the Constitution, vacancies in all elective offices shall be filled by election or appointment; that if the unexpired term will end at the next succeeding annual election, at which city, town, district, or state officers are to be elected, the office shall be filled by appointment for the remainder of the term; if the unexpired term will not end at the next succeeding annual election at which city, town, county, or state officers are to be elected, and if three months intervene before such annual election at which either of such officers are to be elected, the office shall be filled by appointment until such election, and then the vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the term. By Act March 2, 1906, an additional judge of the circuit court for the Sixteenth circuit was provided for, to be appointed by the Governor, and to hold office until January, 1907, and that at the November, 1906, election there should be a circuit judge elected for that office, who should hold his office after January, 1907, and until his successor was elected and qualified. Held that, on the creation of a new judgeship in such district, a "vacancy" occurred, within Const. § 152, and that the Legislature therefore had no power to provide for an election to fill the office of such judge in November, 1906, at which time there would be no election in such county to elect other state, district, or county officers. Yates v. McDonald, 96 S. W. 865, 866, 123 Ky. 596.

Act March 31, 1901, redistricted the state into judicial circuits, and section 1716a created the Thirty-First Circuit. Section 1717 provided that the Governor should appoint a judge therefor, to hold office until the next general election, when his successor should be elected to hold office until the first Monday in January, 1905, after which his successor elected at the general election, 1904, is to hold office in the same manner as other circuit judges, who by section 1749 are given a tenure of six years. Const. art. 6, § 25, declares that circuit judges shall hold office for six years, but section 32 provides that in case of vacancy it shall be filled as provided by law, and article 5, § 11, provides that, when any office shall become vacant, the Governor, unless otherwise provided by law, shall fill the office by appointment. Held, that the period elapsing between the creation of the new judicial district and the regular election for 1904, at which all the judges in the state were to be elected, was a "vacancy," within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 32, so that under that section, as well as article 5, § 11, the Legislature had power to provide as it did by Act March 31, 1901, § 1717 (Laws 1901, p. 110), for the filling of such vacancy by election for a term of less than six years, and that act was not in conflict with the constitutional provision that circuit judges shall hold office for six years. State ex inf. Hadley v. Burkhead, 85 S. W. 901, 905, 187 Mo. 14.

Death of nominee

Primary Election Law (Laws 1903, c. 451) § 25, provides that the statutes in force in relation to the holding of elections, solicitation of voters at the polls, challenging of votes, the manner of conducting elections, and all other kindred subjects shall apply to all primaries in so far as they are consistent with the act. Held, that such section did not incorporate into the primary election law St. 1898, § 34, providing that, if a nominee die after the ballots are printed and before election, the proper chairman of the committee of the political organization of which such candidate was the nominee may make a nomination to fill the vacancy, and that, if the nominee die after the ballots are printed and no nomination shall be made as therein provided, the votes cast for him shall be counted, and, if he receive a plurality, the vacancy shall be filled as in case of vacancies occurring by death after election, such section relating in terms only to a person already nominated by a party, the word "nominee" having such meaning, and the word "vacancy" meaning a place once filled, but not so any longer, especially in view of the fact that section 13 of the primary election law makes provision for the filling of vacancies by providing that vacancies occurring after a primary shall be filled by the party committee of the city, county, or state, as the case may be. State ex rel. Bancroft v. Frear, 128 N. W. 1068, 1075, 144 Wis. 79, 140 Am. St. Rep. 992.

Death of officer

Under a statute providing for the appointment of a trustee by the Supreme Court in case of a "vacancy in the office," such a vacancy exists on the death of a trustee under a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors. Petition of Ballou, 11 R. I. 359, 360.

Death of officer-elect

The death of a person elected to an office before he qualifies does not create a "vacancy," where the Constitution provides that an incumbent in an office shall hold for his term, and until the election and qualification of a successor. State ex rel. Hoyt v. Metcalfe, 88 N. E. 738, 743, 80 Ohio St. 244.

Expiration of term

Where the term of a justice of the peace appointed by the Governor in 1910 expired on the first Monday in May, 1912, and the Senate in 1912 failed to confirm an appointment made by the Governor in February of that year, there was, after the first Monday in May, 1912, a "vacancy" within Const. art. 4, § 43, providing that, in the event of a vacancy in the office of a justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to serve as justice for the residue of the term, and the Governor could appoint one as justice for the residue of the next term of two years. Claude v. Wayson, 84 Atl. 562, 566, 118 Md. 477.

"Vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning, and an office may be regarded as vacant or not according to whether it is occupied by one who has a legal right to hold it, and to exercise the powers and perform the duties pertaining to it. "A 'vacant office' is one without an incumbent. Vacancy in office is one thing and 'term' another. An office may be vacant and filled many times during a term of four years, but it cannot become vacant at the end of a term where the incumbent is authorized to hold over, for the instant the successor is duly appointed and has qualified he becomes entitled to the office, and there has been no hiatus at all. So long, therefore, as an office is supplied with an incumbent in the manner provided by the Constitution or law who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which appertain to it, the office is not vacant." Acts 1902-04, p. 745, c. 482, § 106 (Va. Code 1904, p. 62), which provides that, when a vacancy occurs in any county office, the same shall be filled by the court or judge thereof, has reference alone to vacancies occurring during a term of an office by death, resignation, removal, and the like, and does not contemplate the filling of an office for the ensuing term on the expiration of a preceding term, where the incumbent holds the office for a fixed term and until his successor has qualified. Chaddock v. Burke, 49 S. E. 976, 977, 103 Va. 694.

Failure to elect

Under Primary Election Law (Laws 1910, c. 741) § 160k, providing that any vacancy in respect to any office shall be filled as the rules and regulations of the governing bodies for the respective parties shall provide, if two candidates for a county office have an equal number of votes at a primary election, a "vacancy" exists which should be filled by the state central committee of the party for that county. Usilton v. Bramble, 82 Atl. 661, 662, 117 Md. 10, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 743.

Const. Tex. art. 16, § 17, provides that all officers within the state shall continue to perform the duties of their offices until their successors shall be duly qualified, and Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 387, after providing for the election of municipal officers, including mayor, aldermen, and secretary, declares that they shall be elected as provided and hold office for two years, "and until the election and qualification of their successors." Held that a municipal corporation, having failed to elect municipal officers, did not create "vacancies" within Acts 25th Leg. Tex. c. 114, providing for dissolution of municipal corporations for nonuser of corporate powers, where the offices had been vacant for a period of 10 years or more. Ringling v. City of Hempstead, 193 Fed. 596, 602, 113 C. C. A. 464.

Under Ky. St. § 1521 (Russell's St. § 4116), declaring a "vacancy in office" to exist when there has been no election, and when it is occasioned by death, resignation, removal from the county or district, or otherwise, and section 4436 (section 5712), authorizing the county superintendent to appoint a school trustee to fill a vacancy which is caused from failure of a trustee-elect to qualify according to law, or from any other cause, there is a vacancy, authorizing appointment of a trustee, where, an election being called and held as required by law, the result is not ascertained by reason of an untoward interference. Dixon v. Caudill, 136 S. W. 1043, 1045, 143 Ky. 623.

Act Feb. 8, 1901, created the county court of Coffee county, and section 1 provided that the judge should be elected by the Senate for a term of six years and until his successor was elected and qualified, which should be done in the same manner at the end of six years. Section 28 authorized the Governor to appoint a successor in case of vacancy. The act was amended by Act Sept. 29, 1903, section 18 of which provides that the judge should be elected by the Senate for six years, and that the then incumbent's term should not expire until 1907 and until his successor is elected, and authorized the Governor to fill any vacancy by appointment, his appointee to hold until the election of his successor as herein provided by the voters of the county. The first judge elected by the Senate resigned October 3, 1903, and the next judge elected resigned April 6, 1905, when relator was elected to succeed him, and, there being no other election by the Senate or by the electors as provided, on January 4, 1909, the Governor appointed defendant to the office. Held that, relator's term having expired, and the Senate having failed to elect a judge as provided, there was a "vacancy" which the Governor was authorized to fill by appointment. Ham v. State ex rel. Blackmon, 49 South. 1032, 1033, 162 Ala. 117.

Under Pol. Code, § 996, providing that "an office becomes 'vacant' on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term: (1) The death of the incumbent * * *"—one who has been elected to an office, but who fails to qualify by filing the bond, is in the sense of the statute the incumbent, though he never was in possession of nor performed any duty in connection with the office. Under Pol. Code, § 996, providing that "an office becomes vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term: (1) The death of the incumbent. * * * (10) The decision by a competent tribunal declaring void his election or appointment"—an office became "vacant" on the decision of the court declaring void an election on the ground that the person elected, but who had not taken possession of the office, and who failed to qualify and take his official oath, was ineligible to take the office at the time of the election, in proceedings to contest the election under Code Civ. Proc. § 1111, providing that the right of any person declared elected may be contested when he was not at the time of the election eligible to the office, and section 1122 providing that, after hearing the proofs and allegations of the parties, the court must pronounce judgment either confirming or annulling and setting aside such election. Campbell v. Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County, 93 Pac. 1061, 1063, 7 Cal. App. 155.

The general law concerning cities, enacted in 1867, by section 12 provides that, if two or more persons have an equal and highest number of votes for the same office, the common council shall call an election to fill the office, and by section 16 provides that all "vacancies" in the office of councilman, etc., shall be filled by special election; but such provision was changed by Act Feb. 26, 1891, § 1, providing that "vacancies" in the office of councilmen shall be filled by appointment by the common council. The general act concerning elections, approved April 21, 1881, provides that a special election shall be held whenever two or more persons receive the highest and an equal number of votes at any election. Two days before the latter statute was approved, an act concerning elections became a law, providing that, if two or more persons have the highest and an equal number of votes for a city office, the city board shall declare that no person is elected, and shall certify such fact to the city clerk, who shall certify it to the tribunal whose duty it is to "supply vacancies in office or to issue a writ of election." Section 43 of the act concerning cities and towns provides that all city elections shall be held in conformity with the general election laws. Const. art. 15, § 3, declares that, whenever it is provided in any law that any officer shall hold his office for any given term, it shall be construed to mean that he shall hold his office until his successor is elected or qualified. Act March 6, 1905, provides that, in case of a vacancy in the office of councilman through death, resignation, or other cause, the council shall fill such vacancy by a special meeting. Held, that the latter statute, in making provision for the filling of vacancies, did not show an intent to treat a failure to elect owing to a tie vote as a "vacancy," but in such case a special election should be held. State ex rel. Jett v. Ives, 78 N. E. 225, 226, 167 Ind. 13.

Failure to qualify

T. was elected sheriff in November, 1906, for the term of two years, commencing with the second Tuesday of January, 1907, and was re-elected for a two-year term beginning on the second Tuesday of January, 1909, but died November 23, 1908, before qualifying for the second term, and on December 29, 1908, the board of county commissioners appointed respondent sheriff to fill the vacancy "until the next general election," and he duly qualified and entered into the office on January 2, 1909; but on January 12, 1909, before the commencement of the second term, the board declared the office vacant and appointed relator to fill such vacancy "until the next general election." Const. art. 12, § 1, provides that an officer shall hold until his successor is duly qualified. Article 14, § 9, provides that, in case of vacancy in a county office, the county commissioners shall fill it by appointment, and the appointee shall hold such office until the next general election, or until the vacancy be filled according to law. Article 12, § 10, provides that an office is vacant if the person elected or appointed refuse or neglect to qualify within the time prescribed by law, and by section 11 the term of any officer elected to fill a vacancy terminates at the expiration of the term during which the vacancy occurred. Mills' Ann. St. § 848, requires a sheriff to be elected for a term of two years, and to give bond before entering upon his official duties. Section 808 empowers the county commissioners, in case of vacancy, where the unexpired term exceeds one year, to fill such vacancy by appointment until an election can be held as provided by law. Section 924 makes every county office vacant upon the death of the incumbent, or his refusal or neglect to qualify. Section 1586 permits officers appointed to fill vacancies to immediately qualify, but provides that, if appointed, they shall hold only until their successors are elected or qualified. Section 1589 requires vacancies in county offices to be filled by appointment by the county commissioners until the next general election, when they shall be filled by election, subject to the provisions of Const. art. 6, § 29. Held, that the term "vacancy" applied to the term, and not to the incumbent, and, under Const. art. 12, § 10, T.'s neglect to qualify made a vacancy in the office, and relator was entitled to the office under his appointment of January 12th; respondent being entitled, under his appointment, to serve until the second term began. People ex rel. Callaway v. De Guelle, 105 Pac. 1110, 1111, 47 Colo. 13.

As applied to term

A "vacancy" at common law means a vacancy in office, and not in the term. State ex inf. Hadley v. Corcoran, 103 S. W. 1044, 1049, 206 Mo. 1, 12 Ann. Cas. 565.

A "vacancy" in a public office "means ex vi termini—an unexpired term." Rodwell v. Rowland, 50 S. E. 319, 329, 137 N. C. 617 (dissenting opinion of Brown, J.).

The phrase "unexpired term" is not synonymous with "vacancy." The former is the remainder of a period prescribed by law after a portion of such time has passed. A vacancy exists where there is no person lawfully authorized to assume and exercise at present the duties of the office. State ex rel. Hoyt v. Metcalfe, 88 N. E. 738, 743, 80 Ohio St. 244.

" * * * The word 'vacancy,' when used in written Constitutions with reference to a public officer, sometimes signifies an 'unexpired term'; but that is not necessarily so. It often relates merely to the office without reference to the term. * * * Under Sess. Acts 1879, p. 28, embodied in Rev. St. 1899, §§ 6539, 6541 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3272), providing for the appointment of a jury commissioner in cities having a certain population, and declaring that the appointee shall hold office for four years after the 1st day of May in the year of his appointment, and in case of any vacancy during the term "in like manner as hereinbefore provided," when considered in connection with Act March 3, 1857 (Laws 1856-57 p. 661), as amended by Act Nov. 14, 1857 (Laws 1857, p. 486), relating to jury commissioners and the general course of legislation on the subject of appointment to fill vacancies in offices, an appointee to fill a vacancy in the office of jury commissioner caused by the death of the incumbent holds office for four years from May 1st of the year of his appointment, though the appointment purports to be for a less term. State ex inf. Hadley v. Corcoran, 103 S. W. 1044, 1048, 206 Mo. 1, 12 Ann. Cas. 565.

VACANT AND UNOCCUPIED

See Vacancy—Vacant—Vacate.

VACANT LAND

The granting of the certificate to be located upon "vacant public land" contemplated vacant public land subject to location; the phrase being generally used interchangeably with others to indicate lands subject to location or settlement. Roberts v. Terrell, 110 S. W. 733, 735, 101 Tex. 577.

Where the owners of certain vacant land constructed buildings thereon without first obtaining approval of the plans, in disregard of Building Code of the City of New York, § 4, and, pending an application, after the completion of the buildings, for a permit to erect the same, under resolution of the board of estimate and apportionment under Greater New York Charter, § 990, the land was condemned, the land was vacant within section 990 of the charter, and title vested immediately in the city. Coady v. Thatcher, 131 N. Y. Supp. 178, 179, 146 App. Div. 585.

The 80 acres of land in suit and an adjoining 40 acres were owned by the same person and possessed as one tract. The small clearing and farm buildings were on the 40 acres, but the entire 120 acres were surveyed, stakes set at the corners, and the boundaries blazed on the trees. The owner went over the land occasionally to guard against trespass and fires, sold and gave away some timber, and permitted persons to enter for the purpose of removing the same. He occupied the house while engaged in growing and harvesting crops and removing timber, leaving furniture in the house and hay in the barn when away. Held, that the land in suit was not "vacant and unoccupied" within St. 1898, § 1187, providing a limitation of three years for recovery of such land, as against a tax deed. Flanders v. Washburn Land Co., 121 N. W. 250, 251, 139 Wis. 390.

VACATION

Of court

Judge in vacation as court, see Court (Of Justice).

"The very meaning of the term 'vacation,' as applied to a court, imports an absence of power to render judgment or grant interlocutory judicial orders. It means 'a vacating, a making void; intermission of a stated employment.'" Accoult v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 83 S. W. 1104, 1105.

Rev. St. 1879, c. 59, art. 4, § 3494, provides that in certain actions, if plaintiff shall allege in his petition or file affidavit that any of defendants are nonresidents the court, or in vacation the clerk, shall make an order for publication. Held, that the term "vacation" was not used in its common-law sense as the time elapsing between end of one term and beginning of another, but included an adjournment from March 20, 1884, to June 16th following, both under Act March 15, 1883, p. 111, declaring that the words "in vacation" shall include any adjournment for more than one day, and independent thereof. Himmelberger-Harrison Lumber Co. v. Keener, 117 S. W. 42, 45, 217 Mo. 522.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2989, provides that judges of the district courts may either in term time or vacation grant writs of injunction returnable to their courts in specified cases, and article 3007 provides that motions to dissolve injunctions without determining the merits may be heard after answer filed in vacation as well as in term time on at least 10 days' notice to the opposite party, or his attorney. Held, that the word "vacation," as so used, meant the vacation of the district court of the county wherein the case was pending, in which an injunction was awarded, and hence, there being no statute fixing the place for hearing motions to dissolve, a judge granting an injunction in vacation may hear a motion to dissolve it in a county other than that in which the suit is pending. Wier v. Hill (Tex.) 125 S. W. 366, 368.

Rev. St. 1899, § 809, provides that the court may, on granting an appeal, fix the amount of the appeal bond and allow appellant time in vacation not exceeding 10 days to file the same, subject to the approval of the clerk, and such appeal bond approved by the court and filed within the time specified shall stay the execution thereafter. Section 4160 provides that, whenever any act is authorized to be done by a clerk of any court in vacation, the words "in vacation" shall be held to include an adjournment of court for more than one day. Held that, where the 10 days which may be allowed after the term at which an appeal is allowed carries over into the next regular term, it is in the power of the court, during the subsequent term, to approve the appeal bond. State ex rel. Bamberge v. Graves, 126 S. W. 749, 751, 147 Mo. App. 324.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, provides that, whenever any act is authorized to be done in vacation, the words "in vacation" shall be construed to include any adjournment of the court for more than one day. This section did not limit the power of the judge in admitting a person to bail and taking bond under section 2543, providing that, when a defendant is in custody or under arrest for a bailable offense, the judge of the court in which the indictment or information is pending may admit him to bail and take his recognizance, so that a judge of the court in which an indictment was pending had power to admit defendant to bail and take his recognizance in chambers after the court had adjourned on that day until the day following. State v. Woodson, 78 S. W. 603, 605, 179 Mo. 408.

Of officer or employé

Under Laws 1897, pp. 252-254, c. 378, §§ 724-728, the fire commissioner of the city of New York has the general management of the fire department, with power to remove the officers and employes on charges mentioned. Held, that he had no power to relieve the chief of the fire department from his duties or remove him from his position because he refused to continue a vacation granted to him on his own request, since a "vacation" is a personal privilege that can be waived. In re Croker, 67 N. E. 307, 309, 175 N. Y. 158.

Of street

The word "vacate," in a statute relating to vacation of streets, could be applicable only to a highway already existing. Erie R. Co. v. City of Passaic, 74 Atl. 338, 79 N. J. Law, 19.

A street is "vacated," within St. Okl. 1893, § 584, relating to the vacating of streets, when its character as such is destroyed, and it is thereafter held in private ownership, the same as the adjacent lots to which it has accreted. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. City of Shawnee, 183 Fed. 85, 87, 105 C. C. A. 377.

An ordinance of a first-class city, authorizing a railway company to exclusively use one-half of a street with its tracks by depressing them by making a cut, is not a "vacation" ordinance within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7507, authorizing such cities to vacate streets; it being necessary that such power be exercised pursuant to sections 7840-7843. State ex rel. B. Schade Brewing Co. v. Superior Court of Spokane County, 113 Pac. 576, 581, 62 Wash. 96.

VACCINATION

See Successful Vaccination.

The term "vaccination," in the act of June 18, 1895 (P. L. 207, § 12), prohibiting the attendance of a child at school without a certificate of successful vaccination, or of its having had the smallpox, means inoculation with the virus of cowpox for the purpose of communicating that disease as a prophylactic against smallpox, and it indicates an operation, by inserting the virus under the skin, and the test of its success is the appearance of the symptoms of the disease, including those manifesting themselves on the skin, and administering the virus through the mouth, though producing on the body practically the same symptoms, except exterior and local inflammation, is insufficient. Lee v. Marsh, 79 Atl. 564, 566, 230 Pa. 351.

At present the preponderance of opinion is that "vaccination" is a highly useful ameliorative, if not always a preventive of smallpox. A statute providing for the exclusion of unvaccinated children from the public schools does not involve, in its application, trespass on the reserved rights of the individual beyond the reach of the police power from the fact that vaccination is the infliction of a disease on the subject. Stull v. Reber, 64 Atl. 419, 421, 215 Pa. 156, 7 Ann. Cas. 415.

VADIUM

VADIUM VIVUM

A "vivum vadium" is a living pledge resembling the estate held by statute merchant or statute staple. Bradburn v. Roberts, 61 S. E. 617, 619, 148 N. C. 214 (citing 2 Blk. 157-160).

VAGINA

The "vagina" of a female is a canal leading to the womb, and is located back of the urethra, which is a duct leading to and emptying the bladder. The same lips are around the vagina and urethra, and the distance from the edge of such lips to the neck of the womb is from three to four inches. Clark v. People, 79 N. E. 941, 943, 224 Ill. 554.

VAGRANCY—VAGRANT

See Power to Define Vagrancy.

As misdemeanor, see Misdemeanor.

See, also, Loiter.

A "vagrant" has been defined as "one who strolls from place to place; one who has no settled habitation; an idle wanderer; a sturdy beggar; an incorrigible rogue; a vagabond." Ex parte Branch, 137 S. W. 886, 887, 234 Mo. 466.

Gen. Laws 31st Leg. c. 59, § 1, par. "d," defines "vagrants" as all able-bodied persons who habitually loaf, loiter, or idle for the "larger portion of their time." Held, that the term "larger portion of their time," when construed with the remainder of the provision, was not so vague as to render the law invalid. Ex parte Strittmatter, 124 S. W. 906, 907, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 937, 21 Ann. Cas. 477.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2688, which defines one who practices "fortune telling" to be a "vagrant," is constitutional, and extends to the vocation of professing to tell future events in one's life by casting horoscopes, etc., though the principles of astrology be followed. State v. Neitzel, 125 Pac. 939, 69 Wash. 567, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 890.

Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 4, defining "vagrants" to include confidence operators having no visible means of support when found loitering around certain public places, was not unconstitutional as abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens. Ex parte Hayden, 106 Pac. 893, 894, 12 Cal. App. 145.

A complaint under an ordinance denouncing as "vagrant" all persons living by gambling, which charges that defendant is a vagrant, being without visible means of support, who gambles at the game of draw poker for a living, is sufficient. City of Shreveport v. Bowen, 40 South. 859, 116 La. 522.

An indictment alleging that defendant, being able to work and having no property, wandered about in idleness sufficiently charges vagrancy, within a statute providing that any person wandering about in idleness, who is able to work and has no property to support him, is a "vagrant." Vandiver v. State, 40 South. 88, 145 Ala. 682.

Where, upon the trial of one for the offense of "vagrancy," it was charged in one count of the accusation that the defendant is a "professional gambler living in idleness," the court did not err in refusing a request to charge the following: "Under the law of vagrancy, the gist of the offense is the failure or the refusal of the offender to work, when work is necessary to support himself." Simmons v. State, 55 S. E. 479, 126 Ga. 632.

The fact that one may work one or two days in a week, and then remain idle the remainder of the week, does not constitute him a "vagrant," though he might be able to work and have no property to support himself, if his earnings for the proportion of time he might labor were sufficient to furnish him an honest livelihood. Harris v. State, 60 S. E. 207, 3 Ga. App. 447.

One who wanders and strolls about in idleness, with no lawful purpose or object whatever, an habitual loafer, idler, and vagabond, who is able to work, has no property, no reasonably continuous employment, and no regular income, is a "vagrant," within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, § 453, par. 3; and this is true, notwithstanding such person may have a fixed place of abode, where he usually lodges. Especially would such person be a vagrant when his loafing and loitering was about pool rooms, bar rooms, dives, lewd houses, and other places of like character. Carter v. State, 55 S. E. 477, 126 Ga. 570, 571.

Evidence which establishes that one is an habitual loafer and loiterer, both morning and evening, "in the tenderloin district" of a city, who is able to work, and has no property, no reasonably continuous employment, and no regular income, is sufficient to support a conviction for the offense of "vagrancy," under the provisions of Pen. Code 1895, § 453, par. 3. Darby v. State, 56 S. E. 91, 127 Ga. 46 (citing Carter v. State, 126 Ga. 570, 55 S. E. 477).

A man clothed as a woman and having on a wig and slippers, who stands in the lobby of a theater with his face painted, representing the "White Slave," is not a "vagrant" within Code Cr. Proc. § 887, subd. 7, providing that a person is a vagrant who, having his face painted, discolored, covered, or concealed, or being otherwise disguised, appears in a road or public highway, or in a field, lot, wood, or inclosure. People v. Luechini, 136 N. Y. Supp. 319, 75 Misc. Rep. 614.

The words "visible or lawful business" in Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, defining as a vagrant "Every person who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night without any visible or lawful business," are used in the sense of good and sufficient reason, and refer to the reason why he is roaming the street rather than to any business or avocation in life from which support is derived. Ex parte McLaughlin, 116 Pac. 684, 685, 16 Cal. App. 270.

Act March 17, 1909 (Acts 31st Leg. c. 59), punishing vagrants and declaring that certain persons, including prostitutes, shall be deemed vagrants, applies only to those persons who meet the description at the time that a charge is made under it, and one who has abandoned her vocation as a prostitute and has entered a place set apart for her reformation is not a "vagrant." City of San Antonio v. Salvation Army (Tex.) 127 S. W. 860, 863.

Code 1907, § 7843, defines a "vagrant" to consist of "any able-bodied person who shall abandon his wife and child, or either of them, without just cause, leaving them without sufficient means of subsistence or in danger of becoming a public charge." Held, that such act does not make it a crime to abandon a wife and child on all occasions, nor where accused married his wife after the institution of bastardy proceedings against him, and he was fraudulently induced to believe that he was the father of the child, which he subsequently discovered was not so. Carnley v. State, 50 South. 362, 363, 162 Ala. 94.

Defendant, for the purpose of rebutting the evidence of his vagrancy, which was claimed to have existed to the knowledge of the officer arresting him, so as to justify the arrest without a warrant, having testified that he had a lease, covering several months prior and up to the time of the arrest, of a certain tenement, which he had sublet to prostitutes, and that he had in the meantime purchased a mining location, on which he intended to go as soon as the lease expired, may, for the purpose of showing that he had no lawful business, which fact, in connection with his wandering about the streets at late and unusual hours of the night, would constitute him a "vagrant" under Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, be required on cross-examination to testify that during the running of his lease he had no other business except gambling. People v. Craig, 91 Pac. 997-999, 152 Cal. 42.

Laws 1905, p. 109, classifying as "vagrants" all persons able to work, having no property to support them, and who have no visible or known means of a fair, honest, and reputable livelihood, enlarges somewhat the meaning of the term "vagrant." Any work or labor which is sufficient to furnish the means of livelihood to the laborer if he has no family and to prevent him from wandering about in idleness would be "reasonably continuous employment" to constitute visible or known means of a fair, honest, and reputable livelihood. The public is not concerned in the length of labor or the proceeds thereof. Its only object is to protect itself from the idler and the results of idleness. Lewis v. State, 59 S. E. 933, 934, 3 Ga. App. 322.

Gen. Acts 1903, p. 244, making a man, who quits his house and leaves his wife and children without means of subsistence, guilty of "vagrancy," does not apply where the accused left his wife and children before the passage of the act, though he remained away from them after that time. To constitute the offense there must be an actual desertion, followed by a failure or refusal to provide means of subsistence for the wife and children. Both of these elements must concur, and, after the act of desertion is completed by the quitting of the house and leaving the wife and children without subsistence, there cannot be a subsequent act of quitting, so as to render the quitting of the house and the failure to provide concurrent acts. Crawley v. State, 41 South. 175, 176, 146 Ala. 145 (citing Gay v. State, 31 S. E. 569, 105 Ga. 599, 70 Am. St. Rep. 68).

A "vagrant" was originally understood to be an idle person, without visible means of support, who, though able to work for his maintenance, refused to do so, but the idea later included one whose business status or course of conduct was vicious or habitually unlawful; so the offense of being a vagrant, where it depends upon an habitual course of misconduct, is a separate offense from each specific act of misconduct, and hence Vagrancy Act (Acts 31st Leg. c. 59) § 1, subd. "k," declaring the keeper of a house of gambling and gaming to be a vagrant, defines a different offense from that defined by Pen. Code 1895, art. 388b, making it a felony for any person to keep any premises, building, room, or place for the purpose of being used as a place to gamble with cards; and hence the vagrancy act does not repeal the provision of the Penal Code. Parshall v. State, 138 S. W. 759, 766, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 177.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2228, declares that every able-bodied married man, who shall neglect or refuse to support his family, shall be deemed a "vagrant," and section 2921 declares that when the husband shall be guilty of such conduct as to constitute him a vagrant, within the meaning of the law respecting vagrants, the wife may be divorced. Held that, where a physician of good habits endeavored to establish a practice, maintained an office where he waited for patients and attended to such calls as he had, contributing his entire income from his practice to the support of his wife and himself, he was not a "vagrant," within the law entitling her to a divorce, though he did not succeed in earning enough to support both of them, and she was compelled to contribute to their support from her separate means. Gallimore v. Gallimore, 91 S. W. 406, 408, 115 Mo. App. 179.

VALID

See Invalid.

VALID CONSIDERATION

The abandonment of an unlawful enterprise, though it would have been profitable, is not a "valid consideration." Phelps v. Manecke, 96 S. W. 221, 222, 119 Mo. App. 139.

VALID DEFENSE

The term "valid defense" in Code Civ. Proc. § 636, authorizing the court to direct that a foreclosure begun by advertisement shall be had in the circuit court on the mortgagor showing a valid defense, includes any defense which may reduce or extinguish the indebtedness secured, but does not include a defense unavailable to the mortgagor at the time of the order transferring the foreclosure to the circuit court, and a mortgagor may not plead limitations in defense to a foreclosure begun by advertisement and subsequently transferred to the circuit court. Kaumann v. Barton, 128 N. W. 329, 330, 26 S. D. 371.

VALID DELIVERY

A "valid delivery" of a deed is accomplished when the conduct and acts of a grantor manifest a present intent to dispose of the title conveyed by the deed. There is no particular form necessary, but any act or thing which manifests such an intent is sufficient to establish it. It is always a question of fact, and must be determined by the circumstances surrounding each particular transaction. In an action to establish a lost deed, evidence that the grantor obtained plaintiff's daughter to read it to her, and then took the deed from the daughter's hand, and requested plaintiff to hold out her hand, when the grantor placed the deed in plaintiff's hand, and said: "This house and lot is yours, and everything there is on the place. Now go and put it in the bureau drawer"—which plaintiff did, was sufficient to show a valid delivery. Kenniff v. Caulfield, 73 Pac. 803, 804, 140 Cal. 34.

VALID JUDGMENT

The use of the expression "valid judgment," when it is given the effect of an estoppel, does not merely mean a judgment valid in form, but a legal and valid judgment lawfully obtained under pleadings and evidence that would justify its rendition. Sawyer v. First Nat. Bank of Ilco, 93 S. W. 151, 157, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 486.

VALID LIEN

Under Ky. St. §§ 2316, 2317, giving the landlord a lien for rent on the personal property of the tenant superior to all but "valid liens" created before the property was carried on the premises, his lien is superior to the mere claim for the purchase money of the one who sold the articles to the tenant; valid liens meaning such as are valid under section 496, providing no chattel mortgage shall be valid against creditors till acknowledged and lodged for record. Kloak Bros. & Co. v. Joseph, 150 S. W. 651, 150 Ky. 508.

VALID TENDER

In order to constitute a "valid tender," it must be an unconditional offer of the amount tendered. An offer to pay a certain amount of money in satisfaction of the whole debt is not sufficient. A tender, in order to be available, must be without qualification or condition and must not be coupled with any condition which, if accepted, would qualify the right of the party to whom the amount is tendered in litigation of his claim for a larger sum, so a tender "in full settlement and discharge of all demands" which plaintiff had against the person making the tender was insufficient. Mann v. Roberts, 105 N. W. 785, 786, 126 Wis. 142.

VALID VOTING MARK

Election Law, § 368, rule 9, providing that a "void ballot" is a ballot upon which there shall be found any mark other than a single X mark made for the purpose of voting, and section 358, rule 7, providing that one straight line crossing another straight line at any angle within a party circle or within the voting spaces shall be deemed a "valid voting mark," should be liberally construed, so that a tremulous line drawn by an infirm elector, or an irregular or curved line drawn by an elector with poor eyesight, or with muscles untrained to the use of a pencil, or any single line but once crossing another single line in such a way as to substantially comply with the statute, though the line has been retraced and the pencil has not been kept exactly on the line at parts removed from the point where the lines cross, should not be held void. Fallon v. Dwyer, 90 N. E. 942, 943, 197 N. Y. 336.

VALIDITY

See Obtain Validity.

VALLEY

The common understanding of the word "valley," as applied to a mountainous country, is as meaning lowlands in contradistinction to mountain slopes and ridges. Whaley v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 167 Fed. 664, 669.

VALUABLE

Where plaintiff agreed to give defendant certain information with reference to the existence of a certain vein or lead of ore within the boundaries of a certain claim, and defendant agreed to pay plaintiff 10 per cent. of the selling price of said claim when a sale should be made, if, on investigation by defendant, in his judgment the information should be "satisfactory," proof that the vein carried "value," and hence that the information was "valuable," would not establish that it was "satisfactory" to defendant, within the meaning of the contract as alleged. There is a distinction in the meaning of the terms "valuable" and "satisfactory"; "valuable" means capable of being valued or estimated; "satisfactory" means affording satisfaction, satisfying; that fully satisfies or contents; and a thing may possess value and be unsatisfactory, or be satisfactory and yet have no value. McCrimmon v. Murray, 117 Pac. 73, 75, 43 Mont. 457.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION

See Purchaser for a Valuable Consideration; Valid Consideration; Value.

Other good and valuable consideration, see Other.

"A 'valuable consideration' is some legal right acquired by the promisor in consideration of his promise, or forborne by the promisee in consideration of such promise." Darcey v. Darcey, 71 Atl. 595, 597, 29 R. I. 384, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886.

A "valuable consideration" is a class of consideration upon which a promise may be founded, and entitles the promisee to enforce his claim against an unwilling promisor. Fischer v. Union Trust Co., 101 N. W. 852, 853, 138 Mich. 612, 68 L. R. A. 987, 110 Am. St. Rep. 329.

"Valuable consideration," necessary to give a recorded deed priority over a prior unrecorded deed, means an approximately adequate consideration. Riley v. Robinson, 112 N. Y. Supp. 753, 754, 128 App. Div. 178.

A "valuable consideration" is the relinquishment by the promisee of some right which he may rightfully exercise or enforce, or the incurring of some risk or trouble at the instance of the promisor. John v. Elkins, 59 S. E. 961, 964, 63 W. Va. 158 (quoting and adopting definition in County Court of Barbour County v. Hall, 41 S. E. 119, 51 W. Va. 269).

One dollar is not such "valuable consideration" for a deed as gives a subsequent purchaser priority over a senior deed through priority of record. Dunn v. Dunn, 136 N. Y. Supp. 282, 284, 151 App. Div. 800.

A "valuable consideration" is money or its equivalent—anything capable of being measured by a money standard. An inadequate "valuable consideration" in itself is not sufficient grounds to warrant the court in decreeing a reconveyance. Dickey v. Norris, 65 Atl. 541, 216 Pa. 184.

A "valuable consideration" is defined to be money or something that is worth money. 2 Washb. Real Prop. (4th Ed.) p. 394; 1 Chitty, Con. (11th Am. Ed.) 27. It is not necessary that the consideration should be adequate in point of value in order to constitute the grantee a bona fide purchaser.

Although small, or even nominal, in the absence of fraud, it is enough to support a contract entered into upon the faith of it. Strong v. Whybark, 102 S. W. 968, 969, 204 Mo. 341, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240, 120 Am. St. Rep. 710 (citing Forbs v. St. Louis, 1 M. & S. R. Co., 82 S. W. 562, 107 Mo. App. 674; Marks v. Bank of Missouri, 8 Mo. 316; Ridenbaugh v. Young, 46 S. W. 959, 145 Mo. 280; Blaine v. Publishers, George Knapp & Co., 41 S. W. 787, 140 Mo. 251; Anderson v. Gaines, 57 S. W. 726, 156 Mo. 664; Green v. Higham, 61 S. W. 798, 161 Mo. 333).

A "valuable consideration" is such as money or the like, and the adequacy or inadequacy of the amount, or its disproportion to the actual value of the property, does not affect the question of the kind of consideration. The adequacy of the consideration is an element of the good faith of the transaction, and has no bearing upon whether the consideration is a valuable or a good one. Lindley v. Blumberg, 93 Pac. 894, 897, 7 Cal. App. 140 (citing Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 342; Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 224).

A "valuable consideration" may consist of anything of any value, and it may be the assumption of an obligation—the mere altering of the condition of the party to be affected. Roush v. Vanceburg, S. L. T. & M. Turnpike Co., 85 S. W. 735, 736, 120 Ky. 165.

"A consideration emanating from some injury or inconvenience to the one party, or from some benefit to the other, is a 'valuable consideration.'" Ward, Murray & Co. v. Young, 89 S. W. 456, 457, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 294 (quoting and adopting the definition in Conover v. Stillwell, 34 N. J. Law, 54).

"A 'valuable consideration,' in the sense of the law, may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other." Kirby-Carpenter Co. v. Burnett, 144 Fed. 635, 636, 75 C. C. A. 437.

A "valuable consideration" is something more than mere love and affection or gratitude. "A 'valuable consideration' is necessary to support any contract, and the rule makes no exception as to the character of the consideration respecting negotiable notes when the consideration is open to inquiry." Sullivan v. Sullivan, 92 S. W. 966, 967, 122 Ky. 707, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156, 13 Ann. Cas. 163 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 179).

A "valuable consideration" may consist in some right, interest, or benefit to one party, or some loss, detriment, or responsibility resulting actually or potentially to the other, and if there is any advantage to one of the parties the law will not weigh the adequacy of consideration. Melroy v. Kemmerer, 67 Atl. 699, 700, 218 Pa. 381, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018, 120 Am. St. Rep. 885 (citing Bouv. Law

Dict.; Fowler v. Smith, 25 Atl. 744, 153 Pa. 639).

"As applied to chattels, 'valuable consideration' means something more than the discharge of a debt that revives when the consideration for its discharge fails. It means the parting with some value that cannot be actually restored by operation of law, leaving the purchaser in a changed condition, so that he may lose something beside his bargain." Albert v. Hoffman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1043, 1044, 64 Misc. Rep. 87 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hurd v. Bickford, 27 Atl. 107, 85 Me. 217, 220, 35 Am. St. Rep. 353).

"A 'valuable consideration' is some legal right acquired by the promisor in consideration of his promise or forbore by the promisee in consideration of such promise. A common form of stating the same principle is that a 'valuable consideration' for a promise may consist of a benefit to the promisor or a detriment to the promisee. A promise on the part of an owner to pay the amount of a subcontractor's claim is supported by an agreement by the subcontractor not to file a lien." Harness v. McKee-Brown Lumber Co., 89 Pac. 1020, 1022, 17 Okl. 624 (quoting 1 Page, Contracts, par. 274).

"A 'valuable consideration' is one that is either a benefit to the party promising, or some trouble or prejudice to the party to whom the promise is made. Any damage or suspension or forbearance of a right will be sufficient to sustain the promise." First Nat. Bank of Plattsmouth v. Lehnhoff's Estate, 109 N. W. 164, 165, 77 Neb. 303 (quoting and adopting definition in Armann v. Buel, 59 N. W. 515, 40 Neb. 803).

"A 'valuable consideration' is one that is either a benefit to the party promising or some trouble or prejudice to the party to whom the promise is made." Where a creditor of a partnership releases the joint indebtedness and accepts a note of one of the partners in payment, he receives a sufficient consideration. Waydell v. Luer (N. Y.) 3 Denio, 410, 418 (quoting and adopting 2 Kent's Com. [2d Ed.] 265).

"A 'valuable consideration' is one that is either a benefit to the party promising or some trouble or prejudice to the party to whom the promise is made. Where one of several makers of a note arranges with the other members to pay the note, and the means are put in his hands for that purpose, and he takes up the note, paying part in cash and giving his own note for the balance, which the holder accepts and gives up the original note, the consideration is sufficient, and the makers of the original note are discharged. Livingston v. Radcliff, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 201, 207 (quoting and adopting 2 Kent's Com. 464).

A "valuable consideration," in the sense of the law, may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. It is sufficient consideration for an agreement by a husband to pay his divorced wife $45 a month for her support "for so long a time as she does not marry again," that she released him from all obligation under a prior contract for her separate maintenance, which was recognized as binding by the parties both before and after a decree of divorce. Jones v. Jones, 27 Pac. 85, 86, 1 Colo. App. 28.

If the promisee, at the instance of the promisor and moved by his promise, do any act which occasions him even the slightest trouble or inconvenience, or in doing which he incurs a risk, the act so performed constitutes a "valuable consideration" for the promise. Indeed, there is a consideration if the promisee, in return for the promise, does anything legal which he is not bound to do, whether there is any actual loss or detriment to him or actual benefit to the promisor or not. Buhler v. Trombly, 108 N. W. 343, 344, 139 Mich. 557 (citing 9 Cyc. pp. 312, 313).

"Consideration" means something which is of some value in the eye of the law, moving from the plaintiff. It may be some benefit to the defendant [promisor], or some detriment to the plaintiff [promisee]. Stated with greater elaboration, a 'valuable consideration,' in the sense of the law, may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other." Frye v. Hubbell, 68 Atl. 325, 332, 74 N. H. 358, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197 (quoting and adopting the definition in Kidder v. Blake, 45 N. H. 530, 532).

"Consideration" is a benefit to the party making a promise, or to a third person at his request, or an inconvenience, loss, or injury to the promisor. The amount of the consideration, so it be appreciable, is immaterial. A "valuable consideration" is either some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the party making the promise, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, responsibility, act, labor, or service given, suffered, or undertaken by the party to whom the promise is made. If the promisee do any act to his injury, however slight, at the request of the promisor, either express or implied, the detriment so sustained operates as a consideration. Strode v. St. Louis Transit Co., 95 S. W. 851, 853, 197 Mo. 616, 7 Ann. Cas. 1084 (citing Green v. Higham, 61 S. W. 798, 161 Mo. 337, Gantt, J.; 1 Pars. Cont. [2d Ed.] p. 357).

A "valuable consideration" consists ordinarily of money, or its equivalent, or marriage; but some advantage or benefit to the promisor, or some injury or damage to the promisee, is sufficient to support a contract, and a vendor's promise, without pecuniary consideration, to refund a balance of purchase money paid by the purchaser if it should appear that lands sold to other purchasers were liable for the payment of the balance, which, if binding, was an injury to the promisor and a benefit to the promisee, was without consideration. Sturm v. Parish, 1 W. Va. 125, 144 (citing 1 Pars. Cont. 353, 360).

A legal or "valuable consideration" necessary to support a contract consists either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party, or a detriment or forbearance given, suffered, or undertaken by the other, but a mere consent or withdrawal of an objection by one party to the doing of that which the other had a legal right to do is not sufficient consideration to support a promise, for the promisor gets nothing in return for his promise, and hence a street railway which was legally entitled to cross the tracks of a steam road, which road could be required by the municipality to keep a crossing watchman regardless of whether the street railway crossed its tracks or not, received no consideration for the steam road's consent to the crossing of its tracks, and so its promise to compensate the watchman if one should be required was unenforceable. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, L. & A. Electric St. R. Co. (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1018, 1020.

A "valuable consideration" in the sense of the law may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. Where testator subscribed for the purpose of aiding in the payment of the indebtedness of a university, and verbally authorized its president to announce such subscription at a public convention in his presence, where others subscribed, and where on the faith of his subscription the university employed others to solicit subscriptions and incurred liability for their services, testator's subscription was based on a "valid consideration," so as to be a valid claim against his estate. Baptist Female University of North Carolina v. Borden, 44 S. E. 47, 53, 132 N. C. 476.

There is a "promise of valuable consideration" within Purity of Election Law (St. 1893, p. 22, c. 16) § 19, subd. 1, making it an offense, for which the right of a person declared elected to an office may be contested, to promise a valuable consideration to a voter to induce him to vote for any particular person, where the successful candidate promised, in effect, that the duties of the office should not be performed, and there would be no expense in connection with it, and this, though his failure to qualify, which he promised, would not result in the office being left without an incumbent, thus making a saving to taxpayers, but would create a vacancy which could and would be filled by appointment. Bush v. Head, 97 Pac. 512, 515, 154 Cal. 277.

A daughter, to whom her father conveys a farm worth $20,000 in consideration of $10, which is paid, and of her undertaking to pay the net proceeds of the place to him during his life, and after his death a certain portion thereof to his wife and other daughter, is not a purchaser for a "valuable consideration." Ten Eyck v. Witbeck, 31 N. E. 994, 135 N. Y. 40, 31 Am. St. Rep. 809.

Agreement to forbear

A "valuable consideration" is some legal right acquired by the promisor in consideration of his promise, or forborne by the promisee in consideration of such promise. A husband's agreement to convey land to his wife, in consideration of her agreement to discontinue a divorce suit, which she thereafter discontinued, was based on a valuable consideration. Darcey v. Darcey, 71 Atl. 593, 597, 29 R. I. 384, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886.

Antecedent debt

An antecedent debt is not a "valuable consideration." Sparks v. Taylor (Tex.) 87 S. W. 740, 743.

A conveyance or transfer of property in consideration of a pre-existing indebtedness is a conveyance for a "valuable consideration." Virginia Timber & Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 90 Pac. 48, 50, 5 Cal. App. 256.

Where the payee of a note, on receiving it, paid a specified sum to banks which the maker owed, there was a "valuable consideration" for the note within Negotiable Instruments Law (Acts 1904, p. 220, c. 102) § 25, providing that an antecedent debt constitutes value. Hermann's Ex'r v. Gregory, 115 S. W. 809, 811, 131 Ky. 819.

Where an assignment of credits by a corporation was made, for the most part, in consideration of a pre-existing indebtedness, such indebtedness was not a "valuable consideration" sufficient to sustain the assignment, under P. L. 1896, p. 298, § 64, providing that a bona fide purchase for a valuable consideration before a corporation shall have actually suspended its ordinary business by a person without notice of the corporation's insolvency, etc., should not be invalidated. Russell & Erwin Mfg. Co. v. E. C. Faltoute Hardware Co. (N. J.) 62 Atl. 421, 423, 424.

Good consideration distinguished

As good consideration, see Good Consideration.

A "valuable consideration," as distinguished from a good consideration, is one founded on money, or something convertible into money, or having a value in money, except marriage, which is regarded as a valuable consideration. A plea alleging that a note was without any valuable consideration, either moral or legal, has no reference to any consideration except a valuable one. Dicks v. Andrews, 59 S. E. 782, 783, 129 Ga. 718 (citing Civ. Code 1895, § 3658).

A "valuable consideration" must be money or the like, in contradistinction from a good consideration, though it may be greatly disproportionate to the value of the land conveyed therefor. It may be the surrender, suspension, or forbearance of a legal right to process for the enforcement of a debt, as the right to process of attachment. A mortgagee in a mortgage to secure a pre-existing debt is a purchaser for a "valuable consideration." Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335, 341 (citing and adopting Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219; Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 260, 68 Am. Dec. 318; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 450; Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 94).

Marriage

"Marriage" is a valuable consideration, and a married woman is regarded as a purchaser for a valuable consideration of all property which accrues to her by virtue of her marriage. Staser v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 79 N. E. 404, 405, 168 Ind. 131 (citing Derry v. Derry, 74 Ind. 560; Richardson v. Schultz, 98 Ind. 429).

Where a conveyance by a man was made prior to his agreement to marry, and without reference to any anticipated rights of a prospective wife, the failure to record it until after his marriage did not render it invalid as in fraud of the wife's marital rights, for the statute for the registration of conveyances was intended to protect purchasers for valuable consideration, mortgagees, and judgment creditors without notice, and cannot be construed to include persons entering into a marriage contract, though marriage is a "valuable consideration," but in a way which must be differentiated from that valuable consideration which will support a contract, in that ordinarily the word "valuable" signifies that the consideration is pecuniary or convertible into money. Nelson v. Brown, 51 South. 360, 363, 164 Ala. 397, 137 Am. St. Rep. 61.

Value received

An allegation that a written instrument was executed and delivered "for a valuable consideration" is an allegation of fact, and not a conclusion of law, since the terms "for a valuable consideration" and "for value received" are practically identical in meaning, in law as well as general business intercourse, and, if there be any distinction, "valuable consideration" has a more definite and comprehensive meaning than "value received." St. Lawrence County Nat. Bank of Canton v. Watkins, 138 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117, 153 App. Div. 551.

VALUABLE FOR MINERALS

See Land Valuable for Minerals.

VALUABLE IMPROVEMENTS

An office building constructed by one man in two or three days and an open shed capable of holding about one-half ton of coke were insufficient to give a preference right to purchase shore lands from the state under Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 6750, 6754, giving such right to owners of "valuable improvements." Pacific Iron Works v. Bryant Lumber & Shingle Mill Co., 111 Pac. 578, 579, 60 Wash. 502.

A frame house, firmly constructed on school land by a settler thereon, is a "valuable improvement," within Rev. St. 1901, pars. 4035-4037, giving the preferred right to lease school land to the settler thereon making permanent improvements thereon, etc., and the building may be used by the settler for a warehouse in which to store supplies for use on adjacent property, or to sell to proprietors of adjacent property, or for a saloon to invite the patronage of employes on adjacent property; but a house placed on blocks or pillars is not an appurtenant to the realty and is not an improvement. Schley v. Vail, 95 Pac. 113, 114, 11 Ariz. 226.

VALUABLE MINERALS

Other valuable minerals or deposits, see Other.

The words "valuable mineral deposits," as used in a statute providing that mining claims upon veins or lodes of rock in place bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, lead, tin, copper, or other valuable deposits heretofore located, shall be governed as to length along the vein or lode by the customs, etc., should be construed as including all lands chiefly valuable for other than agricultural purposes, and particularly as including non-metallic substances, among which are held to be alum, asphaltum, borax, guano, diamonds, gypsum, reslin, marble, mica, slate, amber, petroleum, limestone, building stone, and coal. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 23 Sup. Ct. 365, 368, 188 U. S. 526, 47 L. Ed. 575.

VALUABLE PAPERS

Under Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that a holographic will shall be given effect, if found among the valuable papers of decedent, the term "valuable papers" means such papers as are kept and are considered by the decedent worthy of being taken care of. In re Jenkin's Will, 72 S. E. 1072, 1075, 157 N. C. 429, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842.

"Valuable papers" are such papers as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person, having regard to his condition, business, and habits of preserving papers. They do not necessarily mean the most valuable papers of the decedent even, and are not confined to papers having a money value, or to deeds for lands, obligations for the payment of money, or certificates of stock. The requirement is only intended as an indication on the part of the writer that it is his intention to preserve and perpetuate the paper as a disposition of his property, and that he regards it as valuable; consequently the sufficiency of the place of deposit to meet the requirement of the statute will depend largely upon the condition and arrangements of the testator. "No better definition of 'valuable papers,' perhaps, can be given than that they consist of such as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation, and therefore, in his estimation, of some value. It is not confined to deeds for land or slaves, obligations for money, or certificates of stock. Any others which are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person must be regarded as embraced in that description. This requirement is only intended as an indication on the part of the writer that it is his intention to preserve and perpetuate the paper in question as a disposition of his property; that he regards it as valuable." Brogan v. Barnard, 90 S. W. 858, 859, 115 Tenn. 260, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, 5 Ann. Cas. 634 (quoting and adopting definitions in Marr v. Marr [Tenn.] 2 Head, 306 and in Pritchard, Wills & Administration).

The words "valuable papers," in Code 1858, § 2163, providing that a writing appearing to be the will of a decedent, written by him and found after his death "among his valuable papers," etc., contemplate documentary papers deemed valuable and worthy of preservation by the owner; and a holographic will of a decedent, found in a box in which he kept stamps and stationery for sale and use as postmaster, was not found among his "valuable papers," essential to sustain it as a will. Brogan v. Barnard, 90 S. W. 858, 859, 115 Tenn. 260, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, 5 Ann. Cas. 634.

Election tickets, prepared by the election commissioners and authorizing the election officers of voting precincts to be used in the election, are "valuable papers," and the property of the election commissioners of the county, within Code 1858, § 4652, subsec. 14 (Shannon's Code, § 6496), making it a misdemeanor to maliciously destroy any goods or valuable papers of another. State v. Click, 90 S. W. 855, 115 Tenn. 283.

VALUABLE RIGHT

Securing the signature of a person to a note, whereby he was subsequently required to pay it, is securing from him a "valuable right," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 943, as to swindling. Johnson v. State, 123 S. W. 143, 145, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 347.

VALUABLE THING

Chickens and all kinds of poultry are "valuable things," within Rev. St. 1899, § 1886, making an entry of any house in the nighttime, in which goods, wares, and merchandise and "other valuable things" are kept or deposited, burglary. State v. McGuire, 91 S. W. 939, 942, 193 Mo. 215.

VALUATION

See Last Adjusted Valuation; Overvaluation.

As assessment

See Assessment (In Taxation).

As an estimation

While the words "assessment" and "valuation" may be properly used to designate certain acts of the assessor, they are as properly and more frequently used to designate the official estimate of the value of property subject to taxation. While the assessor makes such official estimate, it is not conclusive, but is subject to revision by the board of equalization, which body frequently substitutes its own estimate of the value of a particular portion of the property for that of the assessor. State ex rel. Mellor v. Grow, 105 N. W. 898, 899, 74 Neb. 850.

"Value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. An antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value, and is deemed such whether the instrument is payable on demand or at a future time." Hover v. Magley, 96 N. Y. Supp. 925, 48 Misc. 430 (quoting Neg. Inst. Law); Wilkins v. Usher, 97 S. W. 37, 38, 123 Ky. 696 (quoting Neg. Inst. Law).

Under Acts 1899, p. 146, c. 94, § 25, providing that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, a bank discounting a note and obtaining credit in favor of the indorser in a solvent bank for the amount of the discounted paper is a holder for value. Elgin City Banking Co. v. Hall, 108 S. W. 1068, 1071, 119 Tenn. 548.

According to Pol. Code, § 3617, the terms "value" and "full cash value" mean the amount at which property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. Crocker v. Scott, 87 Pac. 102, 106, 149 Cal. 575.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 978, authorizing appeals to the circuit court from judgments of the county court where "the amount in controversy" is over $50, orders of the county court removing and appointing sheriffs are not appealable, the word "amount" in the quoted phrase applying only to a judgment for money, though the word "value" may apply to judgments for a number of things other than money. Renshaw v. Cook, 111 S. W. 377, 384, 129 Ky. 347.

To promise to pay an already existing debt or the actual payment therefor is not "value" within the meaning of Negotiable Instruments Act (P. L. 1902, p. 589) § 29. Morris County Brick Co. v. Austin, 75 Atl. 550, 551, 79 N. J. Law, 273.

The rule that, as against accommodation indorsers of a note fraudulently diverted from the purpose for which it was given, one receiving it as collateral security for an antecedent debt cannot enforce it, is not changed by Negotiable Instruments Law, § 51, providing that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and that an antecedent debt constitutes value. The antecedent debt must be paid and discharged by receipt of note to devest the accommodation indorsers of the burden. Sutherland v. Mead, 80 N. Y. Supp. 504, 507, 80 App. Div. 103.

Though Code Supp. § 3060a25, in defining what constitutes consideration under the Negotiable Instruments Act, declares that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and that an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value, etc., it makes no provision for a conditional credit, a credit that may or may not become absolute, and so plaintiff bank is not a bona fide purchaser in the due course of business of a certificate of deposit issued by the C. Bank to defendant, and indorsed by defendant in blank and delivered to the B. Bank for collection, and then sent by the B. Bank to plaintiff, to which the B. Bank was indebted, notwithstanding that, on receipt of it, plaintiff credited on its books the amount thereof to the B. Bank; the credit not being absolute, but conditional, to the effect that, if the certificate was paid by the C. Bank, the credit became absolute thereafter, but, if it was not paid it was to be charged back to the B. Bank. Commercial Nat. Bank of Council Bluffs v. Citizens' State Bank of Armour, S. D., 109 N. W. 198, 199, 132 Iowa, 706.

Though, strictly, "price" tokens agreement on a value by parties in interest, while "value" is, as a rule, the general estimate of the pecuniary equivalent of the subject of inquiry, the terms "worth," "price," and "value" may be treated as synonymous in determining the damages for breach by the buyer of a contract of sale. Scruggs & Echols v. Riddle, 54 South. 641, 645, 171 Ala. 350.

The term "property," as used in Const. 1906, art. 3, § 17, providing that an individual's property shall not be taken or damaged for public use, except on due compensation first made, includes every species of value, right, or interest. The term "value," as applied to property, is the price deemed or accepted as equivalent to the utility of anything—compensation regarded as an equivalent. The law infers value from the term "property," and, if none is shown, the inference will be that the value is nominal. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. State, 48 South. 561, 562, 94 Miss. 759.

Intoxicating liquor, though not lawfully the subject of sale in this state, is not so lacking in the element of "value" that it cannot be the subject of larceny. "Value," as the word is used in prosecutions for larceny, does not necessarily mean money value or market value. Mance v. State, 62 S. E. 1053, 1054, 5 Ga. App. 229.

"The 'value' of a thing is what it will produce, and admits of no precise standard. It must be in its nature fluctuating, and will depend upon * * * different circumstances. One man, in the disposal of his property, may sell it for less than another would; he may sell it under a pressure of circumstances which may induce him to sell it at a particular time." Because of the various considerations which go to make up the value of property, courts of equity will not ordinarily refuse specific performance because of inadequacy of price, unless it shocks the conscience. Heyward v. Bradley, 179 Fed. 325, 331, 102 C. C. A. 509.

The word "value," in the rule that the right of the public to use a turnpike on payment of such tolls as, in view of the nature and "value" of the services rendered by the company, are reasonable, means value to the person to whom the service is rendered. Salt River Valley Canal Co. v. Nelssen, 88 Pac. 117, 119, 10 Ariz. 9, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711, 16 Ann. Cas. 796.

Where a power of attorney to recover certain land contained a grant of an undivided half interest to the attorney for his expenses and services, expenses incurred by him after notice of a deed cutting off all interest of the donor in the land were not "value" paid by the attorney for the land without notice of an adverse claim under such deed. Davis v. Bell (Tex.) 128 S. W. 658, 661.

"A machine of this character [dredge] can hardly be said to have a fixed market value, and as to such property the rule is, in fixing its value that recourse may be had to its cost, utility, and use, and also to the opinion of witnesses who may possess such information as may give their opinions weight." California Development Co. v. Yuma Valley Union Land & Water Co., 84 Pac. 88-90, 9 Ariz. 366.

Const. Cal. art. 13, § 1, provides that all property in the state not exempt under the laws of the United States shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law. Carrying out the command to provide for the ascertainment of the value of property to be taxed, it was enacted by Pol. Code, § 3627, that all taxable property shall be assessed at its "full cash value," and by section 3617, that the terms "value" and "full cash value" mean the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. San Francisco Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 25 Sup. Ct. 384, 385, 197 U. S. 70, 49 L. Ed. 669.

Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, 26 Stat. 139, provides that the words "value" or "actual market value," whenever used in the act, or in any law relating to the appraisement of imported merchandise, shall be construed to mean the actual market value, or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought and sold for exportation to the United States, or consigned to the United States for sale, etc. United States v. Park & Tilford, 152 Fed. 142, 143, 81 C. C. A. 360.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 73, § 41, providing that every negotiable instrument is deemed prima facie to have been issued for a valuable consideration, and every person whose signature appears thereon is deemed a party thereto for value, and section 42, providing that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and that an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value, and section 43, providing that, where value has at any time been given for the instrument, the holder is deemed a holder for value in respect to all parties who became such prior to that time, where defendant signed the note in suit and gave it to O. to enable him to take up a forged note indorsed to plaintiff by O., plaintiff could recover against defendant, for O. was liable as indorser of the forged note, whether he knew it was forged or not, and plaintiff had a right to accept defendant's note in settlement of O.'s liability. Jennings v. Law, 85 N. E. 157, 158, 199 Mass. 124.

As actual value

The words "value of the taxable property," as used in Const. art. 11, § 3, prohibiting municipal corporations from becoming indebted in an amount exceeding 5 per centum on the value of the taxable property located therein, when construed in the light of the purpose which actuated its enactment, which was to prevent the improper expenditure by municipalities of public money, and of subsequent legislation (Acts 28th Gen. Assem. p. 23, c. 41, § 2, as amended) providing that no municipal corporation shall become indebted to an amount exceeding  $1\frac{1}{4}$  per centum on the "actual value" of the property located therein, except that cities of the second class may become indebted to an amount aggregating, with all other indebtedness, a sum not exceeding  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per centum of such "actual value," mean the actual value of property in the city, and not the taxable value prescribed by Code, § 1305, providing that property subject to taxation shall be valued at its actual value and assessed at 25 per centum of such value, which assessed value shall be taken as the taxable value of the property. N. W. Halsey & Co. v. City of Belle Plaine, 104 N. W. 494, 495, 128 Iowa, 467.

Acts 1902-04, p. 163, c. 148, § 17 (Code 1904, p. 2199), relative to taxation of bank stock provides that from the total market value of its shares of stock there shall be deducted the assessed value of its real estate otherwise taxed in the state and the value of each share of stock shall be its proportion of the remainder, provided that the market value of said stock shall be estimated at a sum not less than the aggregate of the capital, surplus, and undivided profits of the bank, as shown by its last published statement, after deducting from such aggregate the value of its real estate otherwise taxed in the state. Acts 1908, p. 325, c. 213, § 1, amending the previous act, provides that from the total value of the shares of stock of the bank, to be ascertained by adding its capital, surplus, and undivided profits, there shall be deducted "the value" of its real estate otherwise taxed in the state, and the actual value of such share of stock shall be its proportion of the remainder. Held, that the value of real estate to be deducted is its assessed value, and not its actual value, the words "otherwise taxed" not referring merely to real estate, but referring to and modifying the entire phrase, "the value of its real estate otherwise taxed in this state." Commonwealth v. Virginia Bank & Trust Co., 66 S. E. 853, 854, 110 Va. 552.

Amount synonymous

The word "value," as used with reference to money, is synonymous with amount. People v. Hines, 89 Pac. 858, 859, 5 Cal. App. 122; Richburger v. State, 44 South. 772, 774, 90 Miss. 806.

The word "value," as used in the Code of 1873, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 104, providing that if any person by false pretense shall obtain from another person any money, goods, etc., with intent to cheat, and if the value of the property or promissory note or written instrument or security fraudulently obtained shall be $30 or upwards, such person so offending shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary, etc., means the amount of the liability expressed, assumed, or incurred by means of the written instrument to which the signature was fraudulently obtained. Moline v. State, 100 N. W. 810, 812, 72 Neb. 361.

Antecedent debt

Transferees of a note taken before maturity from payees in part payment of antecedent indebtedness were holders for value: such a debt constituting "value" under the express provisions of Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612, § 51. Mindlin v. Appelbaum, 114 N. Y. Supp. 908, 909, 62 Misc. Rep. 300.

Negotiable Instruments Act (Pub. Acts 1905, p. 94, No. 265) § 27, provides that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and that an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value. Section 29 (page 395) provides that, where the holder has a lien on the instrument, arising either from contract or by implication of law, he is deemed a holder for value to the extent of his lien. Held, that a person holding a note as collateral security for a pre-existing debt is a holder for value to the extent of the amount due him. Graham v. Smith, 118 N. W. 726, 727, 155 Mich. 65.

Where the indorser of a dishonored note delivered to the holder bank as collateral a demand note by himself and wife, in consideration of the bank's promise to forbear suing the indorser on the note, taking the demand note as collateral for the pre-existing debt made the bank a "holder for value" of the note as against the wife, an accommodation maker, under Rev. Laws 1902, c. 73, § 42, providing that a pre-existing debt constitutes "value," whether the instrument is payable on demand or at a future time, notwithstanding the demand note was payable to the bank. Lowell v. Bickford, 88 N. E. 1, 2, 201 Mass. 543.

Under section 51 of the Negotiable Instruments Law of New York (Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612), which provides that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and that "an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value," an indorsee of an accommodation note, which took the same from another indorsee before maturity, in good faith, and without notice of any defense, as collateral security for an antecedent debt of the immediate indorser, is a "holder for value," or occupies the position of a holder for value, and may enforce the note against the maker, although it surrendered no right in respect to the original debt, and although the note was invalid and illegal in its inception. In re Hopper-Morgan Co., 154 Fed. 249, 253.

In an action by the holder against the maker of an accommodation check, fraudulently diverted by the payee from the purpose for which it was given, it appeared that the payee delivered the check to plaintiff on account of a pre-existing debt, and that plaintiff who also owed the payee a less sum, and gave him a check therefor on his representation that the other check would not otherwise be good. It did not appear that plaintiff took the accommodation check in extinguishment of the debt due from the payee or that an extension of time of payment thereof for any determinate period was given. Held, that such pre-existing debt, not extinguished or extended, was not "value," within Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612) § 51, providing that a pre-existing debt constitutes value. Harris v. Fowler, 110 N. Y. Supp. 987, 988, 59 Misc. Rep. 523.

As cash value

The word "value," as applied to the value of property destroyed by fire, covered by a fire policy, means cash value, and testimony of insured as to what he considered the value of the property covered by the policy, and destroyed, is sufficient proof of cash value, he having a better knowledge than any one else of the quality and value thereof, should no other evidence be available. Sisk v. American Central Fire Ins. Co., 69 S. W. 687, 692, 95 Mo. App. 695.

As market value

"By 'value,' in common parlance, is meant 'market value,' which is no other than the fair value of property as between one who wants to purchase and another who desires to sell." Hetland v. Bilstad, 118 N. W. 422, 423, 140 Iowa, 411.

The term "value," when applied to property, with no qualification expressed or implied means the price which the property could command in the market. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Crews, 120 S. W. 1110, 1111, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 548 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7278, 7279).

"The word 'value,' as used with reference to the value of property stolen, signifies the sum for which the like goods are at the time commonly bought and sold in the market." Stephens v. State, 55 South. 940, 942, 1 Ala. App. 159 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7276).

"By 'value' is meant, not what the thing is worth to the owner, but the price that it would bring in open market"; and hence evidence of the special value of the property stolen is not admissible in a larceny case. People v. Gilbert, 128 N. W. 756, 757, 163 Mich. 511, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 894 (citing State v. Doepke, 68 Mo. 208, 30 Am. Rep. 785).

"Market value" is synonymous with the terms "value" and "full cash value," defined by Pol. Code, § 3617, as the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor, and the market value of stock, fairly represents its full cash value in absence of exceptional circumstances giving it an abnormal value, so that any inference of fraud by the placing of an excessive valuation on stock, taken as a basis for assessing a corporate franchise, is rebutted by a showing that the value of the franchise was ascertained by the approved method of deducting from the aggregate market value of its stock, the value of its tangible property, and taking the difference as the franchise value. City of Los Angeles v. Western Union Oil Co., 118 Pac. 720, 721, 161 Cal. 204.

When applied to property, and no qualification is expressed or implied, "value" means the price which the property could command in the market. By the term "value of stock" is usually meant market value. Text-writers use the terms "value" and "market value" as interchangeable, and both as being equivalents of actual value, salable value, and, in proper cases, rental value. In an action against a railroad company for killing horses, plaintiff alleged that at the time they were killed "they were then and there each respectively of the reasonable value as follows, viz.: One * * * was of the value of $375, and the other * * * was of the value of $175." Held that, in the absence of an exception thereto, proof either of the market value of the horses or of the intrinsic value was admissible, but that, in the absence of any showing that they had no market value, nor real value, and that they cannot be reproduced or replaced, it was error to admit evidence as to the value of the horses to plaintiff. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Crews, 120 S. W. 1110, 1111, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 548 (quoting and adopting definitions in 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7278, 7279).

The word "value," when applied to the value of land appropriated under the writ of eminent domain, means market value, and the measure of damages is the market value, except where it is shown there is no market value. The owner of the land condemned is entitled to compensation, based on the actual pecuniary damage sustained, and in proving market values the same must be estimated from such standpoint as will afford compensation. City of Dallas v. Taylor (Tex.) 69 S. W. 1005.
